20. Veronica aphylla, or naked-stalked speedwell.—Corymb terminating; scape naked.—Native of the Alps of the southern part of Europe, and the north of Asia.

21. Veronica bellidioides, or daisy-leaved speedwell.—Corymb terminating; stem ascending, two-leaved; leaves obtuse, crenate; calyxes hirsute.—Native of the Alps of Switzerland, especially about Aigle, Piedmont, Dauphiné, Silesia, and the Pyrenees.

22. Veronica gentianoides, or gentian-leaved speedwell.—Corymb terminating; stem ascending; leaves lanceolate, cartilaginous at the edge; the lower connate; sheathing. Root perennial.—Found in Cappadocia and Armenia.

23. Veronica Ponaë, or Pona's speedwell.—Raceme terminating; stem quite simple; leaves cordate-ovate, toothed, sessile. Root perennial.—Native of the Pyrenees and Monte Baldo.

24. Veronica fruticulosa, or flesh-coloured shrubby speedwell.—Corymb terminating, many-flowered, spiked; leaves elliptic, lanceolate; stems erect; capsule ovate, four-valved.—Native of the mountains of Switzerland, Austria, Piedmont, Dauphiné, and of the Pyrenees.

25. Veronica saxatilis, or blue-rock speedwell.—Corymb terminating, few-flowered; leaves elliptic; stems diffused; capsule ovate, four-valved.—Native of Switzerland, Austria, Denmark, Norway and Scotland.

26. Veronica Alpina, or Alpine speedwell.—Corymb terminating, subspiked; leaves ovate, smooth, subserrate; calyx ciliate; stem ascending, simple.—Native of the mountains of Europe.

27. Veronica integrifolia, or entire-leaved speedwell.—Corymb terminating; leaves opposite, elliptic, obtuse, quite entire; calyxes hairy.—Native of the Palatinate, Bohemia and Silesia.

28. Veronica serpyllifolia, smooth speedwell or Paul's betony.—Raceme terminating, subspiked; leaves ovate, subcrenate, three-nerved, smooth; capsule obcordate, shorter than the style.—Native of Europe, Siberia, Barbary and North America.

29. Veronica tenella.—Leaves oblong, crenate; stems creeping; calyxes villose.—Native of the Piedmont Alps and the Pyrenees.

30. Veronica Becabunga, broad-leaved brooklime or water speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves elliptic, flat; stem creeping.—Native of Europe, Siberia and Barbary.

31. Veronica Anagallis, long-leaved brooklime, or water speedwell.—Racemes lateral, opposite; leaves lanceolate, serrate; stem erect.—Native of the four quarters of the world.

32. Veronica scutellata, narrow-leaved brooklime, or water speedwell.—Racemes lateral, alternate; pedicels divaricating; leaves linear, toothletted.—Native of many parts of Europe and Barbary, in bogs and on the edges of ponds on heaths and moors; flowering from June to September. It is not uncommon with us.

33. Veronica Teucrium, or Hungarian speedwell.—Racemes lateral, very long; leaves ovate, wrinkled, toothed, bluntnish; stems procumbent. There is a variety with a double flower.

34. Veronica pilosa, or hairy speedwell.—Racemes axillary; leaves ovate, obtuse, plaited, deeply toothed; stem prostrate, hairy, in two rows.—Native of Austria and Bohemia.

35. Veronica prostrata, or trailing speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves oblong-ovate, serrate; stems prostrate.—Native of Germany, Italy and Switzerland, on hills.

36. Veronica pectinata, or comb-leaved speedwell.—Racemes lateral, leafed; leaves oblong, pectinate-serrate; stems prostrate. Root perennial.—Native of the neighbourhood of Constantinople.

37. Veronica montana, or mountain speedwell.—Racemes lateral, elongated, filiform, few-flowered; leaves ovate, petioled, serrate; stem hairy all round.—Native of Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France, Italy and Britain.

38. Veronica Chamædrys, or germander speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves ovate, sessile, wrinkled, gash-serrate; stem hairy, in two rows.—Native of Europe and Japan.

39. Veronica Orientalis, or Oriental speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves pinnatifid, smooth, acute, attenuated at the base; calyxes unequal; pedicels capillary, longer than the bracte.—Native of the Levant.

40. Veronica multifida, or multifid-leaved speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves many-parted, segments pinnatifid; lobes decurrent; peduncles short; calyx very smooth; stem villose.—Native of Siberia.

41. Veronica Austriaca, or Austrian speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves somewhat hairy, linear, pinnatifid; the lowest segments longer, divaricating; calyxes somewhat hairy; peduncles longer than the bracte.—Native of Austria, Carniola and Silesia.

42. Veronica Taurica, or Tauric speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves somewhat hairy, linear, undivided and pinnatifid, toothletted; peduncles longer than the bracte; calyx four-cleft, smooth. The stem seems ascending, round, somewhat hairy. Leaves bright green, half an inch long, crowded, linear, entire, and subcuneiform, three-toothed at the tip, and linear pinnatifid-toothed. Racemes long, axillary. Peduncles several times longer than the bractes. Calyx four-cleft, smooth, unequal. Corolla rose-coloured.—Native of Taurus and Mount Atlas near Tiemsen.

43. Veronica urticæfolia, or nettle-leaved speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves cordate, sessile, sharply serrate, acuminate; stem stiff; calyx-leaves four. Root perennial.—Native of Switzerland, Bithynia, Austria and Bavaria.

44. Veronica latifolia, or broad-leaved speedwell.—Racemes lateral; leaves cordate, sessile, wrinkled, bluntly serrate; stem stiff; calyx-leaves five.—Native of Germany, Austria, and Switzerland.

45. Veronica paniculata, or panicled speedwell.—Racemes lateral, very long; leaves lanceolate, tern, serrate; stem ascending.—Native of Tartary and Bohemia.

III.—Peduncles one-flowered.

46. Veronica biloba, or two-lobed speedwell.—Flowers solitary; leaves cordate-lanceolate, toothed; calyx-leaves equal, ovate, acuminate, three-nerved. Root fibrous, annual.—Native of Cappadocia.

47. Veronica agrestis, or procumbent speedwell.—Flowers solitary; leaves ovate, gash-serrate, shorter than the peduncle; stems procumbent; seeds cupped.

48. Veronica arvensis, wall speedwell, or speedwell chickweed.—Flowers solitary; leaves ovate, gash-serrate; floral leaves leaves lanceolate, longer than the peduncle; stem erect. Root annual, fibrous.—Native of Europe, Barbary, Japan, and North America.

49. Veronica hederifolia, ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit.—Flowers solitary; leaves cordate, flat, five-lobed; calycine segments cordate; seeds cupped. Root annual, small, fibrous.—Native of Europe and Barbary, in gardens and corn-fields.

50. Veronica filiformis, or long peduncled speedwell.—Flowers solitary; leaves cordate, crenate; shorter than the peduncle; calyx-leaves lanceolate. Root annual.—It grows about hedges in Bithynia.

51. Veronica triphyllos, trifold-leaved speedwell, or upright chickweed.—Flowers solitary; upper leaves digitate; peduncles longer than the calyx; seeds flattened. Root annual, fibrous.—Common to most parts of Europe.

52. Veronica verna, or vernal speedwell.—Flowers solitary, subsessile; leaves finger-parted; peduncles shorter than the calyx; stem stiff and straight.—Native of many parts of Europe.

53. Veronica digitata, or finger-leaved speedwell.—Flowers solitary, sessile; all the leaves finger-parted; stem stiff and straight.—Native of the south of France about Montpellier, of Spain and Bohemia.

54. Veronica acinifolia, or thyme-leaved speedwell.—Flowers peduncled, solitary; leaves ovate, smooth, crenate; stem erect, somewhat hairy.—Native of Germany, Switzerland, and Piedmont.

55. Veronica peregrina, or knotgrass-leaved speedwell.—Flowers solitary, sessile; leaves oblong, bluntish, toothed and entire; stem erect.—Native of the North of Europe, Germany, Dauphiné and Italy.

56. Veronica Bellardi, or linear-leaved speedwell.—Flowers solitary, peduncled; leaves linear, quite entire, rough-haired, longer than the flower; stem quite simple, erect.—Native of Piedmont, in pastures.

57. Veronica Marilandica, or North American speedwell.—Flowers solitary, sessile; leaves linear; stems diffused.—Native of North America.

Propagation and Culture.—The perennial sorts may be increased by parting their roots, which may be done every other year; for if they are not often divided, many of them will grow too large for the borders of small gardens. The annual sorts may be propagated by seeds sown in autumn: and many of them will maintain their ground, if their seeds be permitted to scatter. If these plants are placed in a shady border, they will thrive much better than when they are more exposed to the sun, and their flowers will continue much longer in beauty. Veronica decussata is a hardy greenhouse plant, and may be placed with the myrtles. In mild winters it will even stand secure in the open air, in a warm soil and sheltered situation. It is usually and readily increased by cuttings.

VERRAMA, a small river of Guiana, which runs north, and enters the Ventauri.

VERRES, a town of Piedmont, with 800 inhabitants; 18 miles north-north-west of Ivrea.

VERRETZ, a settlement of the island of Hispaniola; 30 miles north-east of St. Marc.

VERRIERES, a small town of Switzerland, in the canton of Neufchatel; 22 miles west-south-west of Neufchatel.

VERRIO (Antonio), was born at Naples in 1634. After he had acquired the management of the pencil, he went to Toulouse, and there was engaged to paint the high altar in the church of the Carmelites. He was invited by Charles II. to England, the king intending to engage him in designs for tapestry, to be made here; but he changed his mind, and ordered him to paint most of the ceilings of Windsor Castle, the great hall, and the chapel; all which he loaded with heterogeneous compounds of gods and goddesses, vices and virtues, and all the emblematic imagery which scholastic pomposity could muster up, to supply the place of common sense; and this he executed with great freedom and great freshness of colour, but in a manner devoid of any other good quality of art. For these labours he was paid nearly 6000*l.*

The Revolution was not to his mind: he declined to serve king William, and went to the earl of Exeter at Burleigh, where he painted several apartments, which are esteemed his best works. He afterwards painted at Chatsworth, and at Lowther: at length he was persuaded by the earl of Exeter to engage to paint for the king the great staircase at Hampton-Court; and Walpole observes, "he painted it as ill as if he had spoiled it out of principle." His eyes failing him, Queen Anne gave him a pension of 200*l.* per annum for life; but he did not long enjoy it, dying at Hampton-Court in 1707.

VERROCHIO (Andrea), was among the early Florentine artists who prepared the way for the greater talents of subsequent painters. He was born at Florence, in 1432, and distinguished himself both as a sculptor and painter. He had the honour to be the instructor of P. Perugino and Lionardo da Vinci, and was much employed; till, as Vasari reports, being engaged by the monks of St. Salvi, at Valombrosa, to paint a picture of the Baptism of Christ, he set Lionardo da Vinci, then his pupil, to put in the figure of an angel from his design, and he executed his task in a manner so superior to the work of his master, that Verrochio, in disgust, resolved to paint no more, but apply himself entirely to sculpture and drawing. His style of design was grand and free, and Lionardo took great pleasure in copying his drawings, particularly a battle-piece, on account of the peculiar airs of the heads, the disposition of the hair, and the actions of the figures. He died in 1488, aged 56.

VERRUCHIO, a small town in the east of Italy, in the States of the Church.

VERS, a town in the south of France, on the river Lot, with 800 inhabitants.

VERSA, or VERZA, a small river of Austrian Italy, which falls into the Po.

VERSABLE, adj. [versabilis, Lat.] That may be turned. Cockeram.

VERSABILITY, or VERSABLENESS, s. [versabilis, Lat.] Aptness to be turned or wound any way. Diet.

VERSAILLES, a well-known town of France, situated 12 miles west-by-south of Paris, and long the residence of the court. In 1666 it was little more than a village, with a hunting-lodge for the royal family, when Louis XIV. pleased with the situation, and desirous of residing out of Paris, began to erect a splendid palace, which it required twelve years to build. No expence was spared by him or his successors, to render it the most magnificent royal residence in Europe; and though uninhabited since 1789, it retains almost all its beauty. The situation of the palace is on a gradually rising ground. Its front and wings are built of polished stone, ornamented with statues, and a colonnade of the Doric order in the centre. The interior is equally grand and beautiful, the great hall being above 220 feet in length, with costly decorations in marble, painting, and gilding. The other apartments are of corresponding size and elegance. This beautiful structure is approached by three great avenues, each lined with a double row of trees, and leading respectively from Paris, St. Cloud, and Sceaux.

The town contains about 30,000 inhabitants. It is the see of a bishop.

VERSAILLES, a town of the United States, and capital of Woodford county, Kentucky, situated on a creek running into Kentucky river; 12 miles south-west of Lexington.

VERSALE, adj. [A cant word for universal.] Total; whole.

Some for brevity,

Have cast the versal world's nativity.

Hudibras.

VERSATILE, adv. [versatilis, Latin.] That may be turned round.

Th' advent'rous pilot in a single year

Learn'd his state cock-boat dext'rously to steer;

Versatile, and sharp-piercing like a screw,

Made good th' old passage, and still forc'd a new. Harte.

Changeable; variable.—One colour to us standing in one place, place, hath a contrary aspect in another; as in those versatile representations in the neck of a dove, and folds of scarlet. Glanville.—Easily applied to a new task.

VERSATILENESS, or VERSATILITY, s. The quality of being versatile.—Nothing can more fully demonstrate the extent and versatility of these two original geniuses. Dr. Warton.

VERSBACH, a village of Bavarian Franconia, near Würzburg. Population 1000.

VERSCHE, a river which rises in Swedish Lapland, and falls into the White Sea.

VERSE, s. [versus, Latin.] A line consisting of a certain succession of sounds and number of syllables.

Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love. Shakspeare.

[verset, Fr.] A section or paragraph of a book.—Thus far the questions proceed upon the construction of the first earth; in the following verses they proceed upon the demolition of that earth. Burnet.—Poetry; lays; metrical language.

Verse embalms virtue: and tombs and thrones of rhymes

Preserve frail transitory fame as much

As spice doth body from air's corrupt touch. Donne.

A piece of poetry.—This verse, my friend, be thine. Pope.

To VERSE, v. a. To tell in verse; to relate poetically.

In the shape of Corin sat all day,

Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love

To amorous Phillida. Shakspeare.

To be VERSED, v. n. [versor, Latin.] To be skilled in; to be acquainted with.

This vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.

VERSEMAN, s. A poet; a writer in verse.—The god of us versemen, you know, child, the sun. Prior.

VERSER, s. A maker of verses; a mere versifier.

Though she have a better verser got,
Or poet in the court-account, than I. B. Jonson.

VERSETZ, a town of the south of Hungary, in the county of Temesvar, situated on a hill. Wine, rice, and silk, are cultivated in the environs; and the spinning of silk is the chief manufacture in the town; 23 miles north-north-west of Vivalanka. Population 5000.

VERSHIRE, a township of the United States, in Orange county, Vermont, on the east side of Chelsea; 32 miles north of Windsor.

VERSCICLE, s. [versiculus, Latin.] A little verse.

The lapwing

The versicles shall sing. Skelton.

VERSCICOLOUR, or VERSCICOLOURED, adj. [versicolor, Lat.] Having various colours; changeable in colour.—Gardens full of exotic, versicolour, diversely varied, sweet-smelling flowers. Burton.

VERSIFICATION, s. [versification, Fr.] The art or practice of making verses.—Donne alone had your talent, but was not happy to arrive at your versification. Dryden.—See POETRY.

VERSIFICATOR, or VERSIIFIER, s. [versificateur, Fr.; versificator, Latin.] A versifier; a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.—Statius, the best versificator next Virgil, knew not how to design after him. Dryden.

To VERSIFY, v. n. [versificor, Latin.] To make verses.—You would wonder to hear how soon even children will begin to versify. Sidney.

To VERSIFY, v. a. To relate in verse; to represent in verse.

Shall I tell you whom I love ?

Hearken then a while to me;

And if such a woman move

As I now shall versify;

Be assur'd, 'tis her, or none,

That I love, and love alone.

Browne.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1642.

VERSION, s. [Fr.; versio, Latin.] Change; transformation.—Springs, the antients thought to be made by the version of air into water. Bacon.—Change of direction.—Translation.—The act of translating.

VERSMOLD, a town of Prussian Westphalia; 15 miles south-by-east of Osnabruck.

VERSOY, or VERSOR, a town of Switzerland, on a small stream which flows here into the lake of Geneva; 5 miles north of Geneva.

VERST, s. [Russian.] About three quarters of an English mile. Bailey.—From Colmogro to Usting are five hundred versts or little miles. Milton.

VERSTEGAN (Richard), a descendant of an ancient family in Guelderland, and the son of a cooper in London, enjoyed the advantage of a liberal education at Oxford; and distinguished himself by his literary acquirements; but becoming a Catholic, he left the university without a degree, and removed to Antwerp. About the year 1585, he there published a work, entitled "Theatrum Crudelitatum Hæreticorum nostri Temporis," adorned with engravings, and intended as a counterpart to the Protestant martyrologies. In this work he treated Queen Elizabeth with great severity; and when Verstegan removed to Paris, complaint was preferred against him by the English ambassador to Henry III., who, from motives of policy more than from a disapprobation of his book, caused him for some time to be imprisoned. After his release he returned to Antwerp, where he employed himself as a printer, and published, in 1592, a second edition of his Theatrum. He also entered with much acrimony into a dispute between the regular and secular Roman Catholic clergy in England, taking part with the former. But he was more honourably and usefully employed in preparing his "Restitution of decayed Intelligence in Antiquities concerning the noble and renowned English Nation," which was first printed at Antwerp in 1605, 4to. Bishop Nicholson's character of this work is as follows: "The writer had several advantages for making of some special discoveries on the subject whereon he treats, which is handled so plausibly, and so well illustrated with handsome cuts, that the book has taken and sold very well. But a great many mistakes have escaped him." Some of these are stated by the bishop; and he adds they have been carefully corrected by Mr. Somner. The last of three editions of this work that issued from the press in England, was that of 1674. Among some other works of Verstegan, we find mentioned his "Antiquitates Belgicæ," Antwerp, 1613. He is supposed to have died about the year 1625. Biog. Brit.

VERT, s. [vert, Fr.] Vert, in the laws of the forest, signifies every thing that grows, and bears a green leaf, within the forest, that may cover and hide a deer. Cowel.—I find no mention in all the records of Ireland, of a park or free warren, notwithstanding the great plenty of vert and venison. Sir J. Davies.—[In heraldry.] The colour green.

VERTAISON, a town of France, department of the Puy de Dome, with 2000 inhabitants; 9 miles east of Clermont.

VERTE, a small island of France, in the Mediterranean, arrondissement of Marseilles.

VERTE BAY, or GREEN BAY, a bay of the Atlantic ocean, between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, on the north coast. Lat. 46. N. long. 63. 54. W.

VERTE BAY, a bay on the north-east coast of Newfoundland. Lat. 50. 10. N. long. 56. W.

VERTE RIVIERE, a river of Lower Canada, which has its source in the mountains to the south of the St. Lawrence, and holding a northerly course, falls into that river opposite to Green Island.

VERTEBRAL, adj. [from vertebræ, Lat.] Relating to the joints of the spine.—The carotid, vertebral, and splenic arteries are not only variously contorted, but here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood. Ray.

VERTEBRE, s. [vertebra, Lat.] A joint of the back.—The several vertebræ are so elegantly compacted together, that they are as strong as if they were but one bone. Ray.—See ANATOMY.

VERTEILLAC, a town of France, department of the Dordogne; 9 miles north-north-east of Ribérac. Population 1100.

VERTEUIL, a town of France, on the Charente; 25 miles north of Angoulême. Population 1100.

VERTEUIL, a town of France, department of the Lot and Garonne; 9 miles north-east of Tonneins. Population 1800.

VERTEX, s. [Latin.] Zenith; the point over head.

These keep the vertex; but betwixt the bear
And shining zodiac, where the planets err,
A thousand figur'd constellations roll.

Creech.

A top of a hill; the top of any thing.—Mountains especially abound with different species of vegetables; every vertex or eminence affording new kinds. Derham.

VERTEY, a parish of England, in the county of Essex; 8 miles south-south-west of Colchester.

VERTICAL, adj. [vertical, Fr.] Placed in the zenith.

'Tis raging noon; and vertical the sun
Darts on the head direct his forceful rays.

Thomson.

Placed in a direction perpendicular to the horizon.—From these laws, all the rules of bodies ascending or descending in vertical lines may be deduced. Cheyne.

VERTICALITY, s. The state of being in the zenith.—Unto them the sun is vertical twice a-year; making two distinct summers in the different points of the verticality. Brown.

VERTICALLY, adv. In the zenith.—Although it be not vertical unto any part of Asia, yet it vertically passeth over Peru and Brasilia. Brown.

VERTICALNESS, s. The state of being vertical. Ash.

VERTICILLATE, adj. [from verticillum, Latin.] Verticillate plants are such as have their flowers intermixed with small leaves growing in a kind of whorls about the joints of a stalk, as pennyroyal, horehound, &c. Quincy.

VERTICITY, s. The power of turning; circumvolution; rotation.—Those stars do not peculiarly glance on us, but carry a common regard unto all countries, unto whom their verticity is also common. Brown.

VERTICLE, s. [verticulum, Lat.] An axis; a hinge.—Now grows our nation to its zenith: Fame is no friend to continuance; the verticle is near, when admiration from abroad, and luxury at home, threaten our change. Waterhouse.

VERTIGINOUS, adj. [vertiginosus, Latin.] Turning round; rotatory.—This vertiginous motion gives day and night successively over the whole earth, and makes it habitable all around. Bentley.—Giddy.—Inconstant they are in all their actions, vertiginous, restless, unapt to resolve of any business. Burton.

VERTIGINOUSNESS, s. Unsteadiness.—He that commits sacrilege, is marked for a vertiginousness and changeable fortune. Bp. Taylor.

VERTIGO, s. [Latin.] A giddiness; a sense of turning in the head.—The forerunners of an apoplexy are dulness, vertigos, tremblings. Arbutnot.—See PATHOLOGY.

VERTOT D'AUBŒUF (René Aubert de), a French historian, was born in 1655, in Normandy. Inclined to retirement, he entered, at the early age of 15 or 16, among the capuchins, whose austerities so impaired his constitution, that he was under a necessity of obtaining a brief for exchanging this order for that of the regular canons of Prémontré, with which he connected himself in 1677. Some disputes, however, occurred in this order, which occasioned his abandoning it. After several changes of situations, humorously called the "Abbé de Vertot's revolutions," he settled at Paris in 1701, where he was employed in compiling the memoirs for the house of Noailles, engaged in a contest with that of Bouillon, for which service he obtained a pension. In 1705 he became a pensioner of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres, which was revived in 1701; and afterwards occupied several posts in connection with the duke and duchess of Orleans. In 1715 he was appointed, by the grand-master of Malta, historiographer to that order, with its attendant privileges, and the right of wearing the cross; and the commandery of Santeny was added to his other preferments. Some have said that he was sub-preceptor to Lewis XV., but he was deprived of this honour. As he advanced in life, his infirmities increased, so that he died in 1735, at the age of 80. His disposition and character were highly estimable. His principal works were, "L'Histoire des Révolutions de Portugal," 1689, 12mo., much commended by Bouhours for its style, though the memoirs upon which it was founded were not worthy of confidence; "L'Histoire des Révolutions de Suede," 2 vols. 12mo., 1696, which is characterized as an interesting performance; though in this, as well as some other works, the author inclines to the romantic; "L'Histoire des Révolutions Romaines," 3 vols. 12mo., considered as his principal performance; "L'Histoire de Chevaliers de Malthe," 4 vols. 4to., and 7 vols. 12mo., 1727, less esteemed than the preceding; "Traité de la Mouvance de Bretagne;" "Histoire critique de l'Établissement des Bretons dans les Gaules;" works that have not been popular:—"Origine de la Grandeur de la Cour de Rome, et de la Nomination aux Evêchés et aux Abbayes de France," a posthumous publication. Several of his learned dissertations were inserted in the Memoirs of the Academy of Belles Lettres. The abbé Mably appreciates Vertot highly as an historian, from a preconceived notion that perfect history corresponds very much with epic poetry; but by others he has been deemed a pleasing and eloquent writer, and denominated "The French Quintus Curtius," whilst his style has been extolled, and his manner of treating his subject has been regarded as interesting. Some of the best judges have disputed his thorough knowledge of mankind and the accuracy of his research. Moreri.

VERTOU, a town of France, department of the Loire Inferieure; 4 miles south-east of Nantes. Population 4000.

VERTUS, a town of France, department of the Marne; 12 miles south-east of Epernay. Population 2600.

VERUA, a town of Piedmont, on the Po, with 1800 inhabitants. It has a castle, and is strongly fortified; 20 miles north-east of Turin.

VERVAIN, or VERVINE, s. [verbena, Latin.] A plant.

She night-shade strows to work him ill,
Therewith the vervain, and her dill,
That hindreth witches of their will.

Drayton.

VERVAIN mallow, s. A plant. It hath the whole habit of the mallow or althæa; but differs from it in having its leaves deeply divided. Miller.

VERVELS, s. [vervelle, Fr.] Labels tied to a hawk. Free beauteous slave, thy happy feet
In silver fetters vervails meet.

Lovelace.

VERVIERS, an inland town of the Netherlands, the capital of a district in the province of Liege; 15 miles east-by-south of Liege. Population 10,000.

VERVINS, a town of France, in Champagne; 25 miles north-north-east of Laon. Population 3000.

VERUS. See ROME.

VERWIG, a parish of Wales, in Cardiganshire; 3 miles from Cardigan.

VERY, adj. [veray, or vrai, French; whence veray in ancient English. It has its degrees verier and veriest.] True; real.

Why do I pity him,
That with his very heart despiseth me?

Shakspeare.

Having any qualities, commonly bad, in an eminent degree; complete; perfect; mere.—Those who had drunk of Circe's cup, were turned into very beasts. Davies.—To note things emphatically, or eminently.

'Tis an ill office for a gentleman;
Especially against his very friend.

Shakspeare.

Same, emphatically.

Women are as roses, whose fair flower
Being once displayed, doth fall that very hour.

Shakspeare.

VERY,

VERY, adv. In a great degree; in an eminent degree.—The Greek orator was so very famous for this, that his antagonist reading over the oration which had procured his banishment, asked them, if they were so much affected by the bare reading of it, how much more they would have been alarmed, had they heard him? Addison.

VERYAN, a parish of England, county of Cornwall; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Tregony.

VERZIERV, a lake of European Russia, in the government of Livonia.

VERZINO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citra, with 800 inhabitants.

VERZUOLO, or VERZOLO, a small inland town of Piedmont; 2 miles south of Saluzzo.

VERZY, a town of France, department of the Marne, with 1500 inhabitants; 12 miles south-east of Rheims.

VESALIUS (Andrew), a very eminent anatomist, was born at Brussels in 1513 or 1514; pursued his classical studies at Louvain, and with a view to medicine and anatomy, frequented the schools of Cologne, Montpellier, and Paris, attending in the last-mentioned capital, the lectures of Gunthor and James Sylvius. Upon occasion of the war between Francis I. and Charles V., he was obliged to quit Paris, and in the Low Countries he served as physician and surgeon in the imperial troops from 1535 to 1537. In the latter year he removed to Padua, and taught anatomy there with great applause till the year 1543. He afterwards delivered lectures in the schools of Bologna and Pisa, and in the beginning of 1544, he became physician to Charles V., and resided chiefly at the imperial court. In the midst of his career of professional reputation, a singular circumstance occurred. Being summoned to examine by dissection the body of a Spanish gentleman who died in 1564, and too precipitately commencing the operation, a palpitation was observed in the heart of the subject. This incident being known to the family, Vesalius was accused before the Inquisition, and in order to avert some dreadful sentence, Philip II. interposed, and procured an injunction of a pilgrimage to the Holy Land as an expiatory penance. Accordingly the unfortunate anatomist went first to Cyprus, and from thence to Jerusalem. During his abode in that city, he received an invitation to occupy the chair of anatomy at Padua. Having, as it is supposed, accepted this invitation, the vessel in which he was returning to Europe was wrecked on the coast of Zante, on which island he died in 1564, about the 50th year of his age, and was interred in the church of the Holy Virgin at Zante.

Vesalius has been represented as the first person who rescued anatomical science from the slavery imposed upon it by deference to ancient opinions, and who led the way to modern improvements. His first publication of note was a set of anatomical tables, entitled "Suorum de Corporis Humani Anatomie Librorum Epitome," Basil, 1542, fol. max. The plates were for the most part given again in his great work, "De Corporis Humani Fabrica, Lib. VII." Basil, 1543, fol., which has been frequently reprinted in several countries. He is most correct, says one of his biographers, in the bones, muscles, and viscera. The muscles, says Haller, he describes more accurately than any other writer, to the time of Winslow. The earliest impressions of the plates are considered as the most valuable; but the author corrected his explanations in the second Basil edition, 1555. His treatise "De Radicis Chinae usu Epistola," published in 1546, contains a severe critique on the anatomy of Galen, and a correction of his errors; and his reply to the defence of Galen by Fallopio is the subject of his "Anatomicarum Gabrielis Fallopii Observationum Examen," 1561. The medical and chirological writings of Vesalius are held in no high estimation. His paraphrase on the ninth book of Rhazes, published in 1537, is a compendium of medical practice. After his death, his disciple, Borgarucci, published "Chirurgia Magna" under his name, a work scarcely worthy of its alleged author. An edition of all the anatomical and chirological works of Vesalius, with fine plates, was published under the care of Boerhaave and Albinus at

Leyden, 1725, 2 vols. folio. Haller. Tiraboschi. Eloy. Gen. Biog.

VESAY, CAPE, in the township of Marysburgh, on Lake Ontario, Upper Canada, is the north point, which makes Prince Edward's Bay.

VESCOVATO, a small town of Italy, in the Milanese; 8 miles north-north-east of Cremona.

VESCOVIO, a small inland town in the central part of Italy, in the States of the Church; 12 miles south of Narni.

VESGRE, the name of two small rivers of France, the one of which falls into the Eure, the other into the Sarthe.

To VESICATE, v. a. [vesica, Latin.] To blister.—I saw the cuticular vesicated, and shining with a burning heat. Wiseman.

VESICATION, s. Blistering; separation of the cuticle.—I applied some vinegar prepared with litharge, defending the vesication with pledgets. Wiseman.

VESICATORY, s. [vesicatorium, technical Latin.] A blistering medicine. Bullokar.

VESICLE, s. [vesicula, Latin.] A small cuticle, filled or inflated.—Nor is the humour contained in smaller veins, but in a vesicle, or little bladder. Brown.

VESICULAR, adj. [from vesicula, Latin.] Hollow; full of interstices.—A muscle is a bundle of vesicular threads, or of solid filaments, involved in one common membrane. Cheyne.

VESLE, a river of France, department of the Marne, which falls into the Aisne.

VESLING (John), a physician, anatomist, and botanist, was born at Minden, in Westphalia, in the year 1593; and having studied medicine at Padua, he travelled into Egypt, and upon his visit to Jerusalem, he became a knight of the Holy Sepulchre. Upon his return, he was appointed, in 1652, to occupy the first chair of anatomy at Padua, lecturing also in surgery and botany, and in 1638 superintending the botanical garden. In order to enrich this garden, he travelled to Candia, and other parts of the Levant, where he collected a large number of rare plants. At length, exhausted by his labours, he died at Padua in 1649, at the age of 51 years. As an anatomist, he published "Syntagma Anatomicum publicis Dissectionibus diligenter aptatum," Patav. 1641, and again with additions and figures, Patav. 1647; a work which has been often reprinted and translated into various languages, and which, though for the most part a compilation, contains new observations, especially pertaining to the organ of hearing. A posthumous work, entitled "De Pulitione Ægyptiorum, et aliæ Observationes Anatomicæ, et Epistolæ Medicæ posthumæ," Hafn. 1664, is highly commended by Haller, and contains some curious observations on the hatching of eggs in Egypt, and evolution of parts of the chick, the anatomy of the viper, crocodile, and hyæna, the human lacteals and lymphatics, &c. His principal publications in botany were, "De Plantis Ægypti Observationes, et Notæ ad P. Alpinum," Patav. 1638; "Opobalsami Venteribus cogniti Vindicæ," Patav. 1644; and "Catalogus Plantarum Horti Patavini," Patav. 1642-1644. Haller. Eloy.

VESOUL, a town of France, department of the Upper Saone, situated near the small river Durgeon. The town stands in a fertile district, corn and vines being cultivated around it; 25 miles north-by-east of Besançon. Population 6000.

VESPA, WASP, in Entomology, a genus of the hymenoptera order of insects, the characters of which are these: the mouth horny; the jaw compressed, without proboscis; the palpi or feelers four, unequal, filiform; the antennæ filiform, the first joint being longer and cylindrical; the eyes lunated; the body smooth; the sting concealed; and the upper wings plicated. This is a very extensive genus, comprehending, in Gmelin's System of Linnæus, 159 species; but in the history and arrangement of this species there remains much confusion. We may observe in general, that they are remarkable, like those of the apis, or bee, for the dexterity with which they construct their nests, which in those of many species is of considerable size. We shall confine confine ourselves, in this article, to a description of two species:—

1. Vespa vulgaris, or common wasp.—This has an interrupted small line on both sides of the thorax; a four-spotted scutellum, and the incisions of the abdomen marked with black spots. M. Reaumur and Dr. Derham agree in distinguishing three sorts of wasps; viz., the queens or females, the males, and the common labouring wasps, called mules, which, according to Reaumur, are neither males nor females, and consequently barren. The queens, of which there is a considerable number, though fewer than the males, and of course much fewer than the neutral or labouring wasps, are much longer in the body, and larger than any other wasp; they have a large heavy belly, corresponding in size to the prodigious quantity of eggs with which they are charged. The males are less than the queens, but longer and larger than the common wasps, which are the smallest of the species: they have no stings, with which both the queens and common wasps are furnished. There are in one nest two or three hundred males, and as many females; but their number depends on the size of the nest; and Dr. Derham observed that the males were bred, or at least mostly resided, in the two cells or partings, between the combs, next to the uppermost cell. The antennæ or horns of the male wasps, are longer and larger than those of either of the other sorts; but the chief difference, says Dr. Derham, consists in their parts of generation, which are altogether different from those of other wasps.

The mules are the labourers belonging to the nest, and are employed in procuring materials for the nests, and in constructing them, and also in furnishing the other wasps, and the young, with provisions.

At the beginning of winter, the wasps destroy all the eggs, and all the young ones without exception; all the mules and males which have been employed in this work, being unfurnished with provisions, perish; and none survive, except some few females, which, according to Reaumur, were fecundated in October, and raise a new colony in the beginning of spring.

The wasps construct regular combs, and rear their young in the cells of these combs, in the manner of bees.

A wasp's nest is commonly round, or oval, measuring about ten or twelve inches in diameter, and made of materials resembling the coarser kinds of whitish-brown paper. These materials consist of the fibres of various dry vegetable substances, agglutinated by a tenacious fluid, discharged from the mouths of the insects during their operations. The common covering of it, which is formed of several leaves or layers, with intermediate spaces, is pierced by two holes at a distance from one another, one of which is used for the entrance of the wasps, and the other only for their exit. The space within this covering is cut by a number of horizontal planes, with intervals between them of the size of about half an inch; they are suspended from one another by ligaments, and attached to the covering by their edges; they all have hexagonal cells in their lower surface.

The wasps do not, like bees, prepare and lay up a store of honey for winter use, but the few which survive the season of their birth, remain torpid during the colder months. Wasps in general are both carnivorous and frugivorous.

2. Vespa crabro, or hornet.—This has its thorax black on the fore part, and unspotted, having the incisions of the abdomen marked with a double contiguous black spot. This species is of a much more formidable nature than the common wasp, and of considerably larger size: its colour is a tawny yellow, with ferruginous and black bars and variegations. The nest of this species is generally built in the cavity of some decayed tree, or immediately beneath its roots; and not unfrequently in timber-yards, and other similar situations. It is of smaller size than that of the wasp, and of a somewhat globular form, with an opening beneath; the exterior shell consisting of more or fewer layers of the same strong paper-like substance with that prepared by the wasp: the cells are also of a similar nature, but much fewer in number, and less elegantly composed. The hornet, like the wasp, is extremely voracious, and preys on almost any kind of fresh animal substances which it can obtain, as well as on honey, fruit, &c. &c. Its sting is greatly to be dreaded, and is often productive of very serious consequences.

VESPATIAN. See ROME.

VESPER, a small island in the Pacific Ocean, about 36 miles in circumference; about 60 miles west of Pernicious Island.

VESPER, s. [Latin.] The evening star; the evening.—These signs are black Vesper's pageants. Shakspeare.

VESPERS, s. [without the singular, from vesperus, Lat.] The evening service of the Romish church.

VESPERTILIO, BAT, in Zoology, a genus of the order primates, in the class mammalia; which, though ranked by Linnæus in the order of primates, differs greatly from the rest. The characters of this genus are, that the teeth are erect, sharp-pointed, and approximated; and that the hands are palmed with a membrane surrounding the body, and giving the animal the power of flight. Dr. Shaw observes, that the curious formation of these animals cannot be contemplated without admiration; the bones of the extremities being continued into long and thin processes, connected by a most delicate membrane or skin, capable, from its thinness, of being contracted at pleasure into innumerable wrinkles, so as to lie in a small space when the animal is at rest, and to be stretched to a very wide extent for occasional flight. The species of this extraordinary genus are numerous, and may be divided into the tailed and tailless bats. Gmelin, in his edition of the Linnæan System, enumerates twenty-three species, and distributes them into several divisions, according to the number of the fore-teeth in the upper and lower jaw.

I.—Bats with four Fore-teeth in both Jaws.

1. Vespertilio vampyrus.—Tailless bat, with the nose simple, or without any appendage, and the flying membrane divided between the thighs. This is the ternate bat of Pennant; and this, or the variety α of Gmelin, the colour of which is chiefly black, is the vespertilio ingens of Clusius, the vespertilio volans of Bontius, the chien volant of Daubenton, and roussette of Buffon. Gmelin enumerates two other varieties, differing in size and colour; one the great bat of Edwards, or rougette of Buffon, and the other the lesser ternate bat of Pennant.

2. Vespertilio spectrum.—Tailless bat, with a funnel-shaped, sharp-pointed membrane on the nose.—This is the andira guacu, vespertilio cornutus of Piso, the vampyre of Buffon, or spectre bat of Pennant.

3. Vespertilio perspicillatus.—A tailless bat, with a nose furnished with a plane leaf acuminate.—This is found in South America, and is supposed by some to be the javelin bat of Pennant.

4. Vespertilio spasma.—A tailless bat, with a doubly heart-shaped leaf-like membrane on the nose. This is the glis volans ternatanus of Seba, and cordated bat of Pennant. The colour is reddish-brown; the extent of wing about fifteen inches, and length of body nearly four inches.—It is a native of Ceylon and the Molucca islands.

5. Vespertilio hastatus.—A tailless bat, with a trefoil-shaped upright membrane on the nose. This is the javelin bat of Pennant, with large pointed ears, a membrane at the nose in the form of an ancient javelin, with two upright processes on each side, cinereous fur, and of the size of the common bat: synonymous, according to Pennant, with the vespertilio perspicillatus of Linnæus, and inhabiting the warmer parts of America.

6. Vespertilio soricinus.—A tailless bat, with lengthened snout, furnished with a heart-shaped, leaf-like membrane. This is the leaf bat of Pennant, and bat from Jamaica of Edwards; with small rounded ears, a web between the hind-legs; fur of a mouse-colour, tinged with red, and size of the common bat.—Found in South America.

7. Vespertilio leporinus.—Tailed bat, with the upper lip bifid. This is the Peruvian bat of Pennant. It has a head resembling that of a pug-dog; the ears are large and straight, sharp

VESPERTILIO.

1. V. Vampyrus. 2. V. Vespertilionis. 3. V. Auritus. 4. V. Spectrum. 5. V. Lepus.

sharp at the ends, and pointing forwards; tail inclosed in the membrane which joins to each hind-leg, and supported by two long cartilaginous ligaments, involved in the membrane; colour of the fur iron-grey; body of the size of a middling rat, and extent of wing two feet five inches.

II.—Fore-teeth in the upper Jaw four, in the lower six.

8. Vespertilio auritus.—Tailed bat, with simple or appendiculated mouth and nose, and double ears larger than the head. This is the long-eared English bat of Edwards, the oreiller of Buffon, and the long-eared bat of Pennant. This very much resembles the next species, but is rather smaller, and the fur has less of the reddish tinge; but it is distinguished by the very large size of the ears, which are more than an inch long, and very considerably wide; slightly rounded at the tips, and furnished internally with a kind of secondary auricle or internal flap, so placed as to serve by way of a valve or guard to the auditory passage.

9. Vespertilio murinus.—Tailed bat, with simple nose, and ears smaller than the head. This is the chauve-souris of Buffon, the short-eared English bat of Edwards, and the common bat of Pennant. It is about two inches and a half from the nose to the tip of the tail, and the extent of the wings, fully expanded, is about nine inches: it is of a mouse-colour, tinged with reddish; the wings and ears black, the latter being small and rounded.

This and the former bats are the two most common species in this country; and they are those which are seen fluttering about in the evenings of summer and autumn; often uttering a sharp, stridulous note or scream during their flight, and pursuing the various insects on which they feed, particularly moths. They are sometimes taken by throwing up the heads of burdock whitened with flour, being thus caught by the hooked prickles and brought to the ground. The bat is, like the mouse, capable of being tamed to a certain degree. Insects are its favourite food, though it will not reject raw flesh when offered; so that the notion that bats go down chimneys and gnaw men's bacon is not improbable. The vulgar opinion, that bats, when on a flat surface, cannot get on the wing again, is erroneous. Bats are commonly supposed to produce two at a birth, which they suckle for a considerable time. When recently born, they adhere so tenaciously to the breast of the parent, as not to be removed without great difficulty: they lodge in great numbers in the cavities of old buildings, under the projections of walls, in the hollows of trees, in rocky places, &c. &c. In these recesses they lie torpid during winter, till the warmth of the vernal atmosphere invites them abroad to make their evening excursions. When taken torpid, and brought into a warm situation, they awake from their slumber, and again expand their wings. During their state of torpidity, the circulation of the blood is not perceivable in the smaller vessels, but when awakened by warmth, it becomes visible by the microscope. Bats are said to drink on the wing by sipping the surface, like swallows, as they play over pools and streams. They are fond of frequenting waters; not only for the sake of drinking, but on account of the insects that hover over them. The general appearance of the bat, together with its nocturnal flight, excites the idea of something that is hideous and dismal; and therefore the ancients consecrated it to Proserpine; and hence painters, in their representations of fiends and demons, usually exhibit them with the leathern wings of the bat. It is also no less evident, that the larger bats of India and Africa might, by a little poetical exaggeration, serve very well in a general description of the fabulous Harpies. Spallanzani, having found that bats would fly in the darkest chamber with precision, and without touching the walls, discovered also the same exactness in their motions, when their eyes were closely covered; and he even destroyed the eyes and covered their sockets with leather; and in this state they were equally accurate in all their movements. Similar experiments were tried by several other naturalists, with the same result. In order to account for these phenomena, professor Jurin, of Geneva, makes a variety of pertinent observations. Neither the touch, nor ear, nor smell, nor taste, is sufficient in his opinion to supply the want of sight; but from some anatomical investigations of these animals, he concluded that a very large proportion of nerves is expanded on the upper jaw, the muzzle, and the organ of hearing; and these appeared to him, in a great degree, to account for the extraordinary faculty above mentioned. Mr. Carlisle's observations on this subject lead us to conclude that the sense of hearing in the bat is extremely delicate, and that this is one of the principal causes of the dexterity with which these animals, even when blinded, avoid objects which would impede their flight. Mr. Carlisle found, that when the external ears of the vespervilio auritus in a state of blindness were closed, it struck against the sides of the room, without being at all aware of its situation. These bats refused every kind of food for four days, as was also the case with others which were preserved in a dark box for above a week. During the day-time they were very desirous of retirement and darkness; and, while confined to the box, never moved nor endeavoured to get out during the whole day, and when spread on the carpet, they crawled slowly to a dark corner or crevice. At sun-set, the scene was quite changed; every one of them then endeavoured to scratch its way out of the box; a continued chirping was heard, and no sooner was the lid of their prison opened than each was active to escape, either flying away immediately, or running nimbly to a convenient place for taking wing. When these bats were first collected, several of the females had young ones clinging to their breasts in the act of sucking. One of them flew with perfect ease, though two little ones were thus attached to her, which weighed nearly as much as their parent. All the young were destitute of down, and were of a black colour.

10. Vespertilio noctula.—Tailed bat, with nose and mouth simple; oval ears, and very small valves. This is the noctule of Buffon, and great bat of Pennant. This species is larger than the vespervilio auritus, its extended wings measuring from fourteen to fifteen inches; the length from the nose to the tip of the tail being about four inches and a half; the nose is slightly bilobated; the eyes are small and rounded; the body is fleshy and plump; the shoulders very thick and muscular; the fur very soft and glossy, and of a bright chesnut-colour.—This is an inhabitant of Britain and France; and is said to be common in some parts of Russia, sheltering in caverns. It flies high in the air in search of food, and does not skim near the surface, like the smaller bats. It has been found occasionally in great numbers under the eaves of old buildings, and its smell is generally strong and unpleasant.

11. Vespertilio serotinus.—Tailed yellowish bat, with short emarginated ears. This is the serotine of Buffon; its length from nose to rump two inches and a half.—A native of France, and found in Russia.

12. Vespertilio pipistrellus.—Tailed blackish-brown bat, with convex front and ovate emarginated ears, scarcely longer than the head. The pipistrelle of Buffon and of Pennant.—This is a small species, and found in France. The length from nose to rump scarcely an inch and a quarter; the extent of wings somewhat more than six inches.

13. Vespertilio barbastellus.—Tailed bat, with elevated hairy cheeks, and large ears angulated on the lower part. The barbastelle of Buffon and of Pennant. Length about two inches from nose to tail; extent about ten inches; upper part of the body dusky-brown, lower part ash-coloured; ears broad and long; nose short; cheeks full; and end of the nose flattened.—Found in France.

14. Vespertilio hispidus.—Tailed hairy bat, with channelled nostrils, and long narrow ears. The bearded bat of Pennant; a small species: above reddish-brown; beneath whitish, tinged with yellow; nostrils open; hair on the forehead and under the chin very long; tail included in a very veiny membrane.

III.—Fore-teeth in the upper Jaw four, in the lower eight.

15. Vespertilio pictus.—Tailed bat, with simple nose, and funnel-shaped appendiculated ears. The autre chauvesouris

souris of Buffon, and striped bat of Pennant.—A Ceylonese species, measuring from nose to the end of the tail two inches; above brown; wings striped with black, or with tawny and brown; changing in colour of the body, which is reddish-brown, with the under parts whitish; the nose small and short; the ears short, broad, and pointing forwards.

IV.—Fore-teeth in the upper Jaw two, in the lower six.

16. Vespertilio nigrata.—Tailed yellowish-brown bat, with the fore-part of the head, the feet, and the tail black. The Senegal bat of Pennant, with a long head, nose a little pointed, ears short and pointed, head and body tawny-brown, mixed with ash-colour; under parts paler; the two last joints of the tail extending beyond the membrane; length from nose to rump above four inches; extent of wing twenty-one inches.—A native of Senegal.

V.—Fore-teeth in the upper Jaw two, in the lower four.

17. Vespertilio molossus.—Tailed bat, with pendulous upper lip, and long tail, stretching beyond the connecting membrane. This is the bull-dog bat of Pennant, which has a thick nose; broad and round ears; the upper part of the body of a deep ash-colour, the lower paler; the five last joints of the tail disengaged from the membrane; length above two inches; extent of wings nine and a half.—Found in the West Indies.

Gmelin reckons two varieties, one greater, the autre chauve-souris of Buffon, and the other lesser, the autre chauve-souris of Buffon.—Found in the American islands.

VI.—Fore-teeth in the upper Jaw two, in the lower none.

18. Vespertilio cephalotes.—Tailed yellowish-grey bat, with large head, extended lips, spiral nostrils, subocular warts, and small ears without valves; the end of the tail reaches beyond the membrane; the tongue covered with papillæ and minute spines; the claw or thumb joined to the wing by a membrane, and the first ray of the wing terminated by a claw; the head and back of a greyish-ash colour; length from nose to rump three inches and three-quarters; extent of wings about fifteen.—This is a native of the Molucca isles.

VII.—Fore-teeth in the upper Jaw none, in the lower four.

18. Vespertilio lepturus.—Tailed bat, with tubular nostrils, slender tail, and a purse-shaped cavity on the interior part of each of the wings. This is the pouched bat of Pennant. The colour of the body is cinereous-brown; the under parts paler; length an inch and a half.—A native of Surinam.

19. Vespertilio ferrum equinum.—Bat with horse-shoe shaped nose; ears without valves; and tail half the length of the body. This is the fer-à-cheval of Buffon. The upper part of the body is deep cinereous; the lower part whitish. Gmelin mentions two varieties, greater and smaller, which may be the male and female; the greater above three inches and a half long from the nose to the tip of the tail, and extent of the wings above fourteen.—Found in France, very rarely in England; also about the Caspian sea.

VIII.—No Fore-teeth.

21. Vespertilio noveboracensis.—Long-tailed ferruginous bat, with short sharp nose, short round ears, and white spot at the base of each wing. This is the New York bat of Pennant; $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches long from nose to tail; tail $1\frac{1}{10}$ inch; extent of wings $10\frac{1}{2}$ inches; head shaped like that of a mouse; tip of the nose bifid; tail inclosed in a conic-shaped membrane; head, body, and upper side of the membrane inclosing the tail, covered with long soft hair of a bright tawny colour; the wings thin, naked, and dusky, and the bones of the hind legs very slender.—A native of North America, and also found in New Zealand.

IX.—Number and order of Fore-teeth unknown to Gmelin.

22. Vespertilio lasiopterus.—Tailed bat, with the membrane connecting the feet very broad, and covered on the upper part with hair. The forehead of this species, which is one of the largest, is very prominent and rounded; nose short; general colour ferruginous; the upper part of the wings of a paler cast; the ends and lower parts black.

23. Vespertilio lasiurus.—Tailed bat, with tumid lips, and broad hairy tail. A small species, with upright small ears; tail broad at the base, terminating in a point thickly covered with hair; colour reddish-brown.

24. Vespertilio auripendulus.—Tailed bat, with obtuse nose, and large pendant ears, with pointed tips. This is the slouch-eared bat of Pennant; tail long, included in a membrane, and terminated with a hook; colour above deep chestnut, lighter on the belly, cinereous on the sides; length three inches and four lines; extent of wing fifteen inches.—Native of Guiana.

25. Vespertilio nasutus.—Tailless ferruginous bat, with long nose, sloping at the tip; and long upright rounded ears. This is the great serotine of Pennant; colour of the upper parts a reddish-chestnut; sides of a clear yellow; remainder of a dirty white: length five inches eight lines; extent of wings two feet.—A native of Guiana, assembling in great numbers in meadows and other open places; flying in company with goat-suckers in such multitudes as to darken the air.

26. Vespertilio speoris.—Tailed bat, with a transverse frontal cavity. This is the pit-nose bat, and from Schreber's description appears to be about the size of the common bat, and to resemble it in its general aspect, but differing in colour, which is a pale yellowish ash-brown. Its principal character, though not peculiar to it, is a remarkable transverse concavity situated on the forehead, lined with a naked blackish skin; the nostrils seated in a similar concavity at the tip of the nose.—A native of India.

VE'SPERTINE, adj. [vespertinus, Latin.] Happening or coming in the evening; pertaining to the evening.—The stars, their matutine and vespertine motions, rise and fall. Sir T. Herbert.

VESPOLATO, a small town in the north of Italy; 6 miles south of Navara.

VESPUCCI (Amerigo), was the son of a Florentine of noble family, and became famous by giving name to the largest quarter of the world. He was born in 1451, and having been educated under a paternal uncle, he was sent by his father, in the year 1490, to conduct a commercial concern in Spain. At Seville he was informed of the discoveries made by Columbus, and imbibed the desire of distinguishing himself by a similar pursuit. Whether he had been previously engaged in any nautical expeditions has been a subject of controversy, since he has claimed the honour of being the first discoverer of the American continent. Of himself he says, that having been engaged by Ferdinand, king of Spain, to prosecute the discoveries in the New World, he sailed from Cadiz in May 1497, and after touching at the Canaries, arrived in thirty-seven days at a land which he conceived to be Terra Firma; and if this account be true, he must have anticipated Columbus's view of the coast of Paria by a whole year. But this expedition depends merely on his own statement; and if we consider the high estimation in which Columbus was held, in the year 1497, at the court of Ferdinand and Isabella, and that he possessed the privileges of viceroy and governor of all the newly discovered countries; we cannot suppose it credible, that any other person should be employed to prosecute the object above stated. Accordingly it has been generally believed, that Vespucci's account of his first voyage is a mere fiction, or that it is antedated, in order to support his own claims. It has also been disputed, whether in the voyage which he really made in 1499, Vespucci was a commander or merely a passenger. It is most probable that he was a passenger, and that being skilful in astronomy, a science at that time imperfectly understood, he was very useful to the navigators, and much esteemed by them. After his return he resided for some time at Seville; and upon being repeatedly invited to the court of Manuel, king of Portugal, he secretly quitted Spain, and went to Lisbon, where the king engaged him to undertake a voyage of discovery. With this view he had the command of three vessels, and sailed in May, 1501, making land 5° south of the equinoctial line, which must have been Brazil, though he has not mentioned it. Herrera, however, asserts, that at this time he was with Ojedo in the gulf of Darien, and the discovery of Brazil is attributed by the Portuguese to Cabral in the year 1500. But it appears from the testimony of Peter Martyr, a contemporary writer, that Vespucci really sailed in the service of Portugal some degrees to the south of the line. In May, 1503, he proposed in another voyage pursuing his course to the East Indies, but was thrown on the coast of Brazil, and moored in the bay of All-Saints, to which he gave name; and from thence he returned to Lisbon in 1504. Being again taken into the service of Spain, he resided at Seville in 1507, with the title of pilot-major, and a yearly pension, in consideration of marking out the tracks to be followed by navigators, with the power of examining all pilots. This employment afforded him an opportunity of connecting his own name with new discoveries; and as he drew charts for mariners, he distinguished the newly discovered countries by the name of "America," as if it were "Amerigo's land;" so that the true discoverer, notwithstanding the complaints of the Spaniards, was defrauded of the honour that belonged to him. Vespucci, however, cannot vie in the public estimation with Columbus. He is supposed to have died in 1516, and to have been buried on one of the Azores. Vespucci drew up a compendium of his four voyages, which was first published by Simon Grineus, in his "Novus Orbis," at Basil, in 1537, and afterwards in Ramusio's Collections. The Italian originals were afterwards discovered and published by Bandini. Tiraboschi. Gen. Biog.

VE'SSEL, s. [vas, Latin.] Any thing in which liquids or other things are put.

For Banquo's issue have I filled my mind;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace,
Only for them.

Shakspeare.

The containing parts of an animal body.—Of these elements are constituted the smallest fibres; of those fibres the vessels; of those vessels the organs of the body. Arbutnot.—Any vehicle in which men or goods are carried on the water.—[vaisseau, French; phaselus, Latin.]

Now secure the painted vessel glides;
The sun-beams trembling on the floating tides.

Pope.

Any capacity; any thing containing.

I have my fill

Of knowledge, what this vessel can contain. Milton.

Half a quarter of a sheet of paper. [Perhaps from the Latin fasciculus, or fasciola, quasi vassiola. Lemon.—In theology.] One relating to God's household.—If the rigid doctrines be found apt to cool all those men's love of God, who have not the confidence to believe themselves of the number of the few chosen vessels, and to beget security and presumption in others who have conquered those difficulties. Hammond.

To VE'SSEL, v. a. To put into a vessel; to barrel.—Take earth and vessel it; and in that set the seed. Bacon.

VESSEL BAY, on the east shore of Lake Champlain; sets up to the north-east, in the township of Charlotte, in Vermont.

VE'SSETS, s. A kind of cloth commonly made in Suffolk. Bailey.

VESSJESGONSK, a small town of European Russia, in the government of Tver, on the river Mologa; 190 miles north of Moscow. Population 2000.

VESSIGNON, s. [among horsemen.] A windgall, or soft swelling on the inside and outside of a horse's hoof. Dict.

VEST, s. An outer garment.

Over his lucid arms

A military vest of purple flow'd.

Milton.

To VEST, v. a. To dress; to deck; to enrobe.

The verdant fields with those of heav'n may vie,
With ether vested, and a purple sky. Dryden.

To dress in a long garment.

Just Simeon, and prophetic Anna, spake,
Before the altar and the vested priest. Milton.

To make possessor of; to invest with: it has with before the thing possessed.

Had I been vested with the monarch's power,
Thou must have sigh'd, unlucky youth, in vain. Prior.

To place in possession: with in before the possessor.—Empire and dominion was vested in him, for the good and behoof of others. Locke.

VESTA, in Mythology, one of the principal deities of the Pagans. Those who have diligently investigated the religion of the Pythagorean philosophers pretend, that by Vesta they meant the universe, to which they ascribed a soul, and which they worshipped as the sole divinity, sometimes under the name of το πᾶν, the whole, and sometimes under the appellation of μονο, unity.

VE'STAL, s. [vestalis, Latin.] A virgin consecrated to Vesta; a pure virgin.

Women are not

In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Shakspeare.

VE'STAL, adj. [vestalis, Latin.] Denoting pure virginity.

Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it. Shakspeare.

VESTALS, or VESTALES, virgins in ancient Rome, consecrated to the service of the goddess Vesta; and particularly to watch the sacred fire in her temple.

Numa first instituted four Vestals; and Plutarch tells us, Servius Tullius added two more; but Dionysius Halicarnassus and Valerius Maximus ascribe this augmentation to Tarquinius Priscus; which number, six, lasted as long as the worship of the goddess Vesta. The Vestals made a vow of perpetual virginity; their employment was, the sacrificing to Vesta, and keeping up the holy fire in her temple. If they violated the vows of chastity, they were punished with remarkable severity; being shut up, or buried, in a deep pit, or cavern, in a place called "agger et sceleratus campus," with a lighted lamp, and a little water and milk, and there left to be devoured by hunger. If they let out the fire, they were whipped by the pontifex maximus; and the fire was rekindled by the sun-beams. It is said, that they always lighted it anew on the first of March in every year, whether it had gone out or not.

To be secure of their virginity, at their admission, it was provided, that they should not be under six, nor above ten years old. They were chosen by lot, out of twenty virgins, carried by the pontiff to the comitia, for that purpose.

They were only consecrated for thirty years; after which time they were at liberty to go out, and be married. If they continued in the house after that time, they were only to be assistants, in point of advice, to the other Vestals.

The first ten years they were to employ in learning their functions; the ten following they were to exercise them; and the last ten to teach them to others.

Their order was very rich; both on account of the endowments of the emperors, and of legacies of other persons.

The Vestals had a particular place allotted them at the amphitheatres and games of the Circus. Their vehicle was the carpentum, or piletum. The veil in which they sacrificed was called suffibulum.

At first, they were nominated by the kings; but after the extinction of monarchy, by the pontifex maximus, or high-priest. The eldest of them was called maxima, as the first pontiff was maximus.

They had divers privileges; disposed of their effects by testament, in their father's life-time; and whenever they met a criminal going to execution, they had a power to pardon him. Whenever they went abroad, they had the fasces carried ried before them, a consul, or the prætor, being obliged to give way to them.

This fire was held a pledge of the empire of the world. If it went out, it was judged a very unlucky prognostic, and was to be expiated with infinite ceremonies.

VESTIBULE, s. [vestibulum, Latin.] The porch or first entrance of a house.—Looking upon knowledge to pass into the mansions of the mind through language, they were careful not to offend in the vestibule. Harris.

VESTIBULUM, in Anatomy, a cavity belonging to the labyrinth of the ear. See ANATOMY.

To VESTIGATE, v. a. [vestigatio, Latin.] To trace. Obsolete. It is in the old vocabulary of Cockeram. We now say investigate.

VESTIGE, s. [vestigium, Latin.] Footstep; mark left behind in passing.—The truth passes so slightly through men's imaginations, that they must use great subtilty to track its vestiges. Harvey.

VESTIMENT, s. [vestimentum, Lat.] Garment; part of dress.—The sculptors could not give vestments suitable to the quality of the persons represented. Dryden.

VESTRY, s. [vestiaire, French; vestiarium, Latin; vestiary, old Eng. Pr. Parv.] A room appendant to the church, in which the sacerdotal garments and consecrated things are repositied.

Bold Amycus, from the robb'd vestry brings
The chalices of heav'n; and holy things
Of precious weight.

Dryden.

A parochial assembly commonly convened in the vestry.—They create new senators, vestry elders, without any commandment of the word. White.

VESTURE, s. [vestura, Italian.] Garment; robe.

What, weep you when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded?

Shakspeare.

Dress; habit; external form.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st
But in his motion like an angel sings.
But this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it.

Shakspeare.

VESUVIUS, a mountain in the south of Italy, about 8 miles south-south-east of Naples, celebrated for its volcanic eruptions. It rises in a gentle swell from the bay of Naples, to an elevation of nearly 3700 feet. The view from its summit is very beautiful, including Naples, with its bay, its islands, and its promontories, as well as the delightful scenery of the Campagna Felice. To the west the prospect loses itself in the immensity of the sea; to the east it extends far into the interior, until bounded by the Appennines. But the most interesting objects in this view are the different portions of the mountain itself: the upper part torn by a series of convulsions, and strewed with its own fragments; the part next in the descent, mixed with dried lava, extending in wide black lines over its surface; while the lower part of the mountain, as if danger were far remote, is covered with villages and country seats, with fields of maize, groves of fruit trees, and other luxuriant productions, all displaying the great fertility given by the ashes to the soil. The summit of the mountain is in the form of a cone, and consists of masses of burned earth, ashes, and sand, thrown out in the course of ages by the volcano. It is steep, and difficult of ascent, from the looseness of the materials. The crater is extensive, nearly a mile and a half in circumference, but has not above 350 feet of depth or descent from the ridge. Its sides or interior surface have been progressively formed of ashes and cinders, intermixed with some rocks and dried lava. The lower part of the crater is a level spot, of nearly three quarters of a mile in circumference, composed of a sort of crust of brown burned earth, and containing several orifices like funnels, not large, but emitting a thin vapour.

Such is, in general, the appearance of the upper part of the mountain, but it is subject to frequent changes. After the eruption of 1794, the cone lost much of its elevation; a portion of it, after being shaken, and even raised, by the convulsion, sinking down into the crater, and almost filling up the cavity. The fire raging in the hollow of the mountain, having thus lost its upward vent, burst through the side, and poured out the lava, which rolled down the declivity all the way to the sea, burning up the cultivated ground, and covering with a fluid which afterwards became solid and hard, the chief part of the town of Torre del Greco. The total number of great eruptions on record is above 30, reckoning from the celebrated one of A. D. 79, which proved destructive to Herculaneum. One of the latest, though not most formidable eruptions, took place in the end of the summer of 1819. The mountain had discharged almost daily small quantities of fire and lava; but on 27th of July, a thick smoke, accompanied by flames, and the discharge of red-hot stones, rose from the crater. The shocks succeeded each other, and seemed to cause a trembling on the summit of the mountain. Next day, the crisis took place; one side of the crater was suddenly rent with a dreadful crash, and its highest point, with the chief part of its south-west side, fell in. From the breach thus opened, there burst forth a great stream of lava; and this was, in 1822, the principal opening, although eruptions take place sometimes above, and sometimes below it, according to the pressure of the melted substance in the interior of the crater. The permanent effect of this last eruption has been to lower the height of the summit.

VESZPRIM, a palatinate in the west of Hungary, to the north of the Lake of Balaton. It has a superficial extent of nearly 1600 square miles, with 152,000 inhabitants.

VESZPRIM, a town of Hungary, the chief place of the preceding palatinate; 43 miles south-south-west of Raab. Population about 4500.

VETCH, s. [vicia, Lat.] A plant with a papilionaceous flower, producing a legume.

Where vetches, pulse, and tares have stood,
And stalks of lupines grew.

Dryden.

VETCHY, adj. Made of vetches; abounding in vetches; consisting of vetch or pease-straw.

If to my cottage thou wilt resort,
There may'st thou ligge in a vetchy bed,
Till fairer fortune shew forth his head.

Spenser.

VE'TTERAN, s. [veteranus, Latin.] An old soldier; a man long practised in any thing.—The Arians, for the credit of their faction, took the eldest, the best experienced, the most wary, and the longest practised veterans they had amongst them. Hooker.

VE'TTERAN, adj. Long practised in war; long experienced.—There was a mighty strong army of land-forces, to the number of fifty thousand veteran soldiers. Bacon.

VETERINA'RIAN, s. [veterinarius, Lat.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.—That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also received by good veterinarians, and some who have laudably discoursed upon horses. Brown.

VE'TTERINARY, adj. [veterinarius, Lat.] Pertaining to farriery, and to science in the diseases of cattle.

UETERSEN, a small town of Denmark, in Holstein; 17 miles north-west of Hamburg. Population 2000.

VEFLUGA, a river in the interior of European Russia, in the government of Kostroma, which joins the Wolga.

VETSCHAU, a town of Lower Lusatia, on the Spree; 50 miles north-by-east of Dresden.

VETTORI (Pietro, Lat. Victorius), a descendant of a noble family at Florence, was born in 1499. Educated at his native city and at Pisa, he visited Spain, and returned to Italy with a collection of ancient inscriptions. At Rome he complimented Clement VII. on his accession to the pontificate; and settling at Florence, joined the party opposed to the house of Medici, and supported it with his eloquence and arms. Upon the assassination of Alessandro di Medici in 1537, he withdrew to Rome. In the following year, duke Cosmo appointed him public professor of Greek and Latin eloquence at Florence, and he sustained this office with distinguished reputation for many years. He was much esteemed by several popes, and Marcellus II. drew him to Rome:

Rome; but upon the death of this pontiff, he resumed the chair at Florence, and held it nearly to the close of his life. He died in 1585, regretted and eulogized by the learned, on account of his virtuous and amiable manners, as well as his extensive erudition. Vettori took great pains in improving the editions of the ancient Greek and Latin writers. Of the latter we may mention Cicero, Terence, Varro, and Sallust; and of the former, Euripides, Porphyry, Demetrius Phalereus, Plato, Xenophon, Dion. Halicarn., Aristotle, Æschylus, and Clemens Alexandrinus. His commentaries upon the rhetoric, poetics, ethics, and politics of Aristotle, and upon the elocution of Demetrius Phalereus, are much valued. He was also the author of many Italian and Latin letters, and of some poems, of an elegant Latin tract on the culture of the olive, and of other pieces in MS. Tiraboschi. Gen. Biog.

VETUST, adj. [vetustus, Lat.] Old; ancient. Not in use. Cockeram.

VEUDRE, a town of France, department of the Allier; 14 miles north-west of Moulins.

VEULLES, St. MARTIN, a sea-port of France, department of the Lower Seine; 14 miles west-by-south of Dieppe.

VEVAY, a bailiwick and town of the Swiss canton of the Pays de Vaud, situated on the lake of Geneva; 10 miles east of Lausanne.

VEVAY, a post township of the United States, and capital of Switzerland county, Indiana, on the Ohio; 8 miles above the mouth of the Kentucky, nearly equi-distant from Cincinnati, Louisville, and Lexington, about 45 miles from each.

To VEX, v. a. [vexo, Lat.] To plague; to torment; to harass.

Do you think

The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Shakspeare.

To disturb; to disquiet.

Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex'd sea; singing aloud.

Shakspeare.

To trouble with slight provocations. To stretch as by hooks.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spongy softness made.

Dryden.

To VEX, v. n. To fret; to be on tenters; to be uneasy. Ulysses gave good care, and fed
And drunke his wine, and vext, and ravished
His food for mere vexation.

Chapman.

VEXATION, s. The act of troubling.

O that husband,

My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it!

Shakspeare.

The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.

Shakspeare.

The cause of trouble or uneasiness.

Your children were vexation to your youth;
But mine shall be a comfort to your age.

Shakspeare.

An act of harassing by law.—Albeit the party grieved thereby, may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.—A slight teasing trouble.

VEXA'TIOUS, adj. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.—Consider him maintaining his usurped title, by continual vexatious wars against the kings of Judah. South.—Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.—He leads a vexatious life, who, in his noblest actions is so gored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.—Teasing; slightly troublesome.

VEXA'TIOUSLY, adv. Troublesomely; uneasily.—As to our neighbour and rival, France, I shall formally prove it, that her subjects pay more than England, on a computation of the wealth of both parties; that her taxes are more vexatiously collected. Burke.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1643.

VEXA'TIOUSNESS, s. Troublesomeness; uneasiness.

VE'XER, s. One who vexes. Hulot.

VE'XINGLY, adv. So as to vex, plague, or disturb.—

It is the same poverty which makes men speak or write smuttily, that forces them to talk vexingly. Tatler.

VEYNES, a town of France, department of the Upper Alps; 14 miles west of Gap.

VEYRE, a town of France, department of the Puy de Dome, with 3300 inhabitants; 9 miles south-east of Clermont

VEZELAY, a town of France, department of the Yonne, situated on a rugged mountain; 25 miles south-by-east of Auxerre.

VEZELISE, a town of France, department of the Meurthe, on the river Brenon; 12 miles south-west of Luneville.

VEZENOBRE, a town of France, department of the Gard; 18 miles north-west of Nîmes.

VEZERE, a small river in the south of France, department of the Correze. It falls into the Dordogne.

VEZINS, a town of France, department of the Aveyron; 14 miles north-west of Milhaud.

VEZZANA, a small town of the Austrian states, in the south of Tyrol, near Trent.

UFFCULME, UFFCULMB, or UFFCOLUMB, a market town and parish of England, in Devonshire, situated on the river Columb; 4½ miles north-east of Collumbton. Markets on Monday and Wednesday, and 3 annual fairs. Population 1564.

UFFENHEIM, or UFFINGEN, a small town of Germany, in Bavarian Franconia; 20 miles south-south-east of Wurzburg, and 40 west-north-west of Nuremberg. It has 1800 inhabitants, and a well endowed hospital.

UFFINGTON, a parish of England, in Berkshire; 4 miles south-south-east of Great Faringdon. Population 462

UFFINGTON, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 2½ miles east-by-north of Stamford. Population 445.

UFFINGTON, a parish of England, in Salop; 2½ miles east-north-east of Shrewsbury.

UFFNOW, a small island of Switzerland, in the lake of Zurich; about a mile in circumference.

UFFORD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 2½ miles north-east-by-north of Woodbridge. Population 541.

UFFORD, a hamlet of England, in Northamptonshire; 3½ miles north-north-east of Wandsford.

UFLEN, or UFELN, a small town of the north-west of Germany, in the county of Lippe-Deilmold; 15 miles south-south-west of Minden, and 8 west-north-west of Lemgo.

UFTON, a parish of England, in Berkshire; 7 miles south-west-by-west of Reading.

UFTON, a parish of England, in Warwickshire; 3½ miles west-by-north of Southam.

UFTRUNGEN, a small town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Merseburg, near Rossla. Population 900.

UGBOROUGH, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 3 miles north-north-east of Modbury.

UGENTO, a small town of Italy, in the south-east of the kingdom of Naples, in the Terra d'Otranto, the see of a bishop; 12 miles south-east of Gallipoli, and 20 south-west of Otranto.

UGFORD, a hamlet of England, in the parish of South Newton, Wiltshire.

UGGESHALL, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 4½ miles north-west of Southwold.

UGGIATE, a small town of Austrian Italy, in the Milanese; 5 miles west of Como.

UGGIONE, or OGGIONE (Marco da), was a native of Oggione, in the Milanese, and was born about the year 1480. He was one of the most able scholars of Lionardo da Vinci. Avoiding the minute elaborate finish of his master's smaller works, which was imitated by his fellow pupils generally, and attaching himself to the study of the great principles of the art, he became a skilful painter in fresco. He must have been greatly aided in his progress, by having copied the most renowned and the greatest of Da Vinci's works, the Last Supper, painted in the refectory of the Dominican minican convent at Milan. Uggione's copy is of the same size as the original, near 30 feet long, and was painted on canvas for the refectory of the Carthusians at Pavia, where it remained till the revolution, when it was removed and sold to a rich grocer at Milan; and was brought to this country for public exhibition, and for sale. Lanzi says of it "that in some measure it compensates for the loss of the original," and is justified by the merit of the work. The characters of the heads appear to have been well rendered, except that of the Saviour. Those of St. John, St. Simon, and St. James, are excellently wrought, the former especially: indeed it appears so distinctly more complete than any other in colour and character, that one might think the great master's hand had been employed upon it. The hands, however, are ill drawn, and tamely executed; and the feet much too large, and out of keeping. The draperies also are laboured, and a part is cut off the top of the picture, which injures the perspective of the room in which the figures are seated.

His fresco pictures in the church of La Pace at Milan still preserve their lines and colours unimpaired: some of them are in the body of the church itself; but the Crucifixion, his most copious composition, is in the refectory; a work, Mr. Fuseli has observed, "which surprises by its variety and spirit: few Lombards have reached that degree of expression which strikes here, for the art of its composition, and the fancy of its draperies." Of his oil pictures, two of the most esteemed are at Milan, one at St. Paolo in Compito, the other in St. Eufemia; but they are inferior to his frescoes. He died in 1530, aged about 50.

UGGLEBARNBY, a township of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-south-west of Whitby. Population 383.

UGHELLI (Ferdinando), an ecclesiastical historian, was born of a good family at Florence in 1595; in his youth he entered into the Cistercian order, and finished his studies at Rome. After having passed through various offices in different monasteries, he was elected abbot of St. Vincent, &c. at Rome, theologian to cardinal Carlo de Medici, and consultant of the congregation of the Index. He was also domestic prelate to pope Alexander VII, who gave him a pension, augmented by Clement IX. He declined accepting any bishopric, though several were offered him, because he preferred pursuing his studies at Rome. Having undertaken to give a series of the bishops of all the churches in Italy, with an illustration of each church, deduced from documents in their respective archives, he employed several persons to assist him; and the work was printed at Rome in 9 vols., from 1642 to 1648, under the title of "Italia sacra, sive de Episcopis Italiae et Insularum adjacentium, rebusque aliis praeclare gestis, deducta serie ad nostram usque Ætatem, Opus singulare." A new edition of this work was begun at Venice in 1717, and completed in 1733, in 10 vols. folio, with considerable additions. Ughelli also made additions to the lives of the popes by Ciaconius, and published eulogies of the cardinals of the Cistercian order, and those of the Colonna family, and genealogies of the Marsciano and Capisucchi families. He died at Rome in 1670, at the age of 75. Moreri. Gen. Biog.

UGIE, a river of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire. It takes its rise about 20 miles from the sea, in two different streams, called the waters of Strichen and Deer, from passing the villages of the same name. The former has its rise in the parish of Tyrie, the latter in that of New Deer. The two branches unite about 5 miles from the sea, and then take the name of Ugie; from thence it continues a smooth and level course till it falls into the sea at Peterhead.

UGLEY, a parish of England, in Essex; 3 miles north of Stansted Mountfichet.

UGLILY, adv. Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.

UGLINESS, s. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,
Was turned now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.

Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.—Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the sin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.

UGLITSCH, an inland town in the north of European Russia, in the government of Jaroslav, on the Wolga. At present its population is about 5500. It has manufactures of leather, soap, and paper; 95 miles west-by-south of Jaroslav. Lat. 57. 3. N. long. 38. 22. E.

UGLY, adj. [This word was anciently written ougly; from the Goth. ogan, to fear; oga, Icel. the same; whence ugg, uggir, horror; fear; and thus, in old English, "uggyll, uggly, horribilis." Prompt. Parv. We had anciently also the verb "ugglyn, horreo." Ibid.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beautiful; hateful.

If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly.

Shakspeare.

UGONE (Mattia), was a native of Brescia at the commencement of the 16th century, a doctor of laws, and bishop of Famagosta, in the island of Cyprus. His principal performance is a treatise on councils, entitled "Synodia Ugonia," approved by a bull of Paul III. in 1543, and printed at Venice in 1565. Dupin pronounces it one of the best and fullest treatises written on that subject in the 16th century. This writer maintains, that a council is superior to the pope, and may depose him, not only for heresy and schism, but for any notorious crime, persisted in after admonition; and that, in matters of faith, and such as concern the state of the church, or its head, the judgment of the council is to be preferred to that of the pope. He died in 1616. Dupin.

UGOTSCH, or UGOCs, a palatinate in the north-east of Hungary, situated on both sides of the Theiss, to the west of the palatinate of Marmaros. Its area is 480 square miles; its population, about 36,000, are a mixed race of Magyars, Wallachians, and Rusniaks. The chief town is Nagy Szolos.

UGROZ, ZAY, a small town in the north-west of Hungary; 16 miles north of Topolczan.

UGTHORPE, a township of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 7½ miles west of Whitby.

UHLSTADT, a large village of Germany, in Bavarian Franconia, and the forest called the Steigerwald.

VIACHA, a settlement of Peru, in the province of Pacages.

VIADANA, a small town of Austrian Italy; 20 miles south-south-west of Mantua.

VIA ROMANÆ, or ROMAN WAYS, were public roads on which the ancient Romans impressed marks of grandeur and celebrity, as well as of utility, that have not been altogether effaced during an interval of more than 2000 years. In the construction of these roads they began with making a deep excavation, on each side of which they erected walls, and on these walls formed a parapet. The space between the walls was filled with layers of different materials, one of which was mortar made of the volcanic produce called puzzolano. Above these they placed the hardest stones which they could procure, and which they fastened together by an intermediate cement; and the salient angles were so constructed as to form a large mass. The elevated parapet served not only to give solidity to the way, but to afford a convenient seat for those who travelled on foot; and at certain intervals they placed stones of a greater height, which served for the convenience of horsemen. On these ways they had temples and monuments, which contributed to their ornament; and the distances were marked on columns of stone. Originally they marked the distance of any place from a column in the city of Rome; but in process of time they noted the distance from the capital of the province, or from any other town which they selected for this purpose. The first of these Roman ways was the Appian way, which commenced at the gate of Rome bearing this denomination, and took a south-south-east direction. To the right commenced the Via Ardeatina, which proceeded from the south as far as Ardea, almost perpendicularly to the meridian. Within the compass of Rome, at the foot of Mount Cœlius, and and to the left of the Appian way, commenced the Via Latina, or Ausonia, the direction of which was to the south-east. At seven miles and a half commenced, to the left of the Latin way, the Via Tusculana. To the east commenced the way, which, in the city, bore the name of Via Sacra. From this way, in the interior of the city, proceeded the Via Campana towards the south-east. The Via Labicana has an almost south-east direction. Towards the east is the Via Prænestina. To the left of this way, about the fifth mile from Rome, is the Via Collatina. Towards the north-east the first way is the Via Tiburtina, passing, as its name indicates, to the Tiber. The second is the Via Nomentana, proceeding towards the north-east to the tenth mile, and then turning directly northwards to Nomentum. The third is the Via Salaria, which is detached to the Colline gate from the left of the Nomentane way; and proceeding directly towards the north as far as the eighth mile, rejoins the same way at Eretum. It is called Salaria, from the salt which the Romans used to bring to Rome along this way from the sea. It was through the gate Salaria that the Gauls entered Rome, under the command of their leader Brennus, when that city was first taken by them. Towards the north-west the first way is the Via Lata, which formerly turning by the Capitoline mount, passed by the ancient triumphal gate. This way afterwards assumed the name of Flaminia. The second is the Via Claudia, which advanced towards the north-west; and at the sixth mile proceeded the third way in this direction, or the Via Cassia, which proceeded to Veii. The fourth way is the Via Triumphalis, which at the ninth mile joined the Claudian way. The fifth bore the name of Via Cornelia, which proceeded by the north-west to the tenth mile; and the sixth was the Via Aurelia, which left Rome at the gate of Janiculum, and proceeded a little towards the south-west, but changing its direction towards the north-west, it gained the sea-coast, along which it pursued its course.

VIAGE. See VOYAGE.

VI'AL, s. [φιάλη, Gr.] A small bottle.

You Gods! look down,

And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head.

Shakespeare.

To VI'AL, v. a. To enclose in a vial.

This she with precious vial'd liquors heals;
For which the shepherds at their festivals
Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays.

Milton.

VIANA, a considerable town of Portugal, province of Entre Douro e Minho. It is situated on the north side of the river Lima, not far from its mouth, and contains 8000 inhabitants, whose chief employments are navigation, fishing, and the sale of wine; 42 miles north-by-west of Oporto.

VIANA, a town of Spain, in Navarre. Population 3400; 4 miles north-east of Logrono.

VIANA, a town of Portugal, in the province of Alentejo, with 1500 inhabitants; 15 miles south-south west of Evora.

VI'AND, s. [viande, Fr.; vivanda, Ital.] Food; meat dressed.

The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
I'th' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand.

Shakespeare.

VIANDEN, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Luxemburg; 21 miles north of Luxemburg.

VIANE, a town of France, department of the Tarn.

VIANEN, a town of South Holland, on the great branch of the Rhine called the Leck; 7 miles south-by-west of Utrecht.

VIAREGGIO, a sea-port of Italy, in duchy of Lucca. Population 2000; 16 miles north-by-west of Leghorn.

VI'ARY, adj. [viarius, Lat.] Happening in ways or roads. Not in use.—In beasts, in birds, in dreams, and all viary omens, they are only conjectural interpretations of dim-eyed man; full of doubt, full of deceit. Feltham.

VIASMA, a town in the interior of European Russia, in the province of Smolensko, at the junction of the rivers Viasma and Bebri. It has between 6000 and 7000 inhabitants; 115 miles east-by-north of Smolensko.

VIASNIKI, a town of European Russia, in the government of Vladimir. Population 1000; 84 miles east-north-east of Vladimir.

VI'AST, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Oppeln; 8 miles east-by-north of Kosel.

VI'ATICUM, s. [Latin.] Provision for a journey.

And sith thy pilgrimage is almost past,

Thou need'st the lesse viaticum for it.

Davies.

The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.—It is rather a spiritual medicine, a good viaticum, a standing sacrament, for the relief, the assurance, the safe conduct, of departing souls. Killingbeck.

VIATKA, a large government or province in the east of European Russia, bounded on the north-east by the government of Perm, and on the south by that of Kasan. It extends from 56° to 61° N. lat.; has an area of 47,000 square miles, nearly equal to that of all England; but its population does not exceed 1,100,000.

VIATKA, the capital of the above government, seated at the confluence of the rivers Viatka and Chlinooka; 690 miles east-by-south of Petersburg, and 420 east-north-east of Moscow.

VIATOR, an officer of justice among the Romans. The term, originally, had no other signification than that of a public messenger, or servant; but in process of time, the name viator became common to all officers of the magistrates, victors, accensi, scribes, statores, and criers.

To VI'BRATE, v. a. [vibro, Lat.] To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.—To make to quiver.—Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.

To VI'BRATE, v. n. To play up and down, or to and fro.—The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quicksilver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Boyle.—To quiver.

The whisper that to greatness still too near,

Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear.

Pope.

VIBRA'TION, s. [vibro, Lat.] The act of moving, or state of being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.—Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? Which vibrations being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.

VI'BRATIVE, adj. That vibrates.—Heat is only an accident of light, occasioned by the rays putting a fine, subtle, ethereal medium, which pervades all bodies, into a vibrative motion, which gives us that sensation. Newton.

VI'BRATIUNCLE, s. Sensory vibrations, by being often repeated, beget in the medullary substance of the brain, a disposition to diminutive vibrations, which may be also called vibratiuncles and miniatures corresponding to themselves respectively. Chambers.—The pulse would continue to beat, the lungs to play, the animal secretions to be carried on, the vibratiuncles to traverse to and fro. Search, Free-will, &c.

VI'BRATORY, adj. Vibrating; causing to vibrate.—Suppose that to this oil or water were added a certain quantity of a specific salt, which had a power of putting the nervous papillæ of the tongue into a gentle vibratory motion; as suppose sugar dissolved into it. The smoothness of the oil, and the vibratory power of the salt, cause the sense we call sweetness. Burke.

VIBRAYE, a town of France, department of the Sarthe, with 2100 inhabitants; 25 miles east of Le Mans.

VI'URNUM [from viere, to bind; some of the shrubs having twigs fit for bands], in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order trigynia, natural order of dumosæ, caprifoliæ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth five-parted, superior, very small, permanent. Corolla one-petalled, bell-shaped, five-cleft; segments blunt, reflexed. Stamina: filaments five awl-shaped, length of the corolla; anthers anthers roundish. Pistil: germ inferior, roundish. Style none, but in its stead a turbinate gland. Stigmas three. Pericarp: berry roundish, one-celled. Seeds bony, roundish.—Essential Character. Calyx five-parted, superior. Corolla five-cleft. Berry one-seeded.

1. Viburnum tinus, laurustinus, or laurestine.—Leaves quite entire, ovate; ramifications of the veins villose-glandular. There are four or five varieties.—Native of the South of Europe and of Barbary.

2. Viburnum tinoides.—Leaves elliptic, smooth, quite entire; branches and cymes round, hirsute. This is very like the preceding, but the leaves of viburnum tinus are exactly ovate, the petioles are longer, the peduncles and stem angular, and smooth.—Native of South America.

3. Viburnum villosum, or hoary viburnum.—Leaves quite entire, ovate, hoary-villose beneath. This shrub is a fathom in height, with an ash-coloured bark.—Native of Jamaica, on the mountains in the southern part.

4. Viburnum scandens, or climbing viburnum.—Shrubby, scandent; leaves oblong, serrate; cymes terminating; rays terminated by a very large flower.—Native of Japan.

5. Viburnum nudum, or oval-leaved viburnum.—Leaves oval, somewhat wrinkled, rolled back at the edge, and obscurely crenulate. This has a strong stem, covered with a brown smooth bark, sending out woody branches on every side the whole length, which have a smooth purplish bark.—There seems to be two varieties of this shrub; one growing in the northern parts of Virginia and Maryland, which casts its leaves in winter; the other in Carolina, which is an evergreen. This apparent difference is probably owing to climate.

6. Viburnum prunifolium, or plum-leaved viburnum.—Leaves obovate, roundish and oval, smooth, sharply serrate; petioles margined.—It grows naturally in most parts of North America.

7. Viburnum dauricum.—Leaves ovate, serrate, dotted-hairy; cymes dichotomous, few-flowered.—Native of Russia and Siberia.

8. Viburnum dentatum, or tooth-leaved viburnum.—Leaves ovate, tooth-serrate, plaited.—Native of North America.

9. Viburnum plicatum, or plaited-leaved viburnum.—Leaves ovate, obtuse, tooth-serrate, plaited.—Native of Japan.

10. Viburnum erosum.—Leaves ovate, acuminate, erose-serrate, smooth; petioles tomentose.—Native of Japan.

Viburnums vary:—1. With radiate and non-radiate flowers.—2. With a single style and three pistils.—3. With five and ten stamens.

11. Viburnum lantana, or wayfaring tree.—Leaves cordate, serrate, veined, tomentose beneath.—Native of most parts of Europe, except the most northern countries; with us chiefly in a calcareous soil, in woods and hedges, flowering in May.

12. Viburnum tomentosum, or downy viburnum.—Leaves ovate, acuminate, serrate, veined, tomentose beneath; umbels lateral.—Native of Japan, in woods between Miaco and Jedo.

13. Viburnum hirtum, or rough viburnum.—Leaves ovate, serrate, villose; petioles rough-haired.—Native of Japan.

14. Viburnum acerifolium, or maple-leaved viburnum.—Leaves three-lobed, acuminate, sharply serrate; petioles hairy, without glands.—Native of Virginia.

15. Viburnum orientale, or oriental viburnum.—Leaves three-lobed, acuminate, grossly and bluntly toothed; petioles smooth, and without glands.—Native of the Levant and Russia.

16. Viburnum opulus, or water elder.—Leaves three-lobed, acuminate-toothed; petioles glandular, smooth. It is a small bushy tree.—Native of Europe; common with us in woods and hedges in watery places.

The American shrub has the twigs of a shining red colour; whereas, in the European, they are green and opaque.—Native of South Carolina, and some other parts of North America.

The beautiful variety so common in plantations, bearing large round bunches of abortive flowers only, and grouping so elegantly with lilac and laburnum in the early part of summer, will rise to the height of eighteen or twenty feet, if permitted to stand. From their extreme whiteness, and swelling out into a globular form, some country people have given this shrub the name of Snow-ball tree, which surely is preferable to the common appellation of Guelder Rose, and is conformable to the Schneeball of the Germans.

17. Viburnum dilatatum.—Leaves obovate, acuminate, unequally-toothed, villose.—Native of Japan.

18. Viburnum macrophyllum, or long-leaved viburnum.—Leaves obovate, acuminate, toothed, smooth.—Native of Japan.

19. Viburnum cuspidatum.—Leaves cuspidate, serrate, villose.—Native of Japan.

20. Viburnum lentago, or pearl-leaved viburnum.—Leaves broad-ovate; acuminate, sharply serrate; petioles margined, curled.—Native of North America.

21. Viburnum cassinoides, or thick-leaved viburnum.—Leaves lanceolate, even, rolled back at the edge, indistinctly crenate.—Native of North America.

22. Viburnum nitidum, or shining-leaved viburnum.—Leaves linear-lanceolate, shining above, indistinctly serrate, or entire.—Native of North America.

23. Viburnum lævigatum, or cassioberry bush.—Leaves lanceolate, even, remotely serrate, quite entire at the base.—Native of South Carolina.

Propagation and Culture.—The laurustinuses are propagated by laying down their young branches, which put out roots very freely; so that when they are laid in autumn, they will be well rooted by that time twelve months, when they should be taken from the old plants, and may either be planted where they are to remain, or into a nursery for two years to get strength. All the others may be propagated in the same manner.

VIC, a town of France, department of the Meurthe, with 3100 inhabitants. A mine of excellent salt was discovered here in 1820; 12 miles north of Luneville.

VIC BIGORRE, a town of France, department of the Upper Pyrenees. Population 8100; 10 miles north of Tarbes.

VIC EN CARLADES, a town of France, department of the Cantal, with 2100 inhabitants; 9 miles north-east of Aurillac.

VIC LE COMTE, a town of France, in Auvergne, not far from the river Allier. Population 3100; 17 miles south-east of Clermont.

VIC DESSOS, a town of France, department of the Arriège; 6 miles south-west of Tarascon.

VIC PEZENSAC, a town of France, department of the Gers, near the Pyrehees; 13 miles north-west of Auch.

VICAR, s. [vicarius, Lat.] The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.

Procure the vicar

To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,

To give our hearts united ceremony.

Shakspeare.

Yours is the prize;

The vicar my defeat, and all the village see.

Dryden.

A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decried, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order. Swift.—One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.—An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.

VICARAGE, s. The benefice of a vicar.—This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.

VICARELLO, a town of Italy, in the States of the Church; 17 miles south of Viterbo.

VICARIAL, adj. Belonging to a vicar.—Wood is in some countries a rectorial, and in some a vicarial tithe.

Blackstone.

Blackstone.—[vicarius, Lat.] Vicarious.—That delegated vicarial sceptre of righteousness. Wcst.

VICA'RIATE, s. Delegated office or power.—Shall we think that pretended spiritual dignity to be of God, (or, as it calleth itself, the vicariate of Christ,) who said his kingdom was not of this world, and whose successors gloried in poverty and martyrdom; whereas this [the church of Rome] aboundeth in riches and exterior power above any thing now extant in the Christian world? Ld. North.

VICA'RIATE, adj. Having a delegated power as vicar.—We thought it convenient that you should be held up by the vicariate authority of our see. Barrow.

VICA'RIOUS, adj. [vicarius, Lat.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.—What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul? Norris.

VICA'RIOUSLY, adv. In the place of another.—They who do not love religion, hate it. The rebels to God perfectly abhor the author of their being. They hate him "with all their heart, with all their mind, with all their soul, and with all their strength." He never presents himself to their thoughts, but to menace and alarm them. They cannot strike the sun out of heaven, but they are able to raise a smouldering smoke that obscures him from their own eyes. Not being able to revenge themselves on God, they have a delight in vicariously defacing, degrading, torturing, and tearing in pieces, his image in man. Burke.

VICARSHIP, s. The office of a vicar.—The see of Jerusalem was the mother of all churches, wherein St. Peter himself did at first reside, exercising his vicarship. Barrow.

VICE, s. [vitium, Lat.] The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.

No spirit more gross to love
Vice for itself.

Milton.

A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.

No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakspeare.

Faulty or noxious excess.

Or, when the latent vice is cur'd by fire,
Redundant humours by the pores expire. Dryden.

The fool of the old shows and moralities.

I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;
Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, ah, ha! to the devil. Shakspeare.

[vijts, Dutch; from vijzen, to screw up.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.—He found that marbles taught him percussion; bottle-screws the vice; whirligigs, the axis in peritrochio. Arbutnot.—Gripe; grasp.—If I but fist him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakspeare.—[vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superior, or who has the second rank in command: as, a viceroi, vicechancellor.

To VICE, v. a. To draw by a kind of violence.

With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't or been an instrument
To vice you to't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakspeare.

VICEADMIRAL, s. The second commander of a fleet.—The foremost of the fleet was the admiral: the rear admiral was Cara Mahometes, an arch-pirate. The viceadmiral, in the middle of the fleet with a great squadron of galleys, struck sail directly. Knolles.—A naval officer of the second rank.

VICEADMIRALTY, s. The office of a viceadmiral.—The viceadmiralty is exercised by Mr. Trevanion. Carew.

VICEA'GENT, s. One who acts in the place of another.—A vassal Satan hath made his viccagent, to cross whatever the faithful ought to do. Hooker.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1643.

VICECHAN'CELLOR, s. [viccancellarius, Lat.] The second or sub-chancellor

VIC'ED, adj. Vitious; corrupt. Not uscd.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakspeare.

VICEGE'RENCY, s. The office of a vicegerent; lieutenantancy; deputed power.—The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God. South.

VICEGE'RENT, s. [vicem gerens, Lat.] A lieutenant; one who is intrusted with the power of the superior, by whom he is deputed.

Great father of the gods, when for our crimes
Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times;
Some tyrant king, the terror of his age,
The type and true vicegerent of thy rage,
Thus punish. Dryden.

VICEGE'RENT, adj. [vicegerens, Latin.] Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.

Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee,
Vicegerent son! To thee I have transferr'd
All judgment, whether in heaven, or earth, or hell. Milton.

VICENARY, adj. [vicenarius, Lat.] Belonging to twenty. Bailey.

VICENTE, St., a province and captaincy of Brazil, bounded north and east by Rio Janeiro and the sea, and west by the Rio Grande. It is three hundred miles from north to south, and its breadth is in some places near 180.—2. A city of Brazil, in the above province, and once the capital. Its present population may be reckoned at 3000. Lat. 24. S.—3. A settlement of New Granada, in South America, in the province of Maracaibo.—4. A settlement of Peru, in the province of Chichas and Tariga.—5. A small and secure port on the coast of Chili, and province of Quillota, situated behind the bay of Conception.—6. A cape or point of land on the coast of Terra del Fuego, in the strait of Magellan.—7. A cape on the south coast of the strait of Magellan.

VICENTE GUTAYAYTA, St., a town of Peru, in the diocese of La Plata; 40 miles north-east of Lipis.

VICENZA, a province of Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice, containing, on a superficial extent of less than 1000 square miles, above 310,000 inhabitants.

VICENZA, a large town of Austrian Italy, the capital of the delegation of the same name, pleasantly situated between two mountains, at the confluence of two rivers, one of which divides the town into two parts, connected together by bridges. It was a Roman station, and suffered greatly on the irruption of the northern tribes. During the middle ages, it had at times an independent government, but passed in the beginning of the 15th century, into the hands of the Venetians, remaining in the enjoyment of peace until the invasion of Italy by Buonaparte in 1796; 36 miles west-by-north of Venice.

VICEROY, s. [viceroi, Fr.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.

Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole? Shakspeare.

VICEROYALTY, s. Dignity of a viceroi.—These parts furnish out viceroialties for the grandes; but in war are incumbances to the kingdom. Addison.

VICEROYSHIP, s. Office of a viceroi.—The Saracen caliph commanded in Egypt; under whom, two great lords fell out about the sultanie or *viceroi*ship of that land. Fuller.

VICETY, s. [This word is of doubtful origin.] Nicety exactness. A word not used.

Here is to the fruit of Pem,
Grafted upon Stub his stem;
With the peakish nicety,
And old Sherewood's vicety. B. Jonson.

VICHADA;

VICHADA, a large and rapid river of New Granada, which flows down the mountains of Bogota, runs east through the plains of Cazanare, and enters the Orinoco.

VICHL, a river of Quito, in the province of Atacames or Esmeraldas. It runs north, and enters the Guailabamba, before the latter reaches the Pacific ocean.

VICHOTNA, a village of Hungary; 25 miles west-by-south of Kesmark.

VICHTACH, a town of Bavaria; 36 miles east of Ratibon.

VICHUQUEN, a settlement of Chili, in the province of Maule.

VICHY, a small town of France, near the right bank of the Allier; 14 miles south-west of La Palisse.

VICIA [of Pliny, Virgil, &c.], in Botany, a genus of the class diadelphia, order decandria, natural order of papilionaceæ or leguminosæ.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leafed, tubular, erect, half-five-cleft, acute; upper teeth shorter, converging, all of equal breadth. Corolla papilionaceous. Banner oval, with a broad oblong claw, at the tip emarginate with a point, bent back at the sides, with a longitudinal compressed raised line. Wings two, oblong, erect, half-cordate, with an oblong claw; shorter than the banner. Keel with an oblong two-parted claw, the belly compressed, semiorbicular; shorter than the wings. Stamina: filaments diadelphous, single and nine-cleft. Anthers erect, roundish, four-grooved. A nectareous gland springs from the receptacle between the compound stamen and the germ, short, acuminate. Pistil: germ linear, compressed, long. Style filiform, shorter, ascending at an erect angle. Stigma obtuse, transversely bearded below the tip. Pericarp: legume long, coriaceous, one-celled, two-valved, terminated by a point. Seeds several, roundish.—Essential Character. Stigma transversely bearded on the lower side.

I.—With elongated peduncles.

1. Vicia pisiformis, or pale-flowered vetch.—Peduncles many-flowered; petioles many-leaved; leaflets ovate; the lower sessile.—Native of Germany and Austria.

2. Vicia dumetorum, or great wood vetch.—Peduncles many-flowered; leaflets bent back, ovate, mucronate; stipules somewhat toothed.—Native of France, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Piedmont and Siberia.

3. Vicia sylvatica, or common wood vetch.—Peduncles many-flowered; leaflets elliptic; stipules crescent-shaped, toothed. Stems numerous, and so much branched as to choak whatever they grow near. This vetch was long supposed peculiar to the mountainous parts of England, Scotland and Wales.—It is found in most parts of Europe, from Sweden and Denmark to the South of France and Italy; also in Siberia.

4. Vicia cassubica, or cassubian vetch.—Peduncles about six-flowered; leaflets ten, ovate, acute; stipules entire. Root woody, creeping.—Native of Denmark, Germany, Austria, the South of France, &c.

5. Vicia cracca, or tufted vetch.—Peduncles many-flowered; flowers imbricate; leaflets lanceolate, pubescent; stipules semisagittate, mostly entire. Root perennial, creeping. Stems two, three or four feet high, and even more when climbing on bushes.—Native of Europe and Barbary. Common with us in hedges and among bushes, especially in a black boggy soil on a gravelly bottom, about osier-grounds.

6. Vicia onobrychoides.—Peduncles many-flowered; flowers distant; leaflets linear; stipules toothletted at bottom. Flowers a little larger than in the European plant.—Native of France, Switzerland, Piedmont and Mount Atlas.

7. Vicia nissoliana, or red-flowered vetch.—Peduncles many-flowered; leaflets oblong; stipules entire; legumes villose, ovate-oblong. Root annual.—Native of the Levant.

8. Vicia biennis, or biennial vetch.—Peduncles many-flowered; petioles grooved; having about twelve leaflets, which are lanceolate and smooth. Root biennial.—Native of Siberia.

9. Vicia altissima, or tall vetch.—Stipules toothed; leaflets elliptic, truncate, very smooth; flowers racemed; peduncles longer than the petiole. The whole plant very smooth.—Native of Barbary, in hedges near Arzeau.

10. Vicia benghalensis.—Peduncles many-flowered; leaflets quite entire; stipules entire; legumes nearly erect. Root annual.—First found on the Hieres islands, off the coast of France.

11. Vicia atropurpurea.—Leaflets linear-lanceolate; racemes many-flowered, directed one way; calyxes extremely villose, with bristle-shaped teeth; legumes ovate-oblong, drooping, very hirsute. Annual.—Found near Algiers.

12. Vicia canescens, or hoary vetch.—Peduncles many-flowered; upper leaves subcirrhose; stipules semisagittate, entire; leaflets oval-oblong, hoary. Annual.—Native of Mount Libanus, towards the top.

II.—Flowers axillary, subsessile.

13. Vicia sativa, common vetch or tare.—Legumes sessile, subbinate, nearly erect; lower leaves retuse; stipules toothed, marked; seeds smooth and even. Root annual.—Native of Europe, Barbary and Japan, in pastures and corn-fields. A variety is not uncommon in hedges among bushes and grass, in a barren sandy soil.

Spring tares with oats sown early in March, and cut green for horses in July, are good for cleaning light land, and preparing it for wheat or rye.

Winter tares sown with a little rye in autumn for soiling, give time to destroy weeds by tillage till autumn: or they may produce a second crop; turneps if it be designed for spring corn; but the land should be manured for the tares if it be not very rich.

14. Vicia lathyroides, or little spring vetch.—Legumes sessile, solitary, erect, smooth; leaflets six; the lower ones obcordate; seeds cubic, warty. Root annual. Sometimes it has tendrils. Stems procumbent, divaricating, numerous. These, with the leaves and stipules slightly hairy. Leaflets two or three pairs, opposite obcordate, but towards the top of the plant sometimes lanceolate and narrowed. Stipules semisagittate, mostly quite entire, rarely if ever spotted. Flowers subsessile, solitary, small, blueish-purple. Legumes erect, very smooth, containing several cubic seeds, rugged with minute tubercles. It is very distinct from the varieties of the preceding, by its smooth even pods, tubercled seeds, simple tendrils commonly very short and in a manner abortive, and not more leaflets than six. No British plant has been less understood than this vicia. It is found on dry grassy banks, and in fallow-fields on a gravelly soil, flowering early in May, and scarcely to be met with after the month of June.—Native of Denmark and Norway, France and Britain.

15. Vicia lutea, or rough-podded yellow vetch.—Legumes sessile, reflexed, hairy, solitary, five-seeded; banner of the corolla smooth.—Native of several other parts of Europe, the Levant, and about Algiers.

16. Vicia hybrida, or hairy-flowered yellow vetch.—Legumes sessile, solitary, reflexed, hairy; banner villose; leaflets emarginate. Root perennial.—Native of France, Piedmont and Barbary.

17. Vicia lavigata, or smooth-podded sea vetch.—Legumes sessile, solitary, reflexed, smooth; stem nearly upright; leaves very smooth. Root perennial.—Gathered on the beach at Weymouth.

18. Vicia peregrina, or broad podded vetch.—Legumes subsessile, pendulous, smooth, four-seeded; leaflets linear, emarginate. Root perennial.—Native of France and Piedmont.

19. Vicia sepium, or bush vetch.—Legumes pedicelled, mostly four together, erect, smooth; leaflets ovate, obtuse; the outer ones smaller. Root perennial.—Native of Europe, in woods, hedges and bushy pastures; flowering in May and June.

20. Vicia Bithynica, or rough-podded purple vetch.—Legumes peduncled, solitary, erect, rugged; leaflets two-paired, elliptic-lanceolate; stipules toothed. Root perennial, branched.—Native of the county of Nice, Italy, Bavaria and England. It flowers in July and August.

21. Vicia narbonensis, or broad-leaved vetch.—Legumes subsessile, about three together, erect; leaflets six, subovate; stipules, toothletted. Root annual.—Native of France and Barbary near Algiers among corn.

22. Vicia

22. Vicia faba, or bean.—Stem upright; petioles without tendrils. Root annual. Leaflets about three pairs, ovate-oblong, tomentose, convoluted. Flowers several together in the axils, white with a black silken spot in the middle of the wings. Legumes thick, roundish, straight, pointed, very woolly within, containing several large ovate flattened seeds.—It is said to be a native of Egypt.

1.—Varieties of the Garden Bean.

The mazagan bean is the first and best sort of early beans at present known.

The next sort is the early Portugal or Lisbon bean. Then follow the small Spanish bean; the broad Spanish. The Sandwich bean comes soon after the Spanish, and is almost as large as the Windsor bean.

The toker bean, as it is generally called, comes about the same time with the Sandwich, and is a great bearer, therefore is now much planted, though it is a coarse bean.

The white and black blossom beans are also by some persons much esteemed; the beans of the former are, when boiled, almost as green as peas.

The Windsor bean is allowed to be the best of all the sorts for the table; when these are planted on a good soil, and are allowed sufficient room, their seeds will be very large, and in great plenty; and when they are gathered young, are the sweetest and best tasted of all the sorts.

2.—Varieties of the Field Bean.

The common horse bean. [Probably the original of all the varieties.]

The tick bean, lower in stature, a more plentiful bearer, and succeeds better on light land. Of this there are several subordinate varieties; as flat ticks or May beans, small or Essex ticks, French ticks, and Heligoland beans.

23. Vicia serratifolia.—Stem upright; petioles without tendrils; leaflets serrate.—Native of the Euganean mountains, flowering in June.

24. Vicia biflora.—Leaflets linear; peduncles two-flowered, axillary.—Native of Algiers.

25. Vicia calcarata.—Leaflets linear-lanceolate, obtuse; stipules forked; peduncles one-flowered; shorter than the leaf, having a short spur below the flower; legumes smooth, drooping.—Native of Algiers.

Propagation and Culture.—These are all propagated by seeds.

Of the culture of the beans.—Those which are planted early in October, will come up by the beginning of November; and as soon as they are an inch above ground, the earth should be carefully drawn up with a hoe to their stems; and this must be two or three times repeated, as the beans advance in height; which will protect their stems from the frost, and encourage their strength. If the winter should prove severe, it will be very proper to cover the beans with peas-haulm, fern, or some other light covering, which will secure them from the injury of frost; but this covering must be constantly taken off in mild weather, otherwise they will draw up tall and weak, and come to little; and if the surface of the border is covered with tanner's bark, it will prevent the frost penetrating the ground to the roots of both, and be of great service to protect them from the injury which they might otherwise receive.

Of the horse bean, which is cultivated in the fields; there are two or three varieties of these, which differ in their size and colour; but that which is now in the greatest esteem, is called the tick bean; this does not grow so high as the other, is a more plentiful bearer, and succeeds better on light land than the common horse bean, which delights in a strong moist soil.

The season for sowing these beans is from the middle of February to the end of March, according to the nature of the soil; the strongest and wet land should always be last sown; the usual quantity of beans sown on an acre of land is about three bushels; but this is double the quantity which need be sown, especially according to the new husbandry.

VICINAGE, s. [vicinia, Lat.; voisinage, Fr.; as our word was formerly written, and also voicinge, as well as vicinage.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.—A city came to be built in the voisinage of this holy place. Biblioth.—In many places the patrons endowed the churches, but built not the edifice; leaving that to be done by the priest out of the oblations and contributions of the Christians of the vicinage. Wharton and Stanhope.

VICINAL, or VICINE, adj. [vicinus, Lat.] Near; neighbouring.

VICINITY, s. [vicinus, Lat.] Nearness; state of being near.—The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.—Neighbourhood.—Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.

VICIOSA, a shoal or isle of the Atlantic ocean, in the province and government of Costa Rica.

VICIOSAS, a cluster of small islands near the coast of Honduras. Lat. 15. 12. N. long. 83. 4. W.

VICIOUS, adj. See VITIOUS.—Devoted to vice. Not addicted to virtue.

He heard this heavy curse,
Servants of servants, on his vicious race.

Milton.

VICIOUSLY, adv. Corruptly; sinfully.—Perversity of will, immoral and sinful enormities, walk with Adraste and Nemesis at their backs, pursue us into judgment, and leave us viciously miserable. Brown.

VICIOUSNESS, s. Corruptness. See VITIOUSNESS.

VICISSITUDE, s. [vicissitudo, Lat.] Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.

It makes through heaven
Grateful vicissitude, like day and night.

Milton.

Revolution; change.

Verse sweetens toil, however rude the sound.
All at her work the village maiden sings;
Nor as she turns the giddy wheel around,
Revolves the sad vicissitude of things.

Giffard.

VICISSITU'DINARY, adj. [vicissitudo, vicissitudinis, Lat.] Regularly changing.—We say, the elements of man are misery and happiness, as though he had an equal proportion of both; and the days of man vicissitudinarily, as though he had as many good days as ill. Donne.

VICO, a small town in Corsica; 28 miles north-east of Ajaccio.—2. A town of Italy, with 3300 inhabitants; 2 miles east-by-south of Mondovi.—3. A considerable town of Naples, province of Capitanata; 10 miles west of Viesti.—4. A village of Austrian Dalmatia, on the river Norin, near the town of Narentze, on the site of the ancient city of Naronna; 5 miles north-west of Citluc.—5. A settlement of Peru, in the province of Tarma.

VICO EQUANA, or VICO DI SORRENTO, a town of Italy; 15 miles south-south-east of Naples.

VICO PISANA, a small town of Tuscany, province of Pisa; 5 miles east-by-south of Pisa.

VICO VARO, a town of Italy, in the Popedom, district of Sabina, with the title of a principality. Horace's villa stood in the neighbourhood of this place; 6 miles south-east of Tirol.

VICONTIEL, adj. In law vicontiel rents are certain farms, for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicontiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.

VICQ-D'AZYR (Felix), was born at Valognes in Normandy, in 1748, and distinguished himself both as a physician and a man of letters. Settling at Paris in 1765, he pursued with diligence every branch of study connected with medicine, and paid particular attention to the physiological part of anatomy. In 1773 he commenced a course of lectures on human and comparative anatomy, in which pursuit he was very popular; but he was interrupted by a spitting of blood, which made it necessary for him to return to his native place. Here he applied to the anatomical examination of fishes, the result of which he communicated to the Academy of Sciences, which associated him as a member. When murrain appeared among the cattle in Languedoc in 1775, Vicq-d'Azyer was commissioned by the minister Turgo to discover means for restraining it, which charge he executed with success. A medical society was formed at Paris about this time, which he zealously promoted, and of which he was secretary. He also, in connection with this society, performed the office of eulogist, very much to his own reputation, and to the honour of many considerable persons, whose talents and services he commemorated. In his private character he exhibited, with gentle manners, a very considerable degree of ardour and sensibility; so that he is represented as a warm friend and philanthropical citizen. He obtained both fame and fortune, employing the latter liberally in collecting a costly apparatus and a well-chosen library. Agitated and exhausted by the disastrous effects of the revolution, he died in June 1794, at the age of forty-six. His "Eloges Historiques" were collected and published, with notes, and a memoir on the author, by J. L. Moreau, three vols. 8vo. 1805. His other writings were communicated to the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences and of the Medical Society. His "Illustrations of the Brain" are of a character so good, that even in the present improved state of anatomy it may be referred to with advantage. Nouv. Dict. Hist.

murray

VICTIM, s. [victima, Lat. It was so called, either because vincta percussa cadebat, or because vincta ad aras ducebatur.] A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.

All that were authors of so black a deed,
Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost.

Denham.

Something destroyed.

Behold where age's wretched victim lies;
See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes.

Prior.

It is not certain who was the first person that introduced bloody sacrifices among the Pagans. If the authority of Ovid be at all regarded, he alleges that the sow was the first animated victim which was offered to Ceres, on account of the ravages which that animal makes in the field. From Homer we learn that the use of such sacrifices was common in the time of the Trojan war. Whenever they were introduced, it is certain they were very ancient in the Pagan world. It may be observed, however, that when victims of this kind were offered they blended with them herbs, salt and meal. Pliny informs us, that Numa prohibited the Romans from using bloody victims, or any other sacrifice, besides those in which they employed fruits, salt, and corn. Dion. Halic. ascribes this prohibition to Romulus; and he adds, that this usage subsisted in his time, although they had superadded to it that of bloody sacrifices. At length, however, superstition prevailed to such a degree, that they offered to their deities human victims; and this barbarous custom, the origin of which is not satisfactorily ascertained, was propagated to almost every known nation. These horrid sacrifices, prescribed even by the oracles of the gods, were known in the days of Moses, and constituted a part of those abominations with which this legislator reproached the Amorites. The Moabites sacrificed their children to Moloch, and burned them in the cavity of the statue of that god. According to Dionysius of Halicarnassus, they offered men in sacrifice to Saturn, not only at Tyre and Carthage, but even in Greece and Italy. The Gauls, if we may believe Diodorus Siculus, sacrificed to their gods their prisoners of war; those of Taurus, all the strangers who landed upon their coasts; the inhabitants of Pella sacrificed a man to Peleus. Those of Temessa, as Pausanias has it, offered every year a young virgin to the genius of one of Ulysses' associates, whom they had stoned; and Aristomenes, the Messenian, sacrificed three hundred men at one time.

For the public sacrifices there were authorized ministers or priests who made a choice of victims; and several names were given to these victims from some circumstances that attended the oblations. Such as were offered up the day before the solemnity, were called "præcidaneæ hostiæ;" as the sow, sacrificed to Ceres before harvest, was called "præcidaneæ porca." Again, they gave the name of "succedaneæ hostiæ" to such sacrifices as they offered up, when the former ones had been neglected; and thus it was they atoned for the omission. There were others named "eximie hostiæ;" meaning not that these victims had any peculiar excellence, as the word properly signifies, but that they were separated from the flock in order to be sacrificed, "eximebantur grege." The ewes that had two lambs, which they sacrificed with the mother, were termed "ambiguae oves," and the victims whose entrails were adherent, "harungæ," or "harugæ;" such as were consumed, "prodigiæ;" and such as had two teeth higher than the rest, "bidentes."

Of whatever nature the victims were, great care was to be taken in the choice of them; and the same blemishes that excluded them from sacrifices among the Jews, rendered them also imperfect among the Pagans; whence it would seem that they borrowed several rites from the Hebrews.

All sorts of victims were not offered indiscriminately to every divinity, or for every purpose. It was commonly a sow, big with young, that they offered to Cybele and to the goddess Tellus; the bull to Jupiter; to Juno, heifers, ewe-lambs, sheep; and at Corinth they sacrificed to her a she-goat. To Neptune, a bull and lambs, as appears from Homer; to Pluto, likewise a bull; and to Proserpine a cow, both of them black; and when that goddess was taken for Hecate, they sacrificed to her a dog, an animal whose barking they thought drove away the apparitions sent by that goddess. The most acceptable victims to Ceres, were the boar and the sow; they made her likewise an offering of honey and of milk. To Venus the dove, the he-goat, the heifer, a white she-goat, &c.

To VICTIMATE, v. a. [victimo, Latin.] To sacrifice; to offer in sacrifice. Not in use. Bullokar, and Cockeram.

VICTOIRE ISLE, a very small island in the Eastern seas, covered with wood. Lat. 1. 39. N. long. 106. 30. E.

VICTOR, s. [victor, Latin.] Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest.

This strange race more strange conceits did yield;
Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought;

Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.

Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind,
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,

Yet neither conquer, nor conquered.

Shakspeare.

Pope has used this word in a manner perhaps unauthorized.

There, victor of his health, his fortune, friends,
And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends.

Pope.

VICTOR, a post village of the United States, in Ontario county, New York.

VICTOR, VALLE DE, a settlement of Peru, in the province of Arequipa.

VICTOR, VALLE DEL, a river of Peru, in the province of Arequipa, which enters the Pacific ocean, joined with the river Chile.

VICTOR, VALLE DEL, a port of Peru, in the Pacific ocean, in the province of Arica. Lat. 18. 47. S.

VICTORESS, s. A female that conquers.

But when the victorese arrived there,

Where late she left the pensive Scudamore

With her own trusty squire, both full of feare,

Neither of them she found.

Spenser.

VICTORIA (Vincente), was a Spanish artist, a native of Valencia, and born in 1658. He went to Rome when young, and there became a scholar of Carlo Marratti, and distinguished himself sufficiently in historical painting to be taken into employment by the grand duke of Tuscany. His portrait is in the Florentine gallery. He painted several pictures for churches in his native country, and died at Rome in 1712.

VICTORIA, a village of the Caraccas, in the province of Venezuela, situated on the road leading from Caraccas to Puerto Cavello, 6 leagues east of Tulmero.—2. A town of Mexico, in the province of Tabasco, founded in 1519 by Cortes.—3. A settlement of Peru, in the province of Calca and Lares.—4. A city of New of Granada, in the province of Mariquita.—5. A settlement of Brazil, in the province province of Ilheos, situate at the entrance of the port and river of Los Ilheos.—6. An island in the strait of Magellan, near the extremity of the south coast.—7. A small island in the Atlantic, near the coast of Brazil. Lat. 23. 40. S.

VICTORIA, CAPE, or CAPE VICTORY, a cape on the west coast of Patagonia. Lat. 52. 35. S. long. 76. 40. W.

VICTORIOUS, adj. [victorieux, French.] Conquering; having obtained conquest; superior in contest.—The Son returned victorious, with his saints. Milton.

VICTORIOUSLY, adv. With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.—That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VICTORIOUSNESS, s. The state or quality of being victorious.

VICTORY, s. [victoria, Lat.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.

At his nurse's tears,
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakspeare.

VICTORY, a township of the United States, in Essex county, Vermont.

VICTRESS, or VICTRICE, s. [victrix, Lat.] A female that conquer. Not used.

I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
And she shall be sole victress; Cæsar's Cæsar. Shakspeare.

VICTUAL, or VICTUALS, s. [vittogaglia, Ital.] Provision of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance.—Chapman has written it as it is colloquially pronounced.

A huge great flagon full I bore,
And in a good large knapsack, victles store. Chapman.

To VICTUAL, v. a. To store with provision for food.
Talbot, farewell;
I must go victual Orleans forthwith. Shakspeare.

VICTUALLER, s. One who provides victuals.—They planted their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers surceased not to bring all things necessary. Hayward.—One who keeps a house of entertainment.

VIDA (Marco Girolamo), a modern Latin poet of reputation, was born at Cremona some year between 1470 and 1490. His education was liberal at Padua and Bologna. Of his considerable poems, his work entitled "De Arte Poetica," is supposed to have been first written; and the first known edition of it is dated in 1527. This was soon followed by his "Bombyx," or art of rearing silk-worms, and his "Scacchiæ Ludus," or poem on the game of Chess. Clement VII. became his patron, and after the death of this pope, he retired to his diocese, and established the character of a zealous and affectionate pastor; and when, in 1542, Alba was invested by the French, he contributed by his exhortations and example so to animate the citizens, as to preserve it from the enemy. His two books "De Republica," contain dialogues, which are the substance of a conversation that passed between him, and some cardinals and learned men, at the council of Trent. These dialogues are excellent, with respect to the correctness and elegance of their style, and evince that the author was no less extensively conversant with politics and philosophy than with polite literature. In 1551, Vida retired to Cremona, on account of the wars which desolated his diocese; but in 1564 he removed to Alba, and died there in 1566. As a Latin poet, Vida acquired a very high reputation.

VIDELICET, adv. [Latin.] To wit; that is.—This word is generally written vic.

VIDES, a small river of Quito, in the province of Pasto, which enters a little after its rising, into the Putumayo.

VIDIGUEIRA, a small town of Portugal, in the province of Alentejo; 12 miles north of Beja. Population 2300.

VIDIN, or WIDDIN, a considerable town in the north of Turkey in Europe, province of Bulgaria. It is situated on the right bank of the Danube, has a strong castle, and is in other respects well fortified; 104 miles east-south-east of Belgrade. Population 20,000.

VIDUAL, adj. [viduus, Lat.] Belonging to the state of a widow.—The only pattern of all chastity, virginal, conjugal, and vidual. Parth. Sacra.

VIDUITY, s. [from viduus, Lat.] Widowhood.—The married woman is under the careful provision of an husband; in that estate four hands work for her; in her viduity but two. Bp. Hall.

VIDZY, a town of European Russia, in Lithuania; 46 miles north-by-east of Wilna.

To VIE, v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain. Dr. Johnson.—Serenins refers it to the German wagen, to dare.] To stake; to wager; to expose to hazard; to show or practise in competition. The word is borrowed from an old term at cards.

Nature wants stuff
To vie strange forms with fancy. Shakspeare.

To VIE, v. n. To contest; to contend; to strive for superiority.—In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life as may enable them to vie with the best of their family. Addison.

VIELLE. See MUSIC.

VIELLE BRIOUDE, a town of France, department of the Upper Loire. It adjoins the Allier, over which there is here a fine bridge. Population 1000.

VIEJA, a town of Brazil, situated on the island of Taporica or Itaporica. Lat. 13. S.

VIEJA, LA, a settlement of Nicaragua, in the province of Guatemala.

VIEJO, a settlement of Quito, in the province of Ibarra.—It is also the name of a settlement in the province of Alausi.

VIEJOS, a port of Peru, on the Pacific ocean, in the province of Chancay.

VIELIA, a small town of Spain, in Catalonia; 38 miles west-north-west of Urgel.

VIELLEBOROUGH, a post village of the United States, in Caroline county, Virginia.

VIELMUR, a town of France, department of the Tarn; 9 miles west of Castres. Population 1000.

VIENNA, called by the German WIEN, the capital of the Austrian empire, situated in the province of Lower Austria. It stands on the right bank of the Danube, which though of considerable rapidity both above and below, is here slow and majestic in its course, forming a number of islands and windings. It is joined by the Wien and Alser, two streams, small but rapid, which flow through the town. As Vienna is built on a plain, it is subject to inundation from each of these rivers, particularly from the Wien.

The shape of this metropolis is not compact or regular, the city or original part forming a town distinct from the suburbs. The shape of the former is circular, its extent limited, being hardly a mile in any direction, and not above three miles in circuit. Between it and the suburbs is an open space, also circular, and of the width of somewhat more than half a mile, the computed range of cannon in a remote age, and kept reserved, consequently, for a purpose of defence. The suburbs long consisted of a succession of scattered villages, but they are now so connected as to form a continuous whole, surrounded on the outside by a wall which embraces a circuit of no less than twelve miles, or four times the extent of the city wall. The form of the whole city and suburbs together approaches to the circular, but with many irregularities in its contour. Though thus surrounded with walls, it was judged unadvisable to attempt defending either the suburbs or city against the French in 1805 or 1809; and since then government have not only forborne repairing the breaches made in walls, but have now made new ones to facilitate the ingress and egress of the public; so that at present the ramparts serve only as public walks.

The imperial palace is situated at the western extremity of the city, close by the ramparts. It is a square edifice of vast extent; but having been built at very different periods, the appearance appearance of the exterior is very irregular, and resembles a palace in little except in its mass. The interior is, however, highly interesting, on account of the valuable collections which it contains. The riding academy of Vienna is said to be one of the largest in Europe; but it is surpassed by an assembly room called the Hall of Apollo, which is said to be capable of containing 10,000 people. The Belvidere, a palace built by prince Eugene, is in one of the suburbs. It stands partly on the top, partly at the foot of an eminence, and commands an extensive prospect. The imperial mews are capable of containing more than 400 horses. The arsenal contains an immense collection of arms, and many curious ornaments, all of iron. All these edifices belong either to government or the imperial family. In regard to nobility, there is hardly a capital in Europe that can boast so many titled personages among its permanent inhabitants: the number is not overrated at 20 princes, 70 counts, and 50 barons.

The charitable institutions at Vienna are numerous, and richly endowed. The great hospital, equal in extent to any in Paris or London, receives often 10,000 patients in the course of a year. There are separate hospitals for the soldiers, for Jews, for foundlings, orphans, and aged persons. Several of these charitable establishments are served by nuns. The lying-in hospitals are also on a liberal plan, and under good management. The roads leading to Vienna are few, compared to the approaches to London or Paris.

The university of Vienna dates from 1237. It was long under the management of the Jesuits, till the celebrated Von Swieten prevailed on the court, in the middle of the 18th century, to take it out of their hands, and to give a great extension to the medical department. A botanical garden was established; medical men were sent to the most celebrated seminaries in Europe, to observe the state of the science; a military hospital and an anatomical theatre were founded; and at a subsequent date a veterinary school. In consequence of this patronage, and of the great extent of practice afforded in so large a city, Vienna is by far the first medical school in Germany. The university of Vienna contains also public classes for philosophy, the classical languages, literature, law, theology, without, however, surpassing in these departments, the seminaries of Gottingen, Leipsic, and Halle. The total number of professors is 54; that of assistants 18. The observatory is not well placed: it stands unluckily in the midst of the city.

The imperial library is very extensive: it is contained in a large hall, 260 feet in length, and 150 in breadth; and is said to consist of 12,000 manuscripts, and 300,000 printed volumes. Next to this comes the library of the university, computed at 90,000 volumes. The imperial collection of medals and coins is reckoned the most complete in Europe.

The principal amusements of the people of Vienna are the public walks and the theatres. Of the latter there are no less than five; two in the city, which belong to the court, and three in the suburbs; but all are below mediocrity.

The environs of Vienna are very fertile and picturesque. To the north are the islands of the Danube; to the west, the lofty summit of the Kahlenberg; to the south, mountains covered with vineyards and extensive forests; and to the east, vast plains, bounded, however, at the farthest horizon, by hills. The chief part of the town and its environs may be seen from the Belvidere. A more complete view may be obtained from the top of the tower of the cathedral, and a still better from the top of the Kahlenberg.

Corn, butchers' meat, and wine, are supplied in a great measure from Hungary; vegetables from the district around the capital. For fuel, the inhabitants use partly wood, partly coals and turf. The water drunk in Vienna is not in general good; and is often found to disagree with strangers. Nor is the climate of Vienna equally healthy with that of London or Paris. Population about 270,000.

Vienna was, under the name of Vindobona, long the head quarters of a Roman legion, and afterwards fell successively into the hands of the Goths and Huns. In 791, Charlemagne having extended his conquests through the south of Germany, attached it to his dominions. At that time, and for more than two centuries after, it was of inconsiderable extent; the church of St. Stephen, which is now nearly in its centre, having, when erected in 1144, been outside of the walls. The town continued, however, to increase progressively, being the general residence of the Austrian government, and favoured in its mercantile communication, by the vicinity of the Danube. The most remarkable incidents in its history are its capture, in 1484, by the Hungarians, under their king Mathias, who resided in it till his death, after which it was restored to Austria. In 1529, the Turks, supported by Hungarian insurgents, ventured to approach this capital, and though unable to take the city, destroyed the suburbs. In 1619, the Bohemian insurgents, supported by a party in Austria, succeeded in penetrating into the city; but a different result took place on an attempt made in 1625 by Torstenson, a Swedish general, commanding a mixed army of his countrymen and of German Protestants. But the attack most generally known to the readers of history was that of 1683, made by a Turkish army, supported by disaffected chiefs in Hungary, but repulsed under the governor Sobieski. In 1741, though pressed by the Bavarians on the west, and the French and Prussians on the north, Vienna was preserved; and an increase of the army, with financial supplies from England, soon changed the aspect of affairs. In the present age, it was threatened by Buonaparte in 1797, and occupied by him in 1805 and 1809. On both occasions proper discipline was observed by the invaders, and little injury was done. Vienna suffered from the ravages of the plague, first in 1679, and afterwards in 1713; 650 miles east of Paris, and 896 south-east of London. Lat. 48. 12. 34. N. long. 16. 22. 31. E.

VIENNA, a post township of the United States, in Kennebeck county, Maine; 26 miles north-west of Augusta. Population 417.—2. A post township of the United States, in Trumbull county, Ohio.—3. A town of the United States, the capital of Green county, Kentucky.—4. A town of the United States, in South Carolina, situated on the Savannah, which is here only navigable for boats of 30 tons. It is about 296 miles from the sea.—5. A post town and port of entry of the United States, in Dorchester county, Maryland, on the Nanticoke; 19 miles south-east of Cambridge.—6. A town of the United States, in Washington county, Ohio, situated on the Ohio river; 7 miles below Marietta.

VIENNE, a river of France, which rises in the Limousin, and flowing northward, joins the Loire, in the department of the Indre and Loire, two miles above Saumur.

VIENNE, a department in the west of France, formed of the ancient province of Upper Poitou, and bounded on the north by the department of the Indre and Loire, on the south by that of the Charente. It has a superficial extent of 2800 square miles, and a population of 252,000, all Catholics, with the exception of about 13,000 Protestants. The surface is for the most part level. The principal rivers are the Vienne, the Charente, the Dive, the Clain, and the Creuse. The capital is Poitiers.

VIENNE, UPPER, a department in the west of France, including the greatest part of the Limousin, and traversed by the river Vienne, which flows northward to the Loire. It has a superficial extent of 2230 square miles, and a population of 240,000.

VIENNE, a town in the south-east of France, on the right bank of the Rhone. Vines are cultivated in the neighbourhood, well known by the name of cote rotie; 18 miles south of Lyons.

VIENNE LE CHATEAU, a town of France, department of the Marne. It adjoins the small river Biesme, and has 1700 inhabitants; 9 miles north-west of Clermont.

VIERGEN, a village of the Austrian states, in Tyrol, on the borders of Salzburg. Population 2500.

VIERLANDS, four islands in the Elbe, near Hamburg; belonging in common to that city and Lubeck. They are New Gamme, Old Gamme, Kirchwerder, and Kosslacke. They form four parishes, and contain 6700 inhabitants.

VIERLINGSBECK, a small inland town of the Netherlands, lands, in North Brabant. Population 1000. It stands on the left bank of the Maese; 15 miles north-east of Grave.

VIERNHEIM, a village of Germany, in Hesse Darmstadt, principality of Starkenburg. Population 1900.

VIERRADEN, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg; 26 miles south-east of Prenzlau.

VIERSEN, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in Gelders. It has a Catholic and a Protestant church, and 4500 inhabitants.

VIERZON, a town of France, department of the Cher, situated in a pleasant country, at the influx of the small river Eure into the Cher; 22 miles north of Bourges.

VIESBECK, a village of Prussian Westphalia, in the principality of Paderborn, with a strong and elegant castle.

VIESTI, a sea-port of the Adriatic, in the east of the kingdom of Naples, in the province of the Capitanata. It contains 4700 inhabitants; 22 miles north-north-east of Manfredonia.

VIETA (Francis), a very eminent mathematician of the 16th century, was born at Fontenai, in Poitou, in the year 1540. Although he occupied the post of master of requests at Paris, and his time and attention were much engaged by the duties of his office, he was indefatigable in his application to mathematical studies; so that he is said to have remained in his apartment for three days without either eating or sleeping. In his writings he manifests great originality of genius, as well as invention. He made many improvements in algebra; and on other branches of the mathematics, besides those that may be denominated analytical, he bestowed much attention and labour; and whilst he collected and detailed what others had done before him, he enlarged the boundaries of science, and made some important and useful additions to the stock of knowledge which had been amassed by his predecessors. In this respect he was not a mere labourer, but original and ingenious in his communications. His treatise on "Angular Sections" is a performance which enabled him to resolve a curious problem, proposed by Adrian Romanus to mathematicians, and which amounted to an equation of the 45th degree. Romanus was so impressed by his sagacity, that he travelled from Wirtemberg in Franconia, where he resided, as far as France, in order to visit Vieta, and cultivate friendship with him. His "Apollonius Gallus," or restoration of Apollonius's tract on Tangencies, not to mention other pieces that may be found in his works, displays powers of invention, eminently adapted to the more sublime geometrical speculations. His tracts on trigonometry, plane and spherical, with the tables annexed to them, were important and valuable at the time they were published, and without doubt led the way to farther modern improvements. Vieta, notwithstanding the intenseness and assiduity of his application, passed his grand climacteric, and died at Paris in December, 1603. In 1646, Schooten gave an edition of all his works. Montucla.

VIETRI, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra; 2 miles north-north-east of Cangiano.—2. Also a town of Naples, in Principato Citra. In 1694 it was destroyed by an earthquake; 2 miles west of Salerno.

VIEUSSENS (Raymond), was born at a village in Rouergne, and having commenced his education at Rhodéz, he pursued the study of physic at Montpellier, where he graduated. In 1671 he was chosen physician to the hospital of St. Eloy. He died in 1726. His most valuable work is his "Neurologia Universalis," Lyons, 1685, folio. After his death appeared "Histoire des Maladies internes," 4to., containing many practical observations. Haller. Eloy.

VIEUX, a village of France, in the department of Calvados; about 6 miles west of Caen.

VIEUX MAISONS, a town of France, department of the Aisne, with 900 inhabitants; 12 miles south of Chateau Thierry.

VIEUX MARCHE, a town of France, in Brittany, department of the Cotes du Nord. Population 3500; 33 miles north-west of St. Brieux.

To VIEW, v. a. [veu, Fr. from voir, or voir]. To survey; to look on by way of examination.

The Almighty Father bent down his eye,
His own works and their works at once to view. Milton

To see; to perceive by the eye.

They here with eyes aghast
View'd first their lamentable lot. Milton.

VIEW, s. Prospect.

You should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view; yea, haply near
The residence of Posthumus. Shakspeare.

Sight; power of beholding.

I go, to take for ever from your view,
Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.

Intellectual sight; mental ken.—Some safer resolution I've in view. Milton.—Act of seeing.

Th' unexpected sound

Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;
Rouz'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think the illusions of his fear
Had given this false alarm; but straight his view
Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Denham.

Sight; eye.—Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.— Survey; examination by the eye.

Time never will renew,

While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden

Intellectual survey.—If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.
—Space that may be taken in by the eye; reach of sight.

The fame through all the neighb'ring nations flew,
When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.

Appearance; show.

In that accomplish'd mind.

Help'd by the night, new graces find;
Which, by the splendour of her view,
Dazzled before we never knew. Waller.

Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.—To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man? Locke.—Prospect of interest.—No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.—Intention; design.—He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections. Atterbury.

VIE'WER, s. One who views.

You are as fair as if the morning bare ye;
Imagination never made a sweeter:
Can it be possible this frame should suffer,
And, built on slight affections, fright the viewer?
Beaum. and Fl.

VIE'WLESS, adj. Unseen; not discernible by the sight.

To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence about
The pendant world. Shakspeare.

VIE'WLY, adj. Sightly; striking to the view. Used in some parts of the north.

VIEYRA (Antony), a Portuguese writer, was born at Lisbon in 1608, and in early life accompanied his father to the Brazils. His genius at the age of fourteen began to display itself to a degree that excited the astonishment of his tutors. In 1623 he entered into the society of Jesus, and having carefully read the scriptures, the works of the fathers, and the Summa Aquinatas, he composed some tracts, and gave lectures in the college of Bahia. At this time he was tutor to the son of the viceroy of Brazil, the marquis of Montalvin; and in 1641, accompanied him to Europe. At Lisbon he distinguished himself in the pulpit, and was appointed by John IV. preacher to the court. The king discovering also his talents for public affairs, deputed him, in 1646, on important portant business to England, Holland, and France, and also to the court of Rome. For the services rendered in these missions he was offered a bishopric, which he declined accepting, and requested only to be employed as a missionary among the savages in the forests of Maragnan. The king demurred against acceding to his proposal, but urged him to accept a bishopric, which he still refused; but with some other Jesuits, he embarked in a ship, in order to proceed to Maragnan. Soon after his arrival there, in 1653, he was sent to Portugal, in order to obtain an order from the king, that the Portuguese settled in the Brazils should treat the Indians with less cruelty. He succeeded in the object of his mission, but he was not allowed to return to America, though he went thither some time after; and in less than six years, in a district more than 600 miles in extent, he formed an establishment similar to that in Paraguay. There the Indians were instructed, and availing themselves of their knowledge, began to live like men, and to practise the virtues which Christianity taught them. The Portuguese residing in Brazil were alarmed, and could not bear that the Indians, whom they treated as slaves, should enjoy the blessings of liberty; they, therefore, seized Vieira and his attendants, and transported them to Portugal, under a charge of their joining the Dutch in forming a plan for expelling all the Portuguese from Brazil. Vieira and his associates were able to prove their innocence, and succeeded in obtaining the reinstatement of all their brethren in the colleges and other establishments of Maragnan. Vieira remained in Portugal, and, at the desire of the queen and ministers of state, drew up a remonstrance, which was presented to king Alphonso, respecting the irregularities and abuses that prevailed in the kingdom. The king's favourites were incensed, and, in 1663, those who were attached to the queen, and who wished to promote the welfare of the nation, were sent into banishment. Vieira was first conveyed to Oporto, and soon after to Coimbra; and for the more certain and speedy decision of his fate, he was committed into the hands of the inquisition. Many charges were alleged against him; however, in 1667, when the influence of the favourites terminated, he was freed from the inquisition, and sent to Lisbon. He was merely forbidden to preach; but this prohibition was revoked, when the queen, Maria Isabella of Savoy, and the infant Don Pedro, then regent of the kingdom, expressed a wish to hear him. In 1669 he was called to Rome, and preached before queen Christina of Sweden, who was so much pleased, that she invited him to the conversaciones held in her palace, and requested him to become her confessor. But finding the air prejudicial to his health, he returned to Lisbon, after having obtained from Pope Clement X. a letter of exculpation, freeing him from the jurisdiction of the inquisition, and rendering him immediately amenable to the college of cardinals. Vieira, upon the recovery of his health, set sail for Brazil; and being incapable, on account of his advanced age, of superintending the mission of Maragnan, of which he had been long superior general, he spent his time in revising his writings, and preparing for the termination of his life, which happened at Bahia in 1697, when he had attained nearly the 90th year of his age. The Portuguese consider Vieira as the best writer their country ever produced. His works were published at Lisbon between 1679, and 1718, in fourteen quarto volumes. Gen. Biog.

VIF, a town of France, department of the Isere, on the river Greze. Population 2300; 12 miles south of Grenoble.

UIG, a parish of Scotland, in Ross-shire, situated in the south-west district of the island of Lewis. It is about 15 miles in length, and 3 in breadth. Population 2500.

VIGAN, a town of France, in the department of the Gard, situated on a hill called Mount Esperon; 28 miles north-north-west of Montpellier.

VIGEANS, ST., a parish of Scotland, in Forfarshire, lying on the sea-coast, to the east and north of Arbroath, and comprehending a great part of that town. It is 7 miles long, and from 3 to 4 broad. Population 4771, of which number 3000 may be said to belong to Arbroath.

VIGESIMATION, s. [vigesimus, Latin.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man. Bailey.

VIGEVANO, a considerable town of Italy, the capital of a district of the same name. Population nearly 12,000; 15 miles north-west of Pavia, and 16 west-south-west of Milan.

VIGGIANO, a town of Italy, in Naples, in the Terra di Lavoro. Population 5500.

VIGHIZOLE, a large village of Austrian Italy. Population 1300; 16 miles south of Padua.

VIGIA, a small river of Brazil, in the province of Para, which runs north-north-west and enters the arm of the river Amazons, which forms the island of Marajo, between the rivers Arreta and Tuma.

VIGIL, s. [vigilia, Lat.] Watch; devotions performed in the customary hours of rest.—So they in heaven their odes and vigils tun'd. Milton.—A fast kept before a holiday.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say to-morrow is St. Crispian. Shakspeare.

Service used on the night before a holiday.

The rivals call my muse another way,
To sing their vigils for the ensuing day. Dryden.

Watch; forbearance of sleep.—Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Addison.

VIGILANCE, or VIGILANCY, s. [Fr.; vigilantia, Lat.] Forbearance of sleep.—Ulysses yielded unseasonably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.—Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.

Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shakspeare.

Guard; watch.

No post is free, no place,
That guard and most unusual vigilance,
Does not attend my taking. Shakspeare.

VIGILANT, adj. [vigilans, Lat.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.

Take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shakspeare.

VIGILANTLY, adv. Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.—Thus in peace, either of the kings so vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm. Hayward.

VIGNANO, a small town in the north-west of Italy; 5 miles east of Genoa.

VIGNE (Pierre delle), a celebrated minister of the emperor Frederic II., was born of mean parentage in Capua, at the end of the twelfth century; and having pursued his studies to good effect as a mendicant scholar at Bologna, he was introduced to Frederic II., and ingratiated himself with this prince to such a degree, that he gave him a lodging in his court, and the opportunity of further improvement. He became a proficient in civil and canon law, and acquired an elegant style of writing, so that he was advanced by the emperor to the posts of prothonotary of his court, judge and chancellor; and he became the confidant of all his designs. His ability and learning raised him to the highest reputation, and his influence in the court of Frederic was long boundless. The emperor afforded him opportunity of amassing immense treasures; but before the close of his life, he lost the emperor's attachment and confidence. He was deprived of sight, and shut up in prison; and sinking into despair, he put an end to his life. The time of his death is not known. The chronicle of Placentia dates his being blinded in 1248. Six books of letters remain, which Tiraboschi regards as one of the most valuable monuments of the 13th century. The last edition of them is that of Basil, in 1740. He also collected and arranged the laws of the kingdom of Sicily; and to him are attributed a work "Concerning the Imperial Authority," and a book "On Consolation," in imitation of that of Boethius. He also composed some Italian poems. Gen. Biog.

VIGNETTE, s. [French.] A picture of leaves and flowers; a kind of flourish of leaves and flowers. Cotgrave writes our word vignet.

VIGNIER (Nicholas), an historian and chronologist, was born at Bar-sur-Seine in 1530, and brought up a Protestant. Having lost his property in the civil wars, he withdrew to Germany, and practised physic with reputation and advantage. Upon his return to France, he conformed to the established religion, and was appointed physician to the king, as well as historiographer-royal. One of the most curious of his works is his "Traité de l'Origine et Demeure des anciens François," 1582, 4to., which was translated into Latin by Andrew du Chesne. His other works may be consulted with advantage by those who wish to acquaint themselves with French history. This writer died in 1595. Moreri.

VIGNOLA, a name commonly given to JAMES BAROZZI, from the place of his birth, a small town in the duchy of Modena, an eminent architect, was born in 1507. He was at Rome in 1550, and built several churches there; and by the interest of Vassari, pope Julius III. appointed him his architect. For him he built a villa, and near it the small church of St. Andrew, in form of an ancient temple; and by his command he brought the Acqua Vergine to Rome. After the death of Julius, he was employed by cardinal Alexander Farnese in the construction of his magnificent palace or castle of Caprarola; and he had also the charge of building the church belonging to the professed house of Jesuits at Rome, which is an edifice of extraordinary beauty and grandeur. It was raised only to the cornice before the death of Vignola, and finished by his disciple James della Porta. After the decease of Michael Angelo, Vignola was appointed to succeed him as architect of St. Peter's, in conjunction with Pirro Ligorio, a Neapolitan. He died in 1573, aged 66. His "Rules for the five Orders of Architecture" were formed on the purest taste of Antiquity, and have been always reckoned classical and original. This work has been often reprinted, and translated into almost all the European languages. The French translation, with the commentaries of Daviler is most esteemed. Vignola also wrote a treatise on "Practical Perspective," which has passed through many editions. Tiraboschi. D'Argenville. Gen. Biog.

VIGNOLA, a small town of Italy, in the duchy of Modena, on the Panaro; 15 miles west-by-south of Bologna.

VIGNORY, a town of France, in Champagne, situated on the Marne. Population 1000; 14 miles north of Chaumont.

VIGNOT, a town of France, situated near the Meuse. Population 800.

VIGO (Giovanni da), an eminent surgeon, born in Genoa, and in 1503 invited to Rome by Pope Julius II., to be his first surgeon. His work entitled "Practica in Arte Chirurgica copiosa," first published at Rome in 1514, folio, became very popular, and was often reprinted. It is a very full compendium of the art of surgery (as then known and practised), and contains also a system of anatomy and of materia medica, and was long regarded as a standard work. Another of his works, entitled "Chirurgia Compendiosa," 1517, is a kind of summary of the former, with some new observations. Haller. Eloy.

VIGO, a town of Spain, in Galicia, on the Atlantic. It is situated on a small gulf or bay, and has one of the largest, deepest, and safest harbours in the kingdom; 76 miles south-by-west of Corunna. Lat. 42. 13. 20. N. long. 8. 33. 30. W.

VIGONA, an inland town of Italy, in Piedmont. It has several churches, and a hospital. Population 5300; 12 miles east-by-south of Pignerolo.

VIGOROUS, adj. [vigerous, old French; vigoureux, mod. from vigour.] Forcible; not weakened; full of strength and life.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1644.

Fam'd for his valour young;
At sea successful, vigorous and strong?

Waller.

VIGOROUSLY, adv. With force; forcibly; without weakness.

The prince had two giant ships;
With his one so vigorously he press'd,
And flew so home, they could not rise again. Dryden.

VIGOROUSNESS, s. Force; strength.—He hath given excellent sufferance and vigorousness to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage, heroical fortitude, invincible resolution, and glorious patience. Bp. Taylor.

VIGOUR, s. [vigour, old French; vigor, Lat.] Force; strength.

The vigour of this arm was never vain:
Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.

Mental force; intellectual ability. Energy; efficacy.

In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.

VIHIERS, a town of France, department of the Maine and Loire; 22 miles west-by-south of Saumur.

VILAGOS, a market town of Hungary, in the county of Sarand.

VILAINE, a considerable river of France, which falls into the Atlantic, below Roche Bernard, after a course of 140 miles.

VILBEL, a town of Germany, belonging in common to Hesse-Cassel and Hesse-Darmstadt. Population 1100; 4 miles north of Frankfort on the Maine.

VILCABAMBA, a river of Peru, in the province of Calca and Lares, which rises north of the town of Victoria, and falls into the Paucartambo.

VILCABAMBA, a settlement of Peru, in the province of Cotabamba.—2. Of Calca and Lares.—3. Of Angurues.—4. Of Quito in the province of Loxa.—5. Of Tarma in the province of Peru.

VILCAMAYO, URUBAMBA, or QUILLABAMBA, a large river of Peru, which rises in the province of Lampa, to the west of the capital. It throws itself into the Apurimac, at about lat. 12. 30. S.

VILCAS-GUAMAN, or HUAMAN, a district of Peru, south-east of Guamanga, beginning 6 or 7 leagues from that city, and extending about 30 leagues. Its temperature throughout a great part of it is mild and very healthy, although in the low parts bordering upon the river, very hot. In these parts grow sugar-canes, plantains, and other fruits and herbage; also cotton.

VILCAS-GUAMAN, the capital of the above province, in which is a church, built on the ruins of a Peruvian fortress.

VILCAS, a river of the same province, which rises in the mountains of the Andes, in lat. 14. 17. S., runs north-east, and after collecting the waters of many other rivers, and often changing its name, enters by the south part into the Maranon or Amazons.

VILE, adj. [vil, Fr.; vilis, Lat.] Base; mean; worthless; sordid; despicable.

He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. Shakspeare.

Morally impure; wicked.

Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.

VILD, or VILED, adj. [from vile, whence revile.] Vile; wicked.—The vassal of his pleasures vilde. Spenser.

VILELY, adv. Basely; meanly; shamefully.—The Volsians vilely yielded the town. Shakspeare.

VILENESS, s. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.

His vileness us shall never awe:

But here our sports shall be:
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free.

Drayton.

Moral or intellectual baseness,

4 D

Then,

Then, vileness of mankind!
 Could none, alas! repeat me good or great,
 Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate?

Prior.

VILEYKA, a small town of Russian Lithuania, in the government of Minsk; 73 miles north-north-west of Minsk.

VILIA, a river of Russian Lithuania, which passes by the town of Wilna, and falls into the Niemen at Kovno. It is navigable for small boats.

VILIFICATION, s. [vilifico, Lat.] The act of vilifying.—They have mingled their own fooleries with it; such as the transmigration of human souls into brutes; vilification of marriage, and the like. More.

VILIFIER, s. One that vilifies.

To VILIFY, v. a. To debase; to degrade; to make vile.

Their maker's image
 Forsook them, when themselves they vilify'd
 To serve ungovern'd appetite, and took His image whom they serv'd.

Milton.

To defame; to make contemptible.

Tomalin could not abide,
 To hear his sovereign vilify'd

Drayton.

The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to vilify his person. Ad-dison.

To VILIPEND, v. a. [vilipendo, Lat.] To have in no esteem; to treat with slight or contempt.—If it be to the scorning and vilipending of a man, it may be called the sin of the men of Succoth, who slighted Gideon. Bp. Andrews.

VILITY, s. [vilitas, Lat.] Baseness; vileness. Bul-lokar.—The comedians wore these [socks] to represent the vility of the persons they represented; as debauched young sparks, old crazy misers, pimps, parasites, strumpets, and the rest of that gang. Kennet.

VILKOMIRZ, a small town of Russian Lithuania, on the river Svieta. It was abandoned and burnt by the Russians on the approach of the French in 1812; 44 miles north-north-west of Wilna, and 112 south-by-east of Riga.

VILL, s. [villa, Lat.] A village; a small collection of houses. Little in use.—This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.

VILLA, s. [villa, Lat.] A country seat.—The antient Romans lay the foundations of their villas and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.

VILLA a town of Naples, in the Terra di Lavoro. Population 1400; 10 miles north-north-east of Ponte Corvo.

VILLA, LA, a settlement of the New Kingdom of Granada, in the province of Tunja, situated on the shore of the river Magdalena.

VILLA ALTA, a small village, the chief place of a district of the same name, in Mexico; 105 leagues from Mexico.

VILLA ALVA, a small town of Portugal, in the province of Alentejo; 22 miles north-by-east of Beja, with 1400 inhabitants.

VILLA BELLA, a town of Brazil, in the government of Matto Grosso.

VILLA BOA, a town of Brazil, and capital of the government of Goyas; 450 miles north-west of Rio Janeiro.

VILLA CARILLA, a small inland town of Spain in the province of Jaen; 18 miles north-east of Ubeda.

VILLA DO CARMO, a town of Brazil, in the government of Minas Geraes; 20 miles east-north-east of Villa Rica.

VILLA CASTIN, a large village of Spain, in old Castile; 52 miles north-west of Madrid.

VILLA CIBO, a neat village of Italy, in the Campagna di Roma, near Frascati. It is attached to a pontifical palace, and the adjacent gardens are beautiful.

VILLA CLARA, a town of the island of Cuba; 20 miles north-west of Espiritu Santo.

VILLA DO CONDE, a town of Portugal, in the province of Entre Douro e Mino, on the river Ave, near its mouth; 18 miles north of Oporto.

VILLA FALLETO, an inland town of Italy, in Piedmont, near the river Maira, with 2900 inhabitants; 10 miles east of Coni.

VILLA FERNANDA, a small town of Portugal, in the province of Alentejo; 10 miles west of Elvas.

VILLA FLOR, a small town of Portugal, in the province of Alentejo, on the Tagus; 23 miles east-by-north of Abrantes.

VILLA FLOR, a small town of Portugal; 34 miles south-by-west of Braganza.

VILLA DA FO, a small town of Italy, in the Sardinian Milanese.

VILLA FRANCA, a town situated on the southern coast of the island of St. Michael, one of the Azores.—2. A town of Italy, in Piedmont. Population 2200; 2 miles east of Nice.—3. Another town of Italy, in Piedmont, and larger than the preceding, though from situation less visited by travellers; 20 miles south-by-west from Turin.—4. A small town of Austrian Italy; 9 miles south-west of Verona.—5. A small town of Spain, in the province of Leon, on the borders of Galicia; 72 miles west of Leon.

VILLA FRANCA DE PANADES, a town of Spain, in Catalonia. Population 6000; 27 miles west of Barcelona.

VILLA FRANCA DE XIRA, a town of Portugal, near the northern bank of the Tagus; 20 miles north-east of Lisbon. Population 3000.

VILLA DEL FUERTE, or MONTES CLAROS, a town of Mexico, to the north of Cinaloa. Its population is estimated at 7900.

VILLA GABA, a town of Brazil, in the government of St. Paul; 95 miles north-north-east of St. Paul.

VILLA HARTA, a small town of the interior of Spain, in the province of Toledo, on the small river Gijuela; 79 miles south-by-east of Madrid, and 21 north-east of Ciudad Real.

VILLA HERMOSA, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia; 24 miles north of Segorbe.

VILLA HERMOSA, a town of Mexico, in the old province of Tabasco, near the mouth of a river which falls into the bay of Campeachy and gulf of Mexico. Lat. 17. 40. N. long. 94. 16. W.

VILLA DI HORTA, a small sea-port of Fayal, one of the Azores, containing the best harbour in the island. Lat. 38. 32. N. long. 28. 36. W.

VILLA JOYOSA, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia, adjoining the sea; 20 miles north-east of Alicant.

VILLA DE LEON, an extensive, populous, and wealthy town of Mexico; 156 miles north-west of Mexico.

VILLA MARTIN, a small town of Spain, in the province of Leon; 27 miles east of Leon.

VILLA MAYOR, a small town of Spain, in Arragon; 3 miles east of Saragosa.

VILLA NOVA, an inland town of Italy, subject to the king of Sardinia; 2 miles north of Casale.

VILLA NOVA D'ASTI, a town of Italy, in Piedmont; 13 miles east-south-east of Turin.

VILLA NOVA DE CERVEIRA, a town of Portugal, province of Entre Douro e Minho, on the river Minho; 10 miles west-south-west of Tuy.

VILLA NOVA DE MILFONTES, a populous but small town of Portugal, in the province of Alentejo, at the mouth of the small river Mira; 12 miles south of Lisbon.

VILLA NOVA DEL PRINCIPE, a town of Brazil, in the jurisdiction of Bahia.

VILLA NOVA DO PORTIMAO, a town of Portugal; 107 miles south-south-east of Lisbon.

VILLA NOVA DO PORTO, a town of Portugal, in the province of Entre Douro e Minho. Population 10,000.

VILLA NUEVA, a town of Spain, in Valencia; 50 miles north-by-west of Valencia.

VILLA NEUVA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, on the coast of the Mediterranean; 21 miles west-south-west of Barcelona.

VILLA NUEVA DE LOS INFANTES, a town of Spain,

Spain, in the province of La Mancha; 115 miles south-south-east of Madrid.

VILLA NUEVA DEL RIO, a town of Spain, in the province of Seville, on the Guadalquivir; 25 miles north-north-east of Seville.

VILLA NUEVA DE LA SERENA, a small town of Spanish Estremadura, on the Guadiana; 58 miles east of Badajos.

VILLA DE PRINCIPE, a town of the province and government of Rio de Janeiro, in Brazil, on the confines of the diamond district. The most part of the inhabitants are shop-keepers. The rest are artizans, farmers, miners, and labourers.

VILLA DE LA PURIFICATION, a small town of Mexico; about 40 miles north-west of the port of Guatlan, on the Pacific ocean.

VILLA REAL, a town of Portugal, in the province of Traz os Montes, on the small river Corgo; 10 miles north of Lamego.

VILLA REAL, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia, on the river Mijares, near the Mediterranean; 35 miles north-by-east of Valencia, and 20 east of Segorbe.

VILLA REAL, a small town of the south of Portugal, in Algarva, at the mouth of the Guadiana, opposite to Ayamonte, and 1 mile south of Castel Marim.

VILLA REAL DE ALAVA, a small town of the north-east of Spain, in the district of Alava; 21 miles south of Bilbao.

VILLA REAL DE CONCEICAO, a town of Brazil, in the government of Minas Geraes; 40 miles north-west of Villa Rica.

VILLA RICA, a town of Brazil, and capital of the province of Minas Geraes, and the seat of its government. It is situated on the side of a large mountain, connected with others forming an immense chain, of which it is one of the highest. Most of the streets range, in steps, as it were, from the base to the summit, and are crossed by others which lead up the acclivity. The town is divided into two parishes, and contains about 20,000 inhabitants. Lat. 20. 26. S. long. 45. 50. W.—2. A town of South America, in the province of Paraguay; 100 miles north-east of Assumption.—3. A volcano of Chili; 60 miles north-east of Valdivia.

VILLA RUBIA, a small town of the central part of Spain; 31 miles south-south-east of Madrid.

VILLA RUBIA DE LOS OJOS DE LA GUADIANA, a small town of Spain, in the province of La Mancha; 82 miles south of Madrid.

VILLA SAVARY, a town in the south of France, department of the Aube; 9 miles south-east of Castelnaudary.

VILLA DE VALLE FERTILE, a town of South America, in the province of Cuyo; 80 miles south-east of Juan de la Frontera.

VILLA VEJA, a town of South America, in Bahia, at first called St. Salvador.

VILLA VERDE, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura; 32 miles north of Lisbon.

VILLA VICIOSA, a small sea-port town of Spain, in Asturias, near the mouth of the Asta; 23 miles north-east of Oviedo.

VILLA VICIOSA, an ill built town of the south of Spain, in the province of Cordova, on the Guadalquivir; 21 miles west of Cordova.

VILLA VICIOSA, a village of Spain, in New Castile; 20 miles north-east of Guadalaxara, on the river Henares.

VILLA VICOSA, a fortified town in the south-east of Portugal, in the province of Alentejo; 100 miles east-by-south of Lisbon, and 34 west of Badajos in Spain.

VILLACH, an old town of Austrian Illyria, in Upper Carinthia, at the confluence of the Drave and the Geyl; 22 miles west of Klagenfurt, and 63 north of Trieste.

VILLACH, a circle of Austrian Illyria, in the government of Laybach. Its extent is about 2175 square miles; its population 120,000.

VILLAFAMES, a town of the east of Spain, in Valencia, with 2300 inhabitants; 51 miles north-north-east of Valencia.

VILLAGE, s. [village, French.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.

Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or pelting villages, sheep-cotes, and mills,
Enforce their charity.

Shakspeare.

VILLAGE HILL, a post village of the United States, in Nottaway county, Virginia.

V'LLAGER, s. An inhabitant of the village.

Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions.

Shakspeare.

V'LLAGERY, s. District of villages.

Robin Goodfellow, are you not he,
That fright the maidens of the villagery?

Shakspeare.

V'LLAIN, s. [villanus, low Lat.; villain, old French. "Depuis le xii. siècle jusqu' au xvi., ce mot ne présenteoit rien d' infame, quoiqu' il fût employé pour villis: il servoit à désigner l'ordre du tiers-état; il signifioit paysan, habitant de la campagne, labourer, fermier et cultivateur; homme du peuple, marchand, roturier, qui n'est pas noble d'état ou des mœurs." Roquefort.] One who held by a base tenure; a servant.

A trusty villain, Sir; that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests.

Shakspeare.

A wicked wretch.

What in the world,

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies.

Shakspeare.

VILLAIN LE JUHEL, a town of France, department of the Mayenne; 17 miles east-north-east of Mayenne. Population 2200.

VILLAINOUS. See VILLANOUS.

VILLAINY. See VILLANY.

VILLALGORDO DE XUCAR, an inland town of Spain, in the province of Cuença, on the river Xucar; 50 miles south of Cuença. Population 2200.

VILLALONOS, a small town of Spain, in the province of Valladolid; 27 miles west of Palencia.

VILLALPANDO, a considerable town of the west of Spain, in the province of Leon, on the south bank of the river Valderaguay, which, flowing southward, falls into the Douro east of Zamora; 40 miles south of Leon.

VILLALVA, a small town of Spain, in the province of Navarre; 3 miles north-east of Pampeluna.

VILLANAGE, s. The state of a villain; base servitude.—Upon every such surrender and grant there was but one freeholder, which was the lord himself; all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.—Baseness; infamy.

If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine.

Dryden.

VILLANDREAU, a town of France, department of the Gironde, on the river Ciron; 9 miles north-west of Bazas.

VILLANI (Giovanni), a native of Florence, was old enough in 1300 to visit Rome at the jubilee, and is supposed to have afterwards travelled into France and Flanders. In 1316 and 1317 he was one of the magistrates called priors at Florence, and also in the latter year official of the mint, to whom was due an exact register, still extant, of all the money coined at Florence in and before his time. He served in the Florentine army in 1323, and in 1328 contrived means for relieving his poor countrymen at a period of distressing scarcity. On occasion of the failure of the company of Bonaccorsi, in which he had a share in 1345, and to which he was not accessory, he was committed to the public prison, and his life was terminated by the plague, which which severely visited Florence in 1348. Villani bears the character of one of the most polished writers of his age, and the most conversant in the history of his country. His History records, in twelve books, the events occurring in Florence from its foundation till the year of his death, and comprehends also the principal changes that happened in the other Italian provinces. The early part of this History abounds with errors and fables; but in describing the occurrences of Tuscany in his own time, he is deemed a safe guide, allowing for his partiality to the Guelph interest, and for his unacknowledged extracts from the History of Ricordano Malaspini. This History, which has been always much esteemed, both for its matter and the elegance of its style, was first printed by the Giunti of Florence in 1537, and the latest of several editions of it was that of Milan, in the collection of Italian historians. It was continued after his death by his brother, Matteo Villani, who brought it down to 1363, in which year, whilst he was writing the 11th book, he was carried off by the plague. His History is not held in equal estimation with that of his brother, its style being too diffuse; but it was contemporary with the events which he relates. Tiraboschi. Gen. Biog.

To VILLANIZE, v. a. To debase; to degrade; to defame.

Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, ev'n in descending shine. Dryden.

VILLANIZER, s. One who degrades, debases, or defames.—Renouncers of God, blasphemers of his only-begotten Son, villanizers of his saints, and scornors of his service. Sir E. Sandys.

VILLANO, a cape in the north-west of Spain, on the coast of Galicia. Lat. 43. 11. N. long. 9. 14. W.

VILLANOUS, adj. Base; vile; wicked.—There is nothing but roguery to be found in villanous man. Shakspeare.—Sorry: in a familiar sense.—Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villainous trick of thine eye doth warrant me. Shakspeare.—It is used by Shakspeare to exaggerate any thing detestable.

We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villainous low. Shakspeare.

VILLANOUSLY, adv. Wickedly; basely.—The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Knolles.

VILLANOUSNESS, s. Baseness; wickedness.

VILLANTERIO, a small inland town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Milan; 11 miles east-by-north of Pavia.

VILLANY, s. [villonic, old French. It is more usual to write villainy, and villainous; though anciently the words wanted the second i. "He never yet no vilanie ne sayde," &c. Chaucer.] Wickedness; baseness; depravity; gross atrociousness.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villainy is not without such rheum:
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakspeare.

A wicked action; a crime. In this sense it has a plural. Such villainies rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.

VILLAR, a town of Spain, in Estremadura; 7 miles north of Plasencia. Population 2000.

VILLARD, a town of Savoy, in the Tarantaise, on the small river Doron; 6 miles east of Confians.

VILLARD DE LANS, a town of France, department of the Isere; 12 miles south-west of Grenoble. Population 2000.

VILLARET (Claude de), was born at Paris in 1715, and liberally educated. On the death of the abbé Velly in 1759, he was selected for continuing his History; and at the same time was made secretary to the peerage. His early imprudence and his subsequent application to business terminated his life in 1766. His continuation of the "Histoire de France" commences in the 8th volume, with the reign of Philip VI. and concludes in the 17th volume: it abounds with interesting remarks and curious anecdotes, but the reader is diverted from the main object by prolixity of detail in prefaces and digressions. The style however is elegant and animated, but too rhetorical for the simplicity of history.

VILLARIA [so named by Schreber, in honour of Mons. Villars, physician to the military hospital at Grenoble], in Botany, a genus of the class dioecia, order pentandria.—Generic Character. Male—Calyx: perianth one-leafed, five-parted, spreading, permanent; segments roundish, obtuse, concave, coriaceous, thinner at the edge, almost equal; two more interior. Corolla: petals five, oblong, obtuse, flat, spreading, coriaceous, thinner at the edge, twice as long as the calyx, permanent. Stamina: filaments five, awl-shaped; erect, smaller by half than the calyx; anthers roundish, twin. Pistil: germ orbicular, depressed; style very short; stigma capitate. Female—Calyx as in the male. Corolla as in the male. Nectary: leaflets five, ovate, obtuse, erect, alternate with the petals and shorter than them, permanent. Pistil: germ ovate-turbinate; style very short, scarcely any. Stigma capitate, subtrifid. Pericarp: berry subglobular, pointed with the permanent style, three-celled. Seeds solitary.

VILLARS (Louis-Hector), duke of, and marshal of France, was born at Moulins, in Bourbonnois, in 1653, and commenced a military life in his youth. He served in Holland in 1672, signalized his courage at the siege of Maestricht in 1673, and was wounded at the battle of Senef in 1674. His gradations of advancement and displays of military talent are detailed in the article FRANCE. He expired in June 1734, in the eighty-first year of his age. "Memoirs of the Marshal de Villars" were printed in Holland, in three vols. 1734-36, the first of which alone was written by himself. A more interesting publication appeared in 1784, entitled "La Vie du Maréchal de Villars, écrite par lui-même, et donné au Public par M. Anquetil," four vols. 12mo. This work contains the letters, recollections, and journal of the marshal, properly arranged by the editor. Moreri.

VILLARS, a town of France, department of the Ain, on the river Chalaronne; 11 miles east-north-east of Trevoux.

VILLARS FARLAY, a town of France, department of the Jura; 25 miles north-east of Lons le Saunier.

VILLATIC, adj. Belonging to villages.

The perched roosts,
And nests in order rang'd,
Of tame villatic fowl. Milton.

VILLE, a town of France, in Alsace; 26 miles south-west of Strasburg.

VILLE SUR AUJON, a town of France, department of the Upper Marne; 12 miles south-west of Chaumont.

VILLE BRUNIER, a town of France, department of the Tarn and Garonne; 12 miles south-east of Montauban.

VILLE SUR ILLON, a town of France, department of the Vosges; 9 miles west of Epinal.

VILLEDIEU, a town of France, department of the Loir and Cher; 20 miles west-south-west of Vendome.

VILLEDIEU LES POELES, a town of France, department of La Manche; 8 miles north-north-east of Avranches. It contains about 3000 inhabitants.

VILLEFAGNAN, a small town in the west of France, department of the Charente; 6 miles west of Ruffec. Population 1700.

VILLEFORT, a town of France, department of the Lozere, on the river Deveze; 20 miles north-east of Florac.

VILLE-FRANCHE, or VILLEFRANCHE SUR SAONE, a town of France, in the department of the Rhone; 18 miles north of Lyons.

VILLEFRANCHE,

VILLEFRANCHE, a considerable town of France, situated on the Aveyron, and surrounded by lofty hills; 25 miles west of Rodez. It contains nearly 10,000 inhabitants.—2. Another town in the south of France; 20 miles south-east of Toulouse.—3. A town of France; 22 miles south of Sarlat.

VILLEFRANCHE DE QUEYRON, a town of France, department of the Lot and Garonne; 14 miles south of Marmande.

VILLEHARDOUIN (Geoffroi de), was marshal of Champagne, an office held by his father and his descendants. He took a principal part in the fourth crusade of 1198, which produced the capture of Constantinople by the French and Venetians in 1204; and of this expedition he wrote or dictated a narrative, which is curious and interesting. The best edition is that of Du-Cange, fol. 1657, with many notes. Moreri.

VILLE-JUIF, a village 3 miles south of Paris, with 1400 inhabitants.

VILLELAS, SAN JOSEPH DE, a settlement of Peru, in the province of Tucuman.

VILLEMUR, an inland town of France, department of the Upper Garonne; 20 miles north of Toulouse. Population 4000.

VILLENA, a considerable town in the south of Spain, in Murcia, on the borders of Valencia; 40 miles north-north-east of Murcia, and 66 south-south-west of Valencia.

VILLENAUXE LA GRANDE, a town of France, department of the Aube; 6 miles north-north-west of Nogent sur Seine. Population 2500.

VILLENEUVE, a town of France, department of the Hérault, near the great canal of Languedoc; 2 miles from Clermont Lodeve.

VILLENEUVE (the ancient Pennilucus), a small town of the Swiss canton of the Pays de Vaud, on the Lake of Geneva; 17 miles east-south-east of Lausanne. Population 1600.

VILLENEUVE, a town of France, department of the Aveyron; 28 miles west-by-north of Rhodéz. Population 3100.

VILLENEUVE D'ÆGEN, an inland town of France, department of the Lot and Garonne, situated on the River Lot; 14 miles north-east of Agen. Population 5500.

VILLENEUVE D'AVIGNON, a small town of France, department of the Gard, on the Rhone, opposite to Avignon, with which it communicates by a wooden bridge of late construction; 22 miles east-by-north of Nîmes. It contains 3300 inhabitants.

VILLENEUVE DE BERG, a small town in the south of France, department of the Ardeche, on the river Alise; 14 miles south of Privas. Population 2200.

VILLENEUVE DE MARSAN, a town of France, department of the Landes, on the Midou; 12 miles east of Mont de Marsan.

VILLENEUVE LA GUYARD, a town of France. It stands on the Yonne, about 23 miles north-north-west of Sens.

VILLENEUVE L'ARCHEVEQUE, another town of France, department of the Yonne; 11 miles east of Sens.

VILLENEUVE ST. GEORGES, a town in the north of France, situated on the Seine; 9 miles south-by-east of Paris.

VILLENEUVE SUR VANNES, a town of France, with 1600 inhabitants, and is 12 miles east of Sens.

VILLENEUVE SUR YONNE, a town of France, department of the Yonne; 9 miles north-west of Joigny. Population 4600.

VILLEN, a promontory in the north of Spain, on the coast of Biscay. Lat. 43. 26. N. long. 2. 58. W.

VILLEPUCHE, a village of the United States, in the Missouri Territory, on the west side of the Mississippi; 19 miles below St. Lewis.

VILLEQUIERS, a town of France, department of the Cher; 22 miles south-east of Bourges.

VILLEREAL, a town of France, department of the Lot and Garonne, near the river Droat; about 18 miles north of Villeneuve.

VILLERS COTTERETS, a town of France, department of the Aisne. It has a castle, and contains 2400 inhabitants; 14 miles south-west of Soissons.

VILLERS LE BOCAGE, a small town of France, in Normandy; 16 miles south-west of Caen.

VILLERS SEXEL; a town of France, department of the Upper Saone. It contains 1100 inhabitants, and has several iron works; 14 miles east-south-east of Vesoul.

VILLETTE, a village of France, in the department of the Seine; about 2 miles north-east of Paris.

VILLETTE, a small town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud, on the lake of Geneva; 9 miles east-south-east of Lausanne.

VILLI, s. [Latin.] In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany small hairs like the grain of plush or shag, with which, as a kind of excrescence, some trees do abound. Quincy.

VILLIERS (George), the first duke of Buckingham, was born in that county, A. D. 1592. His graceful person and gay disposition recommended him at court, to which he was introduced by Sir John Graham, a gentleman of the king's privy chamber. In 1613, James I. conferred upon him the office of his cup-bearer. Upon the fall of the earl of Somerset, Villiers took his place in the affection and confidence of the king, who knighted him in 1615, and made him gentleman of the bed-chamber, with a pension of 1000*l.* a-year. He soon after became master of the horse; and in 1616 was honoured with the garter, created a baron and viscount, and in the following year advanced to the earldom of Buckingham, and admitted into the privy-council. After his return from Scotland, whither he accompanied the king in 1617, he was created a marquis, and promoted to the dignities of lord high-admiral of England, chief justice in eyre south of the Trent, master of the king's bench office, steward of Westminster, and constable of Windsor Castle. He also employed his powerful interest with the king for the advancement of his family and connections. His character was that of an ardent friend and implacable enemy, insolent and arrogant to those who opposed him, and regardless of real merit in those whom he patronized. To his pusillanimous sovereign and to prince Charles he manifested his arrogant disposition; but in order to engage the prince's attachment, he proposed a visit of respect to his intended bride, the infanta of Spain. The king, at first averse from this journey, at length granted to his importunity a reluctant consent. His manners, however, disgusted the Spanish court, and he returned avowing his enmity to the prime minister Olivarez. Such was his powerful influence at home, that he was appointed lord warden of the Cinque Ports. By misrepresenting the negotiations with Spain relating to the proposed marriage, he inflamed the nation against the Spaniards, and became popular; and dreading the return of lord Bristol from his embassy, and a true statement of this business, he joined the opposers of the court and promoted popular measures. Upon the accession of Charles his influence was augmented, and he was sent to France, in order to conduct into England the royal bride, Henrietta-Maria. At length, his inordinate use of the power with which he had been entrusted rendered him an object of national jealousy and abhorrence; and in May 1626, the earl of Bristol, who at his instigation had been committed to the Tower, and afterwards banished from the court, exhibited against him a charge of high treason. He was also accused by the Commons of high crimes and misdemeanours; but his master averted the stroke that was aimed against him by the dissolution of parliament. In the war now subsisting with Spain, he went to the Hague to concert a treaty with the States-general for the recovery of the Palatinate; but his conduct towards France soon produced a war with that country. At his solicitation, France was invaded in 1627 by an expedition under his command; and he landed on the isle of Rhé, whence he was obliged to withdraw with great loss. In order to recover his reputation after this disgrace, he advised the calling of a new parliament; which, so far from answering his purpose, charged him with being the author of all the evils and dangers brought upon the king and kingdom, and drew up a remonstrance, containing a statement of the grievances of which he had been the cause. These proceedings were staid by a prerogative, and in the mean while he made an effort for recovering the good-will of the country, by fitting out an expedition for the relief of the Rochellers, then under close siege, in whose fate the zealous Protestants felt great interest. Whilst he was at Portsmouth, preparing for this expedition, Felton, who had served under him as a lieutenant in the army, moved by discontent and a fanatical spirit, gave him a stab, which proved almost instantly mortal, and of which he expired August 23, 1628, having just completed his 36th year.

VILLIERS (George), second duke of Buckingham, was the son of the preceding, and born A. D. 1627. He and his brother Francis received the rudiments of education under the same tutors with the king's own children, and were both entered at Trinity College, Cambridge, and afterwards sent upon their foreign travels. Upon their return the civil war had commenced; and after having been presented to the king at Oxford, they engaged in military service under prince Rupert and Lord Gerard. Upon this, their estates were seized, but restored on account of their nonage. They afterwards renewed their travels in France and Italy. In 1648, when the king was prisoner in the Isle of Wight, they returned to England, and joined the earl of Holland, who was in arms in Surrey; but in an engagement with the parliamentary troops at Nonsuch, lord Francis, who fought valiantly, was slain. The duke escaped to St. Neot's, and, surrounded by the enemy, made way with sword in hand through the guard, and joined prince Charles in the Downs. By adhering to the royal cause, he forfeited his estates, which were then amongst the most considerable belonging to any English subject. He attended the exiled Charles in Scotland, and accompanied him at the fatal battle of Worcester, whence his escape was no less extraordinary than that of his master. He afterwards served as a volunteer in the French army, and occasionally visited the king's little court in Flanders. When the duke was informed that lord Fairfax had retired from the army and resided on part of his estate, which parliament had allotted to him, that he had acted generously with regard to other forfeitures, and that he had an only daughter, he determined to venture into England and try his fortune. He soon gained the affection of the daughter, and they were married in 1657, at his lordship's seat of Nun-Appleton, near York. He was seized, however, in 1658, and committed to the Tower, very much to the displeasure of his father-in-law. After the death of Cromwell, he was allowed to confine himself at Windsor Castle, and upon the abdication of Richard he obtained his liberty. The Restoration put him in possession of all his estates, and he lived in splendour and magnificence, indulging in a profusion of expence, which was very injurious to his fortune, and which was not counterbalanced by the posts of a lord of the bed-chamber, lord-lieutenant of Yorkshire, and master of the horse, which the king assigned him. Reduced to desperate circumstances or inclined to faction and intrigue, he was charged, as early as the year 1662, with treasonable designs; so that in 1666 it became necessary for him to abscond, and a proclamation was issued for apprehending him. However, he voluntarily surrendered himself, and contrived so to ingratiate himself with Charles, as to be restored to his place in the bed-chamber and in the council. Always an adversary to lord chancellor Clarendon, he used his influence to accelerate his fall. In 1668 he joined Sir Orlando Bridgeman and Sir Matthew Hale in the laudable scheme of relaxing the severities against the Non-conformists; but their plan for this purpose was defeated by the House of Commons. Destitute of steady principle, the duke was selected, in 1670, to form one of the infamous party denominated the Cabal, and he was deputed as ambassador to the court of France, in order to dissolve the triple alliance, concerted by Temple and De Witt; and being a favourite with the French king, he concurred in all the measures of that court. He was suspected, on account of his profligate character, with being accessory to the attempt made upon the life of the duke of Ormond, by Blood; and his cowardice was so contemptible, that he tamely bore from the duke's spirited son, lord Ossory, the imputation of this villainy, accompanied with a menace, in the royal presence. He was elected, however, in 1671, by court interest, to the chancellorship of Cambridge; and in the same year was exhibited his comedy, called the "Rehearsal," which is said to have been a joint production. The satire levelled against Dryden, then made poet laureate, was thought to be just, but illiberal; and it was retorted by the poet in the character of the duke, under the name of Zimri, in "Absalom and Achitophel."

1672, the duke was sent to France to concert measures for the war which was intended to ruin the Dutch commonwealth. In 1674, the conduct of the Cabal being attacked in the House of Commons, a motion was made for his impeachment, and he was questioned at the bar of the House. The result of this business was, that the Commons voted an address for his removal. But as he was directed and restrained in his conduct by no kind of principle, he joined the opposition to the court with the earl of Shaftesbury. In 1780, having sold Wallingford-House, he removed to the city, and there concurred in the politics of the opposition. In 1680, he published a popular work, containing some just and liberal sentiments, entitled "A short Discourse upon the Reasonableness of Men's having a Religion, or Worship of God." Upon his retirement, in declining health, to his manor of Helmsley, in Yorkshire, and whilst he was amusing himself with rural sports and company, he wrote a short essay, entitled "A Demonstration of the Deity." At length, in a fox-chace, he caught cold, which brought on a fever, and on the third day of his illness he died, in April 1688, in the 61st year of his age. His amours were numerous; and of these, the principal was that with the countess of Shrewsbury, who held his horse while he killed her husband in a duel. His writings, consisting of essays, poems, &c. have been collected in 2 vols. 8vo. and have passed through four editions. He is said to have devoted himself to chemical, or rather alchemical pursuits, in which he was the dupe of interested and designing persons; and it is added, that he introduced the art of making crystal-glass from Venice. Biog. Brit. Hume.

VILLIERS, ST. BENOIT, a small town in the central part of France, department of the Yonne, with 900 inhabitants; 20 miles south-west of Joigny.

VILLINGEN, a small town of the west of Germany, in Baden, situated in the mountainous district of the Black Forest; 58 miles south-south-west of Stutgard. Population 3500.

VILLIVA, PUNTA DE, a cape of Chili, in the province of Valdivia; 80 miles south of Valdivia, in lat. 41. 6. S.

VILLOISON (John-Baptist Gaspard d'Anse de), was the descendant of a family originally Spanish, and born in 1750 at Corbeille-sur-Seine, and after receiving the rudiments of literature at several colleges, attended the Greek lectures of M. le Beau at Paris, and enjoyed the higher instruction in this department of M. Capperonier, Greek professor in the royal college of France. Such were his talents and application, that with these advantages he became acquainted, at the age of fifteen, with almost all the writers of antiquity in every class. In his researches among MSS. in the library of St. Germain-des-Pres, he found a Greek lexicon of Homer by Apollonius, which he published in 1773, with prolegomena and notes, that displayed a very surprising extent of erudition, considering his early age, and that introduced him, out of the usual form, into the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres. His next considerable undertaking was an edition of the Pastoral of Longus, which was published in 1778. In 1781 he obtained a mission, at the king's expence, to examine the library of St. Mark in Venice, where he found several inedited works of rhetoricians, philosophers, and grammarians, a collection of which he published in two vols vols. 4to. under the title of "Anecdota Græca." He also found a very valuable MS. of Homer's Iliad, with scholia by ancient grammarians, which he committed to the press in 1788, accompanied with learned prolegomena. About this time he received an invitation from the duke and duchess of Saxe-Weimar, to visit their court, the most literary in Germany; and here he collected various readings and emendations of the text of several Greek authors, which he printed at Zurich, under the title of "Epistolæ Vimarienses." Another of his publications is that of a translation of part of the Old Testament, by a Jew of the ninth century, which he had found in the library of St. Mark; and of this he gave an edition, with notes, at Strasburgh in 1781. Soon after his return to Paris, and his marriage of an interesting young woman, he formed the purpose of searching for MSS. in the East, and in 1785 he visited Constantinople, and afterwards Smyrna, and several islands in the Archipelago, and Greece; and the result of his researches and observations was read before the Academy of Belles Lettres, on his return to Paris in 1787. At the commencement of the Revolution he retired to Orleans, for the pursuance of his literary plans; and the fruits of his consultations of ancient and modern authors were 15 large volumes in 4to. He also contemplated a larger work, which was a new edition of father Montfaucon's "Palæographia Græca." When the revolutionary tempest subsided, he returned to Paris, with literary treasure, in amassing which he had expended three-fourths of his moderate fortune; and he was therefore under a necessity of commencing a course of lectures in the Greek language, which proved unsuccessful. He therefore gladly accepted the professorship of modern Greek, which the government established, and discharged its duties till it was suppressed by Napoleon. From respect to his merit, a professorship of ancient and modern Greek was created for him alone in the college of France; but he was carried off by a lingering malady in April 1805, at the age of 55 years. In verbal knowledge Vilvoison was deemed a profound scholar; but to the higher qualities of intellect he is said to have had no just pretensions. Gen. Biog.

VILLOUS, adj. Shaggy; rough; furry.—The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Arbutnot.

VILM, a small island in the Baltic, near the island of Rugen, belonging to Prussia.

VILQUES, the name of three inconsiderable settlements in Peru.

VILS, a river of Bavaria, which rises to the east of Erding, and falls into the Danube, on the south side, near Vilshofen. Another Vils, also in Bavaria, flows through Amberg; and joins the Nab, at Calmunz.

VILSBIBURG, a small town of Germany, in Bavaria, on the Vils, with 1100 inhabitants; 9 miles east-south-east of Landshut.

VILSECK, a town of Bavaria, at the source of the Vils; 10 miles north-by-west of Amberg.

VILSHOFEN, a town of Bavaria, on the Danube; 11 miles west-north-west of Passau. Population 1600.

VILVORDEN, or VILLEFORTE, an inland town of South Brabant, on the canal of Brussels, at the confluence of the small rivers Senne and Woluwe; 6 miles north of Brussels.

VIMEIRA, or VIMIERO, a village of Portuguese Estremadura. This place is remarkable for the battle between the British and the French, on 21st August 1808; 3 miles north-west of Torres Vedras, and 28 north-north-west of Lisbon.

VIMERCATO, a small town of Italy, on the river Morgara; 13 miles north-east of Milan.

VIMIEIRO, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo; 15 miles west-south-west of Estremos. Population 1800.

VIMINAL, adj. [viminalis, Lat.] Applied to trees producing twigs fit to bind with. Cockeran.

VIMINEOUS, adj. [vimineus, Lat.] Made of twigs.

As in the hive's vimineous dome,
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry.

Prior.

VIMIOSO, a strong town of Portugal, in the province of Traz os Montes, near the Spanish frontier; 19 miles west of Miranda de Duero. Population 1300.

VIMOUTIERS, an ill built town of France, department of the Orne, on the Vire; 17 miles north-east of Argentan. Population 3100.

VINA, a settlement of Peru, in the province of Huamanga; 23 leagues distant from Guancavelica.

VINACEOUS, adj. [vinaceus, Lat.] Of or belonging to wine and grapes.—The general colour of the bird is brown, changing to vinaceous red on the breast. White.

VINADIO, a town of Piedmont, on the Stura; 24 miles west-south-west of Coni. Population 2600.

VINALHAVEN, a township of the United States, in Hancock county, Maine; 210 miles north-east of Boston. Population 1052.

VINARA, a settlement of South America, in the province of Tucuman; 56 miles north-north-west of St. Jago del Estero.

VINAY, a town of France, department of the Isere, on the Trery; 17 miles west of Grenoble. Population 2400.

VINAY, a small islet on the south-west coast of the island of Skye.

VINCA, a town of France, department of the Eastern Pyrenees; 4 miles east-north-east of Prades. Population 1400.

VINCA [from vinco or vincio; because it subdues other plants by its creeping, or binds them by its runners], in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order monogynia, natural order of contortæ, apocineæ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth five-parted, erect, acute, permanent. Corolla one-petalled, salver-shaped; tube longer than the calyx, cylindrical below, wider above, marked with five lines, the mouth a pentagon; border horizontal, five-parted; segments fastened to the apex of the tube, wider outwards and obliquely truncate. Stamina: filaments five, very short, inflexed and retroflexed; anthers membranaceous, obtuse, erect, curved in, fariniferous on both sides at the edge. Pistil: germs two, roundish, with two roundish, little bodies lying by their sides. Style: one common to both, cylindrical, length of the stamens. Stigma capitate, concave, placed on a flat ring. Pericarp: follicles two, round, long, acuminate, erect, one-valved, opening longitudinally. Seeds numerous, oblong, cylindrical, grooved, naked.—Essential Character. Contorted. Follicles two, erect. Seeds naked.

1. Vinca minor, or small periwinkle.—Stems procumbent; leaves elliptic lanceolate, smooth at the edge; flowers peduncled; calyx-teeth lanceolate. Root perennial, creeping, with branched fibres. The whole plant smooth and shining.—Native of Germany, Switzerland, France, Italy, Britain, &c.

2. Vinca major, or great periwinkle.—Stems nearly erect; leaves ovate, ciliate; flowers peduncled; calyx-teeth bristle-shaped, elongated. This is larger in all its parts than the preceding.—Native of France, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, England, and Algiers.

3. Vinca lutea, or yellow periwinkle.—Stem twining; leaves oblong. This has the appearance of an echites.—Native of Carolina.

4. Vinca rosea, or Madagascar periwinkle.—Stem suffrutescent, erect; flowers in pairs, sessile; leaves ovate-oblong; petioles two-toothed at the base.—It has been found in Java, China, Cochinchina, and Japan.

5. Vinca parviflora, or small-flowered periwinkle.—Stem herbaceous, erect; leaves lanceolate, acute.—Native of the East Indies.

Propagation and Culture.—The 1st and 2d are easily propagated by their trailing stalks, which put out roots very freely: and if the stalks of the large sort are laid in the ground, they will root very soon, and may be cut off and transplanted transplanted where they are to remain, and when they are once rooted, they will spread and multiply very fast without farther care.

Sow the seeds of the 4th species upon a moderate hot-bed in the spring, and when the plants are fit to remove, transplant them on to a fresh hot-bed, at about four inches distance, shading them till they have taken new root: then treat them in the same way as other natives of warm countries; taking great care to prevent their drawing up weak, and not giving them too much water.

VINCENNES, a small town of France, situated near the confluence of the Seine and Marne; about 3 miles east of Paris. It is remarkable for its castle, built in a remote age, as a country residence of the royal family, and after successive enlargements, finished in the 14th century. It continued a palace during three centuries; but since Louis XIV. removed the court to Versailles, it has been used as a state prison. It was here that the unfortunate duke d'Enghien was shot on 21st March, 1804.

VINCENNES, a post town of the United States, and capital of Knox county, Indiana, on the east bank of the Wabash; 100 miles from its junction with the Ohio, in a direct line, and nearly 200 miles by the course of the river. Lat. 40. 39. N. long. 88. 23. W.

VINCENT, a township of the United States, in Chester county, Pennsylvania, on the south-west side of the Schuylkill. Population 1630.

VINCENT, ST., an island in the West Indies, about 40 miles in length, and 10 in breadth. This island was only inhabited by native Caribbs, till, in the latter part of the 17th century, a ship from Guinea, with a cargo of slaves, was either wrecked or run ashore upon the island of St. Vincent, into the woods and mountains of which great numbers of the negroes escaped, whom the Indians suffered to remain. Partly by the accession of runaway slaves from Barbadoes, and partly by the children they had by the Indian women, these Africans became very numerous; so that about the beginning of the 18th century, they constrained the Indians to retire into the north-west part of the island. These people, as may be reasonably supposed, were much dissatisfied with this treatment; and complained of it occasionally, both to the English and to the French that came to wood and water amongst them. The latter at length suffered themselves to be prevailed upon to attack these invaders. After much deliberation, in the year 1719, they came with considerable force from Martinico, and landing without much opposition, began to burn the negro huts, and destroy their plantations, supposing that the Indians would have attacked them in the mountains, which, if they had done, the blacks had probably been extirpated, or forced to submit, and become slaves. But either from fear or policy, the Indians did nothing, and the negroes sallying in the night, and retreating to inaccessible places by day, destroyed so many of the French (amongst whom was Mr. Paulian, mayor of Martinique, who commanded them) that they were forced to retire. St. Vincent being ceded to the English by the peace of Paris in the year 1763, the first measure of the English government was to dispose of the lands, without any regard to the claims of the Charaibes of either race; which, in truth, were considered as of no consequence or validity. This gave rise to a war with the Charaibes, in the course of which it became the avowed intention of government to exterminate those miserable people altogether; or by conveying them to a barren island on the coast of Africa, consign them over to a lingering destruction. By repeated protests and representations from the military officers employed in this disgraceful business, and the dread of parliamentary inquiry, administration at length thought proper to desist, and the Charaibes, after surrendering part of their lands, were permitted to enjoy the remainder unmolested. On the 19th June 1779, St. Vincent was captured by a small body of French troops from Martinico, consisting only of 450 men. It was restored to Britain at the peace of 1783, at which period it contained 61 sugar estates, 500 acres in coffee, 200 acres in cacao, 400 in cotton, 50 indigo, and 500 in tobacco, besides land appropriated to the raising of provisions, such as plantains, yams, maize, &c. The progress of its cultivation will appear, from a return to the House of Commons in 1806, shewing the number of hogsheads of sugar of 13 cwt. exported in the following years: In 1789, 6,400—1799, 12,120—1805, 17,200. In 1810 above 18,000 hogsheads of sugar were produced. St. Vincent contains about 84,000 acres, which are everywhere well watered; but the country is very generally mountainous and rugged. The intermediate valleys, however, are fertile in a high degree, the soil consisting chiefly of a fine mould, composed of sand and clay, well adapted for sugar. The extent of country at present possessed by the British subjects is 23,605 acres; and about as much more is supposed to be held by the Charaibes. All the remainder is thought incapable of cultivation or improvement. St. Vincent, in 1800, was divided into four parishes, St. David, St. Patrick, St. Andrew, and St. George. Its towns are Kingston, the capital, and Richmond; the others are villages or hamlets, at the several bays and landing-places. The islands dependent on the St. Vincent government are Bequia, containing 3700 acres; Union, 2150 acres; Canouane, 1777 acres; and Mustique, about 1200 acres. In 1812 St. Vincent was almost desolated by a most dreadful eruption of the Souffrier mountain, which had continued quiet for nearly a century before; but from which there now issued such a dreadful torrent of lava, and such clouds of ashes, as nearly covered the island, and has injured the soil of the island in such a manner that it has never recovered it; 78 miles west of Barbadoes, its middle being in lat. 13. 17. N. long. 61. 15. W.

VINCENT, CAPE ST., the south-west point of Portugal, noted for the naval victory gained off it on 14th February 1797, by Sir John Jervis. Lat. 37. 2. 54. N. long. 8. 58. 39. W.

VINCENT ISLAND, a small island in the North Pacific ocean, at the entrance into Portlock's harbour. Lat. 57. 48. N. long. 136. 30. W.

VINCENT, POINT ST., a point of land on the west coast of Van Diemen's Land, so called by Captain Flinders, in honour of Earl St. Vincent. Lat. 43. 25. S.

VINCENT, ST., a town of the United States, in the western territory of the Wabash. Lat. 38. 44. N. long. 88. 6. W.

VINCENT, ST., a river of Madagascar, which runs into the Eastern seas, on the east coast. Lat. 21. 48. S. long. 44. E.

VINCENT, ST., a town of Peru, in the diocese of La Plata; 40 miles north-east of Lipes.

VINCENT, ST., BAY, a bay on the north-coast of Terra del Fuego, a little to the east of Cape St. Vincent. Before the anchorage ground, says Captain Cook, lie several rocky ledges, that are covered with sea-weed; but not less than eight and nine fathom over all of them. It appears strange, that where weeds, which grow at the bottom, appear above the surface, there should be this depth of water; but the weeds which grow upon rocky ground in these countries, and which always distinguish it from sand and ooze, are of an enormous size. The leaves are four feet long, and some of the stalks, though not thicker than a man's thumb, above 120. Mr. Banks and Dr. Solander examined some of them, over which they sounded, and had 14 fathom, which is 84 feet; and as they made a very acute angle with the bottom, they were thought to be at least one half longer.

VINCENT, ST., a sea-port town of Brazil, in the government of St. Paul, situated on the sea coast; 150 miles west of Rio Janeiro, and 70 east of St. Paul.

VINCENT, ST., a town of South America, in Popayan, with a port, where canoes from Carthagena and St. Marthia unload their merchandise; 25 miles east of San Sebastian.

VINCENT, GULF OF ST., a large inlet on the south coast of New Holland, extending eastward about 45 miles, and from thence in a northern direction about 60 miles farther.

VINCENT

VINCENT, POINT, a cape on the coast of New Albion, in the North Pacific ocean. Lat. 33. 44. N. long. 241. 53. E.

VINCENT D'ARDENTES, a town of France, department of the Indre; 7 miles east of Chateauroux. Population 1100.

VINCENTE, POINTE, a conspicuous promontory on the coast of New California or New Albion, composed of steep barren rocks. It is the southern point of the bay of St. Pedro. Lat. 33. 38. N. long. 241. 6. E.

VINCENTE DE LA BARQUERA, ST., a sea-port of Spain, in the province of Burgos, district La Montana; 9 miles west-south-west of Santillana.

VINCHIATURA, an inland town in Naples, province of Molise, with 3400 inhabitants.

VINCI (Lionardo da), the illegitimate son of Piero da Vinci, a notary of the signoria of Florence, distinguished himself during his life as a man of science and of literature, a philosopher, poet, painter, and musician of the most profound study, and the most exalted taste. He was born at the castle of Vinci, in the lower vale of the Arno, in 1452. From his earliest years he testified a more than ordinary share of ingenuity, and particularly exhibited an ardent desire for drawing. This at length became so decided a preference above all other pursuits, that it determined his father to indulge and cultivate it; and for this purpose he placed him under the tuition of Andrea Verocchio, a skilful designer.

Nature had endowed Leonardo with the beauties of body and of mind, which he cultivated by useful exercise. His person was finely proportioned, and his features beautiful and expressive; he was dexterous in feats of arms, the management of the horse, and all the favourite amusements of the time. He was admirably skilled in mechanics, was an able anatomist, and an architect; was learned in natural philosophy, optics, and geometry: in short, he had steadily applied himself to acquire a thorough knowledge of the operations of nature; and was besides an excellent poet and musician.

Thus endowed, and constituted to apply these endowments with energy to every useful and ornamental purpose, fame crowned his portion of human felicity by spreading the renown of his uncommon talents throughout Italy. His various application of them had, however, one evil attending it,—a certain portion of instability: the impetuosity of his nature, leading him too rapidly to new projects, often prevented the completion of those already commenced. In his youth, Vasari says, he invented mills and engines to go by water for various purposes, and contemplated schemes for making the Arno navigable from Pisa to Florence; he made plans for roads, for raising water, &c.: yet amidst these occupations he cultivated drawing most assiduously from all kinds of objects of animated nature, in a style of the most laboured and exquisite finishing, as if he never could attain too close an imitation of the object he had selected. He always strove to make them appear as strongly relieved as possible; their defect is, that not having hit upon the true nature of relieving objects, such as has been exemplified in the Dutch school since his time, he laboured his works to blackness; and whilst his principal objects appeared illuminated by the light of the day, his shadows partook of the blackness of night.

He delighted in observing those whose character was strongly marked, who had any thing extravagant in the style of their beards, their hair, or dress, and would follow them till he had fixed their form fully in his mind, and then go home and draw them. By studies of this nature he became possessed of strong ideas of expression and of character, and employed himself actively in the use of them in designs; though the finished works of his hand, which conjecture places at this period of his life, are not of a kind to exhibit much of their application.

His life, Lanzi observes, “may be divided into four periods, the first of which was, as we have seen, spent in prosecuting his studies in art, and occasionally applying them to practice in Florence: to this belong not only the head of Medusa, and the few works mentioned by Vasari, but probably all those paintings of his which have less energy of shade, less complicated drapery, and heads of forms rather delicate than exquisite, seemingly derived from the school of Verocchio. Such are the Maddalenas of the Pitti palace at Florence, and the Aldobrandini at Rome; some Madonnas or holy families in various galleries, as the Justiniani and Borghese; some heads of the Saviour and of the Baptist; though the multitude of his imitators must render all decision on their originality ambiguous. Of a different class, however, and without a doubt of his hand, is the Bambino, who lies in a little ornamented bed, richly dressed and adorned with necklaces, which is in the apartment of the Gonfalonière at Bologna.”

After this first period of his life, when he was forty-two, viz. in 1494, he was invited to Milan by the duke Ludovico Sforza, to whom Lionardo rendered himself more particularly acceptable by playing upon the lyre, and upon one of a peculiar form, which he himself had made. To this instrument he sung also admirably, and recited verses extemporaneously, surpassing all who attempted that species of amusement. But the more effective cause assigned for his going to the duke, was a design entertained by that prince of erecting a monument of bronze to the memory of his father. Among the manuscripts still existing of Lionardo, is a memorial presented by him to the duke about 1490. In it he offers his services in various military mechanical contrivances, for the purpose of aiding in sieges, passing rivers, &c., and also for the conducting water-courses, sculpture in bronze or marble, and painting; and in conclusion remarks, “that at the same time that these things are going on, the equestrian statue to the memory of the duke's father, need not be neglected.” So that it appears by this, that the modelling and erection of this statue were the primary objects for which he was carried to Milan; and it was executed by him in bronze, and erected in the city, where it remained till it was demolished on the incursion of the French, after the defeat of Ludovico. The duke appointed him director of the academy of painting and sculpture, which he had recently revived with additional splendour; and under his instructions many pupils arose, who increased the love and renown of the arts, as he in great measure banished the remains of the Gothic style, and introduced his own new and more elevated one in its stead.

Here, by desire of the duke, he painted a Nativity, which was sent by him as a present to the emperor of Germany; but if we except this, the portraits of the duke and duchess, and his grandest work in the art, the Last Supper, painted on the walls of the refectory of the Dominican convent of the Madonna delle Grazie, he does not appear to have occupied much of the time he spent at Milan (which was about five years) in painting. Indeed he scarcely could devote more time to it, as the duke engaged him as an engineer to conduct the waters of the Adda to the walls of Milan: an immense operation, in which, after much study and labour, he had nearly succeeded, when it was interrupted by the French.

Whilst these various inventions shewed the versatility of his powers, the picture above alluded to, the Last Supper, gave immortality to the fame of the moment. Of this picture, one only character is given by all who have written or spoken of it,—that of superior excellence in all the most admirable and exalted qualities of the art. Unfortunately, his knowledge in chemistry was not equal to his love of novelty, or he would not have painted it with a vehicle and a ground totally discordant, which necessarily led to a speedy destruction of the surface.

There was introduced into England, and exhibited in 1817, a copy as large in length as the original, said to be the one painted by M. Uggione, a pupil of Da Vinci, for the convent of the Carthusians at Pavia: which, in 1793, upon the breaking up of that order, was sold with the other effects of the convent. In it there remains sufficient of the grandeur of style adopted by its great author to satisfy every beholder of the justice fame has done to his talents. The selection of matter, the general treatment of the subject, the unequalled truth and variety of expression, the close attention paid to character and to nature, the depth, richness and brilliancy of its colour, with the high degree of finish to which it was carried,—all are manifested in this copy, though in some parts imperfectly. In it also are seen the want of many points in chiaro-scuro and in colour, which, if they could have been combined with the matter it contains (and they have since then been combined by Titian and others), would place the original of this picture in every respect at the head of all the pictures which ever were painted.

During his residence at Milan, Du Fresne says he composed his very useful work "Il Trattato della Pittura," for the use of the pupils in the academy under his care; and his activity and exertions, supported by such uncommon talents, had already formed many skilful artists, who afterwards became renowned, and who would probably have rendered Milan the rival of Florence as a school of art, but for the disastrous issue of a contest between the duke and the king of France, in which, in 1500, the former was defeated, captured, and carried into the country of his enemy, where about ten years afterwards he died.

By this event, the progress of the arts at Milan was broken up, with its academy for a time, and its illustrious president returned to Florence, where the arts were encouraged by the house of Medici.

In 1503, the council of Florence having determined to decorate their chamber with works of art, Lionardo was appointed to execute one side of it; and M. Angelo, then only twenty-nine years of age, but whose gigantic powers were already matured, was selected, as his competitor, to undertake the other. A most unfortunate coalition, as the emulation it excited, aided and strengthened to bitterness by the mistaken affection of admiring partisans of either master, produced in the end the most confirmed jealousy, and even hatred, between these two great men, and divided Florence into parties, who embittered their disputes, without being able to reconcile their differences. Lionardo chose for his subject the battle of Nicolo Piccinino against Attila. He had prepared his cartoon, and proceeded in a certain degree with his picture in oil colours, when to his great mortification he found, that owing to some imperfection in the preparation of the ground, his colours began to peel from the wall, and he abandoned his work.

Lionardo appears to have divided his residence at Florence and at Milan till 1513, during which time he probably painted his own portrait, which is in the gallery at Florence, a head whose energy leaves all the rest in the room far behind, and that perhaps which in many cabinets is called the portrait of Raffaele. The half figure also of a young nun in the palace Nicolini; Christ among the doctors, formerly in the Doria palace; the supposed portrait of queen Giovanna, adorned with beautiful architecture; that picture in the Barberini of Vanity and Modesty, the beauty and finish of which no one has ever been able to convey in a copy;—these appear, with many others, to belong to this period, when, free from other serious occupations, he was at liberty to attend to painting with increasing power.

He accepted an invitation from Francis I., king of France, to visit his court; but he was so exhausted by anxiety and sickness on his arrival in France, that he was never more able to use the pencil. He died on the 2d of May, 1519, at a place called Cloux, near Amboise, and in the 67th year of his age.

There are so many imitators of the style of Da Vinci, that it is extremely difficult to know what to regard as his among the numerous minor productions which are presented to us as the product of his easel. Among those imitators, Bernardino Luini holds the first rank, and his pictures are constantly imposed upon us as those of Lionardo. Lorenzo di Credi is another who copied Lionardo with great exactness. Antonio Sogliani also imitated and copied him as well as others; so that no wonder there are so many works brought to sale under the high pretension of his name, by which our connoisseurs are duped, and our picture dealers are enriched.

The real character of Lionardo da Vinci as a painter is of the highest quality, as we have before observed. He is the parent of the chiaro-scuro, upon which the fame of Correggio principally depends; and he first attempted to combine high finish with selection of parts and grandeur of style, particularly aiming to give intelligence to character and expression to features; in fact to pourtray the mind; and in this no one has ever surpassed him, not even Raffaele, who followed in this respect the road opened by da Vinci. What is commonly called the beau-ideal, was not exactly the form he appears to have sought; but he had so much the feeling which generated it, that he always took from his model the essential and characteristic, leaving out the mean and useless. Hence we find in his picture of the Last Supper, so great a variety of character and of expression, which those who have attached themselves to the antique as their guide have never given; the imitation having, as we conceive, always superseded the original spirit of selection which dictated the taste of the ancients.

Two different manners are observable in his painting; one with dark shades, strongly contrasting with the lights, the other more placid, and conducted with more of middle tint. Grace of design, expression of the mind, and subtle management of the pencil, triumph in and adorn each; all is gay in his pictures, but especially the heads of his women and children. In these he constantly repeated one idea, giving a smile to them which it is impossible to behold without experiencing a sympathetic impulse. Yet, if one may judge from the labour of his pictures, he rarely reached the point at which he aimed, having an impression in his own mind more full and complete than he could render by his pencil; and like Protogenes of old with his Jalysus, knew not, as Apelles said of him, when to leave off, nor could be contented with good, when he aspired after the best.

As an author, Lionardo da Vinci has rendered essential service to art, particularly in his Treatise on Painting, which is the only one of his numerous compilations that has been given to the public, and which, in 1802, was translated into English by J. F. Rigaud. Venturi speaks of this work as having been compiled from various of his manuscripts, which were doubtless the product of his every-day reflections, set down as they occurred, and without attention to order or arrangement. It treats of proportion, anatomy, motion and equipoise of figures, perspective, composition, expression, light and shade, colouring, &c., in 365 precepts, some of which are confused and not easily to be unravelled, others are common-place, but most are learned, ingenious, and useful. The rest of his miscellaneous works, treating of the anatomy of the horse and of the human subject, of perspective, optics, hydraulics, botany, &c., were left by him in his will to his friend and pupil Francisco Melzi, and consisted of fourteen volumes, large and small, which by various means found their way into the national library at Paris, and one is in the British Museum.

VINCI, a town of Italy, in Tuscany; 12 miles west of Florence.

VINCIBLE, adj. [vinco, Lat.] Conquerable; superable.—He, not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the seditious to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.

VINCIBLENESS, s. Liableness to be overcome. Johnson.

VINCTURE, s. [vincitura, Lat.] A binding. Bailey.

VINDE'MIAL, adj. [vindemia, Lat.] Belonging to a vintage.

To VINDE'MIATE, v. n. [vindemia, Lat.] To gather the vintage.—Now vindemiate, and take your bees towards the expiration of this month. Evelyn.

VINDEMIATION, s. [vindemia, Lat.] Grape-gathering. Bailey.

To VINDICATE, v. a. [vindico, Lat.] To justify; to support; to maintain.—Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syllogism. Watts.—To revenge; to avenge.—We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued: whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity? Bacon.—To assert; to claim with efficacy.—Never any touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has vindicated to himself. Dryden.—To clear; to protect from censure.

J. Pass sc.

VINCI.

Engraved for the Encyclopædia Londinensis. 1828.

I may assert eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.

VINDICATION, s. Defence; assertion; justification.—There is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice, in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Broome.

VINDICATIVE, adj. [The word should be accented on the first syllable, though Shakspeare places it on the second.] Revengeful; given to revenge.

He, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakspeare.

VINDICATOR, s. One who vindicates; an assessor.—He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleased with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temporizing poet. Dryden.

VINDICATORY, adj. Punitive; performing the office of vengeance.—The afflictions of Job were no vindictory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.—Defensory; justificatory.

VINDICTIVE, adj. [from vindicta, Lat.] Given to revenge; revengeful.—I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.—Augustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himself with so small a revenge. Dryden.

VINDICTIVELY, adv. Revengefully. Bailey.—Revengingly [is] with vengeance, vindictively. Jouson.

VINDICTIVENESS, s. A revengeful temper. Bailey, and Scott.

VINE, s. [vinca, Lat.] The plant that bears the grape.—See VITIS.

In her days every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants. Shakspeare.

VINED, adj. Having leaves like those of the vine.—Other licentious inventions of wreathed, and vined, and figured columns, our author himself condemneth. Wotton.

VINEFRETTER, s. A worm that eats vine leaves.

VINEGAR, s. [vinagre, Fr.] Wine grown sour; eager wine.—Heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour. Pope.—Any thing really or metaphorically sour.

Some laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile. Shakspeare.

VINER, s. An orderer or trimmer of vines. Obsolete. Huloet.

VINEYARD, s. [p̄n̄geap̄ð, Sax.] A ground planted with vines.

Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barbarous people. Shakspeare.

VINEYARD, a township of the United States, in Grand Isle county, Vermont; 34 miles north of Burlington.

VINEYARD, NEW, a township of the United States, in Somerset county, Maine; 15 miles west-north-west of Norridgewock.

VINEYARD, a post village of the United States, in Mecklenburgh county, Virginia.

VINKOFZE, a town of the Austrian states, in Sclavonia, on the river Boszut, about 20 miles south-south-east of Essek.

VINNA, or WINNA, a small town of Hungary; 2 miles north-west of Unghoar.

VINNEMER, a village of France, department of the Yonne; 6 miles south-east of Tonnerre.

VINNEWED, adj. [from p̄yn̄izean, Sax., to decay. See FENOWED.] Mouldy; musty. It is in our old lexicography written vinewed and vinowed. Huloet, Barret, and Sherwood.—Being long kept, they grow hore and vinewed. Newton.

VINNEWEDNESS, s. State of being vinnewed.—Hoariness or vinnewedness, such as is on bread or meat long kept. Barret.

VINNICZA, or VINIKA, a town of Poland, in the government of Podolia; 38 miles north-north-west of Braclav.

VINNIUS (Vinnen Arnold), an eminent jurist, was born in Holland, in 1588, studied at Leyden, and taught the classics at the Hague till the year 1633, when he became law-professor in the university of Leyden. Whilst he occupied this office, he acquired distinction by various works of jurisprudence, in an elegant and ornamented style. The principal of his publications are, "Commentarius Academicus et Forensis in quatuor Libros Institutionem Imperialium," Amst. 1642, often reprinted, and particularly by Heineccius, with a preface and notes, Lugd. Bat. 1726, 4to; "Notæ Institutiones," accompanying the preceding; "Introductio ad Praxin Batavam," &c. &c. He died at Leyden, in 1657, or, as some say, in 1668. Moreri.

VINNOQUE, a river of Peru, in the province of Castro Virreyña, which enters the river Pangora.

VINNY, adj. [p̄inie, Sax. Serenius. From p̄yn̄izean. See VINNEWED.] Mouldy. Ainsworth.—Mr. Malone has observed, that, in Dorsetshire, they call cheese, that is become mouldy, vinny cheese. The expression is common in several counties.

VINOLENCY, s. [vinolentia, Latin.] Drunkenness. Cockeram.

VINOLENT, adj. [vinolentus, Lat.] Given to wine.—In woman vinolent is no defence. Chaucer.

VINON, a small town of France, department of the Lower Alps.

VINOSITY, s. [vinosus, Lat.] State or quality of being vinous. Scott.

VINOUS, adj. [vinosus, Lat.] Having the qualities of wine; consisting of wine.

Water will imbibe
The small remains of spirit, and acquire
A vinous flavour. Phillips.

VINTAGE, s. [vindemia, Latin, from the Gr. οἶνος, and τεμνω.] The produce of the vine for the year; the time in which grapes are gathered.—The best wines are in the driest vintages. Bacon.

VINTAGER, s. One who gathers the vintage. Ainsworth.

VINTAIN, or BINTAIN, a town of Western Africa, in the kingdom of Fonia, situated on a small river which runs into the Gambia.

VINTIMIGLIA, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Genoa, situated at the place where the river Rotta falls into the sea. Population 5000; 80 miles south-west of Genoa.

VINTNER, s. [from vinum, Lat.] One who sells wine.—The vintner, by mixing poison with his wines, destroys more lives than any malignant disease. Swift.

VINTRY, s. The place where wine is sold. Ainsworth.

VINY, adj. Belonging to vines; producing grapes. Prompt.—Abounding in vines.—One Baizæ's vinny coast. Thomson.

VIOL, s. [viola, Ital.] A stringed instrument of music. My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed viol, or a harp. Shakspeare.

VIOLA [said to be from the Greek Ιω], in Botany, a genus of the class syngenesia, order monogamia, natural order of campanaceæ, cisti (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth five-leaved, short, permanent; leaflets ovate-oblong, erect, more acute at the tip, obtuse at the base, fastened above the base, equal, but variously disposed, of which two support the uppermost petal, two others each a second and third lateral petals, and the remaining one, the two lowest petals together. Corolla five-petalled, irregular. Petals unequal; the uppermost petal petal straight, turned downwards, wider, blunter, emarginate, finishing at the base in a blunt horned nectary, prominent between the leaflets of the calyx; the two lateral ones paired, opposite, obtuse, straight; the two lowest paired bigger, reflexed upwards. Stamina: filaments five, very small, two of them, which are nearest to the uppermost petal, enter the nectary by annexed appendages. Anthers commonly connected, obtuse, increased by membranes at the tip. Pistil: germen superior, roundish. Style filiform, prominent beyond the anthers. Stigma oblique. Pericarp: capsule ovate, three-cornered, obtuse, one-celled, three-valved. Seeds many, ovate, appendicled, fastened to the valves. Receptacle linear, running like a line along each valve.—Essential Character. Calyx five-leaved. Corolla five-petalled, irregular, horned at the back. Anthers cohering. Capsule superior, one-celled, three-valved.

I.—Stemless.

1. Viola palmata, or palmated violet.—Leaves palmate, five-lobed, toothed and undivided. Root perennial.—Native of Virginia. It is a singular species, and rare in this country, having no sweet scent to recommend it.

2. Viola pedata, or multifid-leaved violet.—Leaves pedate, seven-parted.—Native of North America.

3. Viola pinnata, or pinnate-leaved violet.—Leaves pinnatifid.—Native of the mountains of southern Europe and Siberia.

4. Viola sagittata. 5. Viola lanceolata. 6. Viola obliqua. 7. Viola cucullata. 8. Viola primulifolia.

9. Viola hirta, or hairy violet.—Leaves cordate, they and the petioles hairy-hispid; calyxes obtuse; bractes below the middle of the peduncles. Root somewhat woody, fibrous. It is by far less frequent than the sweet violet. Long since observed about Charlton, in Kent.

10. Viola Magellanica, or Magellanic violet.—Leaves kidney-form, repand, villose. This has a large yellow flower, with bay-coloured veins.—Native of Terra del Fuego, in boggy places.

11. Viola odorata, or sweet violet.—Runners creeping; leaves cordate, they and the petioles smoothish; calyxes obtuse; bractes above the middle of the peduncle. Root fibrous, whitish: in old plants the upper part becomes knobby, and appears above ground, the knobs being formed from the base of the petioles which are left yearly; from the bosom of these knobs spring the scions or runners which creep on the ground, and are furnished with leaves and the same kind of stipules which are observable at the bottom of the plant: these runners are very long, and in general do not produce flowers till the second year.—This favourite flower, so highly esteemed for its fragrance, is a native of every part of Europe, in woods, among bushes, in hedges, and on warm banks; flowering in March and April; and ripening its seeds towards the end of summer. Of the common violet there are the following varieties: the single blue, and white, the double blue and white, and the pale purple. These are all commonly preserved in gardens, for the odour of their flowers.

12. Viola palustris, or marsh violet.—Leaves kidney-form, smooth; root creeping, whitish, toothed, somewhat fleshy, with many fibres.—Native of Europe and Japan. With us more frequent in Scotland and the north of England than in the south. There is a variety with red striped flowers, in the Flora Danica.

II.—Caulicent.

13. Viola canina, or dog's violet.—Stem when advanced ascending, channelled; leaves oblong-cordate; calyxes acute. Root somewhat woody. Dog's violet differs from the sweet one in the flowers having no smell, being generally larger, and growing from the stem.—Native of Europe and North America. This species varies in the colour of its flowers, in the size of the whole herb, and in the form of the leaves. Hence the varieties with a white flower, and sometimes only the spur is white, and two or three others.

14. Viola lactea, or cream-coloured violet.—Stem ascending, round; leaves ovate-lanceolate; stipules gash-serrate.—Found on the wolds near Tunbridge wells.

15. Viola montana, or mountain violet.—Stems erect; leaves cordate, oblong.—Cultivated in 1714, in Chelsea garden.

16. Viola concolor. 17. Viola nummularifolia. 18. Viola cenisia. 19. Viola Canadensis. 20. Viola striata. 21. Viola pubescens. 22. Viola mirabilis.

23. Viola biflora, or two-flowered violet.—Stem two-flowered; leaves kidney-form, serrate. This a very tender plant. Stem a hand high, from decumbent erect, smooth, round below but flattened above.—Native of the Alps of Europe.

24. Viola uniflora, or Siberian violet.—Stem one-flowered; leaves cordate, toothed.—Native of Siberia.

25. Viola decumbens, or trailing violet.—Caulicent, procumbent; leaves linear, clustered.—Native of the Cape of Good Hope.

III.—Stipules pinnatifid; Stigmas urceolate.

26. Viola tricolor, pansy violet or heart's-ease.—Stem angular, diffused; leaves oblong, tooth-crenate; stipules lyrate-pinnatifid. Root annual, simple, fibrous. Stems ascending, much branched. It varies with more than two colours, purple, blue, yellow, white, improved and enlarged by garden culture.—Native of Europe, Siberia, and Japan: in corn-fields, gardens, &c.

27. Viola grandiflora, or great-flowered pansy-violet.—Stem three-sided, simple; leaves somewhat oblong; stipules pinnatifid.—Native of Switzerland, Silesia, Dauphiné, and the Pyrenees.

28. Viola lutea, or yellow mountain pansy-violet.—Stem three-sided, simple; leaves ovate-oblong, crenate, ciliate; stipules palmate-gashed.—This species is found only in mountainous pastures. It is plentiful in the north of England, Scotland, and the wildest parts of South Wales, often in a rotten peaty soil.

29. Viola Zoysii.—Stem very short, erect; leaves roundish, crenate; stipules quite entire; peduncles three-sided.—Native of the mountains of Carinthia.

There are the following in this section:—Viola calcarata. Viola cornuta. Viola Capensis. Viola arborescens. Viola stipularis. Viola parviflora. Viola enneasperma. Viola linarifolia. Viola suffruticosa. Viola calceolaria. Viola oppositifolia. Viola hybanthus. Viola ipecacuanha. Viola diandra.

Propagation and Culture.—The North American violets will succeed best by putting them in pots filled with loam and bog earth mixed, and plunged in a north border, where they may be sheltered in winter, or taken up, and kept in a common hot-bed frame.

The common violets are easily propagated by parting their roots; this may be done at two seasons: the best season for removing and parting these roots is at Michaelmas.

Violets may also be propagated by seeds, which should be sown soon after they are ripe, which is about the end of August.

VIOLABLE, adj. [from violabilis, Lat.] Such as may be violated or hurt.

VIOLA'CEOUS, adj. [from viola, Lat.] Resembling violets.

To VIOLATE, v. a. [viola, Lat.] To injure; to hurt.

I question thy bold entrance,

Employ'd to violate the sleep of those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss. Milton.

To infringe; to break any thing venerable.

Some of violated vows

'Twixt the souls of friend and friend.

Shakspeare.

To injure by irreverence.—Forbid to violate the sacred fruit. Milton.—To ravish; to deflower.

The Sabine's violated charms

Obscur'd the glory of his rising arms.

Prior.

VIOLA'TION, s. [violatio, Lat.] Infringement or injury of something sacred or venerable.—Men, who had no other other guide but their reason, considered the violation of an oath to be a great crime. Addison.—Rape; the act of deflowering.

If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation. Shakspeare.

VIOLATOR, s. [violator, Lat.] One who injures or infringes something sacred.—May such places, built for divine worship, derive a blessing upon the head of the builders, as lasting as the curse that never fails to rest upon the sacrilegious violators of them. South.—A ravisher.

Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakspeare.

VIOLENCE, s. [violentia, Latin.] Force; strength applied to any purpose.

To be imprison'd in the viewless wind,
And blown with restless violence about. Shakspeare.

An attack; an assault; a murder.
A noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me:
But, as it seems, did violence on herself. Shakspeare.

Outrage; unjust force.
Griev'd at his heart, when looking down he saw
The whole earth fill'd with violence; and all flesh
Corrupting each their way. Milton.

Eagerness; vehemence.
That seal
You ask for with such violence, the king
With his own hand gave me. Shakspeare.

Injury; infringement.—We cannot, without offering violence to all records, divine and human, deny an universal deluge. Burnet.—Forcible deforation.

To VIOLENCE, v. a. To assault; to injure.
Then surely love hath none, nor beauty any,
Nor nature violenced in both these. B. Jonson.

To bring by violence.—Like our late misnamed high court of justice, to which the loyal and the noble, the honest and the brave, were violenced by ambition and malice. Feltham.

VIOLENT, adj. [violentus, Lat.] Forcible; acting with strength.—A violent cross wind blows. Milton.—Produced or continued by force.—The posture we find them in, according to his doctrine, must be look'd upon as unnatural and violent; and no violent state can be perpetual. Burnet.—Not natural, but brought by force.

Conqueror death discovers them scarce men;
Violent or shameful death their due reward. Milton.

Assailant; acting by force.—Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life. Shakspeare.—Unseasonably vehement.—We might be reckoned fierce and violent, to tear away that, which, if our mouths did condemn, our consciences would storm and repine thereat. Hooker.—Ex-torted; not voluntary.

How soon unsay
Vows made in pain, as violent and void! Milton.

VIOLENT, s. An assailant.—Did the covetous extortioner observe that he is involved in the same sentence, remember that such violents shall not take heaven, but hell, by force. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

To VIOLENT, v. n. To become violent; to act with violence.

Why tell you me of moderation?
The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenteth in a sense as strong
As that which causeth it. Shakspeare.

To VIOLENT, v. a. To urge with violence. Neither this, nor the neuter verb, is now in use.—His former adversaries violented any thing against him. Fuller.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1644.

VIOLENTLY, adv. With force; forcibly; vehemently. Temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakspeare.

VIOLET, s. [viola, Latin.] A flower. The VIOLA ODORATA, which see.
When daisies pied, and violets blue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakspeare.

VIOLIN, s. A fiddle; a stringed instrument of music.
Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins, and lutes. Sandys.

VIOLINIST, s. A player on the violin.—Davys Mell, the famous violinist and clock-maker. Aubrey.

VIOLIST, s. A player on the viol.

VIOLONCE'LLO, s. [Italian.] A kind of bass violin.

VIOLONE, s. [Ital.] A double bass viol.

VIPER, s. [vipera, Lat.] A serpent of that species which brings its young alive, of which many are poisonous.—A viper came out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. Acts.—Any thing mischievous.

Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself? Shakspeare.

VIPER KEY, one of the Tortugas, on the coast of Florida; 5 miles north-eastward of Duck Key, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ east of old Matacombe.

VIPERINE, adj. [viperinus, Lat.] Belonging to a viper.

VIPEROUS, adj. [vipereus Lat.] Having the qualities of a viper.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor. Shakspeare.

VIPER'S BUGLOSS, s. [echium, Lat.] A plant.—Each flower is succeeded by four seeds, which are in form of a viper's head. Miller.

VIPER'S GRASS, s. [scorzonera, Lat.] A plant.—Viper-grass,—medicinal and excellent against the palpitation of the heart; besides a very sweet and pleasant sallet. Evelyn.

VIPPACH, or MARK-VIPPACH, a town of Germany, in Saxe-Weimar; 9 miles north-east of Erfurt.

VIQUE, a considerable town in the north-east of Spain, in Catalonia, on the river Ter. The environs are occasionally excavated for precious stones. Population 8400; 37 miles north-by-east of Barcelona.

VIRACACHA, a settlement of New Granada, in the province of Tunja.

VIRACO, a settlement of Peru, in the province of Arequipa.

VIRAGINIAN, adj. Of or belonging to impudent women.—The remembrance of his old conversation among the viraginian trollops. Milton.

VIRAGO, s. [Latin.] A female warrior; a woman with the qualities of a man.

To arms! to arms! the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies. Pope.

It is commonly used in detestation for an impudent turbulent woman.

VIRE, s. [vire, Fr. "the arrow called a quarrel, used only for the cross-bow." Cotgrave.] An arrow. Obsolete.

As a vire,
Which flieth out of a mighty bowe,
Away he fledde for a throwe. Gower.

VIRE, an inland town of France, situated near the river Vire, department of Calvados, in Lower Normandy. Population 7500; 36 miles south-west of Caen.

VIRECTA, in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order monogynia, natural order of rubiaceæ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth five-leaved, permanent, superior; leaflets subulate-setaceous, equal, erect; teeth between the calyx-leaves very small, glandular, solitary between each pair. Corolla one-petalled, funnel-form; tube three times as long as the calyx, slender, equal, erect; border five-parted, parted, equal, flat; segments ovate, entire. Stamina: filaments five, inserted in the middle of the tube, very short; anthers linear, subulate, converging. Pistil: germ inferior, globular, within the calyx terminated by a raised permanent circle. Style filiform, smooth. Stigma two-parted; segments setaceous. Pericarp: capsule globular, angular, hispid, crowned with the calyx, one-celled. Receptacle fleshy, filling the capsule, covered with one row of seeds. Seeds numerous, small, angular, hollow-dotted.—Essential Character. Calyx five-toothed, with teeth interposed. Corolla funnel-form. Stigma two-parted. Capsule one-celled, many-seeded, inferior.

1. Virecta biflora, or two-flowered virecta.—Leaves ovate; peduncles two-flowered. Root annual; herb tender, like that of mercurialis annua; stem round, a span high or more, simple, sometimes rooting, pubescent.—Native of Surinam, in moist places.

2. Virecta pratensis, or many-flowered virecta.—Leaves lanceolate; peduncles many-flowered. Branches roundish, opposite, with close-pressed hairs scattered over them. Flowers four to six, at the top of the peduncles, scarcely pedicelled.—Native of Guiana.

VIRELAY, s. [virelay, virelai, French.] A sort of little ancient French poem, that consisted only of two rhymes, and short verses, with stops. Dict. L'Acad.

The mournful muse in mirth now list ne mask,
As she was wont in youth and summer days;
But if thou algate lust light virelays,

And looser songs of love to undersong.

Spenser.

VIRENT, adj. [virens, Lat.] Green; not faded.—In these, yet fresh and virent, they carve out the figures of men and women. Brown.

VIRGATE, s. [virgata, low Latin.] A yard-land.—With regard to smaller and detached parcels of land occupied in this parish, I have discovered that lady Elizabeth Montacute, wife of sir William de Montacute, afterwards married to Thomas lord Furnivall, possessed one virgate, about the year 1330. Warton.

VIRGE, s. [from verge, Fr.] A wand.—See VERGE.

He hath his whistle,—

And virge to interpret, tipt with silver.

B. Jonson.

VIRGER. See VERGER.

VIRGIL (Publius Virgilius Maro), a celebrated Roman poet, whose name is familiar to every body, was born in the year B.C. 70, at Andes, a village near Mantua, and liberally educated at Cremona, Milan, and Naples. His teacher in philosophy was named Syro, and the philosophy in which he was instructed was the Epicurean. From his first eclogues, in which he is supposed to have related his own adventure, under the appellation of Tityrus, it appears that he first visited Rome in his 30th year, for the purpose of recovering lands that were in the possession of the military belonging to Octavius and Antony, after the war against the republicans; and having been introduced to Octavius by Pollio, or some other person, and to his subsequent patron Mæcenas, he succeeded in the object of his visit by their influence. His life, however, was endangered by the violence of the veteran who occupied his farm, and who resisted the surrender of it, so that he was obliged to seek redress by another visit to Rome, and to obtain an order for his reinstatement. His eclogues, which were completed in his 33d or 34th year, were very favourably received; and in his 34th year he was induced by Mæcenas to commence his Georgics; and during a period of seven years, which he employed in the prosecution of them, he resided chiefly at Naples. The latter years of his life were devoted to the Æneid. At this time he was ranked among those friends, who were particularly distinguished by the attention and confidence of Augustus. After the death of Marcellus, in the year B. C. 23, he paid that admirable tribute to his memory, which occurs in the sixth book of the Æneid, and concerning which Donatus says, that when it was recited before Augustus, in the presence of Octavia, the mother of the deceased, as soon as the words "Tu Marcellus eris" were pronounced, she fainted away; and afterwards rewarded the poet with ten sesterces (above 80*l.*) for each line of the passage. After the completion of his Æneid, Virgil went to Greece, with the view of further polishing it; and on this occasion Horace is supposed to have addressed him with the third ode of his first book, beginning "Sic, te Diva potens Cypri," in which he expresses the warmest affection for his brother poet. At Athens he met with Augustus, and proposed returning in his company; but at Megara he was seized with a disorder, which detained him, as some say, at Brundisium, or, according to others, at Tarentum, and which soon terminated his life in the year B.C. 19, in the 52d year of his age. His remains were conveyed, in pursuance of his request, to Naples, and interred on the Puteolan way. On his death, he is said to have expressed a wish that his Æneid, which he regarded as an imperfect work, might be committed to the flames; but it was saved either by the interposition of his friends Tucca and Varus, who prevailed upon him to bequeath it to them, on the condition that they should make no alteration in it, or by the injunctions of Augustus to his executors. His modesty, indicated by this wish, was combined with other similar qualities. "He was mild and gentle in his manners, unassuming in conversation, sincere and faithful in friendship, so that he was singularly beloved by Augustus, Mæcenas, and all the most distinguished persons of that period." His poetical talents, as well as general character, were highly appreciated by his contemporaries, insomuch that whensoever his verses were recited in the theatre whilst he was present, the audience rose up and paid him the respect which was usually manifested to the emperor. His eminent merit has been also acknowledged by ancient and modern critics, and though they have differed in opinion as to his peculiar and distinguishing excellencies, they have generally agreed, as one of his most judicious biographers has said, "in placing him upon one of the highest seats in Parnassus." Of the faculty of invention he seems to have possessed a very moderate share, insomuch that his Bucolics, Georgics, and Æneid, abound with traces of imitation, and even of translation; but it is "in the diction and phraseology of poetry, in all that constitutes the artist, that his chief excellence consists; and his admirers will not allow that the Virgilian splendour and majesty of style have ever been equalled."—"In two species of composition Virgil has afforded models to almost all succeeding poets, the didactic and the epic." His fame has been testified by the numerous editions of his works, as well as the commentaries and translations which they have produced. The learned professor Heyne has given an account of the various MSS. and editions of Virgil in his edition of Leipsic, 1788, which has been considered by competent judges as the most complete and valuable. For a description and character of the Æneid, see POETRY. Vita Virgilii Ruæi et Heynii. Gen. Biog.

VIRGIL, a post township of the United States, in Courtland county, New York; 155 miles west of Albany.

VIRGIN, s. [virge, Fr.; virgo, Lat.] A maid; a woman unacquainted with men.

This aspect of mine hath fear'd the valiant;

The best regarded virgins of our clime

Have lov'd it too.

Shakspeare.

A woman not a mother. Unusual.

Likest to Ceres in her prime,

Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove.

Milton.

Any thing untouched or unmingled; any thing pure: as, virgin-honey.—Tapers of white wax, commonly called virgin-wax, burn with less smoke than common yellow wax. Boyle.—The sign of the zodiac in which the sun is in August.—Thence down amain by Leo and the Virgin. Milton.

VIRGIN, adj. Befitting a virgin; suitable to a virgin; maidenly.—What says the silver with her virgin hue? Shakspeare.

To VIRGIN, v. n. To keep as a virgin in fact.

A kiss

Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
I carried from thee, my dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since.

Shakspeare.

VIRGIN, CAPE, a steep white cliff on the east coast of South America, not unlike the North Foreland. It was so called by Magellan, because he discovered it on the feast of St. Ursula. Lat. 52. 24. S. long. 63. 22. W.

VIRGIN GORDA, or SPANISH TOWN, one of the Virgin islands, in the West Indies, which belongs to the English. It is of a very irregular figure, and its greatest length from north-east to south-west, is 8 miles. Lat. 18. 20. N. long. 63. 48. W.

VIRGIN ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the West Indies, situated to the east of Porto Rico.

VIRGIN ROCKS, rocks in the Atlantic; 60 miles south-east of Cape Race, on the coast of Newfoundland. Lat. 46. 20. N. long. 50. W.

VIRGINAL, adj. Maiden; maidenly; pertaining to a virgin.

Tears virginal

Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.

Shakspeare.

VIRGINAL, s. [more usually virginals.] A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.—The musician hath produced two means of straining strings. The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the string, as in harps and virginals. Bacon.

To VIRGINAL, v. a. To pat; to strike as on the virginal. A cant word.—Still virginalling upon thy palm. Shakspeare.

VIRGINES, LAS, BAY OF, a bay on the coast of New Albion, between Cape Colnet and Point Zuniga.

VIRGINIA, one of the United States, situated between 36° 30' and 40° 40' E. and 6° 20' N. latitude, and between 1° 20' W. longitude. It is bounded on the north by Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Ohio; south by North Carolina and Tennessee; east by Maryland and the Atlantic ocean; west by Kentucky and Ohio. Its length, from the Atlantic on the east to the Cumberland mountains on the west, is 440 miles. Its greatest breadth, from north to south, is 290 miles; area, 70,000 square miles. It contains the following counties:—Accomack, Albemarle, Amelia, Amherst, Augusta, Bath, Bedford, Berkeley, Botetourt, Brooke, Brunswick, Buckingham, Campbell, Caroline, Charles City, Charlotte, Chesterfield, Cumberland, Culpeper, Cabell, Dinwiddie, Elizabeth City, Essex, Fauquier, Fairfax, Fluvanna, Frederick, Franklin, Gloucester, Goochland, Grayson, Greenbrier, Greensville, Giles, Halifax, Hampshire, Hanover, Hardy, Harrison, Henrico, Henry, Isle of Wight, James City, Jefferson, Kenhawa, King and Queen, King George, King William, Lancaster, Lee, Loudoun, Louisa, Lunenburg, Madison, Matthews, Mecklinburg, Middlesex, Monongalia, Monroe, Montgomery, Mason, Nansemond, Nelson, New Kent, Nicholas, Norfolk county, Northampton, Northumberland, Nottaway, Ohio, Orange, Patrick, Pendleton, Pittsylvania, Powhatan, Preston, Prince Edward, Princess Anne, Prince William, Prince George, Randolph, Richmond, Rockbridge, Rockingham, Russel, Scott, Shenandoah, Southampton, Spotsylvania, Stafford, Surry, Sussex, Tazewell, Tyler, Warwick, Washington, Westmoreland, Wood, Wythe, York, Richmond City, Norfolk Borough, and Petersburg.

The state of Virginia may be classed under four separate divisions, essentially differing from one another. The first, extending 100 miles inland, from the sea-coast to the termination of tide at Fredericksburg, Richmond, &c., is low and flat, sometimes fenny, sometimes sandy, and on the margin of rivers composed of a rich loam, covered with a luxuriant and even rank vegetation. This part is unhealthy in the months of August, September, and October,

The next division extends from the head of tide water to the Blue Ridge, 150 miles. The surface near the tide water is level; higher up the rivers it becomes swelling; and near the mountains it is often abrupt and broken. The soil is divided into sections of very unequal quality, parallel to each other, and extending throughout the state. The parallel of the counties of Chesterfield, Henrico, Hanover, &c., is a thin, sandy, and, except on the rivers, an unproductive soil. That of Goochland, Cumberland, Prince Edward, Halifax, &c., is generally fertile. Fluvanna, Buckingham, Campbell, Pittsylvania, again, are poor; and Culpeper, Orange, Albemarle, Bedford, &c., a rich, though frequently a stony, broken soil, on a substratum of tenacious and red coloured clay. The population of this section, especially near the mountains, is more robust and healthy than that of any other part of the state. The scenery of the upper part is highly picturesque and romantic. There is a vein of limestone running through the counties of Albemarle, Orange, &c. Pit coal, of a good quality, is found within 20 miles above Richmond, on James river.

The third division is the valley between the Blue Ridge and North and Allegany mountains; a valley which extends, with little interruption, from the Potomac, across the state, to North Carolina and Tennessee, narrower, but of greater length than either of the preceding divisions. The soil is a mould formed on a bed of limestone. The surface of the valley is sometimes broken by sharp and solitary mountains detached from the general chain, the sides of which, nearly bare, or but thinly covered with blasted pines, form disagreeable objects in the landscape. The bed of the valley is fertile, producing good crops of Indian corn, wheat, rye, oats, buck wheat, hemp, flax, timothy, and clover. The farms are smaller than in the lower parts of Virginia; and the cultivation is better. Here are few slaves. This valley has inexhaustible mines of excellent iron ore. Chalk is found in Botetourt county.

The fourth division extends from the Allegany mountains to the river Ohio: a country wild and broken, in some parts fertile, but generally lean or barren; but having mines of iron, lead, coal, salt, &c. The soil of a great proportion of the county of Randolph, and the adjacent counties in the north-west part of the state, is of an excellent quality, producing large crops of grain. The surface is uneven and hilly. The county is well watered, is excellent for grazing, and has a very healthy climate.

Virginia and Maryland lie between those parallels, which include the finest climate in the old continent; Morocco, Fez, Syria, Asia Minor, Greece, Sicily, Naples, and the southern provinces of Spain. Of late years, snow does not lie below the mountains more than a few days, and the rivers seldom freeze. The heat of the summer is also more moderate. The temperature is much influenced by the winds; those from the north and north-west bring cold and clear weather; those from the south-east, haziness, moisture, and warmth: The pleasantest months are May and June: July and August are intensely hot, and September and October are generally rainy. It is observed, that as agriculture advances, and the swamps are drained, the climate becomes gradually milder; and it is believed, that at no very distant period, oranges and lemons may be cultivated in the south-eastern parts.

Iron ore is in great abundance on the banks of James river, in the counties of Albemarle and Augusta. The manufacturing establishments on the southern banks of Cullaway, Ross, and Balentine, produce considerable quantities of bar iron. Brown scaly iron ore, or the brown oxid of iron, is seen on the Shenandoah. Plumbago, or carburet of iron, is in great abundance in the county of Amelia, between the Blue ridge and the extremity of tide water. Copper, in a native state, has been found in Orange county; and the ore of this metal on both sides of James river, in the county of Amherst. Gold ore has been discovered in Buckingham county. In Mr. Jefferson's Notes on Virginia, it is stated, that on the borders, and not far from the cataracts of the Rappahanock river, a piece of this substance was found, which yielded seventeen pennyweights. Sulphuret of antimony is said to exist exist near Richmond. Manganese is found in the county of Albemarle, and also of Shenandoah, on the north mountain. Lead ore abounds on the banks of the Kenhawa, in Wythe county, and opposite the mouth of Cripple creek. The mines are worked by twenty or thirty hands; and their average produce is about sixty per cent. Marble, of a variegated appearance, is found on James river, at the mouth of Rock Fish stream. Limestone is procured everywhere west of the Blue Ridge. Slate has been worked to advantage. Talc, or soapstone, used for chimneys, tobacco pipes, and other uses, is found; also ochre in different places; one kind, of a yellow colour, on the Appomatox river, is employed in its natural state to colour the brick hearths; when calcined, it forms a valuable red paint. Coal is found in the western parts, and is in great abundance above Richmond, and on the Appomatox branch of James river, where it extends in veins of twenty miles in length, and ten in breadth, which are nearly 200 feet above the level of the river. It now forms an article of export, and more than 5000 men are employed in this branch of commerce. Saltpetre is found in subterraneous places in considerable quantity.

The principal rivers are the Potomac, Shenandoah, Rappahannock, Mattaponi, Pamunky, York, James, Rivanna, Appomatox, Elizabeth, Nottaway, Meherrin, Staunton, Kenhawa, Ohio, Sandy, Monongahela, and Cheat. The bay of Chesapeak extends inland 200 miles, to its termination in Maryland. Between the capes, its width is twelve miles; a little above, it increases to thirty, then gradually diminishes to five, at its northern extremity.

The principal forest trees are apple, wild or sweet-scented crab, ash, aspen, beech, black and white birch, catalpa, cherry, chesnut, horse-chesnut, cucumber tree, cypress, dogwood, elder, elm, fir, hemlock, spruce, fringe or snow-drop tree, sweet gum, hawthorn, hickory, Indus red-bud; juniper, or red or Virginia cedar, laurel swamp; linden, or American lime; locust, sugar and red flowering maple, red mulberry; black, chesnut, live, red, and white oak; pacan, or Illinois nut; persimon; black, spruce, white, and yellow pine; plane tree, poplar, black ditto, sassafras, spindle tree, black and white walnut. The forests of Virginia have little underwood; and it is easy to travel through them on foot or on horseback, except on the lowlands in the eastern parts, which are covered with cedars, pines, and cypresses. Of shrubs, there is a great variety. Sassafras exists in great abundance; wild indigo throughout the state: the gooseberry, which grows naturally near the white sulphur springs, is smaller than the European, and more bearded; but the fruit is very agreeable: raspberries, black and red, and strawberries, grow naturally. The vine grows luxuriantly. The wild animals are still numerous in the western parts, namely, the wolf, the bear, the deer, the racoon, the squirrel, and the opossum. At the approach of winter, the bear descends from the mountains in search of the fruits of the persimon tree, when it is pursued and taken by dogs. On the eastern side of the mountains, animals have become rare, and peltries are no longer an article of exportation, the whole being consumed by the hatters and saddlers of the country. Among the bird kind is the wild turkey, which is yet common on the branches of the Kenhawa and other streams, where they weigh when full grown, from 12 to 30 pounds. They go in large flocks, and are easily shot; when pursued, they run a considerable distance before they can take wing, and so swiftly, that they are seldom overtaken by a horse at full gallop. Partridges are numerous. The shell drake, or canvas black duck, is found in James river, and is much esteemed for its flavour. The sora, or American ortolan, appears with the first white frost, early in September, and disappears with the first black or hard frost; an interval which varies from one to nine weeks. They frequent the borders of the waters, and are so numerous, that one person, seated in a canoe, with a lantern, will sometimes knock down from six to eighteen dozen in a night, which are sold from one-fourth to three-fourths of a dollar per dozen. The turkey buzzard, so called from its red gills, resembling those of a turkey, is nearly of the size of the eagle. It feeds on carrion. The Virginia nightingale, or mocking-bird, derives its name from its extraordinary imitation of all other songsters. The red bird and the humming-bird are admired for their beautiful plumage. The rivers abound with excellent fish.

Societies have been established at different places, for the encouragement of manufactures of wool, flax, and hemp, which are making rapid progress. Here are manufactures of gunpowder, salt, and saltpetre.

The chief exports are tobacco, wheat, Indian corn, lumber, tar, pitch, turpentine, beef, pork, &c. From the southern parts are sent to Europe tobacco, wheat, flour, Indian corn, cotton, peas, white oak, staves, tar, pitch, turpentine, pork, bacon, ginseng, rattle and black snake root, indigo, oak bark, charcoal, lamp-black, peltries, deer, bear, racoon, musk-rat, wild-cat, or panther, wolf, and squirrel skins. From the northern parts, hemp, saltpetre, gunpowder, lead, coals, cypress, and pine shingles, to the north of Europe and West India islands.

Richmond is the metropolis of the state. The other most considerable towns are Norfolk, Petersburg, Lynchburg, Fredericksburg, Winchester, Portsmouth, Williamsburg, Staunton, and Wheeling. There are four banks, with branches in different parts. Four colleges have been established in this state; William and Mary college, at Williamsburg; Washington college, at Lexington; Hampden Sidney college, in Prince Edward county; and Central college, at Charlottesville. There are 16 academies in different parts of the state.

The denominations of Christians in Virginia are—Baptists, who, according to the Baptist report, in 1817, had 314 congregations; Presbyterians, who had, in 1818, 41 ordained ministers, and several licentiates; Episcopalians, who had, in 1817, 34 ministers; Friends, who had, in 1812, 33 meetings. There are also many Methodists, some Lutherans, Roman Catholics, Jews, &c.

VIRGINIA, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cavan, It is a smart neat town, pleasantly situated on a river of the same name; 40½ miles north-west of Dublin.

VIRGINITY, s. [virginitas, Latin.] Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.

You do impeach your modesty too much,

To trust the opportunity of night,

And the ill counsel of a desert place,

With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakspeare.

VIRGINSTOWE, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 6 miles north-north-east of Launceston.

VIRGO, s. [Latin.] The sixth sign in the zodiac; the Virgin; which see.—Virgo hath twenty-six stars. Moxon.

VIRIDITY, s. [viriditas, Lat.] Greenness. Cockeram.—This deification of their trees for their age and perennial viridity, says Diodorus, might spring from the manifold use which they afforded. Evelyn.

VIRIEU, a town of France, department of the Isere, containing, with its parish, about 4000 inhabitants; 25 miles north-west of Grenoble.

VIRILE, adj. [virilis, Lat.] Belonging to man; not puerile; not feminine.—If there be any charm to overcome man and all his virile virtues, 'tis woman that does effect it. Feltham.—Procreative.—The knot which debilitated, and enfeebled, his virile inclinations. Ricaut.

VIRILITY, s. [virilitas, Latin.] Manhood; character of man.—The lady made generous advances to the borders of virility. Rambler.—Power of procreation.—The great climacterical was past, before they begat children, or gave any testimony of their virility; for none begat children before the age of sixty-five. Brown.

VIRIVILLE, a town of France, department of the Isere, on the Peronne. Population 1500; 14 miles north-west of St. Marcellin.

VIRILE, a town of Italy, in the Piedmontese province of Pinerolo. Population 1500.

VIRMILION, s. [Properly vermilion.] A red colour.

Ægle, the fairest Nais of the flood,

With a vermilion dye his temples stain'd.

Roscommon.
VIRREIES,

VIRREIES, three small islands among the Philippines. Lat. 13. 18. N. long. 121. 48. E.

VIRTON, a town of the Netherlands, on the Chiers. Population 1300; 9 miles north-east of Montmedy.

VIRTU', s. [Italian. "As this people [the Romans] was of so military a turn, they generally gave fortitude the name of Virtus, or the Virtue, by way of excellence; just as the same nation, now they are so debased and effeminated, call the love of the softer arts, Virtù." Spence, Polymct. Dial. x.] A love of the fine arts; a taste for curiosities. See VIRTUOSO.—Let his holiness's taste of virtù be ever so bad, pray get somebody to present you to him before you leave Rome. Ld. Chesterfield.

VIRTUAL, adj. [virtuel, Fr.] Having the efficacy without the sensible or material part.—Metalline waters have virtual cold in them. Put therefore wood into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.

VIRTUALITY, s. Efficacy.—In one grain of corn there lieth dormant a virtuality of many other, and from thence sometimes proceed an hundred ears. Brown.

VIRTUALLY, adv. In effect, though not materially.—Such is our constitution, that the bulk of the people virtually give their approbation to every thing they are bound to obey. Addison.

To VIRTUATE, v. a. To make efficacious. Not used.—Potable gold should be endued with a capacity of being assimilated to the innate heat, and radical moisture; or at least virtuated with a power of generating the said essentials. Harvey.

VIRTUE, s. [virtus, Lat.] Moral goodness: opposed to vice.—Either I'm mistaken, or there is virtue in that Falstaff. Shakspeare.—A particular moral excellence.

In Belmont is a lady
And she is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wond'rous virtues. Shakspeare.

Medicinal quality.

All blest secrets,
All you unpublsh'd virtues of the earth,
Be aidant and remediate. Shakspeare.

Medicinal efficacy.—An essay writer must practice the chymical method, and give the virtue of a full draught in a few drops. Addison.—Efficacy; power. Before virtue is used sometimes by and sometimes in; by in virtue is meant in consequence of the virtue.—If neither words nor herbs will do, I'll try stones; for there's a virtue in them. L'Estrange.—He used to travel through Greece, by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.—Acting power.—Jesus knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about. St. Mark.—Secret agency; efficacy, without visible or material action.

She moves the body, which she doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.

Bravery; valour.
Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers
Took their discharge. Shakspeare.

Excellence; that which gives excellence.—In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, the œconomy of poems is better observed than in Terence; who thought the sole grace and virtue of their fable, the sticking in of sentences, as ours do the forcing in of jests. B. Jonson.—One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.—Thrones, dominations, principdoms, virtues, powers. Milton.

A winged virtue through th' ætherial sky,
From orb to orb unwearied dost thou fly. Tickell.

VIRTUELESS, adj. Wanting virtue; deprived of virtue.—Not having efficacy; without operating qualities.—All second causes, together with nature herself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become altogether silent, virtueless, and dead. Raleigh.

VIRTUOSO, s. [Italian.] A man skilled in antique or natural curiosities; a man studious of painting, statuary, or architecture.—Methinks those generous virtuosi dwell in a higher region than other mortals. Glanville.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1645.

VIRTUOSOSHIP, s. [from virtuoso.] The pursuits of a virtuoso; the character of a virtuoso.—Let us view philosophy like mere virtuosoship in its usual career. Ld. Shaftesbury.

VIRTUOUS, adj. Morally good: applied to persons and practices.

If his occasion were not virtuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully. Shakspeare.

[Applied to women.] Chaste.—Mistress Ford, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband. Shakspeare.—Done in consequence of moral goodness.

Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind. Dryden.

Efficacious; powerful.
With one virtuous touch, the arch-chemic sun,
Produces, with terrestrial humour mix'd,
Here in the dark, so many precious things. Milton.

Having wonderful or eminent properties.—That own'd the virtuous ring and glass. Milton.—Having medicinal qualities.

The ladies sought around
For virtuous herbs, which, gather'd from the ground,
They squeez'd the juice; and cooling ointment made. Dryden.

VIRTUOUSLY, adv. In a virtuous manner; according to the rules of virtue.

They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts not, they tempt heav'n. Shakspeare.

VIRTUOUSNESS, s. The state or character of being virtuous.—Many other adventures are intermeddled; as the love of Britomert, and virtuousness of Belphebe; and the lasciviousness of Helenora. Spenser.

VIRULENCE, or VI'RULENCY, s. Mental poison; malignity; acrimony of temper; bitterness.—Disputes in religion are managed with virulency and bitterness. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

VIRULENT, adj. [virulentus, Lat.] Poisonous; venomous; poisoned in the mind; bitter; malignant.

VIRULENTED, adj. Filled with poison.—Certain spirits virulented from the inward humour, darted on the object, convey a venom where they point and fix. Feltham.

VIRULENTLY, adv. Malignantly; with bitterness.

VIS-A-VIS, s. [French.] A carriage, which holds only two persons, who sit face to face, and not side by side, as in a coach or chariot. Lemon.

VISA, a town of European Turkey, in Romania, the capital of a district; 63 miles west-north-west of Constantinople

VISAGE, s. [visaggio, Ital.] Face; countenance; look. It is now rarely used but with some ideas of dislike or horror. Here, however, is an exception:

Phebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the watery glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shakspeare.

VISAGED, adj. Having a face or visage.—The one, visaged like a lion, to express power, high authority, and indignation. Milton.

VISCARDO, or GUISCARDO, CAPO, a promontory of the island of Cephalonia, extending into the Ionian sea towards the north-west, and having a good harbour behind it.

VISCERAL, adj. [from viscera, Latin, the bowels.] Feeling; tender.—Love is of all other the inmost and most visceral affection; and therefore called by the Apostle, "Bowels of love." Bp. Reynolds.

To VISCERATE, v. a. [viscera, Lat.] To embowel; to eviscerate.

VISCHEGRAD, a small town and castle of European Turkey, in Bosnia, on the Drina; 80 miles south-west of Belgrade.

VISCHER'S ISLAND, a small island in the Pacific ocean, near near the east coast of Morty. Lat. 2. 21. N. long. 128. 39. E.

VISCHNEI-VOLOTSCHOK, a town of European Russia, government of Tver; 217 miles south-south-east of Petersburg. Population 4000.

VISCID, adj. [viscidus, Lat.] Glutinous; tenacious.

VISCIDITY, s. Glutinousness; tenacity; ropiness.—This motion in some human creatures may be weak, in respect to the viscid of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot.—Glutinous concretion.—Cathartics of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their styplicity. Floyer.

VISCO'SITY, s. [viscosité, Fr.] Glutinousness; tenacity.—The air being mixed with the animal fluids, determines their condition as to rarity, density, viscosity, tenuity. Arbutnot.—A glutinous substance.—A tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrups, and seminal viscosities. Brown.

VISCOUNT, s. [viccomes, Lat.] Viscount signifies as much as sheriff; between which two words there is no other difference, but that the one comes from our conquerors the Normans, and the other from our ancestors the Saxons. Viscount also signifies a degree of nobility next to an earl, which is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of amongst us, till Henry VI. his days. Cowel.

This rich marble doth inter
The honour'd wife of Winchester,
A viscount's daughter, an earl's heir.

Milton.

VISCOUNTESS, s. [Viscount and viscountess are pronounced vicount and vicountess. The word is indifferently accented on the first and second syllables.] The lady of a viscount; a peeress of the fourth order.—To make my dainty charge a vicountess. B. Jonson.

VISCOUNTSHIP, or VISCOUNTY, s. The quality and office of a viscount.—A creation passed, of late, of a vicecountship of Maidenhead. Ld. Keeper Williams.

VISCOUS, adj. [viscosus, Lat.] Glutinous; sticky; tenacious.—Holly is of so viscous a juice as they make bird-lime of the bark. Bacon.

VISCUM [or Viscus of the Latin writers, from the Æolic βίσκος for βίξος (Vossius)], in Botany, a genus of the class dicecia, order tetrandria, natural order of aggregatæ, caprifolia (Juss.)—Generic Character. Male—Calyx: perianth four-parted; leaflets ovate, equal. Corolla none. Stamina four; filaments none. Anthers oblong, acuminate, one growing to each calyx-leaf.—Female commonly opposite to the male. Calyx: perianth four-leaved; leaflets ovate, small, sessile, deciduous, placed on the germ. Corolla none. Pistil: germ oblong, three-cornered, indistinctly crowned with a four-cleft margin, inferior. Style none. Stigma obtuse, scarcely emarginate. Pericarp: berry globular, one-celled, even. Seed one, cordate, compressed, obtuse, fleshy.—Essential Character. Male—Calyx four-parted. Corolla none. Filaments none. Anthers fastened to the calyx. Female—Calyx four-leaved, superior. Corolla none. Style none. Berry one-seeded. Seed cordate.

1. Viscum album, common or white misseltoe.—Leaves lanceolate, obtuse; stem dichotomous; spikes axillary. This plant, instead of rooting and growing in the earth, fixes itself into the branches of trees, where it spreads and forms a large bush. The branches are woody, and are covered with a pale or yellowish green bark; the largest is about the thickness of a man's finger, and the rest gradually smaller; they have many joints, which easily part asunder; and at each of these are two thick fleshy leaves, which are broad and rounded at their points, and narrow at their base. The flowers come out from the axils in short spikes, and are composed of four greenish-yellow calyx-leaves. The female flowers are succeeded by round white berries, which are almost pellucid, about the size of currants, full of a tough viscid juice, in the middle of which lies one heart-shaped flat seed.—Native of Europe and Japan, on various trees:

flowering in May. The misseltoe of the oak has been celebrated from the time of the Druids both as a sacred plant, and as a medicine.

“Ad viscum Druidæ, Druidæ cantare solebant.”

And the oak itself on which it grew was also held sacred. The Druids sent round their attendant youths with branches of the misseltoe to announce the entrance of the new year; and this custom has continued down to modern times, for in some parts of France the children run about from house to house asking for misseltoe in rude rhymes, and calling out Aguilaneuf, that is, A gui l'an neuf, or to the misseltoe, 'tis the new year. And in England, branches of this plant are hung up in most houses at Christmas, among other evergreens; besides the oak, it grows on apple-trees, limes, thorns, and many others.

2. Viscum rubrum, or red-berried misseltoe.—Leaves lanceolate, obtuse; spikes lateral. This misseltoe, says Catesby, has long, smooth, shining green leaves, growing by pairs; the berries are round, red, and somewhat smaller than those of the common misseltoe.

3. Viscum purpureum, or purple-berried misseltoe.—Leaves obovate; racemes lateral.—It is a native of America and the West Indian islands, and is said to grow principally on the Mancineel-tree.

There are also Viscum opuntoides. Viscum Japonicum. Viscum Capense. Viscum verticillatum. Viscum flavens. Viscum pauciflorum. Viscum terrestre. Viscum rotundifolium. Viscum antarcticum.

Propagation and Culture.—Misseltoe is always produced from seed, and cannot be cultivated in the earth like most other plants, but will always grow upon trees; hence the ancients thought it was an excrescence of the tree, without any seed being previously lodged there; which opinion has been confuted by repeated experiments.

The manner of its propagation is this. The misseltoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter, when they are ripe, often carries them from tree to tree; for the viscid part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, sometimes fastens it to the outer part of the bird's beak, and to disengage it, he strikes his beak against the branch of the tree on which he alights, and leaves the seed sticking to the bark; if this should chance to be a smooth part, the seed will adhere to it, and the following year will put out and grow. In the same manner it may be propagated by art. The trees on which it most readily takes are the apple, ash, white-thorn, and others which have a smooth rind.

WISE, or WESER, an inland town of the Netherlands, province of Liege, situated on the Maese; 6 miles south of Maastricht. Population 1900.

WISEU, an inland town of Portugal, province of Beira, between the rivers Mondego and Vouga; 42 miles west-south-west of Oporto, and 52 north-east of Coimbra. Population 5000.

VISHNU, is one of the chief deities of the Hindoo trimurti or triad. He is reckoned the second person of this mysterious unity, being a personification of the preserving power of the deity. On the whole, Vishnu may be called the chief of the Hindoo gods; as either in himself, or through his consort, or active energy, Lakshmi, or in his various incarnations, he is, perhaps, the god most extensively worshipped: if the numerous sects that indirectly adore him be included, he certainly is. Like the gods and goddesses of other polytheistic people, all the deities of the Hindoo Pantheon are resolvable ultimately into one; that one is the sun, and he, the Hindoo theologians affirm, is merely a symbol of that “infinitely greater light which alone can irradiate our intellects.” This esoteric doctrine is of course unknown to the multitude who address and adore Vishnu, as well as the other deities, in the grossness of idolatrous superstition.

VISIBILITY, s. [visibilité, Fr.] The state or quality of being perceptible by the eye.—The colours of outward objects brought into a darkened room, do much depend for

for their visibility; upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle.—State of being apparent, or openly discoverable; conspicuousness.—In these, the visibility and example of our virtues will chiefly consist. Rogers.

VI'SIBLE, adj. [visibilis, Lat.] Perceptible by the eye.

On this mount he appeared; under this tree
Stood visible; and I —
Here with him at this fountain talk'd.

Milton.

Discovered to the eye.

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the vile offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep.

Shakspeare.

Apparent; open; conspicuous.—The factions at court were greater, or more visible than before. Clarendon.

VI'SIBLE, s. Perceptibility by the eye.—Visibles work upon a looking-glass, which is like the pupil of the eye; and audibles upon the places of echo, which resemble the cavern of the ear. Bacon.

VI'SIBLENESS, s. State or quality of being visible.

VI'SIBLY, adv. In a manner perceptible by the eye.—The day being visibly governed by the sun, is a little longer than the revolution of the equator; so much as is occasioned by the advance of the sun in his annual contrary motion along the ecliptic. Holder.

VI'SINGSOE, the principal island of the lake of Wetter; in the south of Sweden.

VI'SION, s. [visio, Lat.] Sight; the faculty of seeing.—Anatomists, when they have taken off from the bottom of the eye that outward and most thick coat called the dura mater, can then see through the thinner coats, the pictures of objects lively painted thereon. And these pictures, propagated by motion along the fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, are the cause of vision. Newton.—The act of seeing.—Vision in the next life is the perfecting of faith in this; or faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond.—A supernatural appearance; a spectre; a phantom; a dream; something shewn in a dream.—A dream happens to a sleeping, a vision may happen to a waking man. A dream is supposed natural, a vision miraculous; but they are confounded.

His dream returns; his friend appears again:
The murderer's come; now help, or I am slain!
'Twas but a vision still, and visions are but vain. Dryden.

Any appearance; any thing which is the object of sight.

These, [colours,] when the clouds distil the rosy shower,
Shine out distinct adown the watery bow,
While o'er our heads the dewy vision bends,
Delightful, melting in the fields beneath. Thomson.

VI'SIONAL, adj. Pertaining to a vision.—It remains to be considered, whether the want of that single circumstance be sufficient to make us think it was not a vision, &c. So much in favour of the visional construction. Waterland.

VI'SIONARY, adj. [visionnaire, French.] Affected by phantoms; disposed to receive impressions on the imagination.

No more these scenes my meditation aid,
Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.

Imaginary; not real; seen in a dream; perceived by the imagination only.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bray'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

VI'SIONARY, or VI'SIONIST, s. [visionnaire, French.] One whose imagination is disturbed.—The crazy fancies of every idle visionist. Spencer.—The lovely visionary gave him perpetual uneasiness. Female Quixote.

To VI'SIT, v. a. [visito, Lat.] To go to see.—You must go visit the lady that lies in.—I visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither. Shakspeare.—[In scriptural language.] To send good or evil judicially.—When God visiteth, what shall I answer him? Job.—God visit thee in good things. Judith.—To salute with a present.—Samson visited his wife with a kid. Judges.—To come to a survey, with judicial authority.—The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person. Ayliffe.

To VI'SIT, v. n. To keep up the intercourse of ceremonial salutations at the houses of each other.—Whilst she was under her mother she was forced to be genteel, to live in ceremony, to sit up late at nights, to be in the folly of every fashion, and always visiting on Sundays. Law.

VI'SIT, s. [visite, Fr., from the verb.] The act of going to see another.—In a designed or accidental visit, let some one take a book, which may be agreeable, and read in it. Watts.

VI'SITABLE, adj. Liable to be visited.—All hospitals built since the reformation, are visitabile by the king or lord chancellor. Ayliffe.

VI'SITANT, s. One who goes to see another.

He alone

To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam, who to Eve,
While the great visitant approach'd, thus spake. Milton.

VISITA'TION, s. [visito, Lat.] The act of visiting.

What would you with the princess? — — Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. Shakspeare.

Object of visits.

O flowers,

My early visitation, and my last. Milton.

[visitation, Fr.] Judicial visit or perambulation.—Your grace, in your metropolitical visitation, hath begun a good work in taking this into your religious consideration; and you have endeavoured a reformation. White.—Judicial evil sent by God; state of suffering judicial evil.—That which thou dost not understand when thou redest, thou shalt understand in the day of thy visitation. For many secrets of religion are not perceived till they be felt, and are not felt but in the day of a great calamity. Bp. Taylor.—Communication of divine love.—The most comfortable visitations God hath sent men from above, have taken especially the times of prayer as their most natural opportunities. Hooker.

VI'SITATO'RIAL, adj. Belonging to a judicial visitor.—Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitatorial power in his archdeaconry; but others say that an archdeacon has a visitatorial power only of common right per modum simplicis scrutini, as being bishop's vicar. Ayliffe.

VI'SITER, or VI'SITOR, s. One who comes to see another.—Here's ado to lock up honesty and honour from the access of gentle visitors. Shakspeare.—[visiteur, Fr.] An occasional judge; one who regulates the disorders of any society.—The visitors expelled the orthodox; they, without scruple or shame, possessed themselves of their colleges. Walton.

VI'SITING, s. Visitation; act of visiting.—Compunctious visitations of nature. Shakspeare.

VI'SIVE, adj. [visus, Lat.] Formed in the act of seeing; belonging to the power of seeing.—This happens when the axis of the visive cones, diffused from the object, fall not upon the same plane; but that which is conveyed into one eye is more depressed or elevated than that which enters the other. Brown.

VI'SMEA [so named by the younger Linnæus, in memory of Mr. De Visme, a Portuguese merchant, well known for his love and knowledge of plants], in Botany, a genus of the class dodecandria, order trigynia, natural order of onagræ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth five-leaved, permanent; leaflets lanceolate, recurved; three outer hairy. Corolla: petals five, elliptic, spreading, scarcely longer than the calyx. Stamina: filaments twelve, filiform, erect, shorter than the petals, inserted into the receptacle. Anthers quadrangular, erect, terminated by an awn. Pistil. germ rough-haired, superior, attenuated as it were into a very short, rough-haired style. Styles three, filiform, smooth. Stigmas mas simple. Pericarp: nut ovate, smooth, acuminate, two or three-celled, half-inferior, enclosed within the converging calyx-leaves, and for the most part covered by the one-leafed part of the calyx, which is connate with the nut, but a third of the upper part of the nut within the calyx is naked. Seeds in each cell one.—Essential Character. Calyx five-leaved, inferior. Corolla five-petalled. Stigma five. Nut two or three-celled, half-inferior.

Vismea mocanera.—This is a small shrub, with a round, somewhat warted stem. Leaves alternate, erect, on short petioles, elliptic, very smooth, veined, serrate, the consistence of the bay. Peduncles axillary, solitary, nodding, scarcely longer than the petiole, naked, one-flowered. Flowers small. Corolla yellow. When the flower is impregnated, the peduncle is erected, the calyx closed and thickened, and its three outer leaflets become brown and hairy.—Native of the Canary islands, in mountain woods.

VISNOMY, s. [corrupted from physiognomy.] Face; countenance. Not in use.

Twelve gods do sit around in royal state,
And Jove in midst with awful majesty,
To judge the strife between them stirred late:
Each of the gods by his like visnomy
Each to be known; but Jove above them all,
By his great looks and power imperial. Spenser.

VISO, EL, a neatly built town of Spain, in La Mancha; 126 miles south of Madrid. Population 3800.

VISO, MONTTE, a lofty mountain of the Cottian Alps, between Piedmont and France, 10,000 feet high, and remarkable for a tunnel cut through it, of 500 paces in length.

VISONE, a town of Italy, in Montferrat, situated at the confluence of the Carmagna and the Bormida; 3 miles east of Acqui. Population 1300.

VISOR, s. [This word is variously written, visard, visar, visor, vizard, vizor.] A mask used to disguise and disguise.

But that thy face is visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I wou'd essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakspeare.

A moveable part in the front of a helmet, and placed above the beaver in order to protect the upper part of the face; and being perforated with many holes, afforded the wearer an opportunity of discerning objects: and thence its name. Douce.

Which on his helmet martelled so hard,
That made him low incline his lofty crest,
And bow'd his batter'd visour to his brest. Spenser.

VISORED, adj. Masked.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!
Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falsehood and base forgery? Milton.

VISP, or VISPACH, a small town of Switzerland, in the Valais, on the Visp or Visbach, 25 miles east of Sion.

UIST, NORTH, an island of the Hebrides, belonging to Inverness-shire, Scotland, lying between the district of Harris on the north, and Benbecula on the south, from which last it is separated only by a strand, dry at low water. It is of a very irregular shape, being 16 miles long from east to west, and 14 miles at its greatest breadth from south to north; and with its multitudes of islets it comprehends altogether an area of 118 square miles, including several fresh-water lakes. The general aspect is cheerless and gloomy. A dark heathy surface, swelling into hills of no great altitude, composes by far a greater part of the island. The parish of North Uist comprehends, besides that island, the adjacent isles of Boreray, Orinsay, Valley, Heisker, Kirkbost, Ileray, Grimsay, and several small holms. Population 4021.

UIST, SOUTH, also one of the Hebrides, belonging to Inverness-shire, Scotland, lying in the district called the Long Island, between the isles of Benbecula on the north, and Barray on the south, from which it is six miles distant in a north-easterly direction. It is 19 miles long from south to north, and is in some places nine miles broad; but the average does not exceed six, as its whole contents are only 127 miles, including Ericksay, a considerable islet on its south coast. In this extent is also comprehended about 10 square miles of fresh-water lakes. The parish of South Uist comprehends, besides the island of that name, the adjacent islands of Benbecula, Rona, Erisky, and several smaller islets, and pasture holms. Population 5500.

VISTA, s. [Italian.] View; prospect through an avenue.

The finish'd garden to the view
Its vistas opens, and its alleys green. Thomson.

VISTIDSCHA, or VOSTITZA, a small inland town of Greece, in the Morea, sandgiacat of Tripolitza.

VISTRITZA, the Astraus of the ancients, a river of European Turkey, in Romania, sandgiacat of Salonica, which falls into the Ferina.

VISTULA, the great river of Poland, which rises, however, not in that country, but in Austrian Silesia, at the foot of the Carpathians. Flowing eastward, it soon enters Poland at the southern frontier, passes the ancient capital Cracow; and after bathing the walls of Sandomir, receives, in the San, a great addition to its waters. Its course, now northward, brings it, after traversing a considerable track of country, to Warsaw; at some distance from which it receives the Bug, a river almost equal to itself in magnitude, and bringing with it the waters of the south-east and north of Poland. The Vistula, now become one of the great rivers of Europe, continues to hold a northward course, inclines to the west, passes the towns of Plock and Culm; and after flowing several hundred miles, with a wide channel, and undiminished volume, divides like the Rhine, into two branches, of which one, called the Nogat, and another the Old Vistula, flow eastwards to the Frische Haff, while the largest stream preserves the name of Vistula, and turning to the westward, falls into the Baltic at Dantzic. The Vistula flowing generally through a level country, is navigable many hundred miles, beginning so far up as Cracow. It is consequently the great channel for the conveyance of corn and other products from the interior of Poland.

VISUAL, adj. [visuel, French.] Used in sight; exercising the power of sight; instrumental to sight.—An eye thrust forth so as it hangs a pretty distance by the visual nerve, hath been without any power of sight; and yet, after being replaced, recovered sight. Bacon.

VITAL, adj. [vitalis, Lat.] Contributing to life; necessary to life.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair;
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.
Relating to life.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach. Shakspeare.
Containing life.

Spirits that live throughout;
Vital in every part; not as frail man,
In entrails, heart, or head, liver or reins,
Cannot but by annihilating die. Milton.

Being the seat of life.—The dart flew on, and pierc'd a vital part. Pope.—So disposed as to live. Little used, and rather Latin than English.—Pythagoras and Hippocrates not only affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital, that of the eighth mortal; but the progression thereto to be measured by rule. Brown.—Essential; chiefly necessary.

Know grief's vital part Consists in nature, not in art. Bp. Corbet.

VITALITY, s. Power of subsisting in life.—Whether that motion, vitality, and operation were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God. Raleigh.

VITALLY, adv. In such a manner as to give life.—The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they are fitted to live and move, and be vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent Maker. Bentley.

VITALS,

VITALS, s. [Without the singular.] Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs, and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away.

Philips.

VITELLARY, s. [from vitellus, Lat.] The place where the yolk of the egg swims in the white.—A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is, how the sperm of the cock attaineth into every egg; since the vitellary, or place of the yolk, is very high. Brown.

VITELLIUS (Aulus), a Roman emperor, was born A. D. 16. See ROME.

VITENZ, or CHTELNITZA, a small town of Hungary; 35 miles north-north-east of Presburg.

VITEPSK, a government of the north-west of European Russia, lying to the east of Courland, and south of Livonia, between 26. 30. and 31. 50. of east long. and 55. 3. and 57. of north lat. Its territorial extent is about 20,000 square miles, and its population nearly 750,000, partly Poles, Lithuanians, and Lettonians; partly also Russians, Germans, and Jews. Its chief rivers are the Dwina, the Ula, and the Viteba.

VITEPSK, a city of European Russia, and the capital of the government of the same name, stands on the Dwina, at the influx of the Viteba, which divides it into two parts. Among its inhabitants is a considerable proportion of Jews; 322 miles south of Petersburg, and 297 west of Moscow. Population 13,000.

VITERBO, a considerable town of Italy, in the States of the Church, the capital of the delegation of the same name, situated at the foot of a high mountain; 27 miles north-north-east of Civita Vecchia, and 38 north-north-west of Rome. Population 10,000.

VITERSEN, a small town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein; 5 miles west of Pinneberg.

VITEX [a vinciendo s. viendo; from the great flexibility of the twigs, which makes them fit to bind or tie any thing], in Botany, a genus of the class didynamia, order angiospermia, natural order of personatae, vitices (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leafed, tubular, cylindrical, very short, five-toothed. Corolla one-petalled, ringent; tube cylindrical, slender; border flat, two-lipped; upper lip trifid, with the middle segment wider; lower lip trifid, with the middle segment bigger. Stamina: filaments four, capillary, a little longer than the tube, two of which are shorter than the others. Anthers versatile. Pistil: germ roundish. Style filiform, length of the tube. Stigmas two, awl-shaped, spreading. Pericarp: berry or drupe globular, four-celled. Seeds solitary, ovate.—Essential Character. Calyx five-toothed. Corolla: border six-cleft. Drupe one-seeded; a four-celled nut.

1. Vitex ovata, or ovate-leaved chaste-tree.—Leaves simple, ovate. This is a tree, in appearance and colour, like vitex agnus castus, except in the leaves, which are nearly roundish, and two inches long.—Native of China and Japan.

2. Vitex triflora, or three-flowered chaste-tree.—Leaves ternate, smooth; peduncles axillary and terminating, three-flowered.—Native of Cayenne.

3. Vitex divaricata.—Leaves ternate, quite entire, smooth on both sides; the end one very large; with a dichotomous, divaricating panicle.—Frequent in the islands of Martinico, St. Lucia, and Santa Cruz.

4. Vitex pubescens, or downy chaste-tree.—Leaves ternate, pubescent; panicles trichotomous; bracts length of the calyx.—Native of the East Indies.

5. Vitex altissima, or tall chaste-tree.—Leaves ternate; quite entire; panicle whorled; spikes whorled; berry three-seeded.—Found in the vast woods of Ceylon.

6. Vitex agnus castus, or officinal chaste-tree.—Leaves digitate, seven or five-leaved, lanceolate, mostly quite entire; spikes whorled, panicked. This has a shrubby stalk eight or ten feet high, sending out their whole length opposite branches, which are angular, pliable, and have a greyish bark.—Native of Sicily and the kingdom of Naples, and many other parts of Europe and America.

7. Vitex incisa, or cut-leaved chaste-tree.—Leaves digitate, quinate; leaflets gash-pinnatifid; spikes subverticillate.—Native of China.

8. Vitex leucoxylo, or white-wooded chaste-tree.—Leaves digitate, quinate; leaflets petioled, oblong, quite entire; panicles dichotomous; berry one-seeded.—Found in the vast woods of Ceylon.

9. Vitex trifolia, or three-leaved chaste-tree.—Leaves ternate and quinate; leaflets ovate, acute, quite entire, hoary beneath; panicle with a straight rachis; pedicels dichotomous.—Native of the East Indies; very common on the coast of China and Cochinchina, creeping in the sand; also in the Friendly islands.

10. Vitex umbrosa.—Leaves quinate, quite entire, smooth on both sides; racemes compound, axillary.—Native of Jamaica, in shady places.

11. Vitex capitata.—Leaves quinate-digitate; leaflets lanceolate, smooth, quite entire; flowers capitate-subumbelled. This is a middle-sized tree.—Native of the island of Trinidad.

12. Vitex negundo, or five-leaved chaste-tree.—Leaves quinate and ternate, serrate; flowers raceme-panicked.—Native of the East Indies, China, and Cochinchina.

13. Vitex spicata.—Leaves quinate, crenate; spikes linear, terminating.—Native of China and Cochinchina.

14. Vitex pinnata.—Leaves pinnate, quite entire; panicles trichotomous.—Native of Ceylon and other islands of the East Indies.

Propagation and Culture.—These plants may be propagated by cuttings or layers, treating them according to the climate of which they are natives.

VITHUISEN, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Groningen; 14 miles north-north-east of Groningen. Population 1300.

To VITIATE, v. a. [vitio, Lat.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.—The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature, before she was vitiated by luxury. Evelyn.

VITIA'TION, s. Depravation; corruption.—The foresaid extenuation of the body is imputed to the blood's vitiation, by malign putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey.

To VITILITIGATE, v. n. [vitiosus and litigo, Lat.] To contend in law litigiously and cavilously.

VITILITIGA'TION, s. Contention; cavillation.

I'll force you by right ratiocination,

To leave your vitilitigation.

Hudibras.

VITIO'SITY, s. [from vitiosus, Lat.] Depravity; corruption.—He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, unsuccessful. South.

VITIOUS, adj. [vitiosus, Lat.] Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous. It is rather applied to habitual faults than criminal actions. It is used of persons and practices.

Make known

It is no vitious blot, murder, or foulness

That hath depriv'd me of your grace.

Shakspeare.

Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.—When vitious language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Jonson.

VITIOUSLY, adv. Not virtuously; corruptly.

VITIOUSNESS, s. Corruptness; state of being vitious.

When we in our vitiousness grow hard,

The wise gods seal our eyes.

Shakspeare.

Depravation; state of being vitiated.—The historian imputeth this mistake to the vitiousness of the copy. Wharton.

VITIS [from viere, to tie, or vincire, to bind. The vine], in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order monogynia, natural order of hederaceæ, vites (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth five-toothed, very small. Corolla: petals five, rude, small, caducous. Stamina: filaments five, awl-shaped, from erect spreading, caducous. Anthers simple. Pistil: germ ovate. Style none. Stigma obtuse-headed. Pericarp: berry globular or ovate, two-celled. Seeds two, bony, turbinate-cordate, contracted at the base, semibilocular. Gärtner describes the unripe berry as five-celled; the ripe one as one-celled and five-seeded; but Schmidel, Haller, Ehrhart, &c., never could see five seeds. One or two seeds are often abortive.—Essential Character. Petals cohering at the top, shrivelling. Berry five-seeded (two-seeded) superior.

1. Vitis vinifera, or common vine.—The common vine is universally known to have a thick-twisted irregular weak stem covered with a brown cloven bark, and having very long, tough, flexible branches, trailing along the ground, or climbing trees by means of tendrils. The leaves are lobed and sinuate, serrate, smooth and alternate, on long foot-stalks. The tendrils are opposite to a leaf and are attended by the flowers in a raceme. The flowers are whitish or herbaceous, very small and insignificant in appearance, but having a very agreeable smell; the petals cohering at the tip and concealing the genitals in manner of a veil, but soon falling off. Berry globular, in some varieties ovate, before it is ripe regularly divided into five cells; but afterwards one-celled, almost pellucid, coloured in some, colourless in others. In the middle is a short column, springing from the woody fibres of the pedicel of the berry; to the top of this the seeds are fastened by its peculiar umbilical chord: this chord is filiform, running along the inner side of the seed to its very top, then reflected to the back, and finally entering the navel. Seeds naturally five, but for the most part fewer: others have not discovered more than two. In some berries they are all abortive.—Native of most of the temperate parts of the world.

The currant vine has been noticed among the varieties: it is not unusual to have some berries without stones in other varieties: and we have dried grapes frequently imported under the name of Sultana raisins, that are esteemed on that account.

2. Vitis palmata, or palmate-leaved vine.—Leaves palmate, smooth; segments gashed; umbels racemed.—Native of Virginia.

3. Vitis Indica, or Indian vine.—Leaves cordate, toothed, villose beneath; tendrils racemiferous. It produces a great quantity of small black grapes in the lower hills of Jamaica, but they are of a rough taste, and would doubtless make an excellent red wine, if properly managed.—Native both of the East and West Indies, and Cochinchina.

4. Vitis flexuosa, or Japanese vine.—Leaves cordate, toothed, villose beneath; stem flexuose; panicles elongated.—Native of Japan.

5. Vitis labrusca, or downy-leaved vine.—Leaves cordate, subtrilobate, toothed, tomentose underneath.—Native of North America, Amboyna, Cochinchina and Japan.

6. Vitis vulpina, fox-grape or vine.—Leaves cordate, tooth-serrate, naked on both sides.—Native of Virginia.

7. Vitis heterophylla, or various-leaved vine.—Leaves simple, gash-three-lobed and five-lobed, serrate, naked.—Native of Japan, flowering there in July and August.

8. Vitis laciniata, or parsley-leaved vine.—Leaves quinately, leaflets multifold. There is a variety of this with red berries.—Supposed to grow naturally in Canada.

9. Vitis hederacea, or ivy-leaved vine.—Leaves quinately, ovate, acuminate, toothed.—Native of the East Indies.

10. Vitis heptaphylla, or finger-leaved vine.—Leaves digitate, septenate, ovate, quite entire.—Native of the East Indies.

11. Vitis pinnata, or pinnate-leaved vine.—Leaves pinnate, tooth-serrate, smooth.—Native place unknown.

12. Vitis arborea, or pepper vine.—Leaves superdecompound, lateral, leaflets pinnate.—Native of North America.

Propagation and Culture.—All the sorts of grapes are propagated either by layers or cuttings.

The vine is spontaneous in Carolina and all North America, from 25° to 45° of latitude, but they do not succeed in making wines there in the same latitude with Spain and Italy. The American woods are in many parts so entangled with vines for many miles together, that their trailing branches are a great impediment in travelling, and lofty trees are overtopped and wholly covered with them.

The vine was gradually introduced into the different countries of southern Europe, from the East, where we know it was cultivated from the time of Noah. In the age of Homer it grew wild in the island of Sicily, and probably in the adjacent continent, but it was not improved by skill, nor did the rude inhabitants extract a liquor from it. A thousand years afterwards, Italy could boast, that of the fourscore most generous and celebrated wines, more than two thirds were produced from her own soil. The blessing was soon communicated to the Narbonnese province of Gaul; but so intense was the cold to the north of the Cevennes, that in the time of Strabo, it was thought impossible to ripen grapes in those parts of Gaul. This difficulty, however, was gradually vanquished; and there is some reason to believe, that the vineyards of Burgundy are as old as the age of the Antonines.

Mr. Miller tells us, that the vineyards in some parts of Italy will hold good above three hundred years, and that vines of one hundred years old are accounted young ones.

It would seem probable that the luxurious Romans should introduce the vine into Britain, during their establishment in the island; and that it should have maintained its ground ever since, with various fortune. But there is little doubt that vineyards were common appendages to abbeys and monasteries, which were frequently filled with monks who were foreigners, or had lived much in Italy, and had there contracted such a habit of drinking wine with their meals, that it appeared to be in a manner a necessary.

From Pliny's silence on that head, in the large account which he gives of the vine in his fourteenth book, we may conclude that Britain had it not when Pliny wrote. But Tacitus, writing of the times when Julius Agricola commanded here, expressly denies us the vine. If so, it is not probable that we had it for many years after, since Domitian ordered vineyards in the provinces to be destroyed, both because they occasioned a scarcity of corn, and were an incitement to sedition by the encouragement which they gave to drunkenness: and from this time none could plant vineyards without the permission of the emperors; till Probus who acceded in A. D. 276, rescinded the edict, towards the end of his reign. It is supposed, that licence was granted the provincials to plant vineyards about the year 280, and the Britanni are expressly mentioned by Vopiscus among the nations who partook of it.

Bede, who finished his history A. D. 731, writes expressly, "Vineas etiam quibusdam in locis germinant."

It is natural to suppose, that the propagation of the vine would be first attempted in the southern parts of our island, both because they are the warmest, and the nearest to Gaul. Accordingly the neighbourhood of Winchester was formerly famous for vines, as appears from the old verses cited by Mr. Somner; and Twyne supposes this city to have taken its name from hence.

Of Canterbury and that neighbourhood the same author makes the abbot of St. Augustine's say, that their house was formerly not destitute of vines: and Somner informs us, that in the year 1285, both that abbey and the priory of Canterbury were plentifully furnished with vineyards.

At Rochester, a large piece of ground adjoining to the city is now called the vine: another is so called at Sevenoke in Kent: this also was the name of the seat of the barons Sandes in Hampshire. At Halling, near Rochester, the bishop of that see had formerly a vineyard; for when Edward II. in the nineteenth year of his reign, was at Bockingfield, bishop Hamson sent him thither, as Lambarde tells us, "a present of his drinkes, and withal both wine and grapes of his own growth in his vineyarde at Halling." Captain Nicholas Toke, of Godington, in Great Chart, in Kent, "hath so industriously and elegantly, says Philipot, cultivated and improved our English vines, that the wine, pressed and extracted out of their grapes, seems not only to parallel, but almost to out-rival that of France."

Of Sussex, Lambarde writes, "History doth mention, that there was about that time, (the Norman invasion) great store of vines at Santlac (near to Battel.) He adds, as to Berkshire, "the like whereof I have redd to have been at Wynd-sore, in so moche as tythe of them hathe beene theare yielded in great plenty, which gyveth me to think, that wyne hath been made longe sence within the realme; although in our memorie it be accompted a great deintye to heare of." He farther observes, that some part of the wine was spent in the king's household, and some sold for the king's profit.

John Twyne has remarked, that William of Malmesbury has extolled the vines and wine of Gloucestershire; and the passage is extant in William's book de Gestis Pont. IV. p. 283. See also Camden, Domesday-book mentions at Rageneia in Essex one park, and six arpenies of vineyard, which, if it takes well, yields twenty modii of wine.—And at Ware, a park and six arpenies of vineyard very lately planted.

We hear of vineyards also in Middlesex, Cambridgeshire at Denny abbey, the Isle of Ely, at Dunstable, and at St. Edmundsbury; in the engraved plan of which town the vineyard of the abbey is particularly noted. Within the walls of the city of London there is a street called the vineyard; and in the liberties and suburbs, and in Westminster, there is vine-street in Hatton garden, and St. Giles's and Piccadilly; and the vineyards by Housditch and Coldbath fields.

The varieties of the vine are almost endless; but the following list of the most esteemed sorts will be sufficient to stock the vinery and clothe the walls of any common garden.

White sweet-water, white muscadine, royal ditto, black ditto, black Frontinac, white ditto, red ditto, Grisly ditto, black Hamburg, white ditto, white raisin, red ditto, Syrian, white Tokay, flame-coloured ditto, white passe mosque, Grecian, white muscat of Alexandria, black ditto, large black cluster, black Constantia, white ditto, St. Peter's grape, Lombardy, and Verdhello.

The last species or sort has the stem woody with slender branches, but does not afford fruit in this climate.

The vine may be increased in different ways: as by seeds, cuttings, layers, as well as by grafting and inoculation; but the cutting and layer methods are the most commonly employed.

In raising vines from seeds, they should be sown in the early spring, as about the beginning of March, in small pots filled with mould of the light fresh kind, to the number of three or four seeds in each, plunging the pots in a moderate hot-bed, the mould being gently sprinkled over with water, from a fine-rosed watering-pot, every day when the weather is hot and dry, which should be performed in the latter part of the day as the sun disappears from the frame. But when the season is such as to keep the mould in the pots properly moist, the waterings may be omitted. As soon as the waterings have been performed, the frames should be shut down, and be kept in that state during the night, when the heat is not too great.

When the heat of the bed begins to decline, a lining of horse-dung and fresh leaves should be added; or the heat be renewed by stirring the old beds up and making slight additions to them. This should be continued till the plants have acquired sufficient strength to support themselves without bottom heat. For forcing, pruning, &c., see HORTICULTURE, Vol. X.

Several causes may be assigned why vineyards were neglected, and at length in a manner disused in this country.

The principal cause probably was that our wine was of an inferior quality, and that better wine could be had cheap from our French provinces. The advancement of agriculture also contributed to their being relinquished. We may however fairly conclude that there were many vineyards in England, for several centuries since the conquest; few of our greater religious foundations, in the south at least, having been without them.

VITMANNIA [so named by Vahl, in honour of Abbé F. Vitmann, professor at Milan], in Botany, a genus of the class octandria, order monogynia.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leafed, short, four-cleft; segments rounded, concave within, convex without. Corolla: petals four, linear-oblong, little concave, thickish, hoary on the outside, obtuse, unguicular. Nectary, a small obovate scale at the base of each filament, shorter on the alternate ones. Stamina: filaments eight, a little shorter than the petals, smooth. Anthers linear, subbid at the base. Pistil: germ superior, four-lobed; lobes semiorbicular, compressed, slightly connate, easily separable from one another and from the style (perhaps they are rather four germs.) Style simple, awl-shaped, length of the filaments. Stigma acute. Pericarp: nut semilunar, compressed, one-celled, valveless. Seed one, large, obovate-sickled, turgidly lenticular, smooth.—Essential Character. Calyx four-cleft. Corolla four-petalled. Nectary, a scale at the base of each filament. Nut semilunar, compressed, one-seeded.

Vitmannia elliptica.—This is a tree with round, smooth branches, compressed a little at the tip. Leaves alternate, a hand and more in length, elliptic, quite entire, smooth on both sides, on a short petiole which is flattish above, but convex underneath. Stipules none. Peduncles lateral or a little below the top of the branch, solitary or sometimes two together, compressed a little. Pedicels umbelled, short, one-flowered. Fruit a corky or woody nut, compressed like a lens, or concavo-convex. Size of the nut various, bigger than the palm of the hand, or scarcely an inch in diameter, and from a narrow beginning widening gradually into the shape of a fly's wing; but always somewhat concave and snail-shaped. Gärtner conjectures, that the fruit, when complete, is composed of two nuts, horizontally opposite; and that it belongs to the order of contortæ.—Native of the East Indies, where it was found by Koenig.

VITO, CAPO DI SAN, the north-west point of the island of Sicily. Lat. 38. 12. N. long. 12. 41. E.

VITOLANO, an inland town of Naples, in the Principato Ultra. It has considerable manufactures of leather. Population 5500.

VITRE, a town of France, in Brittany, department of the Ille et Vilaine. It is situated on the banks of the Vilaine, hich is here a small stream; 20 miles east of Rennes. Population 9000.

VITREOUS, adj. [vitreus, Lat.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.—The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina. Ray.

VITREOUSNESS, s. Resemblance of glass.

VITREY, a town of France, department of the Upper Saone, with 1700 inhabitants; 16 miles east of Langres.

VITRIFICABLE, adj. Convertible into glass.

To VITRIFICATE, v. a. [vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.—We have metals vitricated, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass. Bacon.

VITRIFICATION, s. Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.—For vitrication likewise, what metals will endure it? Also because vitrication is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrication will admit of turning back again, and what not? Bacon.

To VITRIFY, v. a. [vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.—Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitricated, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough. Bacon.

To VITRIFY, v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.—Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitricate in the fire; for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it will turn to glass. Arbutnot.

VITRIOL, s. [vitriolum, Lat.] Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallic matter with the fossil acid salt. Woodward.

VITRIOLATE, or VITRIOLATED, adj. [from vitriolum, Lat.] Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.

VITRIOLIC, or VITRIOLOUS, adj. [from vitriolum, Lat.] Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.

VITRUVIUS (M. Pollio), a very distinguished writer on architecture, is supposed to have flourished in the times of of Julius Cæsar and Augustus: of his parentage and place of nativity nothing certain is known. Verona claims him; but the pretensions of Formia, now Mola de Gæta, are more generally allowed. Of his liberal education, and of his travels for information and improvement, we can have no doubt. By the exercise of his profession he had acquired some property; though perhaps it was not very considerable, as he says of himself that he did not, like the generality of architects, solicit employment. Under the emperor Augustus, or perhaps one of the succeeding princes, to whom he dedicated his work, he occupied the post of inspector of the military engines. But as Pliny the elder mentions his name, among other authors, in his "Natural History," composed in the reign of Vespasian, his work must have been published before that period. Of edifices planned or constructed by him, one only is mentioned by himself, which was a Basilica at Fano. His work was discovered in MS. by Poggio in the 15th century, and it has ever since been held in high estimation. The ten books into which it is distributed, not only treat on every thing belonging to buildings, public and private, their site, materials, forms, ornaments, conveniences, and the like; but include much of what would now be termed engineering, civil and military, and even digress to geometrical problems and astronomical inventions. Besides the instruction that may be derived from it, it has afforded much important matter to the antiquary relative to the state of art and science, and the detail of private life, among the Romans.

A magnificent edition of the Civil Architecture of Vitruvius, in two parts, royal folio, has been presented to the public by W. Wilkins, jun. A.M., F.R.S., &c.

VITRY, a town of France, department of the Pas de Calais, situated on the Scarpe; 4 miles south-west of Douay. Population 1800.

VITRY LE BRULE, a village of France, department of the Marne; 3 miles north-east of Vitry le François. Population 700.

VITRY, or VITRY LE FRANCOIS, a town of France, in Champagne; 20 miles south-east of Chalons. Population 7000.

VITTEAUX, a town of France, department of the Cote d'Or, on the Brenne; 31 miles west of Dijon. Population 2000.

VITTEL, a town of France, department of the Vosges, with 1300 inhabitants; 14 miles south-west of Mirecourt.

VITTENEZ, or CHTELNICZE, or TELNITZ, a town of Hungary; 13 miles north of Tynau. Population 1500.

VITTORIA, a town of Spain, the chief place of the province of Alava. It stands partly on the slope of a hill, partly at the entrance of a beautiful valley, watered by the Zadora. This town, or rather its neighbourhood, was the scene of a general engagement, on 21st June 1813, in which the French, under Jourdan, were defeated by the English under Lord Wellington; 27 miles south of Bilbao. Population 6500.

VITTORIA, a town of Sicily, in the Val di Noto, in the Contado di Modica; 40 miles west-by-south of Syracuse, and 45 south-south-west of Catania.

VITULINE, adj. [vitulinus, Lat.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal. Bailey.

VITUPERABLE, adj. [vituperabilis, Lat.] Blame-worthy. Cockeram.

To VITUPERATE, v. a. [vituperer, Fr.; vitupero, Lat.] To blame; to censure. Bullokar, and Cockeram.

VITUPERATION, s. [vituperation, Fr.; vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.

VITUPERATIVE, adj. Belonging to blame; containing censure.—The torrents of female eloquence, especially in the vituperative way, stun all opposition. Ld. Chesterfield.

VITUPERIOUS, adj. [vituperium, Lat.] Disgraceful. Not in use.—He is intitled with a vituperious and vile name. Shelton.

VIU, a town of Italy, in Piedmont; on the river Chiara; 4 miles north-west of Turin. Population 3000.

VIVA'CIOUS, adj. [vivax, Lat.] Long-lived.—Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that therefore men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe. Bentley.—Spritely; gay; active; lively.—People of a vivacious temper. Howell.

VIVA'CIOUSNESS, or VIVA'CITY, s. [vivacitè, Fr.] Liveliness; spriteliness.—He had a great vivacity in his countenance. Dryden.—Longevity; length of life. Power of living.

VIVARA, a small island of the Mediterranean, in the bay of Naples.

VIVARY, s. [vivarium, Lat.] A place of land or water, where living creatures are kept. In law, it signifies most commonly a park, warren, fish-pond, or piscary. Cowel.

That cage and vivary
Of fowls, and beasts.

Dönne.

VIVE, adj. [vivus, Lat.] Lively; forcible; pressing.—Sylvester gives it this true and vive description. Sir T. Herbert.

VIVELY, adv. In a lively manner; strongly; forcibly.—I see a thing vively presented on the stage, that the glass of custom (which is comedy) is so held up to me by the poet, as I can therein view the daily examples of men's lives, and images of truth. B. Jonson.

VIVENCY, s. [vivo, Lat.] Manner of supporting or continuing life or vegetation.—Although not in a distinct indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and descending constitutions, they are determined by seminalities. Brown.

VIVERO, a small town of Spain, in Galicia, with a capacious harbour; 23 miles north-north-west of Mondonedo.

VIVEROLS, a town of France, department of the Puy de Dome; 9 miles south-south-west of Ambert. Population 1100.

VIVERRA, in the Linnæan system, is a distinct genus of the order feræ (though united by Pennant and Shaw to the genus mustela; which see), the characters of which are, that it has six cutting-teeth, the intermediate being shorter; one of the canine teeth on each side longer than the rest; the grinders more than three; the tongue bending backwards, often aculeated; and the nails extended. Gmelin reckons twenty-seven species, which are as follow:—

1. Viverra ichneumon, or grey ichneumon.—With distant thumbs, and tail gradually tapering from a thick base, and tufted at the end. This is called the rat of Pharaoh.

2. Viverra mungo, or rufous-grey ichneumon.—With distant thumbs, and untufted tail, gradually tapering from a thick base: the Indian ichneumon of Edwards; the quill or quiopele of Ray; and the mangouste of Buffon. Shaw suggests that this may be a variety of the former; and he observes, that the ichneumon is a species of which there seem to be two distinct varieties, one of which (viz. the latter) is a native of India, and the other (or former) of Africa: they are alike in general appearance, but the Egyptian variety is considerably larger than the Indian, and has its tail tufted at the end, and thus differing from the Indian. In India, as well as in Egypt, the ichneumon is regarded as one of the most useful and estimable of animals; as it is an inveterate enemy to serpents, rats, and other noxious creatures which infest those regions. In India, it attacks with great eagerness and courage that most dreadful reptile, the cobra de capello, or hooded snake, and easily destroys it. For such purposes it is domesticated as the cat is in Europe. It is said to swim and dive occasionally, like the otter, and to continue for a long time under water.—This animal is found, not only in various parts of India, but in the Indian islands, as Ceylon and others. It occurs also in various parts of Africa besides Egypt, as in Barbary and the Cape of Good Hope, &c.

3. Viverra cafra, or yellowish-brown weasel.—With tail gradually tapering from a thick base, and black at the tip. This animal, resembling, in its general form, the pole-cat, and nearly nearly the length of the otter, with blackish feet and very short ears, covered with woolly fur, is a native of the Cape of Good Hope.

4. Viverra zenik, or four-toed grey weasel.—With ten transverse black bands on the body, and deep chesnut-coloured tail, black towards the tip; it is about the size of a water-rat, with a long snout, and two incisive and six canine teeth in each jaw; it has five toes on each foot; the claws on the fore-feet being very long, and almost straight; and those on the hind-feet are small and crooked.—It is described by Sonnerat as a Caffrarian species, being found in the country of the Hottentots.

5. Viverra tetractyla, or surikatte; the grey-brown weasel.—With four-toed feet, and long moveable snout, and ferruginous tail, black at the tip: the suricate of Buffon, and four-toed weasel of Pennant. It is an inhabitant of the Cape of Good Hope, where it is called meer-rat. It feeds on flesh, and preys on mice and other small animals. It commonly sits erect like the squirrel, and when pleased, makes a rattling noise with its tail, from which circumstance it has obtained, among the Dutch inhabitants of the Cape, the name of Klappermaus.—It is also found in the island of Java, where the Dutch call it Surikatje, on account of a peculiar acid scent which it is said to emit.

6. Viverra nasua, or rufous weasel.—With tail annulated with white, and lengthened moveable snout: the coati of Maregrave, and coati-mondi of others, and Brazilian weasel of Pennant. Its size is equal to that of a cat; its colour cinereous-brown, with a cast of reddish, and tail annulated with distinct circles of black. Like the pole-cat, it preys on the smaller quadrupeds, birds, &c.—It is a native of South America. Some animals are distinguished by a prolongation of the skin at the back of the head into several horny processes, about a quarter of an inch in length; and the upper part of the tongue is marked with several furrows, disposed so as to resemble the fibres of a leaf.

7. Viverra narica, or brownish weasel.—With tail of the same colour, and lengthened moveable snout: the coati-brun of Buffon, and dusky weasel of Pennant; reckoned a variety of the former both by him and Shaw. However, it is larger than the former, of a browner colour, and without any very distinct variegations on the tail. It feeds on animals and vegetables; goes into the water, and also climbs trees.—It is found in South America.

8. Viverra vulpecula, or dark chesnut-coloured weasel.—With lengthened snout: the coasse of Buffon, and stifling weasel of Pennant. It is about the size of the pole-cat, of a deep or blackish chocolate colour, that of the tail sometimes mixed with white.—This animal is a native of Mexico, and many other parts of America, and when attacked or irritated in pursuit, emits very powerfully offensive effluvia.

9. Viverra quasje, or chesnut-coloured weasel.—Beneath yellowish, with prolonged snout and annulated tail; is found at Surinam, and feeds on worms, insects, and fruits, and is fetid. Probably a variety of the coati-mondi, or Brazilian weasel.

10. Viverra putorius, or blackish weasel.—With five parallel, white dorsal stripes: the striated weasel of Pennant, and conepate of Buffon: supposed to be the female of the viverra vulpecula.—Found in North America. It is sometimes tamed, and rendered domestic. See MUSTELA Putorius.

11. Viverra conepati, or blackish weasel.—With two white dorsal lines extending along the tail.—It is a native of New Spain, and probably a variety of the preceding.

12. Viverra mephitic, or brown weasel.—With white back, marked with a longitudinal black stripe: the skunk weasel of Pennant, and chinche of Buffon. In manners and smell this species resembles the two preceding.

The viverra chinge of Molina, or black weasel, with a changeable cast of blue, and a row of white spots from head to tail, resembles in shape and general form the chinche just mentioned; but its colour is black.—It is a native of Chili. According to Molina, its smell proceeds from a greenish oil, ejected from a follicle or receptacle near the tail. The Indians are said to value the skin of this species on account of its beauty, and to use it for various purposes, quilts, &c.

13. Viverra zorilla.—Weasel variegated with black and white: the zorilla of Buffon; the mapurito and mafutiliqui of Gumilla, &c.; smaller than the three preceding.—A native of Peru and other parts of South America. The ground colour is black; the tail as bushy and elegant as that of the mephitic weasel. It possesses the same faculty with the three former species.

14. Viverra mapurito, or black weasel.—With snow-white band from the forehead to the middle of the back, and without any external ears. This is the viverra putorius of Mutis. Its tail is nine inches long, and whitish at the tip.—It inhabits New Spain, burrows under ground, feeds on worms and insects, and may, perhaps, be a variety of the mephitic weasel.

15. Viverra vittata, or blackish weasel.—With a broad white band from the forehead to each shoulder: the grison of Buffon.—A native of Surinam, and found at Pamplona, in New Spain, and probably in every part of South America.

16. Viverra Zeylanica, or cinereous weasel.—Mixed with brown; whitish beneath; resembling the martin, and suspected by Schreber to be the same with the Ceylonese dog of Vosmaer.—It is found in Ceylon, and probably in the Philippine isles.

17. Viverra Capensis, or black weasel.—With grey back edged with white. This is the stinkbinksen of Kolbe, and ratel weasel of Pennant. It is one of the larger animals of the genus; cinereous grey above, and brownish-black below, the two colours being separated along the whole length of the animal, from the base of the nose to the tail, by a stripe of black and white; when pursued it ejects a fetid liquor, accompanied with the intolerable smell of that of the American weasels, or skunks, and producing the same effects.—It is found at the Cape of Good Hope, and in Guinea.

18. Viverra mellivora.—With cinereous back, with a black lateral band; the abdomen black; the claws long, hollow beneath, and formed for burrowing. This is the ratel of Sparrmann, feeding principally on the honey of wild bees, and found about the Cape of Good Hope. This honey-weasel has a very tough and loose skin, with thick hair, supposed to be given to it as a natural defence against the sting of bees. Mr. Pennant seems to have confounded this animal with the viverra capensis; both species feed on honey, but Mr. Sparrmann does not mention any offensive effluvia in his description.

19. Viverra civetta, or ash-coloured weasel.—Spotted with black, with chesnut-coloured mane, and dusky tail spotted towards the base. This is the felis zibethi of Gesner and Aldrovand, and the civette of Buffon, and commonly known by the name of the civet cat.—It is a native of several parts of Africa and India. It is of a mild disposition, preys on birds and small quadrupeds, and produces the drug called civet; which see.

20. Viverra zibetha, or ash-grey weasel.—Striated with black undulations, and an annulated tail. It is the felis zibethi of Gesner, and zibet of Buffon. Pennant regards it as the same species with the former, but it is generally considered by modern naturalists as distinct.—It is found in India, and the Indian islands, and may be called the Indian, whilst the former is denominated the African, civet cat. In disposition and manners they both seem to agree; as well as in the secretion of the perfume before mentioned, which is collected from both animals in the same manner.

21. Viverra hermaphrodita, or dark-grey weasel.—With three black dorsal stripes, and long tail with black tip. Schreber has described this species from Dr. Pallas.—It is a native of Barbary.

22. Viverra genetta, or fulvous-grey weasel.—With the body marked with rows of black spots, and annulated tail. It is the genet of Buffon, and one of the most beautiful animals of the genus, and about the size of a small cat. Its disposition is mild, and it is easily tamed. In various parts of the east, and particularly at Constantinople, it is domesticated like the cat, and no less serviceable in clearing houses from rats and mice.

mice. It is a cleanly animal, and has a slight musky smell.—It is a native of the western parts of Asia, and is said likewise to occur in Spain; and in some parts of France. The French variety, however, is less elegantly and distinctly spotted than the Oriental genet; and Mr. Pennant considers it as a distinct species, under the name of "Pilosello."

23. Viverra fossa, or ash-coloured weasel.—Spotted with black, and with annulated tail. This is the fossane of Buffon, and so nearly allied to the genet; and of the same size, that it might be taken for a variety of the same animal. It is a native of Madagascar, Guinea, Bengal, CochinChina, and the Philippine islands: it is fierce, and with difficulty tamed. It destroys poultry like the common weasel: when young, it is said to be good food.

24. Viverra tigrina, or yellowish-grey weasel.—With brown variegations; annulated tail tipped with black or brown, and a black stripe from head to tail. This is the chat-bizaam of Vosmaer, and the blotched cat of Pennant; of the size of the cat, and of mild manners. Mr. Pennant has referred it to the genus felis, but Mr. Schrader makes it a viverra.—It is found at the Cape of Good Hope. Gmelin suggests that it may be a variety of viverra fossa.

25. Viverra caudivolvula, or yellow weasel.—Shaded with dusky, with prehensile tail: the yellow macuaco and yellow weasel of Pennant, and le kinkajou potot of Buffon. It is an animal of gentle manners, active and playful, and hangs by its tail occasionally, like the prehensile-tailed monkeys. Supposed to be a native of Jamaica. The kinkajou of Buffon is supposed by Pennant to be a distinct species, the Mexican weasel.—It was brought from New Spain; and is described as fond of vegetables of various kinds, and delighted with sugar and different sweets; and would seize on birds, and suck the blood without tearing its prey. It slept much by day, and was lively during the night; exhibited the actions of a monkey, and had various cries, sometimes a kind of barking note, at other times hissing, or variously modified.

26. Viverra fasciata, or grey weasel.—With six longitudinal black bands, beneath white; and the hairs of the tail long, black and reddish. This is the chat sauvage à bandes noires des Indes of Sonnerat, who first described and figured it.—It is a native of India.

27. Viverra Malaccensis, or grey weasel.—Dotted above with black, with four round spots above the eyes, and three black bands on the neck and rump, and long tail annulated with black.—It is a native of Malacca, described by Sonnerat; of the size of a domestic cat, and much allied to the genet and the fossane. It lives by chace, is nimble in climbing trees, and so fierce, that if it be only wounded when shot, it will turn back and attack the aggressor. It diffuses a powerful musky odour, from a receptacle like that of the civet cat. The Malays collect the fluid there secreted, and pretend that it is stimulant and stomachic. It is much esteemed for these qualities by the Chinese, who purchase it of the Malays. Of this species there are some varieties.

For other species of weasel, we refer to MUSTELA.

VIVES, s. A distemper among horses.—Vives is much like the strangles; and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses while they are at grass, by feeding with their heads downwards, by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ears. Farrier's Dict.

VIVES (Joannes Ludovicus), was born at Valencia, in Spain, in 1492, and, having laid the foundation of literature in his own country, went to Paris, where he studied the fashionable scholastic philosophy, which he afterwards condemned. From Paris he removed to Louvain, devoting himself there to the study of Greek and Latin literature, and publishing a work entitled "Contra Pseudo-Dialecticos." In this university he became professor of belles-lettres, and acquired a degree of reputation which caused him to be chosen preceptor to William de Croy, afterwards cardinal. He also studied divinity, and wrote a commentary on St. August-tine's book "De Civitate Dei," which he dedicated, in 1522, to Henry VIII, king of England. In consequence of this work he received an invitation, in 1523, to undertake the instruction of the Princess Mary, which he accepted. During his residence in England, he composed, for the use of his pupil, a tract, "De Ratione studii puerilis," and, by command of Queen Catharine, his treatise "De Institutione Fœminæ Christianæ." At Oxford, where he spent much of his time, he read lectures on law and also in the classics, and was admitted to the degree of LL.D. Vives forfeited the king's regard by opposing, in conversation and writing, the divorce of Queen Catharine, and was also confined for six months in prison. As soon as he was set at liberty he left England, and settled at Bruges, where he married. He died after he had completed his forty-eighth year. His works in divinity were numerous. The principal of his grammatical and critical works were his "Exercitatio Linguae Latinæ;" "De Corruptis Artibus;" "De tradendis disciplinis." Brucker by Enfield.

VIVIANI (Vincenzio), an eminent mathematician, was born of noble parents, at Florence, in the year 1622. Manifesting, at an early period, his genius for mathematics, he was recommended by Ferdinand II. Grand Duke of Tuscany, to Galileo, under whose tuition he made very rapid progress in geometry and the new philosophy. After his death, he was invited by Torricelli to assist him in his experiments on the barometer. But he was chiefly devoted to the study of geometry, and his attention was particularly directed to the ancient geometers. His first object, at the age of twenty-three years, was to supply the last work of a contemporary of Euclid, "De Locis Solidis;" and he then proceeded to accomplish the same design with regard to the "Conics of Apollonius." Viviani projected the restoration of the fifth book; with this view he prosecuted his labour with great diligence; and, in the year 1659, published his divination of Apollonius. When this work was afterwards compared with that of the Greek mathematician, it was discovered that Viviani had not only formed new theories, but that he had discovered many new properties of the conic sections, so that his work may be considered as a supplement to the ancient theory of these curves. In the years 1664 and 1665 he was engaged, in concurrence with Cassini, in concerting means for preventing the inundations of the Tiber, by altering the course of certain rivers: and in the survey of the country for this purpose, they were led to a variety of collateral observations on the insects found in the gall-nut, on marine shells, partly petrified and partly in their natural state, dug up in the mountains, and also on Etruscan vases and inscriptions. In 1666, the Grand Duke of Tuscany honoured Viviani with the title of his mathematician, which had been previously enjoyed by Galileo; and in 1673 he commenced printing the work of Aristeus, an ancient mathematician, the restoration of which he had, at an early period of his life, contemplated: but infirmities, and other engagements, prevented his proceeding with it. In the following year he published, in a small quarto, some works of Galileo, and particularly his Treatise on Proportion, for illustrating the fifth book of Euclid. In 1676, three problems were proposed by M. de Comiers, provost of the collegiate church of Ternant, two of which related to the trisection of an angle, for the solution of which Viviani had discovered three methods, which he now determined to publish. His work on this subject, dedicated to the memory of his friend Chapelain, appeared in 1677. In 1692 he proposed, in the Acts of Leipsic, a problem relating to the art of piercing an hemispherical arch with four equal windows, in such a manner that the remainder of the surface should be absolutely squareable. This problem, which he called a geometrical enigma, was solved by Leibnitz, J. Bernouilli at Basle, the Marquis de l'Hospital in France, and by Dr. Wallis and David Gregory in England. Viviani himself published the problem, and his own geometrical solution of it, in a work, in which he treats, both as a geometer and architect, of the arches of the ancient Romans, and proposes a new arch to be called the Florentine. He, in 1701, published his divination of Aristeus, in three books. Part of his pension was devoted by him to the construction of a magnificent edifice at Florence,

which

VIVERRA, URSUS.

1. V. Civetta. 2. V. Ichneumon. 3. V. Americanus. 4. U. Meles. 5. U. Gulo.

which he called "Ædes a Deo data," and over the gate he placed a bust of Galileo, with several inscriptions in honour of him. In his old age he amused himself with the solution of several problems relating to chances on dice. He also published, for facilitating the study of geometry, an edition of Euclid's Elements, both plane and solid. After a life of usefulness and honour, prolonged to his 81st year, he died of apoplexy, in October, 1703.

VIVID, adj. [vividus, Lat.] Lively; quick; striking. Ah! what avail his glossy varying dyes?
The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,
His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold? Pope.

Spritely; active.—Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid, the power of memory may lose its improvement. Watts.

VIVIDLY, adv. With life; with quickness; with strength.—In the moon we can with excellent telescopes discern many hills and valleys, whereof some are more and some less vividly illustrated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade. Boyle.

VIVIDNESS, s. Life; vigour; quickness.
VIVIERS, a town of France, situated on the Rhone; 6 miles south-west of Montelimart. Population 2000.

VIVIFICAL, adj. [vivificus, Lat.] Giving life. Bailey.
To VIVIFICATE, v. a. [vivifico, Lat.] To make alive; to inform with life; to animate.—God vivificates and animates the whole world. Morc.—To remove from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential properties. A chemical term.

VIVIFICATION, s. [vivification, Fr.] The act of giving of life.—If that motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration. Bacon.

VIVIFICATIVE, adj. Able to animate.—That lower vivificative principle of his soul did grow so strong, and did so vigorously and with such exultant sympathy and joy actuate his vehicle. More.

VIVIFIC, adj. [vivificus, Lat.] Giving life; making alive.—Without the sun's salutary and vivific beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death. Ray.

To VIVIFY, v. a. [vivus and facio, Lat.] To make alive; to animate; to endue with life.—It hath been observed by the antients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would shew, that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify. Bacon.

VIVIPAROUS, adj. [vivus and pario, Lat.] Bringing forth the young alive: opposed to oviparous.—When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they give suck; but whereas no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a viviparous exclusion. Brown.

VIVONNE, a town of France, department of the Vienne, on the Clain; 12 miles south-by-west of Poitiers. Population 2100.

VIUZ EN SALLAZ, a town of Savoy, district of Boneville. Population 1800.

VIX, a town of France, department of La Vendee; 9 miles south of Fontenay. Population 2100.

VIXEN, s. [Vixen, or "fixen, is the name of a she-fox, otherwise and more anciently foxin. It is in reproach applied to a woman whose nature and condition is thereby compared to the she-fox." Verstegan, ch. 10. Dr. Johnson.—Vixen is a fox's cub, without regard to sex; and the word is applied to a snarling, quarrelsome man, as well as woman; as the example from Barrow, now added, shows. Serenius carries the word to the Goth. vigan, or wigan, to fight.] A froward, quarrelsome person.

O! when she's angry, she's keen and shrewd;
She was a vixen, when she went to school;
And though she be but little, she is fierce. Shakspeare.

VIXENLY, adj. Having the qualities or manner of a vixen.—It was not a confirmation of him, it was only (which in such a vixenly Pope was a great favor), a forbearance to quarrel with the Bishop, as not duly ordained. Barrow.

VIZ, adv. [This word is videlicet, written with a contraction.] To wit; that is. A barbarous form of an unnecessary word, says Johnson.

That which so oft by sundry writers,
Has been apply'd to almost all fighters,
More justly may be ascribed to this,
Than any other warrior, viz.
None ever acted both parts bolder,
Both of a chieftain and a soldier.

Hudibras.

VIZAN, a town of France, department of the Vaucluse, with 1800 inhabitants.

VIZARD, s. [visiere, Fr. See VISOR.] A mask used for disguise.—He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask, but upon a nearer view he found, that she held her vizard in her hand. Addison.

To VIZARD, v. a. [from the noun.] To mask.

Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shakspeare.

VIZIER, s. [properly vazir.] The prime minister of the Turkish empire.—He made him vizier, which is the chief of all the bassas. Knolles.

VIZILLE, a town of France, department of the Isere; 9 miles south-south-east of Grenoble. Population 1600.

VIZZINI, an inland town of Sicily, in the Val di Noto, situated in a mountainous district; 28 miles south-west of Catania. Population 8000.

UJ, or VI, a Hungarian word meaning new; and names of places in that country, beginning with Uj, or Vi, may be sought for under the part of the name that follows: thus Ujarad, see ARAD, NEW; Ujpalanka, see PALANKA.

UJBANJA, or KONIGSBERG, a small town in the west of Hungary, on the Gran, situated in a valley surrounded by three mountains. Population 3800; 67 miles north-north-west of Buda. Lat. 48. 25. 42. N. long. 18. 37. 55. E.

UJEST, a small town of Prussian Silesia; 25 miles south-south-east of Oppeln. Population 1100.

UJHELI, or SATORALYA, a town of the north-east of Hungary, and the capital of the county of Szemplin, on the Ronya. It has 6600 inhabitants; 27 miles south-south-east of Caschau, and 21 north-north-east of Tokay. Lat. 48. 24. N. long. 21. 39. 7. E.

UJLAK, a small town in the north-west of Hungary; 6 miles west of Neutra.

UJVAROS, a small town in the interior of Hungary; 15 miles west-north-west of Debreczin.

UJVAROS, a small town in the north-east of Hungary, near the river Tar, in the county of Szathmar.

UKENSKOI, a town of Asiatic Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, at the confluence of the Irtysh and the Obi; 196 miles north of Tobolsk.

UKIKITSCHA, a small river of Irkoutsk, in Asiatic Russia, which falls into the Olenek.

UKINSKOL, a village of Kamschatka; 80 miles north of Niznei-Kamtchatsk.

UKINSKOL, a cape of Asiatic Russia, on the eastern coast of Kamschatka; 60 miles north-east of Oudinskoi.

UKIPEN, a small island in the North Pacific ocean, so called by the Russians, probably the same with that called Sledge island by Captain Cook. Lat. 64. 22. N. long. 211. E.

UKKAS, a village of Algiers, in Northern Africa; 10 miles west of Tinsa.

UKRAINE, an extensive country in the south-east of Russian Poland, which, since the late division of the Russian empire, forms the four governments of Kiev, Podolia, Poltava, and Charkov. This country is situated between the 48th and 52d degree of north latitude, corresponding to the parallels of the north of France and central part of England, but with a very different temperature. The characteristics of the climate are those of the south of European Russia generally; in summer great heat, in winter intense cold.

The chief town of Ukraine is Kiev, once the capital of the the Russian dominions in their circumscribed state, and previous to the founding of Moscow. The soil, population, and state of employment in the governments, is more particularly described under Kiev, Podolia, Charkov and Poltava.

VLAARDINGEN, a town of the Netherlands, province of South Holland, on the Maese, with 6000 inhabitants; 6 miles west-by-south of Rotterdam.

VLADIMIR, a government of European Russia, lying to the east of the government of Moscow. Its area is about 19,500 square miles; its population nearly 1,000,000. The government is divided into 13 circles.

VLADIMIR, a town of European Russia, on the river Kliasma, the capital of a government or province, and a bishop's see; 112 miles east-by-north of Moscow, and 500 south-east of St. Petersburg. Population 3000.

ULADISLAUS, the name of several Polish kings. See POLAND.

ULANOW, a small town of Austrian Galicia, on the river San; 22 miles south-east of Sandomir.

U'LAN'S, s. A certain description of militia among the modern Tartars.

ULBO, a small island of Dalmatia, at the entrance of the canal of Zara; 4 miles west of Pago.

ULCEBY, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 2½ miles south-west of Alford.—2nd, A parish in the same county; 7 miles south-east of Barton-upon-Humber. Population 446.

U'LCER, s. [ulcus, Lat.] A sore of continuance; not a new wound.

Thou answer'st, she is fair;

Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart

Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice!

Shakespeare.

To U'LCERATE, v. n. To turn to an ulcer.

To U'LCERATE, v. a. [ulcerer, Fr.; ulcero, Lat.] To disease with sores.—Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated; others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey.

U'LCERATION, s. [ulceratio, from ulcero, Lat.] The act of breaking into ulcers.—Ulcer; sore.—The effects of mercury on ulcerations are manifest. Arbutnot.

U'LCERED, adj. [ulceré, Fr.] Grown by time from a hurt to an ulcer.—Breathings, hard drawn, their ulcer'd palates tear. May.

U'LCEROUS, adj. [ulcrosus, Lat.] Afflicted with old sores.

Strangely visited people,
All'sworn and ulc'rous, he cures.

Shakespeare.

U'LCEROUSNESS, s. The state of being ulcerous.

ULCOMBE, a parish of England, in Kent; 6½ miles south-east-by-east of Maidstone. Population 562.

ULDALE, a parish of England, in Cumberland, on the river Eden; 10½ miles north-by-west of Keswick.

ULEA, a river of Finland, which flows into the gulf of Bothnia, in lat. 65. 2. N. long. 25. 22. E. There is also a lake of this name in the same province, district of Canjana.

ULEABORG, an extensive province, situated to the north of Finland, and extending along the south coast of the gulf of Bothnia. See FINLAND, and SWEDEN.

ULEABORG, or ULEA, a small town, the capital of the preceding province, situated on a peninsula where the river Ulea falls into the gulf of Bothnia. It contains about 3500 inhabitants.

ULEMAS, the name by which the ministers and interpreters of religion are distinguished in the Ottoman empire.

ULEX [the name of a shrub in Pliny, the ashes of which were used as a lye in separating gold from the substances with which it was mixed], in Botany, a genus of the class diadelphia, order decandria, natural order of papilionaceæ or leguminosæ.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth two-leaved, permanent; leaflets ovate-oblong, concave, straight, equal, a little shorter than the keel; upper leaflet two-toothed, lower three-toothed. Corolla papilionaceous, five-petalled. Standard obcordate, emarginate, erect, very large. Wings oblong, obtuse, shorter than the standard. Keel two-petalled, straight, obtuse, converging by the lower margin. Stamina: filaments diadelphous, simple and nine-cleft. Anthers simple. Pistil: germ oblong, cylindrical, hirsute. Style filiform, rising. Stigma obtuse, very small. Pericarp: legume oblong, turgid, scarcely longer than the calyx, straight, one-celled, two-valved. Seeds few, roundish, emarginate.—Essential Character. Calyx two-leaved. Legume scarcely longer than the calyx. Filaments all connected.

1. Ulex Europæus, common furze, whin, or gorse.—Calyx-teeth obsolete, converging; bractes ovate, lax; branchlets erect—This shrub, so well known in England, has its branches very close, deeply furrowed, woolly or hirsute, full of thorns, which are stretched out, branched, angular, very sharp, smooth, evergreen, leafy, frequently flower-bearing, awl-shaped, a little bowed downwards, woolly at the base, yellow at the ends. Leaves at the base of the spines and spinules, solitary, awl-shaped, terminating in sharp yellowish thorny points, somewhat rugged, often hirsute, deciduous. Peduncles axillary, single or two together, one-flowered, villose.—Native of Britain, Denmark, Brabant, France, Portugal, and some parts of Germany, on dry, gravelly, and sandy heaths and commons.

2. Ulex nanus, or dwarf furze.—Calyx-teeth lanceolate, distant; bractes minute, pressed close; branchlets decumbent.

3. Ulex Capensis.—Leaves solitary, obtuse; spines simple, terminating.—Native of the Cape of Good Hope, where it usually grows to the height of five or six feet.

Propagation and Culture.—1st and 2d. These shrubs propagate themselves very plentifully by seeds, which when ripe are cast out of the pods to a considerable distance, and soon vegetate.

3d. This is preserved in the greenhouse or dry stove with other hardy exotics. It is difficult to increase either by layers or cuttings.

ULEY, a populous village and parish of England in the county of Gloucester. Population 1912; 2 miles east of Dursley, and 151 west of London.

ULFA, a small town of the west of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; 15 miles east-south-east of Giessen, with 900 inhabitants.

ULGHAM, a township of England, in Northumberland; 4 miles north-east-by-north of Morpeth.

VLIE, or FLIE, the passage from the Zuyder Zee into the German ocean, between the islands of Schelling and Vlieland.

VLIJGER (Simon de), was born at Amsterdam about the year 1612. It is not known by whom this artist was educated, but his pictures are very deservedly esteemed for their force and brilliancy. He had the honour to be the instructor of the younger Vandeyelde; and though the delicacy of pencil enjoyed by the pupil surpassed that of the master, yet the works of the latter retain their power, and have a character of their own, which gives them a place in the best collections.

VLIELAND, a small island of Holland, at the entrance of the Zuyder Zee, about eight miles long and three broad. It had formerly two villages, East and West Vlieland, but the latter is now covered by the sea; 5 miles north from the Texel. Population 800.

VLIERINGEN, a large village, or rather town of the Netherlands, in the province of South Brabant. Population 3800.

ULIETEA, one of the Society islands, in the south Pacific ocean. It is wholly surrounded by reefs, interspersed with small islands, and forming several harbours. It is less populous and fertile than Huaheine, though above twice its extent, and more resembling Otaheite in appearance; but, like the former, it has several salt marshes or lagoons. The inhabitants are in general smaller and darker than those of the preceding islands; in manners they are similar. The south south extremity of the island lies in lat. 16. 55. S. long. 181. 29. W.

ULGINOUS, adj. [uliginosus, Lat.] Slimy; muddy.—The uliginous lacteous matter taken notice of in the coral fishings upon the coast of Italy, was only a collection of the corallin particles. Woodward.

ULLA, a river in the north-west of Spain, on the west coast of Galicia.

ULLAGE, s. [uligo, Lat., oozeiness.] The quantity of fluid which a cask wants of being full, in consequence of the oozing of the liquor. Malone.

ULLAPOOL, a village of Scotland, on the west coast of Ross-shire; 61 miles west-by-north of Inverness, situated on Loch Broom. It is one of the fishing stations belonging to the British Society.

ULLAPOOL, a small river of Scotland, in Ross-shire, which rises in the mountains on the borders of Sutherland, and falls into Loch Broom, at the village of Ullapool. It abounds with salmon.

ULLENHALL, a hamlet of England, in Warwickshire; 2½ miles north-west-by-west of Henly-in-Arden. Population 393.

ULLERSDORF, a village of Prussian Silesia, near Lowenburg, with 1000 inhabitants.

ULLERSDORF, a village of Prussian Silesia, in the county of Glatz, with 900 inhabitants.

ULLESKELFE, a township of England, West Riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles south-east-by-south of Tadcaster.

ULLESTHORPE, a township of England, in Leicestershire; 3½ miles north-west of Lutterworth. Population 470.

ULLEY, a township of England, West Riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles south-east of Rotherham.

ULLINGSWICK, a parish of England, in Herefordshire; 5 miles south-west-by-west of Bromyard.

ULLINGTON, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Pebworth, Gloucestershire.

ULLOA (Antonio di), a celebrated naval officer of Spain, was born at Seville in the year 1716, and so distinguished by talents and knowledge, that at the age of eighteen years he was appointed to accompany his friend Don George Juan to South America, to co-operate with the academicians Condamine, Bouguer, and Godin, in measuring a degree of the meridian. On the 26th of May, 1735, he sailed for Peru, and remained at Quito till the measurement was completed on the 12th of May, 1744. On his return home in a French ship he was captured, in August 1745, by two English men-of-war, and from Louisburg, in the island of Cape Breton, whither he was carried, he proceeded to London, where he was kindly received, particularly by Martin Folkes, Esq., president of the Royal Society, of which he was admitted a member in December 1746. After his arrival in Spain, he and his friend Don Juan published an account of the voyage to America, in five small folio volumes, entitled "Relacion historica del Viage de Orden de S. Mag. para medir algunos Grados de Meridiano," Mad. 1748. Translations of this work were printed, one in German, at Leipsic, and one in English, at London, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1758. Another in French, entitled "Voyage historique de l'Amérique Meridionale," Amst. 1757, 2 vols. 4to. is considered as the most complete, as the author approved the undertaking. His next object was to collect information with regard to the state of the arts and sciences, &c. in various parts of Europe, and with this view he made a tour, under the appointment of Ferdinand VI., through England, France, Holland, and various districts of Germany; and the result of this tour was, that many young Spaniards were sent at the public expence to France, Holland, Geneva, and Italy, to acquire a knowledge of medicine, surgery, engraving, watch-making, and various other arts in which the Spaniards were at that time very deficient. Ulloa was also active in promoting the royal woollen manufactories, and in organizing the colleges of history and surgery; he also superintended and completed the canals and basons both at Carthage and Ferrol. The famous quicksilver mines of Almaden were objects of his peculiar attention; and in 1759 he was deputed to visit those of Guancavellica in Peru. From this service, he was removed, in 1766, to the government of Louisiana, which had been ceded to Spain, but the disturbances that ensued obliged him very soon to abandon that station. In 1776 he commanded the galleon fleet that sailed from Cadiz to Mexico, and having been charged with neglect in that service, he was honourably acquitted by a council of war at Cadiz. His second great work, which was a Physical and Historical Account of the Southern and North-eastern Part of America, and which contained a curious disquisition on the peopling of America, was published at Madrid, 4to. in 1772, under the title of "Entretenimientos Physicos-Historicos sobre la America Meridional y Septentrional Oriental:" the disquisition is entitled "Sobre el Modo en que passaron los primeros Pobladores." This work was translated into German by professor Diez, and published at Leipsic in 1781, 1782, in 2 vols. 8vo., and was enriched by the valuable additions of professor Schneider. Dr. Robertson estimated them so highly, that he procured a translation of them into English for his own use.

Another eminent Spaniard related to the subject of this article, Don Bernard di Ulloa, published in 1740 an interesting work, entitled "Restablecimiento de las Fabricas y Comercio Maritimo di Espagna," which was translated into French in 1743, and which contains several extracts from the work of Don Ant. Ulloa. This latter died in the isle de Leon, near Cadiz, on the 5th of July, 1795. The Transactions of the Royal Society contain several papers which he communicated to the society. He was a knight and commander of the order of St. Jago, lieutenant-general of the royal navy of Spain, and director-general of the Spanish marine. Gen. Biog.

ULLOCK, a hamlet of England, in Cumberland; 6 miles south-west-by-south of Cockermouth.

ULLWELL, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Swanage, Dorsetshire.

ULM, a considerable town in the south-west of Germany, in Wirtemberg, situated on the banks of the Danube at the spot where it receives the small river Blau, which flows through the town. It contains 15,000 inhabitants, and bears many marks of the antique, consisting of crooked streets, and of houses in the old German style.

Ulm has long been a free city of the empire, but suffered in its commercial prosperity, from the aristocratic spirit of a few families who engrossed the management of the town revenues, and retained them long in their hands, without rendering any account to the citizens at large. It was not till after a kind of insurrection, and at so late a date as 1795, that the citizens obtained a satisfactory plan of administration; 44 miles south-east of Stutgard, and 40 west of Augsburg. Lat. 48. 23. 45. N. long. 9. 59. 7. E.

ULM, or WALD ULM, a small town of the west of Germany, in Baden; 15 miles east of Strasburg. Population 900.

ULMERFELD, a small town of Lower Austria, on the Ips; 8 miles north of Waidhofen.

ULMHAUSEN, a large village of the west of Germany, in Wirtemberg; 1 mile from Goppingen, noted for its mineral-springs.

ULMUS [derivation unknown; in Greek Πτελεα], in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order digynia, natural order of scabridæ.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leaved, turbinate, wrinkled; border five-cleft, erect, coloured within, permanent. Corolla none. Stamina: filaments five (sometimes four or eight), awl-shaped, twice as long as the calyx. Anthers four-grooved, erect, short. Pistil: germ orbicular, erect. Styles two, shorter than the stamens, reflexed. Stigmas pubescent. Pericarp: berry oval, large, juiceless, compressed, membranaceous-winged, one-celled. Seed one, roundish, slightly compressed.—Essential Character. Calyx five-cleft, inferior, permanent. Corolla none. Capsule membranaceous, compressed flat, one-seeded.

1. Ulmus campestris, or common elm.—Leaves doubly-serrate rugged, unequal at the base. Bark cloven, on the branches branches corky, rugged on both sides, villose beneath along the small veins. Flowers from their proper gems, clustered, scarcely peduncled, numerous, brownish-flesh coloured. Capsules oblong. Timber hard, tough. The flowers have a violet smell. This elm is a very great high tree. The bark of the young trees, and the boughs of the elder trees are smooth and very tough.—Native of Europe and Barbary.

Queen Elizabeth is said to have planted an elm with her own hand at Chelsea, where her father had a palace in which she was brought up when an infant. It went always by her name, and was felled, to the great regret of the neighbourhood, on the 11th November, 1745, and sold for a guinea by Sir Hans Sloane, Bart. lord of the manor. It was thirteen feet in circumference at bottom, and six feet six inches at the height of forty-four feet: the height was one hundred and ten feet, of which fifteen feet at the top were decayed, the tree having suffered by the hard frost in 1739—40.

The elm naturally grows upright; and, when it meets with a soil it loves, rises higher than the generality of trees; and, after it has assumed the dignity and hoary roughness of age, few of its forest brethren, though, properly speaking, it is not a forester, excel it in grandeur and beauty. The character of the elm, in its skeleton, partakes much of the oak; so much, that when it is rough and old, it may easily, at a little distance, be mistaken for an oak. In full foliage its character is better marked; and no tree is better adapted to receive grand masses of light; nor is its foliage, shadowing as it is, of the heavy kind. Its leaves are small, and this gives it a natural lightness; it commonly hangs loosely, and is, in general, very picturesque.

The narrow-leaved elm is like the other, but much lesser and lower.

2. Ulmus suberosa, or Dutch elm.—Leaves doubly serrate, somewhat unequal at the base; flowers subsessile, conglomerate, four-stamened; fruits smooth; bark of the branchlets corky-winged. The cork-barked, or, as we commonly call it, the Dutch elm, because it was introduced from Holland at the beginning of King William's reign, is chiefly remarkable for its quick growth, and fungous rough bark.—Native of Europe. The wood is of very inferior quality. There are three varieties.

3. Ulmus montana, broad-leaved elm, or wych-hasel.—Leaves doubly-serrate, acuminate, unequal at the base, flowers peduncled, diffused. The broad-leaved elm, called also the wych-hasel, has the bark of the branchlets smooth and even. The leaves are wider than in the preceding, less harsh and acuminate. The wood is less solid. The trunk soon divides into long wide-spreading winged branches; and when at its full growth seldom rises to above one-third of the height of the campestris.—It is found in shady lanes and the outskirts of woods in most parts of England, and seems clearly to be indigenous.

The smooth-leaved elm is in bigness and height like the first, but the boughs grow as those of the wych-hasel do, hanging more downwards than those of the common elm.

Mr. Hanbury enumerates seven sorts of the European elm:—The true English elm, the narrow-leaved Cornish elm, the Dutch elm, the black Worcestershire elm, the narrow-leaved wych elm, the broad-leaved wych elm, the upright wych elm. Experience, however, teaches us that from the difference of soil and situation the varieties are very numerous.

4. Ulmus Americana, or American elm.—Leaves equally serrate, unequal at the base. Three varieties of the American elm are mentioned in the catalogue of the Royal Botanic Garden at Kew. 1. The red or Canada elm, which grows in its native country to a vast size. 2. The white elm is so named from the whiteness of the branches. 3. The drooping or weeping elm; distinguished by its oblong smoothish leaves, and its pendent branches. The American differs from the European elm in having the leaves equally serrate.—Native of the forests of Virginia and other parts of North America.

5. Ulmus nemoralis, or hornbeam-leaved elm.—Leaves oblong, smoothish, equally serrate, almost equal at the base; flowers fessile.—The hornbeam-leaved elm is also a native of North America.

6. Ulmus pumila, or dwarf elm.—Leaves equally serrate, equal at the base. In southern Russia, the ulmus pumila often contends with the oak in stature. The branches are more slender than in the other species, divaricating, and of a grayish ash-colour. Wood very hard and tough, gray, remarkably waved with transverse lines of a deeper colour, larger fibred, and, when exposed to the air, becomes yellower than oak, and is preferable to it. The ashes exported from Riga under the name of Waidasche are made entirely from the wood of this and other elms, burnt in brick furnaces. The root is beautifully variegated and fit for the use of the turner.

7. Ulmus integrifolia, or entire-leaved elm.—Leaves quite entire. Trunk straight and high.—This whole-leaved elm is a very large timber tree, a native of the Circar mountains; called by the Telingas Naulie.

Propagation and Culture.—All the sorts of elm may be either propagated by layers or suckers taken from the roots of the old trees, the latter of which is generally practised by the nursery gardeners; but as these are often cut up with indifferent roots, they often miscarry, and render the success doubtful; whereas those which are propagated by layers are in no hazard, and always make better roots, and come on faster than the other. When these layers are well rooted, which will be in one year, they should be taken off, and transplanted out into a nursery, which should be upon a good soil, and well prepared. The plants should be planted in rows about four feet asunder, and two feet distance plant from plant in the rows. This should be done in autumn as soon as the leaves begin to decay. In this nursery they may remain four or five years, observing constantly to dig the ground between them every spring, and to trim them, which will promote their growth, and render them strong enough to transplant out where they are to remain, in the time before mentioned.

All sorts of elms, the wych excepted, on account of the large arms which it throws out, are very proper to plant in hedge-rows, upon the borders of fields, where they will thrive much better than when planted in a wood, or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; but when these trees are transplanted out upon banks after this manner, the banks should be well wrought, and cleared from all other roots, otherwise the plants, being taken from a better soil, will not make much progress in these places. About Michaelmas will be a good time for this work.

These trees are also proper to plant at a distance from a garden or building to break the violence of winds, for which purpose there is not any tree more useful, for they may be trained up in form of a hedge, keeping them cut every year, which will cause them to grow very close and handsome to the height of forty or fifty feet, and be a great protection against the fury of winds; but they should not be planted too near a garden, where fruit trees or other plants are placed, because the roots of the elms run superficially near the top of the ground to a great distance, and will intermix with the roots of the other trees, and deprive them of nourishment; nor should they be planted near gravel or grass walks, which are designed to be well kept, because the roots will run into them, and send forth suckers in great plenty, which will deface the walks, and render them unsightly.

All sorts of elms may also be increased by grafting upon the broad-leaved wych elm. These may be raised from seed, and when they have been two years in the nursery will be of proper size to receive the graft. The time for felling the elm is from November and December to February.

ULNESWALTON, a township of England, in Lancashire; 5 miles west-by-north of Chorley. Population 529.

VLODZIMIRZ, or VLADIMIR, a town of European Russia, in the government of Volhynia, on the river Lug. It contains 3200 inhabitants; 50 miles east of Zamosc, in Poland.

VLODZIMIRZETZ,

VLODZIMIRZETZ, a small town of Russia, in the government of Volhynia, on the river Styr; 155 miles west-north-west of Zytomiers.

VLOTHO, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Ravensburg, with 1400 inhabitants; 6 miles south of Minden.

ULPHA, a township of England, in Cumberland, on the river Dudden; 8 miles east-by-south of Ravenglass.—A township in Westmoreland; 11 miles south-south-west of Kendal.

ULPIANUS (Domitius), an eminent lawyer, was a native of Tyre, a disciple of Papinian, and tutor, as well as friend and minister, of the Roman emperor Alexander. Heliogabalus exiled him from the court on account of his virtues, but when his pupil became emperor he was recalled, and placed at the head of sixteen senators, who formed a council of state. He was also secretary of state and inspector over the two pretorian prefects, whose jealousy of his authority produced a mutiny among the soldiery, that proved fatal to themselves; and occasioned his advancement to the dignity of sole prefect. His wise and virtuous administration engaged universal esteem, until the emperor, probably at his suggestion, undertook to reform the army. The soldiers mutinied, and occasioned, for three days, a kind of civil war at Rome, which terminated in the massacre of Ulpian, A. D. 228, notwithstanding all the attempts of the emperor and his mother Mammæa to save him. The Heathen writers have concurred in their eulogies of Ulpian, but the Christians have reproached him, not unjustly, as their enemy; for, observing the emperor's favourable inclination to them, he collected all the decrees and edicts of the preceding sovereigns against them. This hostility is ascribed to his professional attachment to the laws. Of Ulpian's writings there are extant twenty-nine titles of fragments, which are annexed to some editions of the civil law. Crevier. Gibbon's Hist.

ULRICAHAM, formerly called Bogesund, a petty town in the south-west of Sweden, in West Gothland, province of Elfsborg. Population only 800.

ULRICHS-KIRCHEN, a small town of Germany, in Lower Austria; 12 miles north of Vienna.

ULRICHSTEIN, a small town of the west of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; 21 miles west of Fulda, and 28 east of Wetzlar.

ULROME, a township of England, East Riding of Yorkshire; 8½ miles south-by-west of Bridlington.

ULSTER, a province of Ireland, containing the northern counties of Donegal, Londonderry, Antrim, Tyrone, Fermanagh, Monaghan, Armagh, Down, and Cavan.

ULSTER, a county of the United States, in New York, bounded north by Greene county, east by Hudson, south by Orange county, south-west by Sullivan county, and north-west by Delaware county. The surface of the country is considerably broken by the Catskill mountains. The county is well watered. The Hudson forms the eastern boundary, and the small streams are numerous.

ULSTER, a township of the United States, in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania.

ULSWATER, a lake of England, situated partly in Westmoreland, and partly in Cumberland; 10 miles north of Ambleside, and 14 south-west of Penrith. Its length is about eight miles. It is of a sufficient depth for breeding char; and abounds with a variety of other fish. One of the amusements on this lake consists in the firing of guns, or small cannon, in certain situations. The report is reverberated among the adjacent rocks and caverns, with every variety of sound; at one time dying away, and again returning with a noise like thunder. The echo is repeated seven times distinctly.

ULTERIOR, adj. [ulterior, Lat.] Lying on the further side; situate on the other side.—Further.—The ulterior accomplishment of that part of scripture, which once promised God's people, that kings should be its nursing fathers. Boyle.

ULTIMATE, adj. [ultimus, Lat.] Intended in the last resort; being the last in the train of consequences.

I would be at the worst; worst is my port,
My harbour, and my ultimate repose.

Milton.

ULTIMATELY, adv. In the last consequence.—Trust in our own powers, ultimately terminates in the friendship of other men, which these advantages assure to us. Rogers.

ULTIMATION, s. The last offer; the last concession; the last condition.—Lord Bolingbroke was likewise authorized to know the real ultimation of France upon the general plan of peace. Swift.

ULTIMATUM, s. Ultimatum. A modern term.

ULTIME, adj. [ultimus, Lat.] Ultimate. Obsolete.—Whereby the true and ultime operations of heat are not attained. Bacon.

ULTIMITY, s. [ultimus, Lat.] The last stage; the last consequence. A word very convenient, but not in use.—Alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, is the ultimity of that process. Bacon.

ULTING, a parish of England, in Essex; 4 miles south-south-west of Witham.

ULTION, s. [ultio, Lat.] Revenge. Not in use.—To forgive our enemies is a charming way of revenge:—and to do good for evil, a soft and melting ultion; a method taught from heaven to keep all smooth upon earth. Brown.

ULTRAMARINE, s. [ultra and marinus, Lat.] One of the noblest blue colours used in painting, produced by calcination from the stone called lapis lazuli. Hill.—Others, notwithstanding they are brown, cease not to be soft and faint, as the blue of ultramarine. Dryden.

ULTRAMARINE, adj. Being beyond the sea; foreign. Ainsworth.—The loss of the ultramarine colonies lightened the expences of France. Burke.

ULTRAMONTANE, adj. [ultra montanus, Latin.] Being beyond the mountains.

ULTRAMONTANE, s. A foreigner.—See TRAMONTANE.—He is an ultramontane, of which sort there have been none [popes] these fifty years. Bacon.

ULTRAMUNDANE, adj. [ultra and mundus, Lat.] Being beyond the world.

ULTRONEOUS, adj. [ultroneus, Lat.] Spontaneous; voluntary.

ULUA, JUAN DE, an island of Mexico, in the bay of Vera Cruz. It contains a fortress and light-house. Lat. 15. 40. N.

ULUA, a river of the province and government of Honduras, which is large, and navigable for vessels of 200 tons. It enters the sea in the gulf of Honduras.

ULVA, a small island of the Hebrides, about half a mile from Mull, lying between that island and Staffa. It is about two miles long, and is inhabited by 200 or 300 people.

ULVA, in Botany, a genus of the class cryptogamia, order algæ.—Generic Character. Fructifications are small globules dispersed through a pellucid, membranaceous or gelatinous substance, or frond.

1. Ulva pruniformis, a singular species, is figured in English Botany, t. 968. It grows on aquatic plants under water, and is of various sizes, from a pea to a bullace plum, of a dull olive green: the skin is fleshy or gelatinous, enveloping a mass of pale soft pulp, in which Linnæus observed the minute seeds. He has described it well in Flora Suecica. Mr. Stackhouse is of opinion, that neither this nor the pisiformis properly belong to this genus.

2. Ulva diaphana, figured in the same work, t. 263, is another singular production, with the appearance of pale barley-sugar. The whole substance abounds with minute seeds.

3. Ulva atomaria is described by Mr. Woodward in the Transactions of the Linnæan Society; and figured in English Botany, t. 419. It spreads out like a fan, and is divided like a hand, not down to the base; of an olive brown. The seeds are very minute, of a darker colour, and disposed somewhat irregularly in numerous transverse concentric lines or stripes. This is not in Withering.

4. Ulva ligulata, also described by Mr. Woodward, and figured figured in English Botany, t. 420. The fronds are five or six inches high, flat and branched; branches dilated, somewhat forked with obtuse angles; terminated and fringed with ligulate or strap-shaped segments. The substance is semi-pellucid, of a brightish red. Seeds very minute, scattered separately, throughout the substance of the frond; which distinguishes it from Fucus ciliatus and palmatus.

5. Ulva lactuca is well known under the name of oyster-green. It is thin, pellucid, and of a fine green.

6. Ulva palmata is the dullish of the Irish; dills of the Scotch; dulls or dulse in Northumberland. Various cut like a hand expanded: it is thin, pellucid, green or reddish. Being soaked in fresh water, it is eaten either boiled or dried, and in the latter state has something of a violet flavour. It is sold in the streets of Dublin, being dried, and is said to kill worms. The poor in the north of Ireland eat it boiled.

7. Ulva incrassata, figured in English Botany, t. 967. Gelatinous and slippery, grass-green. Found on Hypnum riparium, and the stalks of horse-tail in ponds and ditches.

8. Ulva fistulosa and purpurascens are both figured in English Botany, t. 642 and 641, and are described by Mr. Woodward in the Linnæan Transactions, vol. 3.

A sufficient idea of this genus may be obtained from the above hints and references. Most of the species are maritime plants; but some are found in fresh waters, and a few on land. For more complete information, see Woodward in Linn. Trans. 3. 46.

ULVERSTON, an ancient market town of England, in the county of Lancaster, and hundred of Lonsdale North, in the liberty of Furness. It is pleasantly situated on a declivity towards the south, at the distance of about a mile from an arm of the bay of Morecambe, called Leven Sands, whence vessels of 250 tons burden come up to the port at high water; 18 miles north-north-west of Lancaster, and 267 north-north-west of London.

To ULULATE, v. n. [ululo, Lat.] To howl; to scream. Not now in use. Cockeram.—Troops of jackalls for prey violated the graves, by tearing out the dead; all the while ululating in offensive noises. Sir T. Herbert.

ULYMEN, a large village of the Netherlands, in South Holland. Population 1800.

ULYSSES, a post township of the United States, in Tompkins county, New York, at the south end of Cayuga lake; 14 miles south-east of Ovid. It contains two post villages, Ithaca and Tremain.

UMAGO, a small sea-port of Austrian Illyria, on the west coast of Istria, with 1200 inhabitants; 57 miles east of Venice, and 18 south-south-west of Trieste. Lat. 45. 35. N. long. 13. 43. E.

UMAMARCA, a large lake of Peru, in the province of Omasuyos, divided from that of Titicaca, by a peninsula, leaving only a small strait.

UMAN, a small town in the west of European Russia, in the government of Kiev, with 2600 inhabitants; 125 miles south-south-west of Kiev.

UMAYA, a large and abundant river of Mexico, in the province of Culiacan, which enters the Pacific ocean at the port of Navitos.

UMBAA, a village of Abyssinia; 100 miles south-south-west of Gondar.

UMBAGOG, a lake of the United States, in New Hampshire and Maine. It is 18 miles long, and where widest, 10 broad. Lat. 44. 42. N.

UMBEL, s. [umbelle, Fr.; umbella, Lat.] In Botany, the extremity of a stalk or branch divided into several pedicles or rays, beginning from the same point, and opening so as to form an inverted cone. Dict.—The umbel, for the most part, had but two spokes of flowers. Ray.

UMBELLATED, adj. In Botany, is said of flowers when many of them grow together in umbels. Dict.

UMBELLIFEROUS, adj. [umbel and fero, Lat.] In Botany, being a plant that bears many flowers, growing upon many footstalks, proceeding from the same centre; and chiefly appropriated to such plants whose flowers are composed of five leaves, as fennel and parsnip. Dict.—I observed, creeping upon the ground, a small umbelliferous plant. Ray.

UMBER, s. [from the ancient Umbria, or Ombria, in Italy; whence the earth which produces the colour was first obtained.] Umber is a sad colour; which grind with gum-water, and lighten it with a little ceruse, and a shive of saffron. Peacham.

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face. Shakspeare.

A fish, [thymallus, Lat.] The umber and grayling differ as the herring and pilcher do: but though they may do so in other nations, those in England differ nothing but in their names. Walton.

To UMBER, v. a. To colour with umber; to shade; to darken. Mr. Malone, on the following passage from Shakspeare, has observed, that umber was used in the stage-exhibitions of the poet's time; and cites, from a manuscript play in his possession, a direction to "umber the face." He might have found the same expression in Beaumont and Fletcher. Dr. Johnson has considered the word only as an adjective.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shakspeare.

UMBER, a town of Hindostan, province of Arungabad, belonging to the Nizam. Lat. 19 38. N. long. 76. 2. E.

UMBERSTON CREEK, a river of the United States, in Virginia, which runs into the Potomac. Lat. 39. 35. N. long. 79. 6. W.

UMBILICAL, adj. [umbilicale, Fr., from umbilicus, Lat.] Belonging to the navel.—Birds are nourished by umbilical veins, and the navel is manifest a day or two after exclusion. Brown.

UMBILIC, s. [umbilicus, Lat.] The navel; the centre. Not in use. Bullokar.—The alcoran further tells you what and where hell is, and what is paradise. Hell is the umbilic of the world, circled with a thick wall of adamant, &c. Sir T. Herbert.

UMBLES, s. [umbles, Fr.] A deer's entrails. Dict.

U'MBO, s. [Lat.] The pointed boss, or prominent part of a buckler.

Thy words together ty'd in small hanks,
Close as the Macedonian phalanx;
Or like the umbo of the Romans,
Which fiercest foes could break by no means. Swift.

UMBRA, a river of America, which runs into the Washash. Lat. 38. 38. N. long. 88. 12. W.

UMBRA, a small river of Peru, in the province of Canta, which runs east, and enters the Pari.

UMBRAGE, s. [ombrage, Fr.] Shade; screen of trees.

O, might I here
In solitude live savage; in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star, or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening! Milton.

Shadow; appearance.—The rest are umbrages quickly dispelled; the astrologer subjects liberty to the motions of heaven. Bramhall.—Resentment.—Although he went on with the war, yet it should be but with his sword in his hand, to bend the stiffness of the other party to accept of peace: and so the king should take no umbrage of his arming and prosecution. Bacon.

UMBRA'GEOUS, adj. [ombrageux, Fr.] Shady; yielding shade.—Umbrageous grots and caves of cool recess. Milton.—Obscure; not to be perceived. Obsolete.—The present constitution of the court is very umbrageous. Wotton.

UMBRA GEIOUSNESS, s. Shadiness.—The exceeding umbrageousness

umbrageousness of this tree, he compareth to the dark and shadowed life of man; through which the sun of justice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the shadow of death, till it pleased Christ to climb the tree of the cross, for our enlightening and redemption. Raleigh.

UMBRATED, adj. [umbratus, Lat.] Shadowed. Bullockar. Not in use. But we employ adumbrate.

UMBRATICAL, or UMBRA'TIC, adj. [umbraticus, Lat.] Shadowy; typical.—By virtue of our Saviour's most true and perfect sacrifice, those umbratic representations, instituted of old by God, did obtain their substance, validity and effect. Barrow.—Within doors; keeping at home.—I can see whole volumes dispatched by the umbratical doctors on all sides: but draw these forth into the just lists; let them appear sub dio, and they are changed with the place, like bodies bred in the shade; they cannot suffer the sun or a shower, nor bear the open air. B. Jonson.

UMBRA'TILE, adj. [umbratilis, Lat.] Unsubstantial; unreal. Mr. Mason observes, that Dr. Johnson's definition and accent of this word are wrong: the former is, "being in the shade," which Mr. Mason changes into "passing like a shadow," with an example from Evelyn; the latter is on the second syllable, which, however harsh, appears to have been so pronounced in our old poetry; and therefore Mr. Mason might have been less dogmatical as to the accent on the first. Todd.

Shadows have their figure, motion,
And their umbratil action from the real
Posture and motion of the body's act.

B. Jonson.

Natural hieroglyphics of our fugitive, umbratile, anxious, and transitory life. Evelyn.

UMBRATIOUS, adj. [See the third sense of UMBRAGE.] Captious; suspicious; disposed to take umbrage. Not in use.—He [Essex] had to wrestle with a queen's declining or rather with her very setting age; which, besides other respects, is commonly even of itself the more umbratious and apprehensive, as for the most part all horizons are charged with certain vapours towards their evening. Wotton.

UMBREL, UMBRE'LLA, or UMBRE'LLO, s. [from umbra, Lat.] A skreen used in hot countries to keep off the sun, and in others to bear off the rain.—I can carry your umbrella, and fan your ladyship. Dryden.

UMBRIATICO, a considerable town of Italy, in the south-west of the kingdom of Naples, in Calabria Citra, situated near the small river Lipuda, about six miles from the coast of the gulf of Tarento. It is the see of a bishop, and is said to contain between 9000 and 10,000 inhabitants; 35 miles east of Cosenza, and 42 north-north-west of Squillace. Lat. 39. 27. N. long. 17. 6 E.

UMBRI'ERE, s. [from umbrare, Lat.] The visor of a helmet.—See VISOR.

But the brave mayd would not disarmed be,
But only vented up her umbriere,
And so did let her goodly visage to appeare.

Spenser.

UMBRO'SITY, s. [umbrosus, Lat.] Shadiness; exclusion of light.—Oiled paper becometh more transparent, and admits the visible rays with much less umbrosity. Brown.

UMBYALA, a town of Hindostan, province of Gujerat, belonging to the British. Lat. 23. 14 N. long. 73. 6 E.

UMDOON, a station of the caravans in the Nubian desert; 10 miles north of Chiggre.

UMEA, a sea-port of Sweden, in West Bothnia, the capital of a province of the same name. Lat. 63. 49. 46. N. long. 20. 4 E.

UMEA-LAEN, one of the laens or provinces of Sweden, according to the latest division. It comprises West Bothnia, and almost all Swedish Lapland, having an area of nearly 65,000 square miles; but its population hardly exceeds 76,000.

UMENAK, an island on the west coast of East Greenland. Lat. 60. 35. N. long. 45. 30. W.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1646.

UMENAK, an island on the south-west coast of East Greenland. Lat. 59. 43. N. long. 43. 20. W.

UMANZ, a small island in the Baltic, on the west side of the island of Rugen. Lat. 54. 30. N. long. 13. 14. E.

UMMEDEDA, the name given to a considerable mass of ruins in the territory of Siwah, in Northern Africa. They have been generally supposed to be those of the celebrated shrine of Jupiter Ammon.

UMMENDORF, a village and castle of Prussian Saxony. Population 800; 24 miles west of Magdeburg.

UMMERAPOORA, the present capital of the Birman empire. This city stands on the shores of a romantic lake, seven miles in length, by one and a half in breadth, and at a short distance from the left bank of the Irrawuddy river. It is a fortified town, regularly laid out as an exact square. The city of Ummerapooora, being situated on a plain in the vicinity of a ridge of hills, and nearly surrounded by water, is unhealthy for strangers; and many finer situations might have been chosen on the high banks of the Irrawuddy; but the Birmans prefer having their houses built over the water, which saves them an establishment of scavengers, and enables them at once to enter their boats; the only mode of conveyance they esteem. It is said to contain 20,000 houses, and, when the court resided there, to have had a population of 150,000. Lat. 21. 55. N. long. 96. 7. E.

UMMESOGEIR, or UMSEQR, a small village in the heart of the Lybian desert, on the caravan route from Egypt to Fezzan. It is built on a rock, and contains only about 30 men able to bear arms; 20 miles east of Siwah.

UMNABAD, or AMINABAD, a town of Hindostan, province of Bejapoor, now belonging to the British. Lat. 18. 51. N. long. 74. 27. E.

UMPFENBACH, a large village of Germany, in Bavarian Franconia, on the Maine.

UMPIRAGE, s. Arbitration; friendly decision of a controversy.—If my umpirage may stand, I award an eternal silence to both parts. Bp. Hall.

UMPIRE, s. [from the Latin impar. To this Latin word umpire has indeed been long referred. "An umpire—one who is chosen by two, four, or any even number of arbitrators (on their being equally divided on their award) to give his casting vote: it is a variation of impar for odd." Cleland, Voc. 156.]

Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence.

Shakspeare.

To UMPIRE, v. a. To decide as an umpire; to arbitrate; to settle.—No king of Spain, nor bishop of Rome, shall umpire, nor promote, any beneficiary or feudatory king, as they designed to do. Bacon.

UMRUT, a town of Hindostan, province of Arungabad, belonging to the British. Lat. 20. 40. N. long. 73. 18. E.

UMSTADT, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, in the district of the Odenwald, with 2500 inhabitants; 12 miles east of Darmstadt. Little Umstadt, in the vicinity, has 800 inhabitants.

UN, a Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and a of the Greeks, on Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted.

UNA, a settlement of Brazil, in the province of San Vicente, on the coast between the bay of this name and the island of San Sebastian.

UNABA'SHED, adj. Not shamed; not confused by modesty.

Earless on high, stood unabash'd Defoe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below. Pope.

UNABA'TED, adj. Undiminished.

Behold a princess—playing here the slave,
To keep her husband's greatness unabated. Beaum. and Fl.

UNABI'LITY, or UNA'BLENESS, s. Want of ability.—What can be imputed but their sloth or unability? Milton.

UNABLE, adj. Not having ability. With to before a verb, and for before a noun.

The prince unable to conceal his pain,
Gaz'd on the fair,
And sigh'd, and look'd, and sigh'd again.

Dryden.

Weak; impotent.

A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

Shakspeare.

UNABO'LISHABLE, adj. That may not be abolished.
—That law proved to be moral, and unabolishable, for many reasons. Milton.

UNABO'LISHED, adj. Not repealed; remaining in force.
—The number of needless laws unabolished, doth weaken the force of them that are necessary. Hooker.

UNACCEN'TED, adj. Having no accent; not accented.
—It being enough to make a syllable long, if it be accented; and short if it be unaccented. Harris.

UNACC'E'PTABLE, adj. Not pleasing; not such as is well received.—The marquis at that time was very unaccept-able to his countrymen. Clarendon.

UNACC'E'PTABLENESS, s. State of not pleasing.—This alteration arises from the unacceptableness of the subject I am upon. Collier.

UNACC'E'PTED, adj. Not accepted.

By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord;
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of happy love, or instant death.

Prior.

UNACC'E'SSIBLE, adj. That may not be approached.
—The island of Sarke being every way so unaccessible, as it might be held against the great Turk. Hakewill.

UNACC'E'SSIBLENESS, s. State of not being to be attained or approached.—Many excellent things are in nature, which, by reason of the remoteness from us, and unaccess-ibility to them, are not within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

UNACCO'MMODATED, adj. Unfurnished with external convenience.—Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Shakspeare.

UNACCO'MPANED, adj. Not attended.—Seldom one accident, prosperous or adverse, cometh unaccompanied with the like. Hayward.

UNACCO'MPLISHED, adj. Unfinished; incomplete.

Beware of death, thou canst not die unperjur'd
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind.
Thy vows are mine.

Dryden.

Not accomplished; not elegant.

Still unaccomplish'd may the maid be thought,
Who gracefully to dance was never taught.

Congreve.

UNACCO'UNTABLE, adj. Not explicable; not to be solved by reason; not reducible to rule.—I shall note difficulties, which are not usually observed, though unaccount-able. Glanville.

UNACCO'UNTABLY, adv. Strangely.—The boy proved to be the son of the merchant, whose heart had so unac-countably melted at the sight of him. Addison.

UNA'CCURATE, adj. Not exact.—Galileo using an unaccurate way, defined the air to be in weight to water but as one to four hundred. Boyle.

UNA'CCURATENESS, s. Want of exactness. For this and unaccurate are commonly used inaccurate and inac-curacy.—It may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccurateness and unconcludingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly to be relied on. Boyle.

UNACCU'STOMED, adj. Not used; not habituated: with to.—The necessity of air to the most of animals unac-customed to the want of it, may best be judged of by the following experiments. Boyle.—New; not usual.

I'll send one to Mantua,
Where that same banish'd runaway doth live,
Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soon keep Tibalt company.

Shakspeare.

UNACKNO'WLEDGED, adj. Not owned.—The fear of what was to come from an unknown, at least an unacknow- ledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity. Clarendon.

UNACQUA'INTANCE, s. Want of familiarity; want of knowledge: followed by with.—The first is an utter unac-quaintance with his master's designs, in these words; the servant knoweth not what his master doth. South.

UNACQUA'INTED, adj. Not known; unusual; not familiarly known.

She greatly grew amazed at the sight,
And th' unacquainted light began to fear.

Spenser.

Not having familiar knowledge: followed by with.

Where else

Shall I inform my unacquainted feet
In the blind mazes of this tangled world?

Milton.

UNACQUA'INTEDNESS, s. Unacquaintance: followed by with.—The bishop said, in excuse for his present unac-quaintedness with such matters of antiquity, that it was thirty years ago since he read over the three first centuries. Whiston.

UNA'CTED, adj. Not performed; not put into execu-tion.—A thought unacted. Shakspeare.

UNA'CTIVE, adj. Not brisk; not lively.—Silly people commend tame, unactive children, because they make no noise, nor give them any trouble. Locke.—Having no employment.

Man hath his daily work of body or mind
Appointed, which declares his dignity;
While other animals unactive range,
And of their doings God takes no account.

Milton.

Not busy; not diligent.

His life,

Private, unactive, calm, contemplative;
Little suspicious to any king.

Milton.

Having no efficacy.

In the fruitful earth

His beams, unactive else, their vigour find.

Milton.

UNA'CTUATED, adj. Not actuated.—The peripatetic matter is a mere unactuated power. Glanville.

UNADILLA, a post township of the United States, in Otsego county, New York; 100 miles west-south-west of Albany. Population 1426.

UNADILLA, a river of the United States, in New York, which separates the counties of Otsego and Chenango, and runs into the Susquehannah. Lat. 42. 19. N. long. 75. 58. W.

UNADM'RED, adj. Not regarded with honour.

Oh! had I rather unadmir'd remain'd,
In some lone isle, or distant northern land;
Where the gilt chariot never marks the way!

Pope.

UNADMO'NISHED, adj. Not admonished; not cau-tioned beforehand.

This let him know,
Lest, wilfully transgressing, he pretend
Surprisal, unadmonish'd, unforewarn'd.

Milton.

UNADO'RED, adj. Not worshipped.

Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd
In ancient Greece.

Milton.

UNADO'R'NED, adj. Not decorated; not embellished.

The earth, till then
Desert and bare, unsightly, unadorn'd,
Brought forth the tender grass.

Milton.

UNADVENTUROUS, adj. Not adventurous.

The wisest, unexperient'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty,
Irresolute, unhardy, unadventurous.

Milton.

UNADVI'SABLE, adj. Not prudent; not to be advised.
—Extreme rigour would have been unadvisable in the be-ginning of a new reign. Lowth.

UNADVI'SED, adj. Imprudent; indiscreet.

Madam,

Madam, I have unadvise'd
Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. Shakspeare.

Done without due thought; rash.

This contract to-night
Is too rash, too unadvise'd, too sudden,
Too like the light'ning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, it lightens. Shakspeare.

UNADVISEDLY, adv. Imprudently; rashly; indiscreetly.—A strange kind of speech unto Christian ears; and such, as I hope they themselves do acknowledge unadvisedly uttered. Hooker.

What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent of. Shakspeare.

UNADVISEDNESS, s. Imprudence; rashness.
I thought one man enough to match with ten;
And through this careless unadvisedness
I was destroy'd. Mir. for Mag.

UNADULTERATE, or UNADULTERATED, adj. Genuine; not spoiled by spurious mixtures.—I have only discovered one of those channels, by which the history of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and unadulterated. Addison.

UNADULTERATELY, adv. Without spurious mixtures.—Inductions fresh and unadulterately drawn from those observations. Dr. Gilberte.

UNAFFE'CTED, adj. Real; not hypocritical.

They bore the king
To lie in solemn state, a public sight:
Groans, cries, and howlings fill the crowded place,
And unaffected sorrow sat on ev'ry face. Dryden.

Free from affectation; open; candid; sincere.

The maid improves her charms,
With inward greatness, unaffected wisdom,
And sanctity of manners. Addison.

Not formed by too rigid observation of rules; not laboured.
Men divinely taught, and better teaching
The solid rules of civil government,
In their majestic, unaffected stile,
Than all the oratory of Greece and Rome. Milton.

Not moved; not touched: as, he sat unaffected to hear the tragedy.

UNAFFE'CTEDLY, adv. Really; without any attempt to produce false appearances.—He was always unaffectedly cheerful; no marks of any thing heavy at his heart broke from him. Locke.

UNAFFE'CTING, adj. Not pathetic; not moving the passions.—This stately sort of declamation, whatever eloquence it may display, and whatever policy it may teach, is undramatic, unanimated, and unaffected. Warton.

UNAFFE'CTIONATE, adj. Wanting affection.—A helpless, unaffectionate, and sullen man, whose very company represents the visible and exactest figure of loneliness itself. Milton.

UNAFFLI'CTED, adj. Free from trouble.

My unafflicted mind doth feed
On no unholy thoughts for benefit. Daniel.

UNAGREE'ABLE, adj. Inconsistent; unsuitable.

Adventurous work! yet to thy power and mine
Not unagreeable, to found a path
Over this main, from hell to that new world. Milton.

UNAGREE'ABLENESS, s. Unsuitableness to; inconsistency with.—Papias, a holy man, and scholar of St. John, having delivered the millennium, men chose rather to admit a doctrine, whose unagreeableness to the gospel economy rendered it suspicious, than think an apostolic man could seduce them. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNAI'DABLE, adj. Not to be helped.

The congregated college have concluded,

That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her unaidable estate. Shakspeare.

UNAI'DED, adj. Not assisted; not helped.

Their number, counting those th' unaided eye
Can see, or by invented tubes descry,
The widest stretch of human thought exceeds. Blackmore.

UNAIMING, adj. Having no particular direction.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky;
Such frantic flights are like a madman's dream,
And nature suffers in the wild extreme. Granville.

UNAKA, a chain of mountains in North America, between the states of Tennessee and North Carolina.

UNAKING, adj. Not feeling or causing pain.

Shew them th' unaking scars which I would hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only. Shakspeare.

UNALAR'MED, adj. Not disturbed.

One shelter'd hare
Has never heard the sanguinary yell
Of cruel man, exulting in her woes.
Innocent partner of my peaceful home,
Whom ten long years experience of my care
Has made at last familiar, she has lost
Much of her vigilant instinctive dread,
Not needful here, beneath a roof like mine.
Yes — thou mayst eat thy bread, and lick the hand
That feeds thee; thou may'st frolic on the floor
At evening, and at night retire secure
To thy straw couch, and slumber unalarm'd. Cowper.

UNALIENABLE, adj. Not to be transferred.—Hereditary right should be kept sacred, not from any unalienable right in a particular family, but to avoid the consequences that usually attend the ambition of competitors. Swift.

UNALGA, one of the Fox islands; 15 miles south-east of Unalaska.

UNALLAYED, adj. Not impaired by bad mixtures.—Unallayed satisfactions are joys too heavenly to fall to many men's shares on earth. Boyle.

UNALLIED, adj. Having no powerful relation.—Narcissa, not unknown, not unallied. Young.—Having no common nature; not congenial.—He is compounded of two very different ingredients, spirit and matter; but how such unallied and disproportioned substances should act upon each other, no man's learning yet could tell him. Collier.

UNALTERABLE, adj. Unchangeable; immutable.—The law of nature, consisting in a fixed, unalterable relation of one nature to another, is indispensable. South.

UNALTERABLENESS, s. Immutability; unchangeableness.—This happens from the unalterableness of the corpuscles, which constitute and compose those bodies. Woodward.

UNALTERABLY, adv. Unchangeably; immutably.—Retain unalterably firm his love intire. Milton.

UNALTERED, adj. Not changed; not changeable.—It was thought in him an unpardonable offence to alter any thing; in us intolerable that we suffer any thing to remain unaltered. Hooker.

UNAMAZED, adj. Not astonished; free from astonishment.

Though at the voice much marvelling; at length,
Not unamaz'd, she thus in answer spake. Milton.

UNAMBIGUOUS, adj. Clear; not to be mistaken; unquestionable.—Every paragraph should be so clear and unambiguous, that the dullest fellow in the world may not be able to mistake it. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNAMBITIOUS, adj. Free from ambition.—I am one of those unambitious people, who will love you forty years hence. Pope.

UNAME'NDABLE, adj. [inemendabilis, Lat.] Not to be changed for the better.—He is the same man; so is every every one here that you know; mankind is unamendable.

Pope.

UNAMIABLE, adj. Not raising love.—These men are so well acquainted with the unamiable part of themselves, that they have not the confidence to think they are really beloved. Addison.

UNAMUSED, adj. Wanting amusement; without amusement.

O ye Lorenzos of our age, who deem
One moment unamus'd a misery,
Not made for feeble man!

Young.

UNANALOGICAL, adj. Not analogical.—Shine is a [substantive,] though not unanalogueal, yet ungraceful, and little used. Johnson.

UNANALYSED, adj. Not resolved into simple parts.—Some large crystals of refined and unanalysed nitre, appeared to have each of them six flat sides. Boyle.

UNANCHORED, adj. Not anchored.

A port there is, inclos'd on either side,
Where ships may rest unanchor'd, and unty'd. Pope.

UNANE'LED, adj. Not having received extreme unction. See To ANELE.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off, ev'n in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, disappointed, unanel'd. Shakspeare.

UNANIMATED, adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.—Look on those half lines as the imperfect products of a hasty muse: like the frogs in the Nile, part kindled into life, and part a lump of uninformed, unanimated matter. Dryden.

UNANIMITY, s. [unanimité, Fr.] Agreement in design or opinion.—An honest party of men acting with unanimity, are of infinitely greater consequence, than the same party aiming at the same end by different views. Addison.

UNANIMOUS, adj. [unanimis, Lat.] Being of one mind; agreeing in design or opinion.

They went to meet
So oft in festivals of joy, and love
Unanimous, as sons of one great sire, Hymning th' eternal Father. Milton.

UNANIMOUSLY, adv. With one mind.—This particular is unanimously reported by all the ancient Christian authors. Addison.

UNANIMOUSNESS, s. The state of being unanimous.

UNANOINTED, adj. Not anointed. Dr. Johnson adds, Not prepared for death by extreme unction.

UNANSWERABLE, adj. Not to be refuted.—This is a manifest and unanswerable argument. Raleigh.

UNANSWERABLY, adv. Beyond confutation.—It will put their little logic hard to it to prove that there can be any obedience, where there is no command. And therefore it unanswerably follows, that the abettors of the fore-mentioned principle plead conscience in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's express command. South.

UNANSWERED, adj. Not opposed by a reply.

Must I tamely bear
This arrogance unanswered! Thou'rt a traitor. Addison.

Not confuted.—All these reasons, they say, have been brought, and were hitherto never answer'd; besides a number of merriments and jests unanswer'd likewise. Hooker.—Not suitably returned.

Quench, Corydon, thy long unanswer'd fire;
Mind what the common wants of life require. Dryden.

UNAPPALLED, adj. Not daunted; not impressed by fear.

If my memory must thus be thrall'd
To that strange stroke, which conquered all my senses;
Can thoughts still thinking so rest unappalled? Sidney.

UNAPPA'RELLED, adj. Not dressed; not clothed.—In Peru, though they were an unapparelled people, and had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility. Bacon.

UNAPPA'RENT, adj. Obscure; not visible.

Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

UNAPPE'ALABLE, adj. Not admitting appeal.—They made their own reason, or rather humour (first surnaming it the spirit), the infallible, unappealable judge of all that was delivered in the written word. South.

UNAPPE'ASABLE, adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.
I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To prayers than winds to seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and seas to shore.
Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest, never to be calm'd. Milton.

UNAPPE'ASED, adj. Not pacified.

Sacrifice his flesh,
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd. Shakspeare.

UNAPPLICABLE, adj. Such as cannot be applied.—Gratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unapplicable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others. Hammond.

UNAPPLI'ED, adj. Not specially applied; not engaged.—They were men dedicated to a private, free, unapplied course of life. Bacon.

UNAPPREHE'NDED, adj. Not understood.—They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such that they hardly seem to hold the place of human being. Hooker.

UNAPPREHE'NSIBLE, adj. Not capable of being understood.—Which assertions leave it unapprehensible what place can reasonably be left for addressing exhortations to the will.—South.

UNAPPREHE'NSIVE, adj. Not intelligent; not ready of conception.—The same temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and insensible of any misery suffered by others. South.—Not suspecting.

UNAPPRYSED, adj. Not uninformed; not ignorant.
Some mischievously weep, not unapprys'd,
Tears sometimes aid the conquest of an eye. Young.

UNAPPROA'CHABLE, adj. That may not be approached.—The ambitious daring approaches of the soul toward the unapproachable light. Hammond.

UNAPPROA'CHED, adj. Inaccessible.

God is light,
And never but in unapproached light
Dwelt from eternity. Milton.

UNAPPROPRIATED, adj. Having no particular application.—Ovid could not restrain the luxuriandy of his genius, on the same occasion, from wandering into an endless variety of flowery and unappropriated similitudes, and equally applicable to any other person or place. Dr. Warton.

UNAPPROVED, adj. Not approved.

Evil into the mind
May come and go so unapprov'd, and leave
No spot behind. Milton.

UNAPT, adj. Dull; not apprehensive.—The contrary advantage, in natures very dull and unapt, of working alacrity, by framing an exercise with some delight or affection. Bacon.—Not ready; not propense.—I am a soldier and unapt to weep. Shakspeare.—Unfit; not qualified: with to before a verb, for before a noun.—Fear doth grow from an apprehension of deity indued with irresistible power to hurt; and is, of all affections (anger excepted) the unapestest to admit any conference with reason. Hooker.—Improper; unfit; unsuitable.

UNAPTLY, adv. Unfitly; improperly.—He swims on his back; and the shape of his back seems to favour it, being very like the bottom of a boat: nor do his hinder legs unaptly resemble a pair of oars. Grew.

UNAPTNESS, s. Unfitness; unsuitableness.—Men's apparel apparel is commonly made according to their conditions; and their conditions are often governed by their garments; for the person that is gowned, is, by his gown, put in mind of gravity, and also restrained from lightness by the very unaptness of his weed. Spenser.—Dulness; want of apprehension.

That unaptness made you minister.
Thus to excuse yourself. Shakspeare.

Unreadiness; disqualification; want of propension.—The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body, strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an unaptness, or an aversion to any vigorous attempt ever after. Locke.

UNARA, or UNARE, a river of South America, which divides the government of the Caraccas from the province of Cumana.

UNARE, a small river of the Caraccas, which runs north, and enters the sea in the gulf of Paria.

UNARGUED, adj. Not disputed.
What thou bid'st,
Unargu'd I obey; so God ordains. Milton.

Not censured.
Not that his work liv'd in the hands of foes,
Unargu'd then, and yet hath fame from those. B. Johnson.

To UNARM, v. a. To disarm; to strip of armour; to deprive of arms.—Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day. Shakspeare.

UNARMED, adj. Having no armour; having no weapons.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: To our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakspeare.

UNARRAINGED, adj. Not brought to a trial.
As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd. Daniel.

UNARRAYED, adj. Not dressed.
As if this infant world, yet unarray'd,
Naked and bare, in Nature's lap were laid. Dryden.

UNARRIVED, adj. Not yet arrived.—Monarchs of all elaps'd, or unarriv'd. Young.

UNARTFUL, adj. Having no art, or cunning.
A cheerful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face. Congreve.

Wanting skill.—How unartful would it have been to have set him in a corner, when he was to have given light and warmth to all the bodies round him? Cheyne.

UNARTFULLY, adv. In an unartful manner.—In the report, although it be not unartfully drawn, and is perfectly in the spirit of a pleader, there is no great skill required to detect the many mistakes. Swift.

UNARTIFICIALLY, adv. Contrarily to art.—Not a feather is unartificially made, misplaced, redundant, or defective. Derham.

UNASKED, adj. Not courted by solicitation.
With what eagerness, what circumstance
Unask'd, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only
My son's the better man. Denham.

Not sought by entreaty or care.
The bearded corn ensu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.

UNASPECTIVE, adj. Not having a view to; inattentive.—The Holy Ghost is not wholly unaspective to the custom that was used among men, since we find the triumphers in the Revelation, as badges of victory, carried palms in their hands. Feltham.

UNASPIRATED, adj. Having no aspirate.—Lambin gives ορημ for the Æolic verb unaspirated. Dr. Parr.

UNASPIRING, adj. Not ambitious.—To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers,
VOL. XXIV. No. 1646.

UNASSAILED, adj. Not attacked; not assaulted.
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. Shakspeare.

UNASSAILABLE, adj. Exempt from assault.
In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakspeare.

UNASSAYED, adj. Unattempted.
What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd? Milton.

UNASSISTED, adj. Not helped.—Its victories were the victories of reason, unassisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addison.

UNASSISTING, adj. Giving no help.
With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd: yet these I sway'd. Dryden.

UNASSUMING, adj. Not arrogant.
Unassuming worth in secret liv'd,
And died neglected. Thomson.

UNASSURED, adj. Not confident.—The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unassured countenance, adventures into your presence. Glanville.—Not to be trusted.

The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes;
The feigned friends, the unassur'd foes,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell. Spenser.

UNATONABLE, adj. Not to be appeased; not to be brought to concord.—Any untunable or unatonable matrimony. Milton.

UNATONED, adj. Not expiated.
Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unaton'd? Rowe.

UNATTACHED, adj. Not arrested.—A cutpurse in a throng, when he hath committed the fact, will cry out, My masters, take heed of your purses; and he that is pursued, will cry, Stop thief, that by this means he may escape unattached. Junius.—Not having any fixed interest: as, unattached to any party.

UNATTAINABLE, adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.—I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do. Locke.

UNATTAINABLENESS, s. State of being out of reach.—Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed. Locke.

UNATTEMPTED, adj. Untried; not assayed.
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar railleth on the rich. Shakspeare.

UNATTE'NDED, adj. Having no retinue, or attendants.
With goddess-like demeanor forth she went,
Not unattended. Milton.

Having no followers.—Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Parnassus. Dryden.—Unaccompanied; forsaken.

Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. Shakspeare.

UNATTENDING, adj. Not attending.
Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending ears. Milton.

UNATTENTIVE, adj. Not regarding.—Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNATTESTED, adj. Without witness; wanting attestation.—Thus God has not left himself unattested, doing good good, sending us from heaven rains and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. Barrow.

UNATTRACTED, adj. Not under the power of attraction; freed from attraction.

Till again

The tide revertive, unattracted, leaves
A yellow waste of idle sands behind.

Thomson.

UNAVAILABLE, adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.—When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that reading is so unavailable, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the Scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy. Hooker.

UNAVAILABLENESS, s. Uselessness.—Doubting the unavailableness of those former inconveniences. Sir E. Sandys.

UNAVAILING, adj. Useless; vain.

Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailing hands.

Pope.

UNAVENGED, adj. Not avenged; unrevenged.—They were by him and his heathen neighbours cruelly butchered; yet not unavenged: for the governor, enraged at such violence offered to his strangers, slew those inhabitants, and burnt their village. Milton.

UNAVI, a small river of the Caraccas, which joins the Arebato.

UNAVOIDABLE, adj. Inevitable; not to be shunned.—It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth. Locke.—Not to be missed in ratiocination.—I think it unavoidable for every rational creature that will examine his own, or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal; wise being, who had no beginning. Locke.

UNAVOIDABLENESS, s. Inevitably.—How can we conceive it subject to material impressions? and yet the importunity of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations strongly persuade that we are so. Glanville.

UNAVOIDABLY, adv. Inevitably.—The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it. Addison.

UNAVOIDED, adj. Inevitable.

We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now.

Shakspeare.

UNAUTHENTIC, adj. Not authentic; not genuine; not warranted.—Many odious, scurrilous, and treacherous libels were daily, by an unauthentic privilege, posted up, and published against him. Princely Pelican.

UNAUTHORIZED, adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.

To kiss in private?

An unauthorized kiss.

Shakspeare.

UNAWAKED, or UNAWAKENED, adj. Not roused from sleep; not awakened.

Strange! the theme most affecting, most sublime,
Momentous most to man, should sleep unsung:

And yet it sleeps by genius unawak'd,
Painim or Christian, to the blush of wit.

Young.

UNAWA'RE, adj. [unwær, Sax. incautus.] Without thought; inattentive.—I am not unaware how the productions of the Grub-street brotherhood have, of late years, fallen under many prejudices. Swift.

UNAWA'RE, or UNAWARES, adv. [from the Sax. unwær.] See the adjective.] Without thought; without previous meditation.

It is my father's face,

Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd.

Shakspeare.

Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.—Let destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Psalms.

UNA'WED, adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.

Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.

UNBA'CKED, adj. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.

Then I beat my tabor;
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt music. Shakspeare.

Not countenanced; not aided.

Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd. Daniel.

UNBA'LANCED, adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.

Let earth unbalanc'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.

UNBA'LLAST, or UNBA'LLASTED, adj. Not kept steady by ballast; unsteady.

As at sea the unballast vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides:
So in the bounding chariot toss'd on high,
The youth is hurried headlong through the sky. Addison.

UNBA'NDED, adj. Wanting a string, or band.—Your hose should be ungartered, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakspeare.

UNBAPTIZED, adj. Not baptized.

To UNB'AR, v. a. To open by removing the bars; to unbolt.

These rights the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprison'd war. Dryden.

UNBA'RBED, adj. [barba, Latin.] Not shaven. Out of use.

Must I go shew them my unbar'd sconce!
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart:
A lie? Shakspeare.

UNBA'RKED, adj. Decorticated; stripped of the bark.—A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown. Bacon.

UNBA'SHFUL, adj. Impudent; shameless.

Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility. Shakspeare.

UNBA'TED, adj. Not repressed; not blunted.

You may choose

A sword unbated. Shakspeare.

UNBA'THED, adj. Not wet.

Fierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent. Dryden.

UNBA'TTERED, adj. Not injured by blows.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shakspeare.

To UNBA'Y, v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

UNBEA'RABLE, adj. Not to be borne.

UNBEA'RING, adj. [unbeærēb, Sax. sterilis.] Bringing no fruit.

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.

UNBEA'TEN, adj. Not treated with blows.

His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For she had rode five miles unspurr'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaton. Bp. Corbet.

Not trodden.

Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.

UNBEAU'TEOUS,

UNBEAUTE'OUS, or UNBEAU'TIFUL, adj. Not beautiful; plain.

To UNBECOME, v. a. Not to become; to misc'come.—It neither unbecomes God nor men to be moved by reason. Sherlock.

UNBECOM'ING, adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.

Here's our chief guest.—

— If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming. Shakspeare.

UNBECOM'INGLY, adv. In an unsuitable or improper manner.—In being discontented, we behave ourselves very unbecomingly and unworthily. Barrow.

UNBECOM'INGNESS, s. Indecency; indecorum.—If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.

To UNBE'D, v. a. To raise from a bed.—Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Walton.

UNBEFITTING, adj. Not becoming; not suitable.

Love is full of unbefitting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain. Shakspeare.

UNBEFRI'ENDED, adj. Wanting friends; without friends.—The patronage of the poor and unbefriended. Killingbeck.

To UNBEGE'T, v. n. To deprive of existence.

Wishes each minute he could unbeget
Those rebel sons, who dare t' usurp his seat. Dryden.

UNBEGO'T, or UNBEGO'TTEN, adj. Eternal; without generation.—Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God? Stillingfleet.—Not yet generated.

God omnipotent, must'ring
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shakspeare.

Not attaining existence.—Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South.

To UNBEGUILE, v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.

Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heaven. Donne.

UNBEGUN, adj. Not yet begun.—All things, which God in their times and seasons has brought forth, were eternally and before all times in God, as a work unbegun is in the artificer, which afterward bringeth it unto effect. Hooker.

UNBEHE'LD, adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.

These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.

UNBE'ING, adj. Not existing.—Where we were when the foundations of the earth were laid, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, He must answer who asked it; who understands entities of preordination, and beings yet unbeing. Brown.

UNBELIE'F, s. [ungeleafa, Sax.] Incredulity.

'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be, but unbelief is blind. Milton.

Infidelity; irreligion.—Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth. Hooker.

To UNBELIEVE, v. a. To discredit; not to trust.

Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go. Shakspeare.

Not to think real or true.

Nor less than sight and hearing could convince,
Of such an unforeseen and unbeliev'd offence. Dryden.

UNBELIE'VE'R, s. An infidel; one who believes not the Scripture of God.—Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers; but if you would once convince profligates by topics drawn from the view of their own quiet, reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift.

UNBELIE'VING, adj. Infidel.

No pause,
No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But the unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Philips.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles. Addison.

UNBELO'VED, adj. Not loved.

Whoe'er you are, not unbelov'd by heaven,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driven. Dryden.

To UNBE'ND, v. a. To free from flexure.

I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.

To relax; to remit; to set at ease for a time.

From those great cares when ease your soul unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.

To relax vitiously or effeminately.

You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shakspeare.

UNBE'NDING, adj. Not suffering flexure.

Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

Not yielding; resolute.

Ye noble few, who here unbending stand
Beneath life's pressures, yet a little while,
And all your woes are past. Thomson.

Devoted to relaxation.—Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rowe.

UNBENEFICED, adj. Not preferred to a benefice.

More vacant pulpits would more converts make;
All would have latitude enough to take:
'The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.

UNBENE'VOLENT, adj. Not kind.—A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, which inclines men to a fierce, unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers.

UNBENI'GHTED, adj. Never visited by darkness.

Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton.

UNBENI'GN, adj. Malignant; malevolent.

To the other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbenign. Milton.

UNBE'NT, adj. Not strained by the string.

Apollo heard; and, conquering his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.

Having the bow unstrung.

Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakspeare.

Not crushed; not subdued.

But thou, secure of soul; unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose.

Dryden

Relaxed; not intent.

Be not always on affairs intent,
(But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent :
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free),
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see.

Denham:

UNBESEE'MING, adj. Unbecoming.—No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbeeseming myself. King Charles.

UNBESEE'MINGNESS, s. Unbecomingness; indecency.—There is so deep an unbeesemingness in them, as places them in the next door to sin. Bp. Hall.

UNBESOU'GHT, adj. Not intreated.

Lest heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, unbesought, provided; and his hands
Cloth'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd.

Milton.

UNBESPOKEN, adj. Not ordered beforehand.

Swift unbespoken pomps thy steps proclaim,
And stammering babes are taught to lisp thy name.

Dryden.

UNBESTO'WED, adj. Not given; not disposed of.—
He had now but one son and one daughter unbestowed.

Bacon.

UNBETRAY'ED, adj. Not betrayed.

Many being privy to the fact,

How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd?

Daniel.

UNBEWA'ILED, adj. Not lamented.

Let determin'd things to destiny

Hold unbewail'd their way.

Shakspeare.

To UNBEWITCH, v. a. To free from fascination.—
Ordinary experience observed would unbewitch men as to these delusions. South.

UNBIAK, or SEMISOKOSCHNOI, one of the Fox islands, in the North Pacific ocean, about 72 miles in circumference.

Lat. 53. 40. N. long. 179. 14. E.
To UNBI'ASS, v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.—That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbiassed give its judgement; being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.

UNBI'ASSEDLY, adv. Without external influence; without prejudice.—I have sought the true meaning; and have unbiassedly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBI'D, or UNBI'DEN, adj. [unabeden, unbeden, Sax.; non rogatus.] Uninvited.

Unbidden guests

Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Shakspeare.

Uncommanded; spontaneous.—Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth unbid.

UNBI'GOTTED, adj. Free from bigotry.—Erasmus, who was an unbigotted Roman Catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

To UNBI'ND, v. a. [unmban, Sax.] To loose; to untie.

His own woe's author, whoso bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it wilfully unbinds.

Spenser.

Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies, and nocturnal rites prepare.

Dryden.

To UNBI'SHOP, v. a. To deprive of episcopal orders.—
I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishopsed yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBIT, adj. Not bitten.—Unbit by rage canine of dying rich. Young.

UNBITTED, adj. Unbridled; unrestrained.

That unbitted thought

Doth fall to stray.

Sidney.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this love to be a sect or eyon. Shakspeare.

UNBLA'MABLE, adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.—Much more could I say concerning this un- blamable inequality of fines and rates. Bacon.

UNBLA'MABLENESS, s. State of being unblamable.—
Keep thy heart free and faithful to thy God; so mayest thou with innocency and unblameableness see all the motions of life. More.

UNBLA'MABLY, adv. Without taint or fault.—Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and un- blamably we behaved ourselves. Thess.

UNBLA'MED, adj. Blameless; free from fault.

Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell
Long time in peace.

Milton.

UNBLA'STED, adj. Not blasted; not made to wither.

The unblasted bay, to conquests due,
The Persian peach, and fruitful quince,
And there the forward almond grew.

Peacham.

UNBLE'MISHABLE, adj. Not capable of being blemished.—That undeflowered and unblemishable simplicity of the gospel. Milton.

UNBLE'MISHED, adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach; free from deformity.

O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;

Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,

And thou unblemish'd form of chastity.

Milton.

UNBLE'NCHED, adj. Unfounded; unblinded.

There, where very desolation dwells,

She may pass on with unbleach'd majesty:

Be it not done in pride, or in presumption.

Milton:

UNBLE'NDED, adj. Not mingled.—None can boast a knowledge deperate from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unbled proportions on this side the empyreum. Glanville.

UNBLE'ST, adj. Accursed; excluded from benediction.
—It is a shameful and unblessed thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.—Wretched; unhappy.

In thy power

It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent

The race unblest, to being yet unbegot.

Milton.

UNBLI'GHTED, adj. Not blighted; unblasted.

In such a world, so thorny, and where none

Find happiness unblighted.

Cowper.

UNBLOOD'IED, adj. Not stained with blood.

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,

But may imagine how the bird was dead,

Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak. Shakspeare.

UNBLOOD'Y, adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.

Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,

The venerable seat of holy hermits,

Who there, secure in separated cells,

From the purling streams, and savage fruits,

Have wholesome bev'rage, and unbloody feasts.

Dryden.

UNBLO'SSOMING, adj. Not bearing any blossom.

Mason.—You may now give a third pruning to peach-trees, taking away and pinching off unblossoming branches.

Evelyn.

UNBLO'WN, adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.

Ah! my poor princes! Ah! my tender babes!

My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets! Shakspeare.

Not extinguished.

Prodigious lamps by night unwet,

And unblown out.

More.

Not inflamed with wind.

Thick darkness shall unfold, a fire unblown

Devour his race.

Sandys.

UNBLU'NTED, adj. Not becoming obtuse.

A sword,

A sword, whose weight without a blow might slay;
Able, unblunted, to cut hosts away. Cowley.

UNBLUSHING, adj. Not having sense of shame; without blushing,

They crowd to the buzz
Of masquerade unblushing. Thomson.

UNBOASTFUL, adj. Modest; unassuming; not boasting.
Oft in humble station dwells
Unboastful worth, above fastidious pomp. Thomson.

UNBODIED, adj. Incorporeal; immaterial.—If we could conceive of things as angels and unbodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds language throws upon them, we should not be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts.—Freed from the body.

All things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbody'd spirit flies. Dryden.

UNBOILED, adj. Not sodden.—A quarter of a pint of rice unboiled, will arise to a pint boiled. Bacon.

To UNBOLT, v. a. To set open; to unbar.
I'll call my uncle down;
He shall unbolt the gates. Shakespeare.

UNBOLTED, adj. Coarse; gross; not refined, as flour by bolting or sifting.—I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakespeare.

UNBONNETED, adj. Wanting a hat or bonnet.
This night, wherein
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry; unbonneted he runs,
And bids what will, take all. Shakespeare.

UNBOOKISH, adj. Not studious of books.—It is to be wondered how museless and unbookish they were, minding nought but the feats of war. There needed no licensing of books among them. Milton.—Not cultivated by erudition.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour,
Quite in the wrong. Shakespeare.

UNBORN, adj. [ungeboren, Sax.] Not yet brought into life; future; being to come.
Some unborn sorrow; ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming tow'rd me. Shakespeare.

UNBORROWED, adj. Genuine; native; one's own.
But the luxurious father of the fold,
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.

To UNBOSOM, v. a. To reveal in confidence.
I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st;
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.

To open; to disclose.
Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echoes mild. Milton.

UNBOTTOMED, adj. Without bottom; bottomless.—The dark; unbottomed, infinite abyss. Milton.

Having no solid foundation; having no reliance.—This is a special act of Christian hope, to be thus unbottomed of ourselves, and fastened upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependence on his mercy. Hammond.

UNBOUGHT, adj. Obtained without money.—The unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.—Not finding any purchaser.—The merchant will leave our native commodities unbought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than export them to a market, which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

UNBOUND, adj. Loose; not tied; wanting a cover:
VOL. XXIV. No. 1646.

used of books.—He that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookseller, who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles; which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.—Preterite of unbind.—Some from their chins the faithful dogs unbound. Dryden.

UNBOUNDED, adj. Infinite; interminable.
The unreal, vast unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.

Unlimited; unrestrained.
He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes. Shakespeare.

UNBOUNDEDLY, adv. Without bounds; without limits.—So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNBOUNDEDNESS, s. Exemption from limits.—Finite, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

UNBOUNTEOUS, adj. Not kind; not liberal.—Such an unbounteous giver we should make him. Milton.

To UNBOW, v. a. To unbend.—Looking back would unbow his resolution. Fuller.

UNBOWED, adj. Not bent.
He knits his brow, and shews an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs. Shakespeare.

To UNBOWEL, v. a. To exenterate; to eviscerate.—In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Hake-will.

To UNBRACE, v. a. To loose; to relax.
Somewhat of mournful sure my ears does wound;
Drums unbraced, with soldiers' broken cries. Dryden.

To make the clothes loose.
Is it physical,
To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakespeare.

To UNBREAST, v. a. To lay open; to uncover.
Those silken shows so dim thy dazzled sight!
Could'st thou unmask their pomp, unbreast their heart,
How would'st thou laugh at this rich beggerie,
And learn to hate such happy miserie! P. Fletcher.

UNBREATHED, adj. Not exercised.
They now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories,
With this same plea against our nuptials. Shakespeare.

I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race, where that immortal garland is to be run for, not without dust and heat. Milton.

UNBREATHING, adj. Unanimated.
They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakespeare.

UNBRED, adj. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.—Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad. Gov. of the Tongue.—Not taught: with to.

A warrior dame,
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd. Dryden.

UNBREECHED, adj. Having no breeches.
Looking on my boy's face, methoughts I did recoil
Twenty-three years; and saw myself unbreech'd,
In my green velvet coat. Shakespeare.

Loosed from the breechings.—The ship—was overladen with guns, some were unbreeched, and her port-holes left open. Pennant.

UNBREWED, adj. Not mixed; pure; genuine.
4 O They

They drink the stream
Unbrew'd, and ever full.

Young.

UNBRI'BABLE, adj. Not to be bribed.—Conscience is cried up for impartial and unbriable. Feltham.

UNBRI'BED, adj. Not influenced by money or gifts; not hired.

The soul gave all:
Unbri'd it gave; or, if a bribe appear,
No less than heav'n.

Dryden.

UNBRI'DLED, adj. Licentious; not restrained.
This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king.

Shakspeare.

UNBRO'KE, or UNBRO'KEN, adj. [ungebrocen, Sax. infractus.] Not violated.

God pardon all oaths that are broke to me;
God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee.

Shakspeare.

Not subdued: not weakened.
From his seat the Pylian prince arose:
Two centuries already he fulfill'd;
And now began the third, unbroken yet.
Not tamed.

Dryden.

A lonely cow,
Unworn with yokes, unbroken to the plow.

Addison.

UNBROTHERLIKE, or UNBROTHERLY, adj. Ill suiting with the character of a brother.—Passionate and unbrotherly practices and proceedings. Bacon.—Victor's unbrotherlike heat towards the eastern churches, fomented that difference about Easter into a schism. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNBRU'ISED, adj. Not bruised; not hurt.

On Dardan plains,
The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions.

Shakspeare.

To UNBU'CKLE, v. a. To loose from buckles.
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing.

Shakspeare.

To UNBUILD, v. a. To raze; to destroy.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.

Shakspeare.

UNBUI'LT, adj. Not yet erected.—Built walls you shun, unbuilt you see. Dryden.

UNBU'RIED, adj. Not interred; not honoured with the rites of funeral.

Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?

Shakspeare.

UNBU'RNED, or UNBU'RNT, adj. Not consumed; not wasted; not injured by fire.

Creon denies the rights of funeral fires to those;
Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes;
Unburn'd unburied, on a heap they lie.

Dryden.

Not heated with fire.—Burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine unburnt. Bacon.

UNBU'RNING, adj. Not consuming by heat.—What we have said of the unburning fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light, deprived of sensible heat. Digby.

To UNBU'RTHEN, v. a. To rid of a load.
We'll shake all cares and business from our age,
Conferring them on younger strengths; while we Unburden'd crawl tow'rd death.

Shakspeare.

To throw off.
Sharp Buckingham unburthens with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart.

Shakspeare.

To disclose what lies heavy on the mind.
From your love I have a warranty
To unburthen all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Shakspeare.

UNBU'SIED, adj. Not employed; idle.—'Tis strange to see, that these unbusied persons can continue in this playing idleness till it become a toil. Bp. Rainbow.

To UNBU'TTON, v. a. To loose any thing buttoned.—Thou art fat-witted with drinking old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper. Shakspeare.

UNCA'GED, adj. Released as from a cage.—The uncaged soul flew through the air. Fanshaw.

UNCA'LCINED, adj. Free from calcination.—A saline substance, subtler than sal ammoniack, carried up with it uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations. Boyle.

UNCA'LLED, adj. Not summoned; not sent for; not demanded.—He, bolder now, uncall'd before her stood. Milton.

To UNCA'LM, v. a. To disturb. A harsh word
What strange disquiet has uncalm'd your breast,
Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest?

Dryden.

UNCA'NCALLED, adj. Not erased; not abrogated.
I only mourn my yet uncancell'd score;
You put me past the pow'r of paying more.

Dryden.

UNCANONICAL, adj. Not agreeable to the canons.—By dispensations for marriage within certain degrees prohibited, or at uncanonical times. Barrow.

UNCANONICALNESS, s. State of being uncanonical.
UNCA'NOPIED, adj. Having no canopy or covering.

Gladly I took the place the sheep had given.
Uncanopi'd of any thing but heaven.

Browne.

UNCA'PABLE, adj. [incapable, Fr.; incapar, Lat.] Not capable; not susceptible. Now more frequently incapable.

Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

Shakspeare.

UNCA'RED for, adj. Not regarded; not attended to.—Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own and their people's ghostly condition uncared for. Hooker.

UNCARIA [so named from the hooked prickles on the stem, in the second species], in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order monogynia.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leaved, tubular, widened at top, five-toothed; teeth sharpish, equal. Corolla one-petalled, salver-shaped; tube narrow, longer than the calyx: border five-cleft; segments roundish, villose without. Stamina: filaments five, very short, inserted into the tube below the orifice. Anthers oblong, in the mouth of the tube. Pistil: germ roundish, fastened to the bottom of the calyx, crowned with a gland. Style capillary, longer than the corolla. Stigma oblong two-grooved. Pericarp two celled. Seeds numerous; fastened to the partition.—Essential Character. Corolla salver-shaped. Germ crowned with a gland. Stigma two-grooved. Pericarp two-celled, many-seeded.

1. Uncaria inermis.—Leaves oblong-ovate, acuminate; stem unarmed. It differs from Nauclea parvifolia, which it resembles very much, in having wider leaves, more ovate, and acuminate; the calyx dilated, obscurely five-toothed, and the teeth roundish, not sharpish; the stamens longer than the tube of the corolla, reflexed and hanging down; and in the heads being subsessile.—Native of Guinea.

2. Uncaria aculeata.—Leaves ovate, acute; stem prickly. Four-cornered, beset with large opposite prickles, which are recurve-hooked, and compressed. The germ is truly inferior.—Native of the forests of Guiana.

UNCA'RNATE, adj. Not fleshy.
To UNCA'SE, v. a. To disengage from any covering.—See Pompey is uncasing for the combat. Shakspeare.—To flay; to strip.—All men him uncased gan deride. Spenser.

UNCA'UGHT, adj. Not yet caught.
Let him fly far;
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught,
And found dispatch'd.

Shakspeare.

UNCA'USED, adj. Having no precedent cause.

Admit

Admit a God, that mystery supreme,
That cause uncaus'd! all other wonders cease. Young.

Those who have maintained the eternity of matter, have never been able to prove it;—whence the idea of uncaused matter cannot be a just idea. A. Barter.

UNCAUTIOUS, adj. Not wary; heedless.
Unforeseen, they say, is unprepared:
Uncautious Arcite thought himself alone. Dryden.

UNCEASING, adj. Continual.
Are these the unceasing joys, the unmingled pleasures,
For which Aspasia scorn'd the Turkish crown? Johnson.

UNCELEBRATED, adj. Not solemnized.
Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton.

UNCELESTIAL, adj. Not partaking of the qualities of heaven; opposite to what is heavenly; hellish.
'Tis nature's structure, broke by common will,
Breeds all that uncelestial discord there. Young.

UNCELSURED, adj. Exempt from public reproach.
UNCEREMONIOUS, adj. Not attended with ceremony; plain.—In the more plain and unceremonious times, woman was a title applied to ladies of the greatest quality and merit by people of the greatest humanity and exactness of behaviour. Blackwall.—No warning given! unceremonious fate! Young.

UNCERTAIN, adj. [incertain, Fr., incertus, Lat.]
Doubtful; not certainly known.
That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud
Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.

Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.—Man, without the protection of a superior being is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.—Not sure in the consequence.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass;
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakspeare.

Not exact; not sure.
Ascanius young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim:
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.

Unsettled; unregular.—As the form of our public service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seemed best. Hooker.

UNCERTAINED, adj. Made uncertain. A word not used.—The diversity of seasons are not so uncertained by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Raleigh.

UNCERTAINLY, adv. Not surely; not certainly.
Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come:
When what was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home. Dryden.

Not confidently.
They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill: and yet if he be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham.

UNCERTAINTY, s. Dubiousness; want of knowledge.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here then remain with your uncertainty;
Let ev'ry feeble rumour shake your hearts. Shakspeare.

Inaccuracy.—That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty in the signification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.—Continuity; want of certainty.—God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, stedfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South.—Something unknown.—Our shepherd's case is every man's case, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest business he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.

UNCESSANT, adj. Continual: we now say incessant.
—With uncessant industry persist. More.

UNCESSANTLY, adv. Continually.—Uncessantly and carefully performing all those offices, to which they are appointed. Smith.

To UNCHAIN, v. a. To free from chains.
Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield,
Secure of conquest, sent him to the field:
The hero acted what the queen ordain'd;
So was his fame complete, and Andromede unchain'd. Prior.

UNCHANGEABLE, adj. Immutable; not subject to variation.—If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary; and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable. Hooker.

UNCHANGEED, adj. Not altered.
More safe I sing with mortal voice; unchang'd
To hoarse, or mute. Milton.
Not alterable.

Dismiss thy fear,
And heaven's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More powerful gods have torn thee from my side. Dryden.

UNCHANGEABLENESS, s. Immutability.—This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newton.

UNCHANGEABLY, adv. Immutably; without change.
Her first order, disposition, frame,
Must then subsist unchangeably the same. Blackmore.

UNCHANGING, adj. Suffering no alteration.
To UNCHARGE, v. a. To retract an accusation.
Even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident. Shakspeare.

UNCHARITABLE, adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by Christianity.

UNCHARITABLENESS, s. Want of charity.—The penitence of the criminal may have number'd him among the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNCHARITABLY, adv. In a manner contrary to charity.—I did not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think so desperately, or wish so uncharitably. Spenser.

To UNCHARM, v. a. To release from some secret power.

I am uncharm'd;
Farewell, thou cursed house! Beaum. and Fl.

UNCHARMING, adj. No longer able to charm.—When old, uncharming Catherine was remov'd. Dryden.

UNCHARY, adj. Not wary; not cautious; not frugal.
I've said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out. Shakspeare.

UNCHASTE, adj. Lewd; libidinous; not continent; not chaste; not pure.

In my master's garments,
Which he inforc'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purposes, to violate
My lady's honour. Shakspeare.

UNCHASTISABLE, adj. Not to be chastised.—The hard hearts, unchastisable in those judicial courts, were so remitted there, as bound over to the higher session of conscience. Milton.

UNCHASTISED, adj. Not punished.

While

While, unchastis'd, the insulting Spaniard dares
Infest the trading flood.

Thomson.

Not restrained; unawed.

Of thee forgetful if I form a song,
My lyre be broken, and untun'd my tongue,
My griefs be doubled, from thy image free,
And mirth a torment, unchastis'd by thee.

Tickell.

UNCHA'STITY, s. Lewdness; incontinence.—That generation was more particularly addicted to intemperance, sensuality, and unchastity. Woodward.

UNCHE'CKED, adj. Unrestrained; not hindered.

Apt the mind, or fancy, is to rove

Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end.

Milton.

Not contradicted.—What news on the Rialto?—Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd. Shakspcare.

UNCHEE'RFUL, adj. Sad; gloomy; melancholy.—Uncheerful night. Shakspcare—They be commonly lean, hirsute, uncheerful in countenance, withered, and not pleasant to behold. Burton.

UNCHEE'RFULNESS, s. Melancholy; gloominess of temper.—Many, by a natural uncheerfulness of heart, love to indulge this uncomfortable way of life. Addison.

UNCHEE'RY, adj. Dull; not enlivening. See CHEERY.—The sad accidents of life, and the uncheery hours which perpetually overtake us. Sterne.

UNCHE'WED, adj. Not masticated.

He fills his famish'd maw, his mouth runs o'er

With unchew'd morsels, while he churns the gore. Dryden.

To UNCHIL'D, v. a. To deprive of children.

He hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,

Which to this hour bewail the injury.

Shakspcare.

To render unworthy of the name and character of a child.—They do justly unchild themselves, that in main elections dispose of themselves without the consent of those which gave them being. It is both unmannerly and unnatural in the child to run before, without, against, the will of the parent. Bp. Hall.

UNCHRISTIAN, adj. [uncristene, Sax.] Contrary to the laws of Christianity.—It's uncharitable, unchristian, and inhuman, to pass a peremptory sentence of condemnation upon a try'd friend, where there is any room left for a more favourable judgment. L'Estrange.—Unconverted; infidel.—Whereupon grew a question, whether a Christian soldier might herein do as the unchristian did, and wear as they wore. Hooker.

To UNCHRISTIAN, v. a. To deprive of the constituent qualities of a Christian.—Atheism is a sin, that does not only unchristian, but unman, the person that is guilty of it. South.

UNCHRISTIANLY, adj. Contrary to the laws of Christianity.—It will ensnare us to unchristianly compliances. Milton.

UNCHRISTIANLY, adv. In a manner contrary to the laws of Christianity.—How durst sundry holy and learned men have rejected his decisions, whether right or wrong is not now the question, unchristianly out of doubt on their parts, if he had been then holden the infallible oracle of our religion? Bp. Bedell.

UNCHRISTIANNES, s. Contrariety to Christianity.—The unchristianness of those denials might arise from a displeasure to see me prefer my own divines before their ministers. King Charles.

To UNCHUR'CH, v. a. To deprive of the character and rights of a church; to expel from a church.—The Greeks—for this cause stand utterly unchurched by the church of Rome. South.

UNCLIAL, adj. [uncialis, Lat. "literæ unciales."] Belonging to letters of a large size, used in ancient manuscripts.—The term uncial is of no great antiquity; it was introduced by those who have treated of ancient writings, to distinguish those manuscripts, which are written in large round characters, from those written in pure capitals. The word probably took its rise from the manuscripts that were written in such letters as are generally used for the heads and titles of chapters, which were called by the librarii, or book-writers, literæ initiales (but were not capitals), which words the ignorant monks and schoolmen mistook for literæ unciales. Uncial writing began to be adopted about the middle of the fifth century. Astlc.

UN'CIAL, s. An uncial letter.—If a manuscript is entirely in uncials, it may very well be supposed prior to the close of the ninth century. Astlc.

UNCI'RCUMCISED, adj. Not circumcised; not a Jew.—The uncircumcis'd smiled grimly with disdain. Cowley.

UNCIRCUMCISION, s. Omission of circumcision.—God, that gives the law that a Jew shall be circumcised, thereby constitutes uncircumcision an obliquity; which, had he not given that law, had never been such. Hammond.

UNCI'RCUMSCRIBED, adj. Unbounded; unlimited.

Though I, uncircumscrib'd myself, retire,

And put not forth my goodness.

Milton.

UNCI'RCUMSPECT, adj. Not cautious; not vigilant.—Their uncircumspect simplicity had been used, especially in matters of religion. Hayward.

UNCIRCUMSTANTIAL, adj. Unimportant. A bad word.—The like particulars, although they seem uncircumstantial, are oft set down in Holy Scripture. Brown.

UNCI'VIL, adj. [incivilis, Lat.] Unpolite; not agreeable to rules of elegance, or complaisance.

They love me well, yet I have much to do,

To keep me from uncivil outrages.

Shakspcare.

UNCI'VILLY, adv. Unpolitely; not complaisantly.—Somewhat in it he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately, as before he had done uncivilly. Brown.

UNCI'VILIZED, adj. Not reclaimed from barbarity.

But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despis'd,

And kept unconquer'd, and unciviliz'd:

Fierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,

We still defy'd the Romans, as of old.

Popc.

Coarse; indecent.—Several, who have been polished in France, make use of the most coarse, uncivilized words in our language. Addison.

UNCLAIM'ED, adj. Not claimed; not demanded.—No peaceful desert yet unclaim'd by Spain. Johnson.

UNCLARIFIED, adj. Not purged; not purified.—One ounce of whey unclarified; one ounce of oil of vitriol, make no apparent alteration. Bacon.

To UNCLASP, v. a. To open what is shut with clasps.

Thou know'st no less, but all; I have unclasp'd

To thee the book, ev'n of my secret soul.

Shakspcare.

UNCLASSICAL, or UNCLASSIC, adj. Not classic.

Angel of dulness, sent to scatter round

Her magic charms o'er all unclassic ground.

Popc.

UNCLE, s. [oncle, Fr.] The brother of one's father or mother.—Hamlet punishes his uncle rather for his own death than the murder of his father. Shakspcare.

UNCLE'AN, adj. [uncleane, Sax.] Foul; dirty; filthy.

Charon,

A sordid god: down from his hoary chin

A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

Not purified by ritual practices; foul with sin.

Besides how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,

What act more execrably unclean, profane?

Milton.

Lewd; unchaste.

Let them all encircle him about,

And, fairy-like too, pinch the unclean knight,

And ask him, why that hour of fairy revel,

In their so sacred paths he dares to tread,

In shape profane?

Shakspcare.

UNCLEANLINESS, s. Want of cleanliness.—This profane liberty and uncleanliness, the archbishop resolved to reform. Clarendon.

UNCLEANLY,

UNCLEANLY, adj. Foul; filthy; nasty.

Civet is of a baser birth than tar;
The very uncleanly flux of a cat.

Shakspeare.

Indecent; unchaste.—'Tis pity that these harmonious writers have ever indulged any thing uncleanly or impure to defile their paper.

UNCLEANNESS, s. [unclænneſſe, Sax.] Lewdness; incontinence.—In St. Giles's I understood that most of the vilest and most miserable houses of uncleanliness were.

Graunt.—Want of cleanliness: nastiness.—Be not curious nor careless in your habit; be not troublesome to thyself, or to others, by unhandsomeness, or uncleanness. Bp. Taylor.—Sin; wickedness.—I will save you from all your uncleanesses. Ez.—Want of ritual purity.

UNCLEANSED, adj. Not cleansed.—Pond earth is a good compost, if the pond have been long uncleansed, so the water be not too hungry. Bacon.

To UNCLENCH, v. a. To open the closed hand.

The hero so his enterprize recalls;
His fist unclenches, and the weapon falls.

Garth.

To UNCLEW, v. a. To undo.

If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unclew me quite.

Shakspeare.

UNCLIPPED, adj. Whole; not cut.—As soon as there began a distinction between clipped and unclipped money, bullion arose. Locke.

To UNCLOTHE, v. a. To strip; to make naked. The boughs and branches are never unclothed and left naked. Raleigh.—Poor orphans' minds are left as uncloath'd and naked altogether, as their bodies. Atterbury.

To UNCLOG, v. a. To disencumber; to exonerate.

Could I meet 'em
But once a day, it would unclog my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

Shakspeare.

To set at liberty.

Then air, because unclogg'd in empty space,
Flies after fire, and claims the second place.

Dryden.

To UNCLOISTER, v. a. To set at large.
Why did I not, uncloister'd from the womb,
Take my next lodging in a tomb?

Norris.

To UNCLOSE, v. a. To open.

Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose,
That well-known name awakens all my woes.

Pope.

UNCLOSED, adj. Not separated by inclosures.—The king's army would, through those unclosed parts, have done them little harm. Clarendon.

To UNCLOUD, v. a. To unveil; to clear from obscurity.

Call up
Thy senses, and unccloud thy covered spirits.

Beaum. and Fl.

UNCLOUDED, adj. Free from clouds; clear from obscurity; not darkened.

The father unfolding bright
Tow'rd the right hand his glory on the Son
Blaz'd forth uncclouded Deity.

Milton.

UNCLOUDEDNESS, s. Openness; freedom from gloom.—The love I would persuade, makes nothing more conducive to it, than the greatest unccloudedness of the eye, and the perfectest illustration of the object; which is such, that the clearest reason is the most advantageous light it can desire to be seen by. Boyle.

UNCLOUDY, adj. Free from a cloud.

Now night in silent state begins to rise,
And twinkling orbs bestow the unccloudy skies;
Her borrow'd lustre growing Cynthia lends.

Gay.

To UNCLUTCH, v. a. To open.—If the terrors of the Lord could not melt his bowels, unclutch his gripping hand, or disseize him of his prey; yet sure it must discourage him from grasping of heaven too. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1647.

To UNCOIF, v. a. To pull the cap off.—Yonder are two apple-women scolding, and just ready to uncoif one another. Arbuthnot and Pope.

UNCOIFED, adj. Not wearing a coif.

Thou, her majesty's renown'd
Though uncoif'd counsel.

Young.

To UNCOIL, v. a. To open from being coiled or wrapped one part upon another.—The spiral air-vessels are like threads of cobweb, a little uncoiled. Derham.

UNCOINED, adj. Not coined.—While thou liv'st, Kate, take a fellow of plain, uncoined constancy. Shakspeare.—

UNCOLLECTED, adj. Not collected; not recollected.

Asham'd, confus'd, I started from my bed,
And to my soul yet uncollected said;
Into thyself, fond Solomon! return;
Reflect again; and thou again shalt mourn.

Prior.

Not collected or brought together.

As when of old (so sung the Hebrew bard)
Light uncollected through the chaos urg'd
Its infant way.

Thomson.

UNCOLOURED, adj. Not stained with any colour, or dye.

Whether to deck with clouds the uncolour'd sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers;
Rising or falling, still advance his praise.

Milton.

UNCOMBED, adj. Not parted or adjusted by the comb.—Thy locks uncomb'd, like a rough wood appear. Dryden.

UNCOMEATABLE, adj. Inaccessible; unattainable. A low, corrupt word.—He has a perfect art in being unintelligible in discourse, and uncomeatable in business. Tatler.

UNCOMELINESS, s. Want of grace; want of beauty.—He praised women's modesty, and gave orderly, well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness. Shakspeare.

UNCOMELY, adj. Not comely; wanting grace.—Uncomely courage, unbeseeeming skill. Thomson.

UNCOMFORTABLE, adj. Affording no comfort; gloomy; dismal; miserable.

The sun ne'er views th' uncomfortable seats,
When radiant he advances or retreats.

Pope.

Receiving no comfort; melancholy.

UNCOMFORTABLENESS, s. Want of cheerfulness.—The want of just dispositions to the holy sacrament, may occasion this uncomfortableness. Bp. Taylor.

UNCOMFORTABLY, adv. Without cheerfulness; without comfort.—Upon the floor uncomfortably lying. Drayton.

UNCOMMANDED, adj. Not commanded.—It is easy to see what judgment is to be passed upon all those affected, uncommanded, absurd austerities of the Romish profession. South.

UNCOMME'NDABLE, adj. Illaudable; unworthy of commendation.—The uncommendable licentiousness of his [Martial's] poetry. Feltham.

UNCOMME'NDED, adj. Not commended.

Hadst thou sprung
In deserts, where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended dy'd.

Waller.

UNCOMMITTED, adj. Not committed.—He hath no injury to provoke the uncommitted sin. Hammond.

UNCOMMON, adj. Not frequent; rare; not often found or known.—Some of them are uncommon, but such as the reader must assent to, when he sees them explained. Addison.

UNCOMMONLY, adv. Not frequently; to an uncommon degree.

UNCOMMONNESS, s. Infrequency; rareness; rarity.—Our admiration of the antiquities about Naples and Rome, does not so much arise out of their greatness as uncommonness. Addison.

UNCOMMUNICATED, adj. Not communicated.—There is no such mutual infusion as really causeth the same natural operations or properties to be made common unto both substances; stances; but whatsoever is natural to deity, the same remaineth in Christ uncommunicated unto his manhood; and whatsoever natural to manhood, his deity thereof is incapable. Hooker.

UNCOMMUNICATIVE, adj. Not communicative; close.—The far greater number are of a churlish and uncommunicative disposition. — Ld. Chesterfield.

UNCOMPACT, or UNCOMPACTED, adj. Not compact; not firm; not closely adhering.—He digs in sand, and lays his beams in water, that builds upon events which no man can be master of. What can he shew but his own intemperance? bewraying even a kind of greediness, while he catches at that which is not yet in his reach; which seems to unfold an uncompact mind, that is not so wise as to subsist well with what it hath at present. Feltham.

UNCOMPANIED, adj. Having no companion.—Thence she fled uncompained, unsought. Fairfax.

UNCOMPASSIONATE, adj. Having no pity. Neither deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears, Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire. Shakspeare.

UNCOMPELLABLE, adj. Not to be forced.—A noble courtsey, falling like rain in due season, enlivens a man more than a market-sale among Moors; for it conquers the uncompellable mind, and disinterests man of himself. Feltham.

UNCOMPELLED, adj. Free from compulsion. Keep my voyage from the royal ear, Nor, uncompell'd, the dangerous truth betray, Till twice six times descends the lamp of day. Popc.

UNCOMPLAISANT, adj. Not civil; not obliging.—A natural roughness makes a man uncomplaisant to others, so that he has no deference for their inclinations. Locke.

UNCOMPLAISANTLY, adv. With want of complaisance.—Sons shall be admitted before daughters: or (as our male lawgivers have rather uncomplaisantly expressed it) the worthiest of blood shall be preferred. Blackstone.

UNCOMPLETE, or UNCOMPLETED, adj. Not perfect; not finished.—Marriage is creation's perfection: barren virginity is but uncompleted man. Feltham.

UNCOMPLYING, adj. Not yielding; unbending; not obsequious.—The king by their persuasion was induced to take away the seal from the uncomplying chancellor. Lowth.

UNCOMPOUNDED, adj. Simple; not mixed. Your uncompounded atoms, you Figures in numbers infinite allow; From which, by various combination, springs This unconfi'd diversity of things. Blackmore.

Simple; not intricate.—The substance of the faith was comprised in that uncompounded style, but was afterwards prudently enlarged, for the repelling heretical invaders. Hammond.

UNCOMPOUNDEDNESS, s. Pureness; simplicity.—Peace and simplicity, cleanness, uncompoundedness of spirit. Hammond.

UNCOMPREENSIVE, adj. Unable to comprehend.—Narrow-spirited, uncomprehensive zealots, who know not the world! South.—In Shakspeare it seems to signify incomprehensible.

The providence, that's in a watchful state, Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold; Finds bottom in the incomprehensive deep. Shakspeare.

UNCOMPRESSED, adj. Free from compression.—We might be furnished with a reply, by setting down the differing weight of our receiver, when emptied, and when full of uncompressed air. Boyle.

UNCONCETVABLE, adj. Not to be understood; not to be comprehended by the mind.—In the communication of motion by impulse, we can have no other conception, but of the passing of motion out of one body into another: which is as obscure and unconceivable, as how our minds move or stop our bodies by thought. Locke.

UNCONCETVABLENESS, s. Incomprehensibility.—

The unconceivableness of something they find in one, throws men violently into the contrary hypothesis, though altogether as unintelligible. Locke.

UNCONCEIVED, adj. Not thought; not imagined. Vast is my theme, yet unconceiv'd, and brings Untoward words, scarce loos'd yet from things. Creech.

UNCONCERN, s. Negligence; want of interest; freedom from anxiety; freedom from perturbation.—Such things had been charged upon us by the malice of enemies, the want of judgment in friends, and the unconcern of indifferent persons. Swift.

UNCONCERNED, adj. Having no interest.—It seem a principle in human nature, to incline one way more than another, even in matters where we are wholly unconcerned. Swift.—Not anxious; not disturbed; not affected.—Before the thing it has with in Milton, for in Dryden, and at in Rogers.

See the morn,
All unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosy progress smiling. Milton.

UNCONCERNEDLY, adv. Without interest or affection; without anxiety; without perturbation. And unconcern'dly cast his eyes around, As if to find and dare the griesly challenger. Dryden.

UNCONCERNEDNESS, s. Freedom from anxiety, or perturbation.—No man, having done a kindness to another, would think himself justly dealt with, in a total neglect, and unconcernedness of the person who had received that kindness. South.

UNCONCERNING, adj. Not interesting; not affecting; not belonging to one.—Things impossible in their nature, or unconcerning to us. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNCONCERNMENT, s. The state of having no share.—Being privileged by an happy unconcernment in those legal murders, you may take a sweeter relish of your own innocence. South.

UNCONCLUDENT, or UNCONCLUDING, adj. Not decisive; inferring no plain or certain conclusion or consequence.—Our arguments are inevident and unconcludent. Hale.

UNCONCLUDIBLE, adj. Not determinable.—By endeavouring more magisterially and determinately to comprehend and conclude that which is unconcludible, and incomprehensible to the understanding of man, we work ourselves into anxiety and subtle distemper. More.

UNCONCLUDINGNESS, s. Quality of being unconcluding.—Either may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccurateness and the unconcludingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

UNCONCLUSIVE, adj. Not decisive; not regularly consequential.—Had the promises been of any other sort but these, i. e. conditional promises, the apostle's illation of so much duty conditioning and perfecting, had been utterly unconclusive, if not impertinent. Hammond.

UNCONCOCTED, adj. Not digested; not matured.—We swallow cherry-stones, but void them unconcocted. Brown.

UNCONDEMNED, adj. Not condemned.—It was a familiar and uncondemned practice amongst the Greeks and Romans, to expose, without pity, their innocent infants. Locke.

UNCONDITIONAL, adj. Absolute; not limited by any terms.

O pass not, Lord! an absolute decree,
Or bind thy sentence unconditional;
But in thy sentence our remorse foresee,
And, in that foresight, this thy doom recal. Dryden.

UNCONDU'GING, adj. Not leading to.—I judged it a work in some sort not unconducting to a publick benefit. Phillips.

UNCONDU'CTED, adj. Not led; not guided.—He that can seriously ascribe all this to an undisciplined and unconducted unconducted troop of atoms ambling up and down confusedly through the field of infinite space, what might he not as easily assert, or admit? Barrow.

UNCONFINABLE, adj. Unbounded.—You rogue! you stand upon your honour! why, thou unconfinnable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep mine honour. Shakspeare.

UNCONFINED, adj. Free from restraint.

I wonder at it.

That shews thou art unconfinn'd.

Shakspeare.

Having no limits; unbounded.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfinn'd;

A knowledge both of books and human kind.

Pope.

UNCONFINEDLY, adv. Without limitation; without confinement.—In this way any man is able to benefit all, or unconfinnedly to oblige mankind. Barrow.

UNCONFIRMED, adj. Not fortified by resolution; not strengthened; raw; weak.

The unexpected speech

The king had made upon the new rais'd force,
In th' unconfinn'd troops, much fear did breed.

Daniel.

Not strengthened by additional testimony.

He would have resign'd

To him his heavenly office, nor was long

His witness unconfinn'd.

Milton.

Not settled in the church by the rite of confirmation.

UNCONFORM, adj. Unlike; dissimilar; not analogous.—Not unconform to other shining globes. Milton.

UNCONFORMABLE, adj. Inconsistent; not conforming.—Unto those general rules, they know we do not defend, that we may hold any thing unconformable. Hooker.

UNCONFORMITY, s. Incongruity; inconsistency.—The moral goodness or evil of men's actions, which consist in their conformity or unconformity to right reason, must be eternal, necessary, and unchangeable. South.

UNCONFUSED, adj. Distinct; free from confusion.—It is more distinct and unconfused than the sensitive memory. Hale.

UNCONFUSEDLY, adv. Without confusion.—Every one finds that he knows, when any idea is in his understanding, and that, when more than one are there, he knows them, distinctly and unconfusedly, from one another. Locke.

UNCONFUTABLE, adj. Irrefragable; not to be convicted of error.—One political argument they boasted of as unconfutable, that from the marriages of ecclesiasticks, would ensue poverty in many of the children, and thence a disgrace and burden to the church. Sprat.

UNCONGEALED, adj. Not concreted by cold.—By exposing wine, after four months' digestion in horse-dung, unto the extremity of cold, the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit retire, and be found uncongealed in the center. Brown.

UNCONJUGAL, adj. Not consistent with matrimonial faith; not befitting a wife or husband.

My name

To all posterity may stand defam'd;

With malediction mention'd, and the blot

Of falsehood most unconjugal traduc'd.

Milton.

UNCONNECTED, adj. Not coherent; not joined by proper transitions or dependence of parts; lax; loose; vague.—Those who contemplate only the fragments broken off from any science, dispersed in short, unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth. Watts.

UNCONNING, adj. Not forbearing penal notice.

To that hideous place not so confin'd,

By rigour unconning; but that oft

Leaving my dolorous prison, I enjoy

Large liberty, to round this globe of earth.

Milton.

UNCONQUERABLE, adj. Not to be subdued; insuperable; not to be overcome; invincible.—Louis was darting his thunder on the Alps, and causing his enemies to feel the force of his unconquerable arms. Dryden.

UNCONQUERABLY, adv. Insuperably; insuperably.

The herds of Iphycus, detain'd in wrong;

Wild, furious herds, unconquerably strong.

Pope.

UNCONQUERED, adj. Not subdued; not overcome.

Unconquer'd yet, in that forlorn estate,

His manly courage overcame his fate.

Dryden.

Insuperable; invincible.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield,—

That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin!

Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,

But rigid looks and chaste austerity,

And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence,

With sudden adoration and blank awe?

Milton.

UNCONSCIONABLE, adj. Exceeding the limits of any just claim or expectation.—A man may oppose an unconscionable request for an unjustifiable reason. L'Estrange.

—Forming unreasonable expectations.—You cannot be so unconscionable as to charge me for not subscribing of my name, for that would reflect too grossly upon your own party, who never dare it. Dryden.—Enormous; vast. A low word.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,

Stalking with less unconscionable strides,

And lower looks, but in a sultry chafe.

Milton.

Not guided or influenced by conscience.—How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable? Hardly ever did any man of no conscience continue a man of any credit long. South.

UNCONSCIONABLENESS, s. Unreasonableness of hope or claim.

UNCONSCIONABLY, adv. Unreasonably.

This is a common vice; though all things here

Are sold, and sold unconscionably dear.

Dryden.

UNCONSCIOUS, adj. Having no mental perception.

Unconscious causes only still impart

Their utmost skill, their utmost power exert:

Those which can freely chuse, discern, and know,

Can more or less of art and care bestow.

Blackmore.

Unacquainted; unknowing.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,

Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke.

Pope.

To UNCONSECRATE, v. a. To render not sacred; to desecrate.—Heaven must be unconsecrated by such violence. Hammond.

UNCONSENTING, adj. Not yielding.—Nor unconsenting hear his friend's request. Pope.

UNCONSENTED, adj. Not yielded.—We should extend it even to the weakness of our natures, to our proneness to evil: for however these, unconsented to, will not be imputed to us, yet are they matter of sorrow. Wake.

UNCONSIDERED, adj. Not considered; not attended to.

Love yourself; and in that love,

Not unconsidered leave your honour.

Shakspeare.

UNCONSONANT, adj. Incongruous; unfit; inconsistent.—It seemeth a thing unconsonant, that the world should honour any other as the Saviour, but him whom it honoureth as the Creator of the world. Hooker.

UNCONSPIRINGNESS, s. Absence of plot or conspiracy.—A harmony, whose dissonances serve but to manifest the sincerity and unconspiringness of the writers. Boyle.

UNCONSTANT, adj. [inconstans, Lat.] Fickle; not steady; changeable; mutable.

More unconstant than the wind; who woos

Ev'n

Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north;
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south. Shakspeare.

UNCONSTRAINED, adj. Free from compulsion.

Will you, with free and unconstrained soul,
Give me your daughter? Shakspeare.

UNCONSTRAINEDLY, adv. Without force suffered.
—Such a patron has frankly, generously, and unconstrainedly relieved me. South.

UNCONSTRAINED, s. Freedom from constraint; ease.
—Mr. Dryden writ more like a scholar; and though the greatest master of poetry, he wanted that easiness, that air of freedom and unconstraint, which is more sensibly to be perceived than described. Felton.

UNCONSULTING, adj. [inconsultus, Lat.] Heady; rash; improvident; imprudent.—It was the fair Zelmane, Plexirtus's daughter, whom unconsulting affection, unfortunately born to mewards, had made borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent rayments. Sidney.

UNCONSUMED, adj. Not wasted; not destroyed by any wasting power.

Hope never comes,
That comes to all, but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex ideas, signified by the word gold. Locke.

UNCONSUMMATE, adj. Not consummated.

Acron came to the fight,
Who left his spouse betroth'd, and unconsummate night. Dryden.

UNCONTEMNED, adj. Not despised.

Which of the peers
Have unctem'd gone by him, or at least
Stood not neglected? Shakspeare.

UNCONTENDED, adj. Not contended for; not contested.

Permit me, chief, permit without delay
To lead this uncontended prize away. Dryden.

UNCONTENTED, adj. Not contented; not satisfied.

UNCONTENTINGNESS, s. Want of power to satisfy.
—The decreed uncontentingness of all other goods, is richly repaired by its being but an aptness to prove a rise to our love's settling in God. Boyle.

UNCONTESTABLE, adj. Indisputable; not controvertible.—Where is the man that has uncontestible evidence of the truth of all that he holds, or the falsehood of all he condemns? Locke.

UNCONTESTED, adj. Not disputed; evident.

'Tis by experience uncontested found,
Bodies orbicular, when whirling round,
Still shake off all things on their surface plac'd. Blackmore.

UNCONTRADICTED, adj. Not contradicted.—The place of Daniel was always accounted the most evident and uncontradicted testimony. Pearson.

UNCONTRITE, adj. Not religiously penitent.—The priest, by absolving an uncontrite sinner, cannot make him contrite. Hammond.

UNCONTROVERTED, adj. Not disputed; not liable to debate.—One reason of the uncontroverted certainty of mathematical science is, because 'tis built upon clear and settled significations of names. Glarville.

UNCONTROULABLE, adj. Resistless; powerful beyond opposition.

Gaza mourns,
And all that band them to resist
His uncontrollable intent. Milton.

Indisputable; irrefragable.—The pension was granted, by reason of the king of England's uncontrollable title to England. Hayward.

UNCONTROULABLY, adv. Without possibility of opposition; without danger of refutation.—Uncontrollably, and under general consent, many opinions are passant, which, upon due examination, admit of doubt. Brown.

UNCONTROULED, adj. Unresisted; unopposed; not to be overruled.

Should I try the uncontrolled worth
Of this pure cause, 'twould kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.

Not refuted.—That Julius Caesar was so born, is an uncontroled report. Hayward.

UNCONTROULEDLY, adv. Without controul; without opposition.—Mankind avert killing, and being killed; but when the phantasm honour has once possessed the mind, no reluctance of humanity is able to make head against it; but it commands uncontroledly. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNCONVERSABLE, adj. Not suitable to conversation; not social.—Faith and devotion are traduced and ridiculed, as morose, unconversable qualities. Rogers.

UNCONVERSANT, adj. Not familiar; not acquainted with: followed both by in and with.—It may require many instances and much discoursing to make this out to persons who are haply unconversant in disquisitions of this kind. Madox.

UNCONVERTED, adj. Not persuaded of the truth of Christianity.—Salvation belongeth unto none, but such as call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ: which nations, as yet unconverted, neither do, nor possibly can do, till they believe. Hooker.—Not religious; not yet induced to live a holy life. Thus Baxter wrote a Call to the Unconverted.

UNCONVINCED, adj. Not convinced.—A way not to be introduced into the seminaries of those, who are to propagate religion, or philosophy, amongst the ignorant and unconvinced. Locke.

To UNCO'RD, v. a. To loose a thing bound with cords.

UNCORRECTED, adj. Inaccurate; not polished to exactness.—I have written this too hastily and too loosely; it comes out from the first draught, and uncorrected. Dryden.

UNCORRIGIBLE, adj. Incapable of being corrected; depraved beyond correction: we now say incorrigible.—He will seek to amend himself, if he be not altogether uncorrigible. Outred.

UNCORRUPT, adj. Honest; upright; not tainted with wickedness; not influenced by iniquitous interest.—The pleasures of sin, and this world's vanities, are censured with uncorrupt judgment. Hooker.

UNCORRUPTED, adj. Not vitiated; not depraved.

Man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew,
And with a native bent did good pursue. Dryden.

UNCORRUPTEDNESS, s. State of being uncorrupted.—How shall the licensors themselves be confided in, unless we can confer upon them, or they assume to themselves above all others in the land, the grace of infallibility and uncorruptedness? Milton.

UNCORRUPTIBLE, adj. That cannot be corrupted.—The glory of the uncorruptible God. Rom.

UNCORRUPTNESS, s. Integrity; uprightness.—In doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity. Tillotson.

To UNCOVER, v. a. To divest of a covering.—After you are up, uncover your bed, and open the curtains, to air it. Harvey.—To deprive of clothes.—Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakspeare.—To strip off the roof.

Porches and schools,
Uncover'd, and with scaffolds cumber'd stood. Prior.

To shew openly; to strip of a veil, or concealment.

He cover'd; but his robe

Uncover'd

Uncover'd more: so rose the Danite strong,
Shorn of his strength. Milton.

To bare the head, as in the presence of a superior.
Rather let my head dance on a bloody pole,
Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom. Shakspeare.

UNCO'UNSELLABLE, adj. Not to be advised.—It would have been uncounsellable to have marched, and have left such an enemy at their backs. Clarendon.

UNCO'UNTABLE, adj. Innumerable.—Those uncountable, glorious bodies, were not set in the firmament for no other end than to adorn it. Raleigh.

UNCO'UNTED, adj. Not numbered; not counted.—The blunt monster with uncounted heads. Shakspeare.

UNCO'UNTERFEIT, adj. Genuine; not spurious.—True zeal is not any one single affection of the soul, but a strong mixture of many holy affections, filling the heart with all pious intentions; all, not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Sprat.

To UNCOUPLE, v. a. To loose dogs from their couples.

Uncouple in the western valley, go;
Dispatch, I say, and find the forester. Shakspeare.

To set loose; to disjoin.

So when our mortal frame shall be disjoin'd,
The lifeless lump uncoupled from the mind,
From sense of grief and pain we shall be free. Dryden.

UNCOUPLED, adj. Single; not united; not wedded.—Uncoupled bed, and childless eld. Milton.

UNCO'URTEOUS, adj. Uncivil; unpolite.—In behaviour some will say, ever sad, surely sober, and somewhat given to musing, but never uncourteous. Sidney.

UNCO'URTEOUSLY, adv. Uncivilly; unpolitely.—Though somewhat merrily, yet uncourteously he railed upon England, objecting extreme beggary, and mere barbarousness unto it. Ascham.

UNCO'URTLINESS, s. Unsuitableness of manners to a court; inelegance.—The quakers presented an address, which, notwithstanding the uncourtliness of their phrases, the sense was very honest. Addison.

UNCO'URTLY, adj. Inelegant of manners; uncivil; coarse; rustic.

Thou hadst
So strange a fellow in thy companie,
His garbe was so uncourtly, I grew sicke. Habington.

UNCO'UTH, adj. [uncuð, Sax. We now place the accent on the last syllable: it was formerly always on the first.] Odd; strange; unusual.

Say on;
For I that day was absent, as befel,
Bound on a voyage uncouth, and obscure,
Far on excursion towards the gates of hell. Milton.

UNCO'UTHLY, adv. [uncuðlice, Sax.] Oddly; strangely.

Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did their lubber state mankind bestride. Dryden.

UNCO'UTHNESS, s. Oddness; strangeness.—To deny himself in the lesser instances, that so when the greater come, they may not have the disadvantage of uncouthness, and perfect strangeness, to enhance their difficulty, must be acknowledged reasonable. Dec.

To UNCREA'TE, v. a. To annihilate; to reduce to nothing; to deprive of existence.

Who created thee, lamenting learn,
When who can uncreate thee thou shalt know. Milton.

UNCREA'TED, adj. Not yet created.

How hast thou disturb'd
Heaven's blessed peace, and into nature brought Misery, uncreated till the crime
Of thy rebellion? Milton.

[Incréé, Fr.] Not produced by creation.—The next paragraph proves, that the idea we have of God is God him self; it being something as he says, uncreatd. Locke.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1647.

UNCRE'DIBLE, adj. Not entitled to belief; incredible.—Rarities and reports that seem uncredible are not to be suppressed, or denied to the memorie of man. Bacon.

UNCRE'DITABLE, adj. Not reputable; not in repute.—He in whom 'tis not conscience, but bashfulness, and ignorance of vice, that abstains only from uncredible or unfashionable, from branded or disused, sins. Hammond.

UNCRE'DITABLENESS, s. Want of reputation.—To all other dissuasives, we may add this of the uncredibility; the best that can be said is, that they use wit foolishly, whereof the one part devours the other. Dec.

UNCREDITED, adj. Not believed.—It sayeth so uncredited. Warner.

UNCRO'PPED, adj. Not cropped; not gathered.

Thy abundance wants
Partakers, and uncropp'd falls to the ground. Milton.

UNCRO'SSED, adj. Uncancelled.

Such gain the cap of him, that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shakspeare.

UNCROWDED, adj. Not straitened by want of room.

An amphitheatre,—
That on 'its public shows unpeopled Rome,
And held uncrowded nations in its womb. Addison.

To UNCRO'WN, v. a. To deprive of a crown; to deprive of sovereignty.

He hath done me wrong;
And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long. Shakspeare.

To pull off the crown.

Greedy of spoils, the Italians strip the dead
Of his rich armour and uncrown his head. Dryden.

U'NCTION, s. [onction, Fr.] The act of anointing.—The unction of the tabernacle, the table, the laver, the altar of gold, with all the instruments appertaining thereunto, made them for ever holy. Hooker.—Unguent; ointment.

The king himself the sacred unction made;
As king by office, and as priest by trade. Dryden.

The act of anointing medically. Any thing softening, or lenitive.

Mother,

Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
That not your trespass, but my madness speaks. Shakspeare.

The right of anointing in the last hours.—Their extreme unction, administered as the dying man's viaticum, which St. James mentioned as the ceremony of his recovery, may be added. Hammond.—Any thing that excites piety and devotion; that which melts to devotion.

UNCTUO'SITY, s. Fatness; oiliness.—Fuliginous exhalations contain an unctuosity in them, and arise from the matter of fuel. Brown.

U'NCTUOUS, adj. [unctus, Lat.] Fat; clammy; oily.

Dry up thy harrow'd veins, and plough-torn leas,
Whereof ingrateful man, with lickerish draughts,
And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
That from it all consideration slips. Shakspeare.

A wandering fire,

Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
Condenses, and the cold environs round,
Kindled through agitation to a flame. Milton.

U'NCTUOUSNESS, s. Fatness; oiliness; clamminess; greasiness.—A great degree of unctuousness is not necessary to the production of the like effects. Boyle.

UNCU'CKOLDED, adj. Not made a cuckold.—As it is a heartbreaking thing to see a handsome man loose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave unouckolded. Shakspeare.

UNCUICIA, a lake of South America, in Quito. It runs into the Napo. Lat. 1. 27. S.

UNCU'LLED, adj. Not gathered.
A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf, Uncull'd, as came to hand. Milton.

UNCU'LPABLE, adj. Not blamable.—Those canons do bind, as they are edicts of nature; which the Jews observing as yet unwritten, and thereby framing such church orders, as in their law were not prescribed, are notwithstanding in that respect unculpable. Hooker.

UNCU'LTIVATED, adj. [incultus, Lat.] Not cultivated; not improved by tillage.

Our isle, indeed, too fruitful was before;
But all uncultivated lay,
Out of the solar walk. Dryden.

Not instructed; not civilized.

The first tragedians found that serious stile
Too grave for their uncultivated age. Roscommon.

UNCU'MBERED, adj. Not burthened; not embarrassed.—Lord of yourself, uncumber'd with a wife. Dryden.

UNCU'RBABLE, adj. That cannot be curbed, or checked. Not used.

So much uncurbable her garboiles, Cæsar,
Made out of her impatience, which not wanted
Shrewdness of policy. Shakspeare.

UNCU'RBED, adj. Licentious; not restrained.
With frank, and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the Dauphin's mind. Shakspeare.

To UNCURL, v. a. To loose from ringlets, or convolutions.

There stands a rock; the raging billows roar
Above his head in storms; but when 'tis clear, Uncurl their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear. Dryden.

To UNCURL, v. n. To fall from the ringlets.
My fleece of woolly hair now uncurls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution. Titus Andronicus.

UNCU'RLED, adj. Not collected into ringlets.
But since, alas frail beauty must decay;
Curl'd or uncurl'd, since locks will turn to grey;
What then remains, but well our po'wr to use,
And keep good humour still, what'er we lose? Pope.

UNCU'RRENT, adj. Not current; not passing in common payment.—Your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, is not crack'd within the ring. Shakspeare.

To UNCURSE, v. a. To free from any execration.
Uncurse their souls; their peace is made
With head, and not with hands. Shakspeare.

UNCU'RST, adj. Not execrated.
Heav'n sure has kept this spot of earth uncurst,
To shew how all things were created first. Waller.

UNCUT, adj. Not cut.
A nail uncut, and head uncomb'd she loves;
And would draw on jack-boots, as soon as gloves. Young.

To UNDA'M, v. a. To open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

When the fiery suns too fiercely play,
And shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay;
The wary ploughman on the mountain's brow,
Undams his watery stores. Dryden.

UNDA'MAGED, adj. Not made worse; not impaired.
Plants will frequent changes try,
Undamag'd, and their marriageable arms
Conjoin with others. Philips.

UNDA'MPED, adj. Not depressed; not dejected.
By tender laws
A lively people curbing, yet undamp'd,
Preserving still their quick peculiar fire. Thomson.

UNDA'UNTED, adj. Unsubdued by fear; not depressed.
Bring forth men children only;
For thy undaunted metal should compose
Nothing but males. Shakspeare.

UNDA'UNTEDLY, adv. Boldly; intrepidly; without fear.—It shall bid his soul go out of his body undauntedly, and lift up its head with confidence, before saints and angels: South.

UNDA'UNTEDNESS, s. Boldness; bravery; intrepidity.—Luther took up a brisker air of assurance, and shewed a particular undauntedness in the cause of truth, when it had so mighty an opposer. Atterbury.

UNDA'UNTABLE, adj. Not to be daunted. The undauntable insolencie of Pharaoh. Harmar.

UNDA'WNING, adj. Not yet dawning; not grown luminous; not illumined.

Thou hold'st the sun
A prisoner in the yet undawning east. Cowper.

UNDA'ZZLED, adj. Not dimmed, or confused by splendour.

Here matter new to gaze the devil met Undazzled. Milton.

To UNDE'AF, v. a. To free from deafness.
Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear. Shakspeare.

UNDEBA'UCHED, adj. Not corrupted by debauchery; pure.

When the world was buxome, fresh and young,
Her sons were undebauch'd, and therefore strong. Dryden.

UNDE'CAGON, s. [from undecim, Lat., and γωνια, Gr.] A figure of eleven angles or sides.

UNDECA'YED, adj. Not liable to be diminished, or impaired.

How fierce in fight with courage undecay'd!
Judge if such warriours want immortal aid. Dryden.

UNDECA'YING, adj. Not suffering diminution or de-
- - - - -

The fragrant myrtle, and the juicy vine,
Their parents' undecaying strength declare,
Which with fresh labour, and unweary'd care,
Supplies new plants. Blackmore

UNDECE'IVABLE, adj. Not liable to deceive, or be deceived.—It serves for more certain computation, by how much it is a larger and more comprehensive period, and under a more undecivable calculation. Holder.

To UNDECE'IVE, v. a. To set free from the influence of a fallacy.

All men will try, and hope to write as well,
And not without much pains, be undeciv'd. Roscommon.

UNDECE'IVED, adj. Not cheated; not imposed on.
All of a tenour was their after-life;
No day discolour'd with domestick strife;
No jealousy, but mutual truth believ'd;
Secure repose and kindness undeciv'd. Dryden.

UNDE'CENCY, s. Unbecomingness.—Good men have been forced to an undecency of deportment by the violences of pain. Bp. Taylor.

UNDE'CENT, adj. Not becoming.—That which remains is, that the minister pray over him, and remind him to do good actions, as he is capable; to call upon God for pardon;—to renounce every ill word or thought, or undecent action, which the violence of his sickness may cause in him. Bp. Taylor.

UNDE'CENTLY, adv. Not becomingly.—See that none, youth or other, be suffered to go in boots and spurs, or to wear their hair undecently long. Abp. Laud.

UNDECI'DABLE, adj. Not to be decided.—[An] undecidable problem in natural theology. South.

UNDECI'DED, adj. Not determined; not settled.
When

When two adverse winds engage with horrid shock,
Levying their equal force with utmost rage,
Long undecided lasts the airy strife.

Philips.

UNDECISIVE, adj. Not decisive; not conclusive.—
Two nations differing about the antiquity of their language, made appeal to an undecisive experiment, when they agreed upon the trial of a child brought up among the wild inhabitants of the desert. Glanville.

To UNDE'CK, v. a. To deprive of ornaments.

I find myself a traitor;

For I have given here my soul's consent,
To undeck the pompous body of a king.

Shakspeare.

UNDE'CKED, adj. Not adorned; not embellished.—
Eve we undeck'd, save with herself. Milton.

UNDECLINED, adj. Not grammatically varied by termination.

Grammar in vain the sons of Priscian teach;
Good parts are better than eight parts of speech:
Since these declin'd, those undeclin'd they call,
I thank my stars, that I declin'd them all.

Bramston.

Not deviating; not turned from the right way.

In his track my wary feet have stept;
His undeclined ways precisely kept.

Sandys.

UNDEDICATED, adj. Not consecrated; not devoted.
—Not inscribed to a patron.—I should let this book come forth undedicated, were it not that I look upon this dedication as a duty. Boyle.

UNDEDED, adj. Not signaled by action.

My sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded.

Shakspeare.

UNDEFA'CED, adj. Not deprived of its form; not disfigured.

Those arms, which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time, on antick stone engrav'd:
Now torn by mortars, stand yet undefac'd,
On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd.

Glanville.

UNDEFE'ASIBLE, adj. Not defeasible; not to be vacated or annulled.

UNDEFENDED, adj. Without defence; easy to be assaulted; exposed to assault.—A rich land, guardless and undefended, must needs have been a double incitement.
South.

UNDEFLOW'ERED, adj. Not vitiated.—That undeflowered and unblemishable simplicity of the Gospel. Milton.

UNDEFI'ED, adj. Not set at defiance; not challenged.

Tarifa

Changed a blunt cane for a steel-pointed dart,
And meeting Ozmyr next,
Who wanting time for treason to provide,
He basely threw it at him undefy'd.

Dryden.

UNDEFI'LED, adj. Not polluted; not vitiated; not corrupted.—Whose bed is undefil'd, and chaste pronounc'd.
Milton.

UNDEFINABLE, adj. Not to be marked out, or circumscribed by a definition.

UNDEFINED, adj. Not circumscribed, or explained by a definition.—There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round with legions of obscure, doubtful, undefined words. Locke.

UNDEFORMED, adj. Not deformed; not disfigured.

UNDELIBERATED, adj. Not carefully considered.—
The prince's undeliberated throwing himself into that engagement, transported him with passion. Clarendon.

UNDELIGHTED, adj. Not pleased; not touched with pleasure.

The fiend

Saw undelighted all delight; all kind
Of living creatures, new to sight.

Milton.

UNDELIGHTFUL, adj. Not giving pleasure.—He could not think of involving himself in the same undelight-ful condition of life. Clarendon.

UNDEMO'LISHED, adj. Not razed; not thrown down.

She undemolish'd stood, and ev'n till now
Perhaps had stood.

Philips.

UNDEMO'NSTRABLE, adj. Not capable of fuller evidence.—Out of the precepts of the law of nature, as of certain, common, and undemonstrable principles, man's reason doth necessarily proceed unto certain more particular determinations: which particular determinations being found out according unto the reason of man, they have the names of human laws. Hooker.

UNDENI'ABLE, adj. Such as cannot be gainsaid.

UNDENI'ABLY, adv. So plainly, as to admit no contradiction.—I grant that nature all poets ought to study: but then this also undeniably follows, that those things which delight all ages, must have been an imitation of nature.
Dryden.

UNDENHEIM, a large village of Germany, in Hesse-
Darmstadt, to the west of the Rhine. Population 800.

UNDEPE'NDING, adj. Independent.—They—claim an absolute and undependent jurisdiction. Milton, Obs.

UNDEPLO'RED, adj. Not lamented.

Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplo'r'd
Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford;
But rise, prepar'd to mourn thy perish'd lord.

Dryden.

UNDEPRA'VED, adj. Not corrupted—Knowledge dwelt in our undepaved natures, as light in the sun. It is now hidden in us like sparks in a flint. Glanville.

UNDEPRI'VED, adj. Not divested by authority; not stripped of any possession.—He, undepri'v'd, his benefice forsook. Dryden.

UNDER, preposition, [undar, Goth.; unbep, Sax.;
onder, Dutch.]—In a state of subjection to.

When good Saturn, banish'd from above,
Was driven to hell, the world was under Jove.

Dryden.

In the state of pupillage to.

To those that live

Under thy care, good rules and patterns give. Denham.

Beneath; so as to be covered, or hidden; not over; not above.—Thy bees lodge under covert of the wind. Dryden.—Below in place; not above. This is the sense of under sail; that is, having the sails spread aloft.

By that fire that burn'd the Carthage queen,
When the false Trojan under sail was seen.

Shakspeare.

In a less degree than—Medicines take effect sometimes under, and sometimes above, the natural proportion of their virtue. Hooker.—For less than.—We are thrifty enough not to part with any thing serviceable to our bodies, under a good consideration; but make little account what is most beneficial to our souls. Ray.—Less than; below.—Man, once fallen, was nothing but a total pollution, and not to be reformed by any thing under a new creation. South.—
By the show of.

That which spites me more than all the wants,

He does it under name of perfect love.

Shakspeare.

With less than.—Several young men could never leave the pulpit under half-a-dozen conceits. Swift.—In the state of inferiority to; noting rank or order of precedence.—It was too great an honour for any man under a duke. Addison.
—In a state of being loaded with.

He shall but bear them, as the ass bears gold,

To groan and sweat under the business.

Shakspeare.

In a state of oppression by, or subjection to.—After all, they have not been able to give any considerable comfort to the mind, under any of the great pressures of this life. Tillotson.—Women and children did not shew the least signs of complaint, under the extremity of torture. Collier.

Illustrious parent! now some token give,

That

That I may Clymene's proud boast believe,
Nor longer under false reproaches grieve. Addison.

In a state in which one is seized or overborn.—The prince and princess must be under no less amazement. Pope.—In a state of being liable to, or limited by.—That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turneth unto cholera in them; they answer fumingly. Yet in this their mood, they cast forth somewhat, wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker.—In a state of depression, or dejection by; in a state of inferiority.

There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear, and under him,
My genius is rebuk'd, as Antony's was by Cæsar.

Shakspeare.

In the state of bearing, or being known by.—The raising of silver coin has been only by coining it with less silver in it, under the same denomination. Locke.—In the state of.—If they can succeed without blood, as under the present disposition of things, it is very possible they may, it is to be hoped they will be satisfied. Swift.—Not having reached or arrived to; noting time.

Three sons he dying left under age;
By means whereof, their uncle Vortigern
Usurp'd the throne during their pupillage. Spenser.

Represented by.—Morpheus is represented by the ancient statues under the figure of a boy asleep, with a bundle of poppy in his hand. Addison.—In a state of protection.—Under favour, there are other materials for a commonwealth, besides stark love and kindness. Collier.—With respect to; referred to.—Mr. Duke may be mentioned under the double capacity of a poet and a divine. Felton.—Attested by.—Cato major, who had with great reputation borne all the great offices of the commonwealth, has left us an evidence, under his own hand, how much he was versed in country affairs. Locke.—Subjected to; being the subject of.—Memory is the storehouse of our ideas. For the narrow mind of man, not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay them up. Locke.—I rather suspect my own judgment, than believe a fault to be in that poem, which lay so long under Virgil's correction, and had his last hand put to it. Addison.—In the next stage of subordination.—This is the only safe-guard, under the spirit of God, that dictated these sacred writings, that can be relied on. Locke.—In a state of relation that claims protection. It is generally opposed to above, or over.

UNDER, adj. Inferiour; subject; subordinate.

I will fight
Against my canker'd country with the spleen
Of all the under fiends. Shakspeare.

UNDER, adv. In a state of subjection, or inferiority.—Ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah for bond-men and bond-women. 2 Chron.—Below; not above.—Less: opposed to over or more.—He kept the main stock without alteration, under or over. Addison.—It is much used in composition, in several senses, which the following examples will explain.

UNDERACTION, s. Subordinate action; action not essential to the main story.—The least episodes, or underactions, interwoven in it, are parts necessary, or convenient to carry on the main design. Dryden.

UNDERAGENT, s. An agent subordinate to the principal agent.—Their devotion served all along but as an instrument to their avarice, as a factor or under-agent to their extortion. South.

UNDERBARROW, a township of England, in Westmorland; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles west of Kendal. Population 349.

To UNDERBEAR, v. a. To support; to endure.
What reverence he did throw away on slaves?
Wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles,
And patient underbearing of his fortune. Shakspeare.

To line; to guard. Out of use.—The duchess of Milan's gown; not like your cloth of gold, set with pearls, down-sleeves, side-sleeves, and skirts round, underborne with a bluish tinsel. Shakspeare.

UNDERBEARER, s. In funerals, those that sustain the weight of the body, distinct from those who are bearers of ceremony, and only hold up the pall.

To UNDERBID, v. a. To offer for any thing less than it is worth.

To UNDERBUY, v. a. To buy at less than it is worth.—Ye underbuy us. Beaum. and Fl.

UNDERCLERK, s. A clerk subordinate to the principal clerk.—Coleby, one of his under-swearers, was tried for robbing the treasury, where he was an underclerk. Swift.

UNDERCROFT, s. A vault under the choir or chancel of a cathedral or other church; as that of St. Paul's, London, and at Christ-Church, Canterbury; also, any secret walk or vault under ground; a grot, answering to the Latin cryptoporticus. Bullockar.—In the undercroft of our Lady's Chapel is an ancient monument. Wecver.

To UNDERDO, v. n. To act below one's abilities. You overact, when you should underdo; A little call yourself again, and think. B. Jonson.

To do less than is requisite.—Nature much oftener overdoes than underdoes: You shall find twenty eggs with two yolks, for one that hath none. Grew.

UNDERFACTION, s. Subordinate faction; subdivision of a faction.—Christianity loses by contests of underfactions. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNDERFELLOW, s. A mean man; a sorry wretch.—They carried him to a house of a principal officer, who with no more civility, though with much more business, than those underfellows had shewed, in captious manner put interrogatories unto him. Sidney.

UNDERFILLING, s. Lower part of an edifice.—To found our habitation firmly, first examine the bed of earth upon which we will build, and then the underfillings, or substructions, as the antients called it. Wotton.

To UNDERFONG, v. a. [under and fangan, Saxon.] To take in hand. Obsolete.

And thou, Menalca, that by treachery
Didst underfong my lass to wexe so light,
Shouldst well be known for such thy villainy. Spenser.

UNDERFOOT, adv. Beneath.

Underfoot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay
Broider'd the ground. Milton.

UNDERFOOT, adj. Low; base; abject; down-trodden.—A sluggish and underfoot philosophy. Milton.—The most underfoot and down-trodden vassals of perdition. Milton.

To UNDERFURNISH, v. a. To supply with less than enough.—Can we suppose God would underfurnish man for the state he designed him, and not afford him a soul large enough to pursue his happiness? Collier.

To UNDERGIRD, v. a. To bind below; to round the bottom.—When they had taken it up, they used helps, undergirding the ship. Acts.

To UNDERGO, v. a. [undergan, Saxon.] To suffer; to sustain; to endure evil.

With mind averse, he rather underwent
His people's will, than gave his own consent. Dryden.

To support; to hazard. Not in use.
I have mov'd certain Romans,
To undergo with me, an enterprize
Of honourable, dangerous consequence. Shakspeare.

To sustain; to be the bearer of; to possess. Not in use.

Their virtues else be they as pure as grace;
As infinite as man may undergo;
Shall, in the general censure, take corruption
From that particular fault. Shakspeare.

To sustain; to endure without fainting.

It rais'd in me

An undergoing stomach, to bear up
Against what should ensue.

Shakspeare.

To pass through.—I carried on my enquiries to try whether this rising world, when finished, would continue always the same; or what change it would successively undergo, by the continued action of the same causes. Burnet.—To be subject to.—Claudio undergoes my challenge, and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. Shakspeare.

UNDERGRADUATE, s. One who has not taken a degree at our universities.—In all dividends and distributions of the revenues of the college, all fellows of the same degree shall have equal dividends; that is to say, all undergraduates alike; all bachelors of arts alike, &c. Dean Prideaux.

UNDERGROUND, s. Subterraneous space.
They have promised to shew your highness
A spirit rais'd from depth of underground. Shakspeare.

UNDERGROWTH, s. That which grows under the tall wood.

So thick entwinn'd,
As one continu'd brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs, and tangling bushes, had perplex'd
All path of man, or beast; that pass'd that way. Milton.

UNDERHAND, adv. By means not apparent; secretly.—These multiplied petitions of worldly things in prayer, have, besides their direct use, a service, whereby the church underhand, through a kind of heavenly fraud, taketh therewith the souls of men, as with certain baits. Hooker.—Clandestinely; with fraudulent secrecy.—She underhand dealt with the principal men of that country, that they should persuade the king to make Plangus his associate. Sidney.

UNDERHAND, adj. Secret; clandestine; sly.—I had notice of my brother's purpose, and have, by underhand means, laboured to dissuade him. Shakspeare.

UNDERHILL, a township of the United States, in Chittenden county, Vermont; 34 miles north-west of Montpelier. Population 490.

UNDERIVED, adj. Not borrowed.—The ideas it is busied about should be, sometimes at least, those more congenial ones, which it had in itself, underived from the body. Locke.

UNDERKEEPER, s. Any subordinate keeper.—They printed 1000 copies of the Harleian catalogue;—and are building apartments for the underkeepers. Gray.

UNDERLABOURER, s. A subordinate workman.

To UNDERLAY, v. a. [Sax. undrepleczan.] To strengthen by something laid under.

UNDERLEAF, s. A species of apple.—The underleaf whose cyder is best at two years, is a plentiful bearer. Mortimer.

To UNDERLET, v. a. To let below the value.—All my farms were underlet. Smollett.

To UNDERLINE, v. a. To mark with lines below the words.—To influence secretly.—By mere chance in appearance, though underlined with a providence, they had a full sight of the infants. Wotton.

UNDERLING, s. An inferior agent; a sorry, mean fellow.

The fault is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings. Shakspeare.

UNDERMASTER, s. A master subordinate to the principal master.—For the instruction of the scholars, a schoolmaster, and an undermaster, or usher. Lowth.

UNDERMEAL, s. [unbepn, Sax. and meal. See UNDERN.] A repast after dinner. Coles follows our ancient lexicography in calling undermeals simply, but improperly, afternoons.—I am furnish'd, for cather'ne pears, for one undermeal. B. Jonson.

UNDERMILLBECK, a township of England, in the parish of Windermere, Westmoreland. Here stands the church of Windermere, a large and handsome building, the windows of which contain some beautiful paintings on glass, brought from Furness Abbey; 8½ miles west-by-north of Kendal. Population 503.
VOL. XXIV. No. 1647.

To UNDERMINE, v. a. To dig cavities under any thing, so that it may fall, or be blown up; to sap.

Though the foundation on a rock were laid,
The church was undermin'd and then betray'd. Denham.

To excavate under.—To injure by clandestine means.
They, knowing Eleanor's aspiring humour,
Have hir'd me to undermine the dutchess. Shakspeare.

UNDERMINER, s. He that saps; he that digs away the supports.—Underminers are never seen till they have wrought their purpose. Hales.—A clandestine enemy.

When I perceiv'd all set on enmity,
As on my enemies, where-ever chanc'd,
I us'd hostility, and took their spoil,
To pay my underminers in their coin. Milton.

UNDERMOST, adj. [This is a kind of superlative anomalously formed from under.]—Lowest in place.—Using oil of almonds, we drew up with the undermost stone a much greater weight. Boyle.—Lowest in state or condition.—This opinion, taken by other sectaries, was to last no longer than they were undermost. Atterbury.

UNDERN, s. [unbepn, Sax. tertia hora Judæorum; nostra vero nona matutina. Lye.] The third hour of the day, or nine of the clock. In Chaucer's time the third hour, or underne, was the usual hour of dinner. Tyrvhitt. Undern is the afternoon, in the north of England, according to Grose; who thinks, as Peck had before supposed, that the word was originally undernoon; which, however, implies forenoon.—It was passed undern of the day. Chaucer.

UNDERNEATH, adv. [Compounded from under and neath, of which we still retain the comparative nether, but in adverbial sense use beneath.] In the lower place; below; under; beneath.

Forthwith up to the clouds
With him I flew, and underneath beheld
The earth outstretch'd immense, a prospect wide. Milton.

UNDERNEATH, prep. [unbepneoðan, Sax.] Under.
Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long!
If underneath the standard of the French
She carry armour, as she hath begun. Shakspeare.

UNDEROFFICER, s. An inferior officer; one in subordinate authority.—This certificate of excommunication by bishops, of all others, is most in use; and would be more so, were it not for the manifold abuses about its execution committed by underofficers. Alyffe.

UNDEROGATORY, adj. Not derogatory.

To UNDERPIN, v. a. To prop; to support.—Victors, to secure themselves against disputes of that kind, underpin their acquiescence jure belli. Hale.

UNDERPART, s. Subordinate or unessential part.—The English will not bear a thorough tragedy, but are pleased that it should be lightened with underparts of mirth. Dryden.

UNDERPETTICOAT, s. The petticoat worn next the body.—They go to bed as tired with doing nothing, as I after quilting a whole underpetticoat. Spectator.

UNDERPLOT, s. A series of events proceeding collaterally with the main story of a play, and subservient to it.—In a tragi-comedy, there is to be but one main design; and though there be an underplot, yet it is subservient to the chief fable. Dryden.—A clandestine scheme.—The husband is so misled by tricks, and so lost in a crooked intrigue, that he still suspects an underplot. Addison.

To UNDERPRAISE, v. a. To praise below desert.
In underpraising thy deserts,
Here find the first deficiency of our tongue. Dryden.

To UNDERPRIZE, v. a. To value at less than the worth.

How far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow

In underprizing it; so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance.

Shakspeare.

To UNDERPROP, v. a. To support; to sustain.

UNDERPROPORTIONED, adj. Having too little proportion.

UNDERPULLER, s. Inferiour or subordinate puller.—The mystery of seconds and thirds is such a master-piece, that no description can reach. These underpullers in destruction are such implicit mortals as are not to be matched.
Collier.

To UNDERRATE, v. a. To rate too low; to undervalue.

UNDERRATE, s. A price less than is usual.

The useless brute is from Newmarket brought,
And at an underrate in Smithfield bought,
To turn a mill.

Dryden.

To UNDERSAY, v. n. To say by way of derogation or contradiction. Obsolete.

They say, they con to heaven the highway;
But by my soule I dare undersay,
They never set foot in that same troad,
But balke their right way, and strayen abroad.

Spenser.

To UNDERSCORE, v. a. To mark under.—Cranmer underscored several principal passages [in the book] with red ink. Dean Tucker.

UNDERSECRETARY, s. An inferior or subordinate secretary.—The Jews have a tradition, that Elias sits in heaven, and keeps a register of all men's actions, good or bad. He hath his under-secretaries for the several nations, that take minutes of all that passes. Burnet.

To UNDERSELL, v. a. To defeat, by selling for less; to sell cheaper than another.—Their stock being rated at six in the hundred, they may, with great gain, undersell us, our stock being rated at ten. Child.

UNDERSEVANT, s. A servant of the lower class.—Besides the nerves, the bones, as underservants, with the muscles, are employed to raise him up. Grew.

To UNDERSET, v. a. To prop; to support.—The merchant-adventurers, being a strong company, and well underset with rich men, and good order, held out bravely. Bacon.

UNDERSETTER, s. Prop; pedestal; support.—The four corners thereof had undersetters. 1 Kings.

UNDERSETTING, s. Lower part; pedestal.—Their undersettings, or pedestals, are, in height, a third part of the column. Wotton.

UNDERSHERIFF, s. The deputy of the sheriff.

Since 'tis my doom, love's undershrieve,

Why this reprieve?

Why doth my she — advowson fly?

Cleaveland.

UNDERSHERIFFRY, s. The business or office of an undersheriff.—The cardinals of Rome call all temporal business of wars and embassages, shirreria, which is undersheriffries; as if they were but matters for undersheriffs and catchpoles; though many times those undersheriffries do more good than their high speculations. Bacon.

UNDERSHOT, part. adj. Moved by water passing under it.—The imprisoned water payeth the ransom of driving an undershot wheel for his enlargement. Carew.

UNDERSKIDDAW, a township of England, in Cumberland; 3 miles from Keswick.

UNDERSONG, s. Chorus; burthen of a song.

The challenge to Damætas shall belong;

Menalcas shall sustain his undersong;

Each in his turn your tuneful numbers bring.

Dryden.

To UNDERSTAND, v. a. pret. and part. pass. understood; formerly understanded, but now obsolete: "a tongue not understanded of the people." Art. of Rel. "That they may be understanded of the people." Art. [Sax. unbep]canban.] To conceive with adequate ideas; to have full knowledge of; to comprehend; to know.

I nam'd them as they pass'd, and understood

Their nature, with such knowledge God endu'd
My sudden apprehension.

Milton.

To know the meaning of; to be able to interpret.—The Ulysses of Ovid upbraids his ignorance, that he understood not the shield for which he pleaded. Dryden.—To suppose to mean.—The most learned interpreters understood the words of sin, and not of Abel. Locke.—To know by experience.

Love unlibidinous reigned, nor jealousy
Was understood, the injur'd lover's hell.

Milton.

To know by instinct.

Amorous intent, well understood,
Of Eve, whose eye darted contagious fire.

Milton.

To interpret at least mentally; to conceive with respect to meaning.

The truth,

Left only in those written records pure,
Though not but by the spirit understood.

Milton.

To know another's meaning.

Each to other calls

Not understood, till hoarse, and all in rage
As mock'd they storm.

Milton.

To hold in opinion with conviction.

For well I understand in the prime end
Of nature her the inferior.

Milton.

To mean without expressing.

War then, war

Open or understood, must be resolv'd.

Milton.

To know what is not expressed.

I bring them to receive

From thee their names, and pay thee fealty
With low subjection; understand the same
Of fish, within their watery residence,
Not hither summon'd.

Milton.

To UNDERSTAND, v. n. To have the use of intellectual faculties; to be an intelligent or conscious being.—I have given thee a wise and understanding heart. Chronicles.—To be informed by another.—I understood of the evil Eliashib did. Neh.—Not to be ignorant; to have learned.

I understood not that a grateful mind

By owing owes not, but still pays, at once

Indebted and discharg'd.

Milton.

UNDERSTANDABLE, adj. Capable of being understood.—To be understandable is a condition requisite to a judge. Chillingworth.

UNDERSTANDER, s. One who understands, or knows by experience.—I am the better understander now. Beaum. and Fl.

UNDERSTANDING, s. Intellectual powers; faculties of the mind, especially those of knowledge and judgment.—I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance. Shakspeare.—The understandings of a senate are often enslaved by three or four leaders. Swift.—Skill; knowledge; exact comprehension.—Right understanding consists in the perception of the visible or probable agreement or disagreement of ideas. Locke.—Intelligence; terms of communication.—He hoped the loyalty of his subjects would concur with him in the preserving of a good understanding between him and his people. Clarendon.

UNDERSTANDING, adj. Knowing; skilful.—The present physician is a very understanding man, and well read. Addison.

UNDERSTANDINGLY, adv. With knowledge; with skill.

Your grace shall find him —

—Courtly, and scholarlike, understandingly read

In the necessities of the life of man.

Beaum. and Fl.

Intelligibly.—He took ten drams of opium in three days, and yet spake understandingly! Burton.

UNDERSTOOD,

UNDERSTOO'D, pret. and part. passive of understand.
 UNDERSTRAPPER, s. A petty fellow; an inferior agent.—Every understrapper perk'd up, and expected a regiment, or his son must be a major. Swift.

UNDERTA'KABLE, adj. That may be undertaken.—I have not in any place found any such labour or difficulty, but that it was undertakable by a man of very mean, that is, of my abilities. Chillingworth.
 To UNDERTA'KE, v. a. pret. undertook; participle passive undertaken. [underfangen, German.] To attempt; to engage in.

The task he undertakes
 Is numbering sands, and drinking oceans dry. Shakspeare.
 To assume a character. Not in use.
 His name and credit shall you undertake,
 And in my house you shall be friendly lodg'd. Shakspeare.

To engage with; to attack.—You'll undertake her no more? Shakspeare.—To have the charge of.
 To the waterside I must conduct your grace,
 Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
 Who undertakes you to your end. Shakspeare.

To UNDERTA'KE, v. n. To assume any business or province.—I undertook alone to wing the abyss. Milton.
 —To venture; to hazard.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
 That dare not undertake. Shakspeare.

To promise; to stand bound to some condition.—If the curious search the hills after rains, I dare undertake they will not lose their labour. Woodward.

UNDERTA'KEN, part. passive of undertake.
 UNDERTA'KER, s. One who engages in projects and affairs.—Antrim was naturally a great undertaker. Clarendon.—One who engages to build for another at a certain price.

Should they build as fast as write,
 'T'would ruin undertakers quite. Swift.

One who manages funerals.
 While rival undertakers hover round,
 And with his spade the sexton marks the ground. Young.

UNDERTA'KING, s. Attempt; enterprise; engagement.—Mighty men they are called; which sheweth a strength surpassing others: and men of renown, that is, of great undertaking and adventurous actions. Raleigh.

UNDERTE'NANT, s. A secondary tenant; one who holds from him that holds from the owner.—Settle and secure the undertenants; to the end there may be a repose and establishment of every subject's estate, lord and tenant. Davies.

U'NDERTIME, s. Undern-tide; after dinner; in the evening. See UNDERN.

He coming home at undertime, there found
 The fairest creature that he ever saw,
 Sitting beside his mother on the ground. Spenser.

UNDERTO'K, preterite of undertake.
 UNDERVALUATION, s. Rate not equal to the worth.—There is often failing by an undervaluation; for in divers children their ingenerate powers are of slow disclosure. Wotton.

To UNDERVA'LUE, v. a. To rate low; to esteem lightly; to treat as of little worth.
 Her name is Portia, nothing undervalu'd
 To Cato's daughter. Shakspeare.

My chief delight lay in discharging the duties of my station; so that in comparison of it, I undervalu'd all ensigns of authority. Atterbury.—To depress; to make low in estimation; to despise.—I write not this with the least intention to undervalue the other parts of poetry. Dryden.—In a kingdom grown glorious by the reputation of a sovereign, multitudes lessen and undervalue it. Addison.—Schooling Luther an undervaluing term, would make one think that Erasmus had a mean opinion of him. Atterbury.

UNDERVALUE, s. Low rate; vile price.—The unskilfulness, carelessness, or knavery of the traders, added much to the undervalue and discredit of these commodities abroad. Temple.

UNDERVA'LUER, s. One who esteems lightly.—An undervaler of money was Sir Henry Wotton. Walton.

UNDERWENT, preterite of undergo.

UNDERWOOD, s. The low trees that grow among the timber.—When you fell underwood, sow haws and sloes. Mortimer.

UNDERWOOD, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Ashborn, Derbyshire.

UNDERWÖRK, s. Subordinate business; petty affairs.—Those that are proper for war, fill up the laborious part of life, and carry on the underwork of the nation. Addison.

To UNDERWÖRK, v. a. pret. and part. pass. underworked, or underwrought. To destroy by clandestine measures.

Thou from loving England art so far,
 That thou hast underwrought its lawful king,
 To cut off the sequence of posterity. Shakspeare.

To labour or polish less than enough.—Apelles said of Protogenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought as well as underwrought. Dryden.—To work at a price below the common.

UNDERWÖRKMAN, s. An inferior or subordinate labourer.—Nor would they hire underworkmen to employ their parts and learning to disarm their mother of all. Leslie.

To UNDERWRITE, v. a. [unbepputan, Saxon.] To write under something else.—He began first with his pipe, and then with his voice, thus to challenge Dorus, and was by him answered in the underwritten sort. Sidney.

UNDERWRITER, s. An insurer; so called from writing his name under the conditions.

UNDES, an extensive district of Northern Hindostan, bordering on Little Thibet. Its principal town is Deba, which stands in lat. 30. 13. N. long. 80. 2. E.

UNDESCRIBED, adj. Not described.—They urge, that God left nothing in his word undescribed, whether it concerned the worship of God, or outward polity. Hooker.

UNDESCRIBED, adj. Not seen; unseen; undiscovered.—Who can tell at what undescribed fields of knowledge even man may at length arrive? Wollaston.

UNDESERVED, adj. Not merited; not obtained by merit.—This victory, obtained with great, and truly not undeserved, honour to the two princes, the whole estates, with one consent, gave the crown to Musidorus. Sidney.—Not incurred by fault.—The same virtue which gave him a disregard of fame, made him impatient of an undeserved reproach. Addison.

UNDESERVEDLY, adv. Without desert, whether of good or ill.—Our desire is to yield them a just reason, even of the least things, wherein undeservedly they have but as much as dreamed that we do amiss. Hooker.

UNDESERVEDNESS, s. Want of being worthy.—If much be due to God from us on account of the greatness of our blessing, how much more is due, when we consider the undeservedness of it? Newton.

UNDESERVER, s. One of no merit.—You see how men of merit are sought after; the undeserver may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Shakspeare.

UNDESERVING, adj. Not having merit; not having any worth.—It exerts itself promiscuously towards the deserving and the undeserving, if it relieves alike the idle and the indigent. Addison.—Not meriting any particular advantage or hurt: with of.—I was carried to dislike, then to hate; lastly to destroy this son undeserving of destruction. Sidney.

UNDESERVINGLY, adv. Without meriting any particular harm or advantage.—He suffered some to be undeservedly rich, others to be undeservedly poor. Milton.

UNDESIGNED, adj. Not intended; not purposed.—
 Great

Great effects by inconsiderable means are sometimes brought about; and those so wholly undesigned by such as are the immediate actors. South.

UNDESIGNEDLY, adv. Without being designed.—All these casual references seem to have been portions of traditional history well known in the time of Homer: and as they are introduced almost undesignedly, they are generally attended with a great semblance of truth. Bryant.

UNDESIGNEDNESS, s. Want of a set purpose; freedom from design; accidentalness.—The undesignedness of the agreements demonstrates, that they have not been produced by meditation, or by any fraudulent contrivance. Paley.

UNDESIGNING, adj. Not acting with any set purpose. Could atoms, which, with undirected flight, Roam through the void, and rang'd the realms of night, In order march, and to their posts advance, Led by no guide, but undesigning chance? Blackmore.

Having no artful or fraudulent schemes; sincere.—He looks upon friendship, gratitude, and sense of honour, as terms to impose upon weak, undesigning minds. South.

UNDESIRABLE, adj. Not to be wished; not pleasing. To add what wants In female sex, the more to draw his love, And render me more equal; and perhaps, A thing not undesirable, some time Superior; for inferior, who is free? Milton.

UNDESYRED, adj. Not wished; not solicited. O goddess-mother, give me back to fate; Your gift was undesir'd, and came too late. Dryden.

UNDESIRING, adj. Negligent; not wishing. The baits of gifts and money to despise, And look on wealth with undesiring eyes: When thou canst truly call these virtues thine, Be wise, and free, by heaven's consent and mine. Dryden.

UNDESPA'IRING, adj. Not giving way to despair. Anson, with steady undespairing breast, Perils endur'd. Dyer.

UNDESTROYABLE, adj. Indestructible; not susceptible of destruction. Not in use.—Common glass, once made, so far resists the violence of the fire, that most chymists think it a body more undestroyable than gold itself. Boyle.

UNDESTROYED, adj. Not destroyed.—The essences of those species are preserved whole and undestroyed, whatever changes happen to any, or all of the individuals. Locke.

UNDETE'RMINABLE, adj. Impossible to be decided.—On either side the fight was fierce, and surely undeterminable without the death of one of the chiefs. Wotton.

UNDETE'RMINATE, adj. Not settled; not decided; contingent. Regularly indeterminate.—Surely the Son of God could not die by chance, nor the greatest thing that ever came to pass in nature, be left to an undeterminate event. South.—Not fixed.—Fluid, slippery, and undeterminate it is of itself. More.

UNDETE'RMINATENESS, or UNDETERMINA'TION, s. [We say more regularly indeterminateness and indetermination.] Uncertainty; indecision.—He is not left barely to the undetermination, incertainty, and unsteadiness of the operation of his faculties, without a certain, secret predisposition of them to what is right. Hale.—The state of not being fixed, or invincibly directed.—The idea of a free agent is undeterminateness to one part, before he has made choice. More.

UNDETERMINED, adj. Unsettled; undecided.—He has left his succession as undetermined, as if he had said nothing about it. Locke.—Not limited; not regulated; not defined.—It is difficult to conceive that any such thing should be as matter, undetermined by something called form. Hale.

UNDETESTING, adj. Not detesting; not holding in abhorrence.—Who these indeed can undetesting see? Thomson.

UNDEV'ATING, adj. Not departing from the usual way; regular.—The natural undeviating temperance of the animal. Warton.—Not erring; not crooked.

Smooth as a wall the upright remnant stands; With such undeviating and even force He severs it away. Cowper.

UNDEVO'TED, adj. Not devoted.—The lords Say and Brocke, two popular men, and most undevoted to the church, positively refused to make any such protestation. Clarendon.

UNDEVO'UT, adj. Not devout; without devotion.—The Greeks being seemingly the most undevout and negligent at their divine service, of any sort of people in the Christian world. Maundrell.—An undevout astronomer is mad. Young.

UNDIA'PHANOUS, adj. Not pellucid; not transparent.—When the materials of glass melted, with calcined tin, have composed a mass undiaphanous and white, this white enamel is the basis of all concretes, that goldsmiths employ in enamelling. Boyle.

UNDI'D, the pret. of undo. This so undid all I had done before: I could attempt, and he endure no more. Roscommon.

UNDIGESTED, adj. Not concocted; not subdued by the stomach.

Ambition, the disease of virtue, bred Like surfeits from an undigested fulness, Meets death in that which is the means of life. Denham.

Not properly disposed; not reduced to order.

I find, 'Tis true, within my undigested mind, That there is something hidden in the deep Bosom of fate. Fanshawe.

To UNDI'GHT, v. a. pret. and part. pass. undight. To put off.

From her fair head her fillets she undight, And laid her stole aside. Spenser.

UNDIMI'NISHABLE, adj. That may not be diminished.—It being no object of sense, but of intellect, and being also impassable and undiminshable. More.

UNDIMI'NISHED, adj. Not impaired; not lessened. Think not, revolted spirit! thy shape the same, Or undiminish'd brightness, to be known As when thou stood'st in heaven, upright and pure. Milton.

UNDI'NTED, adj. Not impressed by a blow. I must rid all the sea of pirates: this 'greed upon, To part with unbackt edges, and bear back Our barge undinted. Shakspeare.

UNDI'PPED, adj. Not dipped; not plunged.

I think thee Impenetrably good: but, like Achilles, Thou had'st a soft Egyptian heel undipp'd, And that has made thee mortal. Dryden.

UNDIRE'CTED, adj. Not directed. Could atoms, which, with undirected flight, Roam'd through the void, and rang'd the realms of night, Of reason destitute, without intent, In order march. Blackmore.

UNDISCE'RNED, adj. Not observed; not discovered; not descried.—Our profession, though it leadeth us into many truths undiscerned by others, yet doth disturb their communications. Brown.

UNDISCE'RNEDLY, adv. So as to be undiscovered.—Some associated particles of salt-petre, by lurking undiscernedly in the fixed nitre, had escaped the analysing violence of the fire. Boyle.

UNDISCE'RNIBLE, adj. Not to be discerned; invisible.

I shou'd be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I should be undiscernible, When I perceive your grace. Shakspeare.

UNDISCE'RNIBLENESS,

UNDISCERNIBLENESS, s. State or quality of being undiscernible.—Because of their remoteness, subtilty, and undiscernibleness, it cannot know them adequately, or in the whole. Ellis.

UNDISCERNIBLY, adv. Invisibly; imperceptibly.—Many secret indispositions will undiscernibly steal upon the soul, and it will require time and close application to recover it to the spiritualities of religion. South.

UNDISCERNING, adj. Injudicious; incapable of making due distinction.—His long experience informed him well of the state of England; but of foreign transactions, he was entirely undiscerning and ignorant. Clarendon.

UNDISCIPLINED, adj. Not subdued to regularity and order.

Divided from those climes where art prevails;
Undisciplin'd by precepts of the wise;
Our inborn passions will not brook controul;
We follow nature. Philips.

Untaught; uninstructed.—A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantages in the field, in an orderly way, than skuffle with an undisciplined rabble. King Charles.

To UNDISCLOSE, v. a. Not to discover; not to unfold.

The half-blown rose—
Whilst yet her tender bud doth undisclose
That full of beauty time bestows upon her. Daniel.

UNDISCORDING, adj. Not disagreeing; not jarring in music.

We on earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
Jarr'd against nature's chime. Milton.

UNDISCOVERABLE, adj. Not to be found out.—He was to make up his accounts, and by an easy, undiscoverable cheat, he could provide against the impending distress. Rogers.

UNDISCOVERED, adj. Not seen; not descried; not found out.

Time glides, with undiscover'd haste;
The future but a length behind the past. Dryden.

UNDISCREET, adj. Not wise; imprudent.—If thou be among the undiscreet, observe the time. Eccelus.

UNDISCREETLY, adv. Improvidently; unwisely.—They have undiscreetly impoverished themselves. Burton.

UNDISGUISED, adj. Open; artless; plain; exposed to view.

If thou art Venus,
Disguis'd in habit, undisguis'd in shape;
O help us captives from our chains t' escape. Dryden.

UNDISHONORED, adj. Not dishonoured.
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed:
I live distain'd, thou undishonoured. Shakspeare.

UNDISMA'YED, adj. Not discouraged; not depressed with fear.—He in the midst thus undismay'd began. Milton.

Though oft repuls'd, again
They rally undismay'd. Philips.

UNDISOBLIGING, adj. Inoffensive.—All this he would have expatiated upon, with connexions of the discourses, and the most easy, undisobliging transitions. Broome.

UNDISPERSED, adj. Not scattered.—We have all the redolence of the perfumes we burn upon his altars; the smoke doth vanish ere it can reach the sky; and whilst it is undispersed, it but clouds it. Boyle.

UNDISPOSED, adj. Not bestowed.—The employments were left undisposed of, to keep alive the hopes of impatient candidates. Swift.

UNDISPUTABLE, adj. Not to be disputed.—Their ideas and descriptions were undisputable. Whitlock.—Merely for his undisputable good pleasure. Cowley.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1648.

UNDISPUTED, adj. Incontrovertible; evident.—You, by an undisputed title, are the king of poets. Dryden.

UNDISSEMBLED, adj. Openly declared.

Let the tender swain
Each morn regale on nerve-relaxing tea,
Companion meet of languor-loving nymph:
Be mine each morn, with eager appetite
And hunger undissembled, to repair
To friendly buttery; there on smoking crust
And foaming ale to banquet unrestrain'd.
Material breakfast. Warton.

UNDISSEMBLING, adj. Not dissembling; never false.

They lov'd; but such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Thomson.

UNDISSIPATED, adj. Not scattered; not dispersed.—Such little primary masses as our proposition mentions, may remain undissipated. Boyle.

UNDISSOLVABLE, adj. That cannot be dissolved or melted.—Through the power of the hot sun and parching sand they are so dry'd, that they become fixed, and for ever undissolvable. Greenhill.—That may not be loosed or broken.

And would you have my partial friendship break
That holy knot, which, tied once, all mankind
Agree to hold sacred, and undissolvable? Rowe.

UNDISSOLVED, adj. Not melted.

On the flood
Indurated and fix'd the snowy weight
Lies undissolv'd. Cowper.

UNDISSOLVING, adj. Never melting.
Not cold Scythia's undissolving snows,
Nor the parch'd Lybian sands thy husband bore,
But mild Parthenope. Addison.

UNDISTEMPERED, adj. Free from disease. Free from perturbation.—Some such laws may be considered, in some parliament that shall be at leisure, from the urgency of more pressing affairs, and shall be cool and undistempered. Temple.

UNDISTINGUISHABLE, adj. Not to be distinctly seen.

These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakspeare.

Not to be known by any peculiar property.—No idea can be undistinguishable from another, from which it ought to be different. Locke.

UNDISTINGUISHABLY, adv. Without distinction; so as not to be known from each other; so as not separately and plainly descried.—The righteous and bountiful persons are, in scripture expression, ordinarily confounded, as it were, or undistinguishably put one for the other. Barrow.

UNDISTINGUISHED, adj. Not marked out so as to be known from each other.

The undistinguish'd seeds of good and ill,
Heaven in his bosom from our knowledge hides. Dryden.

Not to be seen otherwise than confusedly; not separately and plainly descried.

'Tis like the milky way, all over bright;
But sown so thick with stars, 'tis undistinguish'd light. Dryden.

Not plainly discerned.
Wrinkles undistinguish'd pass,
For I'm ashamed to use a glass. Swift.

Admitting nothing between; having no intervening space.—Oh undistinguish'd space of woman's will! Shakspeare.—Not marked by any particular property.

Sleep to those empty lids
Is grown a stranger; and day and night
As undistinguish'd by my sleep as sight. Dcnham.

Not treated with any particular respect.
Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid,
Falls undistinguish'd by the victor spade.

Pope.

UNDISTINGUISHING, adj. Making no difference.—
Undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers. Garth.

UNDISTORTED, adj. Not distorted; not perverted.—
The undistorted suggestions of his own heart, these easy hints, will be found no fallacious directions. More.

UNDISTRACTED, adj. Not perplexed by contrariety of thoughts or desires.—When Enoch had walked with God, he was so far from being tired with that lasting assiduity, that he admitted him to a more immediate, and more undistracted communion with himself. Boyle.

UNDISTRACTEDLY, adv. Without disturbance from contrariety of sentiments.—St. Paul tells us, that there is difference betwixt married and single persons; the affections of the latter being at liberty to devote themselves more undistractedly to God. Boyle.

UNDISTRACTEDNESS, s. Freedom from interruption by different thoughts.—The strange confusions of this nation disturb that calmness of mind, and undistractedness of thoughts. Boyle.

UNDISTURBED, adj. Free from perturbation; calm; tranquil; placid.

To our high-rai'd phantasy present
That undisturbed song of pure content.

Milton.

Not interrupted by any hindrance or molestation.

Nature stints our appetite,
And craves no more than undisturb'd delight;
Which minds, unmix'd with cares and fears, obtain;
A soul serene, a body void of pain. Dryden.

Not agitated.—A good conscience is a port which is land-locked on every side, where no winds can possibly invade. There a man may not only see his own image, but that of his Maker, clearly reflected from the undisturb'd and silent waters. Dryden.

UNDISTURBEDLY, adv. Calmly; peacefully.—Our minds are so weak, that they have need of all the assistances can be procured, to lay before them undisturbedly the thread and coherence of any discourse. Locke.

UNDISTURBEDNESS, s. State of being undisturbed.—Your Lordship plainly opposes heat and flame to that calmness and undisturbedness, with which you would have our addresses to God accompanied. Dr. Snape.

UNDIVERTED, adj. Not amused; not pleased.—The reader, however, may not be undiverted with its unaffected simplicity and pathos. Wakefield.

UNDIVIDABLE, adj. Not separable; not susceptible of division.—The best actors in the world for tragedy, pastoral, scene undividable, or poem unlimited. Shakspeare.

UNDIVIDED, adj. Unbroken; whole; not parted.

He extends through all extent;
Spreads undivided, operates unspent.

Pope.

UNDIVIDEDLY, adv. So as not to be parted.—Creation, nature, religion, law, and policy, make them undividedly one. Feltham.

UNDIVORCED, adj. Not divorced; not separated; not parted.

These died together,
Happy in ruin, undivorc'd by death.

Young.

UNDIVULGED, adj. Secret; not promulgated.

Let the great gods
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice. Shakspeare.

Shakspeare.

To UNDO, v. a. preterite undid; participle passive undone. To ruin; to bring to destruction.—As this immoderate favour of the multitude did him no good, so will it undo so many as shall trust unto it. Hayward.

When I behold the charming maid,

I'm ten times more undone; while hope and fear,
With variety of pain distract me.

Addison.

To loose; to open what is shut or fastened; to unravel.

We implore thy powerful hand,
To undo the charmed band
Of true virgin here distress'd.

Milton.

To change any thing done to its former state; to recall, or annul any action.

It was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not again undo.

Shakspeare.

When in time the martial maid
Found out the trick that Venus play'd,
She shakes her helm; she knits her brows,
And, fir'd with indignation, vows,
To-morrow ere the setting sun,
She'd all undo, that she had done.

Swift.

UNDO'ER, s. One who ruins or brings to destruction. Obsolete.

UNDOING, adj. Ruining; destructive.—The great and undoing mischief which befalls men, is by their being misrepresented. South.

UNDOING, s. Ruin; destruction; fatal mischief.—False lustre could dazzle my poor daughter to her undoing. Addison.

UNDO'NE, adj. Not done; not performed.

Do you smell a fault?
I cannot wish the fault undone, the Issue of it being so proper.

Shakspeare.

Ruined; brought to destruction.

Already is the work begun;
And we rest all undone, till all be done.

Daniel.

UNDO'UBTED, adj. Indubitable; indisputable; unquestionable.

Made the world tremble with a num'rous host,
And of undoubted victory did boast.

Waller.

UNDO'UBTEDLY, adv. Indubitably; without question; without doubt.

This cardinal, undoubtedly
Was fashion'd to much honour.

Shakspeare.

UNDO'UBTFUL, adj. Not doubtful; plain; evident.—His fact—came not to an undoubtful proof. Shakspeare.

UNDO'UBTING, adj. Admitting no doubt.—They to whom all this is revealed, and received with an undoubting faith, if they do not presently set about so easy and so happy a task, must acknowledge themselves in the number of the blind. Hammond.

UNDRA'WN, adj. Not pulled by any external force.

Forth rash'd
The chariot of paternal deity undrawn,
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel;
Itself instinct with spirit, but convoy'd
By four cherubic shapes.

Milton.

Not pourtrayed.

The death-bed of the just is yet undrawn
By mortal hand.

Young.

UNDRE'ADED, adj. Not feared.

Better far,
Than still at hell's dark threshold to have sat watch,
Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half starv'd.

Milton.

UNDRE'AMED, adj. Not thought on.

A course more promising,
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain
To miseries enough.

Shakspeare.

To UNDR'ESS, v. a. To divest of clothes; to strip.—Undress you, and come now to bed. Shakspeare.—To divest of ornaments, or the attire of ostentation.

Undress'd at evening when she found

Their

Their odours lost, their colours past,
She chang'd her look.

Prior.

To take off the dressing from the wound.

His hands the Duke's worst-order'd wounds undress
And gently bind.

Davenant.

U'NDRESS, s. A loose or negligent dress,

Reform her into ease,

And put her in undress to make her please.

Dryden.

UNDRE'SSED, adj. Not regulated.—Thy vineyard lies half prun'd, and half undress'd. Dryden.—Not prepared for use.—The common country people wore perones, shoes of undressed leather. Arbuthnot.

UNDRI'ED, adj. Not dried.

Their titles in the field were try'd:

Witness the fresh laments, and funeral tears undry'd.

Dryden.

UNDRI'VEN, adj. Not impelled either way.

As wintry winds contending in the sky,

With equal force of lungs their titles try;

The doubtful rack of heaven

Stands without motion, and the tide undriven.

Dryden.

UNDROO'PING, adj. Not sinking; not despairing.

English merit her's, where meet combin'd
Whate'er high fancy, sound judicious thought,
An ample generous heart, undrooping soul,
And firm tenacious valour can bestow.

Thomson.

UNDROSSY, adj. Free from recrement.

Of heaven's undrossy gold, the gods' array
Refulgent, flash'd intolerable day.

Pope.

UNDROW'NED, adj. Not drowned.—I have no hope that he's undrown'd. Shakspeare.

UNDU'BITABLE, adj. Not admitting doubt; unquestionable.—Let that principle, that all is matter, and that there is nothing else, be received for certain and undubitable, and it will be easy to be seen what consequences it will lead us into. Locke.

UNDUE, adj. Not right; not legal.—That proceeding being at that time taxed for rigorous and undue, in matter and manner, makes it very probable there was some greater matter against her. Bacon.—Not agreeable to duty.—He will not prostitute his power to mean and undue ends, nor stoop to little and low arts of courting the people. Atterbury.

UNDULARY, adj. [undulo, Latin.] Playing like waves; playing with intermissions.—The blasts and undulary breaths thereof maintain no certainty in their course. Brown.

To UNDULATE, v. a. [undulo, Latin.] To drive backward and forward; to make to play as waves.—Breath vocalized, i. e. vibrated and undulated, may in a different manner affect the lips, or tongue, or palate, and impress a swift, tremulous motion, which breath alone passing smooth doth not. Holder.

To UNDULATE, v. n. To play as waves in curls.

Through undulating air the sounds are sent,
And spread o'er all the fluid element.

Pope.

UNDULATED, adj. Having the appearance of waves.—The roots of this tree do furnish the inlay and cabinet makers with pieces rarely undulated. Evelyn.

UNDULATION, s. Waving motion.—All tunable sounds are made by a regular vibration of the sonorous body, and undulation of the air, proportionable to the acuteness and gravity of the tone. Holder.—Appearance of waves. Unused. Mason.—The root of the wilder sort [is] incomparable for its crisped undulations. Evelyn.

UNDULATORY, adj. Moving in the manner of waves.—A constant undulatory motion is perceived by looking through telescopes. Arbuthnot.

To UNDULL, v. a. To remove dullness from; to clear; to purify. Unused.

UNDULY, adv. Not properly; not according to duty.

—Men unduly exercise their zeal against persons; not only against evil persons, but against those that are the most venerable. Sprat.

UNDU'RABLE, adj. Not lasting. Obsolete.

To UNDUST, v. a. To free from dust; to cleanse. This is a more proper word than to dust, in the present meaning. Unused.—When we frequently dress up the altar of our hearts, and undust it from all these little foulnesses, by degrees we come to be aided. W. Mountague.

UNDU'TEOUS, adj. Not performing duty; irreverent; disobedient.

In Latium safe he lay,

From his unduteous son, and his usurping sway. Dryden.

UNDU'TIFUL, adj. Not obedient; not reverent.—England thinks it no good policy to have that realm planted with English, lest they should grow so undutiful as the Irish, and become more dangerous. Spenser.

UNDU'TIFULLY, adv. Not according to duty.

The fish had long in Cæsar's ponds been fed,

And from its lord undutifully fled.

Dryden.

UNDU'TIFULNESS, s. Want of respect; irreverence; disobedience.—Forbidding undutifulness to superiors, sedition and rebellion against magistracy. Tillotson.

UNDY, a parish of England, in Monmouthshire; 7 miles east-south-east of Caerleon.

UNDYING, adj. Not destroyed; not perishing.

Driven down

To chains of darkness, and the undying worm.

Milton.

UNE, a settlement of South America, in New Granada; 8 leagues south-west of Santa Fe.

UNEARN'ED, adj. Not obtained by labour or merit.

Our work is brought to little, though begun

Early, and the hour of supper comes unearn'd.

Milton.

UNEARTH'ED, adj. Driven from the den in the ground.

The robber of the fold

Is from his craggy, winding haunts unearth'd.

Thomson.

UNEARTHLY, adj. Not terrestrial.

The sacrifice

How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly

It was i' the offering!

Shakspeare.

UNEASILY, adv. Not without pain.—He lives uneasily under the burden. L'Estrange.—They make mankind their enemy by their unjust actions, and consequently live more uneasily in the world than other men. Tillotson.

UNEASINESS, s. Trouble; perplexity; state of disquiet.

Not a subject

Sits in heart grief and uneasiness,

Under the sweet shade of your government.

Shakspeare.

UNEASY, adj. Painful; giving disturbance.—On a tottering pinnacle the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly. Dec. of Chr. Piety.—Disturbed; not at ease.—Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. Shakspeare.—Constraining; cramping.

Some servile imitators

Prescribe at first such strict, uneasy rules,

As they must ever slavishly observe.

Rosecommon.

Constrained; not disengaged; stiff.—In conversation, a solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, will be constrained, uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.—Peevish; difficult to please.—A sour, untractable nature, makes him uneasy to those who approach him. Addison. Difficult. Out of use.

This swift business

I must uneasy make: lest too light winning

Make the prize light.

Shakspeare.

UNE'ATEN, adj. Not devoured.—Though they had but but two horses left uncaten, they had never suffered a summons to be sent to them. Clarendon

UNE'ATH, adv. [from un and eað, Saxon, easy.]—Not easily. Out of use.

Uneath may she endure the flinty street,
To tread them with her tender feeling feet. Shakspeare.

It seems once in Spenser to signify the same as beneath: under; below;

A roaring, hideous sound,
That all the air with terror filled wide,
And seem'd uneath to shake the stedfast ground. Spenser.

UNE'DIFYING, adj. Not improving in good life.—Our practical divinity is as sound and affecting, as that of our popish neighbours is flat and unedifying. Atterbury.

UNE'DUCATE, or UNE'DUCATED, adj. Not having received education.—O harsh uneducate, illiterate peasant! Trag. of Solymán and Pers.—As the multitude of poor and necessitous and uneducated persons increase, the multitude of malefactors increase. Hale.

UNEFFE'CTUAL, adj. Having no effect.
The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shakspeare.

UNELE'CTED, adj. Not chosen.
Putting him to rage
You should have ta'en the advantage of his cholera,
And pass'd him unelected. Shakspeare.

UNELIGIBLE, adj. Not proper to be chosen.—Both extremes, above or below the proportion of our character, are dangerous; and 'tis hard to determine which is most uneligible. Rogers.

UNEMPLOYED, adj. Not busy; at leisure; idle.
Other creatures all day long,
Rove idle, unemploy'd, and less need rest. Milton.

Not engaged in any particular work.
Pales unhonour'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
Were all forgot. Dryden.

UNEMPTIABLE, adj. Not to be emptied; inexhaustible. Obsolete.—Whate'er men or angels know, it is as a drop of that unemptiable fountain of wisdom, which hath diversly imparted her treasures. Hooker.

UNENCHA'NTED, adj. That cannot be enchanted.
Beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon-watch with *unenchant*ed eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit,
From the rash hand of bold incontinence. Milton.

UNENDE'ARED, adj. Not attended with endearment.
Here love his golden shafts employs, here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here and revels; not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd. Milton.

UNENDO'WED, adj. Not invested; not graced.—A man rather unadorned with any parts of quickness, and unendowed with any notable virtues, than notorious for any defect of understanding. Clarendon.

UNENGA'GED, adj. Not engaged; not appropriated.—When we have sunk the only unengaged revenues left, our incumbrances must remain perpetual. Swift.

UNENJO'YED, adj. Not obtained; not possessed.
Each day's a mistress unenjoy'd before;
Like travellers, we're pleas'd with seeing more. Dryden.

UNENJO'YING, adj. Not using; having no fruition.
The more we have, the meaner is our store;
The unenjoying, craving wretch is poor. Creecch.

UNENLARGED, adj. Not enlarged; narrow; contracted.—Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered concerning the shape of little animals, which equal not a pepper-corn. Watts.

UNENLI'GHTENED, adj. Not illuminated.—Moral virtue natural reason, unenlightened by revelation, prescribes. Atterbury.

UNENSLA'VED, adj. Free; not enthralled.

By thee
She sits a sov'reign, unenslav'd and free. Addison.

To UNENTANGLE, v. a. To free from perplexity or difficulty; to disentangle.—O my God, how dost thou unentangle me in any scruple arising out of the consideration of this thy fear. Donne.

UNENTERTA'INING, adj. Giving no delight; giving no entertainment.—It was not unentertaining to observe by what degrees I ceased to be a witty writer. Pope.

UNENTERTA'ININGNESS, s. That which affords no entertainment.—Last post I received a very diminutive letter; it made excuses for its unentertainingness, very little to the purpose. Gray.

UNENTHRA'LLED, adj. Unenslaved.—It must needs be ridiculous to any judgment unenthralled. Milton.

UNENTO'MBED, adj. Unburied; uninterred.—Think'st thou unentomb'd to cross the floods? Dryden.

UNENVIED, adj. Exempt from envy.—The fortune, which no body sees, makes a man happy and unenvied. Bacon.

UNE'QUABLE, adj. Different from itself; diverse.—March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most unsettled and unequable of seasons. Bentley.

UNE'QUAL, adj. [inequalis, Latin.]—Not even.—You have here more than one example of Chaucer's unequal numbers. Dryden.—Not equal; inferior.—Among unequals, what society? Milton.—Partial; not bestowing on both the same advantages.

When to conditions of unequal peace
He shall submit, then may he not possess Kingdom nor life. Denham.

[inegal, Fr.] Disproportioned; ill matched.
Fierce Belinda on the baron flies,
Nor fear'd the chief the unequal fight to try. Pope.

Not regular; not uniform.—So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Dryden.—Not just.

You are unequal to me, and however
Your sentence may be righteous, you are not. B. Jonson.

UNE'QUALABLE, adj. not to be equalled; not to be paralleled.—Christ's love to God is filial and unequalable. Boyle.

UNE'QUALLED, adj. Unparalleled; unrivalled in excellence.—By those unequaled and invaluable blessings, he manifested how much he hated sin, and how much he loved sinners. Boyle.

UNE'QUALLY, adv. In different degrees; in disproportion one to the other.

When we view some well proportion'd dome, no single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.

Not justly.
Who right to all dost deal indifferently,
Damning all wrong and tortious injurie,
Which any of thy creatures do to other,
Oppressing them with power unequally. Spenser.

UNE'QUALNESS, s. Inequality; state of being equal.—The native plenty of our soil, the unequalness of our climate. Temple.

UNE'QUITABLE, adj. Not impartial; not just.—We force him to stand to those measures which we think too unequitable to press upon a murderer. Dec. of Chr. Picty.

UNEQUI'VOCAL, adj. Not equivocal.—This conceit is croneous, making putrefactive generations correspondent unto seminal productions, and conceiving unequivocal effects, and univocal conformity unto the efficient. Brown.

UNERIG, a township of England, in Cumberland; 6 miles north-west-by-west of Cockermouth.

UNE'RRABLE, adj. Incapable of error; infallible.—The ignominy of your unerrable see is discovered. Sheldon.

UNE'RRABLENESS,

UNERRABLENESS, s. Incapacity of error.—The many innovations of that church witness the danger of presuming upon the unerrableness of a guide. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNERRING, adj. [inerrans, Latin.]—Committing no mistake.

His javelin threw,
Hissing in air the unerring weapon flew. Dryden.

Incapable of failure; certain.—Of lovers of truth, for truth's sake; there is this one unerring mark, the not entertaining any proposition, with greater assurance than the proofs it is built upon will warrant. Locke.

UNERRINGLY, adv. Without mistake.—What those figures are, which should be mechanically adapted, to fall so unerringly into regular compositions, is beyond our faculties to conceive. Glanville.

UNESCHEWABLE, adj. Inevitable; unavoidable; not to be escaped. Not in use.—He gave the mayor sufficient warning to shift for safety, if an uneschewable destiny had not haltered him. Carew.

UNESPIED, adj. Not seen; undiscovered; undescried.

Nearer to view his prey, and unespy'd
To mark what of their state he more might learn. Milton.

UNESSAYED, adj. Unattempted.
Then sedulously think
To meliorate thy stock, no way or rule
Be unesay'd. Philips.

UNESSENTIAL, adj. Not being of the last importance; not constituting essence.—Tillotson was moved rather with pity, than indignation, towards the persons of those who differed from him in the unesessential parts of Christianity. Addison.—Void of real being.

The void profound
Of unesessential night receives him next. Milton.

To UNESTA'BLISH, v. a. To deprive of establishment.—The parliament demanded of the king to unestablish that prelatial government. Milton.

UNESTA'BLISHED, adj. Not established.—From plain principles, doubt may be fairly solved, and not clapped up from petitionary foundations unestablished. Brown.

UNEVEN, adj. Not even; not level.
These high wild hills, and rough, uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome.
Shakespeare.

Not suiting each other: not equal.—The Hebrew verse consists of uneven feet. Peacham.

UNEVENNESS, s. Surface not level; inequality of surface.—That motion which can continue long in one and the same part of the body, can be propagated a long way from one part to another, supposing the body homogeneous; so that the motion may not be reflected, refracted, interrupted, or disordered by any unevenness of the body. Newton.—Turbulence; changeable state. Unused.—Not smoothness.—Notwithstanding any such unevenness or indistinctness in the style of those places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet.

UNEVITABLE, adj. [inevitalis, Lat.; inevitable, Fr.] Inevitable; not to be escaped.—So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the unevitable Philoclea, but that her unwished presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.

UNEXACTED, adj. Not exacted; not taken by force.
All was common, and the fruitful earth
Was free, to give her unexacted birth. Dryden.

UNEXAMINABLE, adj. Not to be enquired into.—
Used by Milton.

UNEXAMINED, adj. Not enquired; not tried; not discussed. They utter all they think, with a violence and indisposition, unexamined, without relation to person, place, or fitness. B. Jonson.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1648.

UNEXAMPLED, adj. Not known by any precedent or example.

O unexampled love!
Love no where to be found less than divine. Milton.

UNEXCEPTIONABLE, adj. Not liable to any objection.—Personal prejudices should not hinder us from pursuing, with joint hands and hearts, the unexceptionable design of this pious institution. Atterbury.

UNEXCEPTIONABLENESS, s. State or quality of being unexceptionable.—If it had been accompanied with other parts of his exposition of these epistles that had the like unexceptionableness, it would never have been found fault with. More.

UNEXCEPTIONABLY, adv. So as to be not liable to objection. The resurrection of Jesus was most fully and most unexceptionably proved. West.

UNEXCISED, adj. Not subject to the payment of excise.—And beggars taste thee unexcis'd by kings. Brown.

UNEXCO'GITABLE, adj. Not to be found out.
UNEXCU'SABLE, adj. Having no excuse; admitting of no excuse.—If we examine those prayers that are put up to the saints, their invocation is still the more unexcusable. More.

UNEXCU'SEABLENESS, s. State or quality of being unexcuseable.—We will rip up to you the unexcuseableness of the heathen ignorance in general. Hammond.

UNEXECUTED, adj. Not performed; not done.—Leave unexecuted your own renowned knowledge. Shakespeare.

UNEXE'MPLIFIED, adj. Not made known by instance or example.—This being a new, unexemplify'd kind of policy, must pass for the wisdom of this particular age, scorning the examples of all former ages. South.

UNEXE'MPT, adj. Not free by peculiar privilege.
You invert the covenants of her trust,
And harshly deal like an ill borrower,
With that which you receiv'd on other terms.
Scorning the unexempt condition
By which all mortal frailty must subsist. Milton.

UNEXERCISED, adj. Not practised; not experienced.—Abstract ideas are not so obvious to the yet unexercis'd mind, as particular ones. Locke.

UNEXERTED, adj. Not called into action; not put forth.—Attend with patience the uncertainty of things, and what lieth yet unexerted in the chaos of futurity. Brown.

UNEXHAUSTED, adj. [inexhaustus, Lat.] Not spent; not drained to the bottom.

What avail her unexhausted stores?
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns. Addison.

UNEXISTENT, adj. Not in existence.
UNEXPA'NDED, adj. Not spread out.

Every foetus bears a secret hoard;
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd. Blackmore.

UNEXPECTA'TION, s. Want of previous consideration; want of foresight.—As every other evil, so this especially, is aggravated by our unexpectation. Bp. Hall.

UNEXPE'CTED, adj. Not thought on; sudden; not provided against.

O unexpected stroke! worse than death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise? Milton.

UNEXPE'CTEDLY, adv. Suddenly; at a time unthought of.

Oft he seems to hide his face,
But unexpectedly returns. Milton.

UNEXPE'CTEDNESS, s. Suddenness; unthought of time or manner.—He describes the unexpectedness of his appearance. Watts.

UNEXPE'DIENT, adj. Inconvenient; not fit.

UNEXPEN'SIVE, adj. Not costly: not with great expense.—My life hath not been unexpensive in learning, and voyaging about. Milton.

UNEXPE'RIENCED, adj. Not versed; not acquainted by trial or practice.

UNEXPERT, adj. [inexpertus, Lat.] Wanting skill or knowledge,

Receive the partner of my inmost soul:
Him you will find in letters, and in laws
Not unexpert.

Prior.

UNEXPLO'RED, adj. Not searched out.

Oh! say what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord?

Pope.

Not tried; not known.

Under thy friendly conduct will I fly,
To regions unexplor'd.

Dryden.

UNEXPO'SED, adj. Not laid open to censure.—They will endeavour to diminish the honour of the best treatise, rather than suffer the little mistakes of the author to pass unexposed. Watts.

UNEXPRE'SSIBLE, adj. Ineffable; not to be uttered.—What unexpressible comfort does overflow the pious soul, from a conscience of its own innocency. Tillotson.

UNEXPRE'SSIVE, adj. Not having the power of uttering or expressing. This is the natural signification. Inexpressible; unutterable; ineffable; not to be expressed. Improper, and out of use.

Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree

The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she. Shakspeare.

UNEXTE'NDED, adj. Occupying no assignable space; having no dimensions.—How inconceivable is it, that a spiritual, i. e. an unextended substance, should represent to the mind an extended one, as a triangle? Locke.

UNEXTINGUISHABLE, adj. Unquenchable; not to be put out.

Pain of unextinguishable fire

Must exercise us, without hope of end.

Milton.

UNEXTINGUISHED, adj. [inextinctus, Lat.] Not quenched; not put out.

Ev'n o'er your cold, your ever-sacred urn,

His constant flame shall unextinguish'd burn. Lyttleton.

Not extinguishable.—An ardent thirst of honour; a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguish'd desire of doing more. Dryden.

UNFA'DED, adj. Not withered.

A lovely flow'r,

Unfaded yet, but yet unfed below,

No more to mother earth, or the green stem shall owe.

Dryden.

UNFA'DING, adj. Not liable to wither.

For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
And wings of seraphs shed divine perfumes.

Pope.

UNFA'DINGNESS, s. Quality of being unfading.—We consider the unfadingness of their [the Phenicians'] purple. Polwhele.

UNFA'ILABLE, adj. That cannot fail.—We believe this unfailable word of truth. Bp. Hall.

UNFA'ILABLENESS, s. State which cannot fail.—He takes all believers into the partnership of this comfortable unfailableness. Bp. Hall.

UNFA'ILING, adj. Certain; not missing.—Nothing the united voice of all history proclaims so loud, as the certain, unfailing curse, that has pursued and overtook sacrilege. South.

UNFA'ILINGNESS, s. The state of being unfailing.

UNFA'INTING, adj. Not sinking; not drooping.—And O, that I could retain the effects that it wrought with an unfainting perseverance! Sandys.

UNFA'IR, adj. [unfæp, Sax., deformis.] Disingenuous; subdalous; not honest.—You come, like an unfair merchant, to charge me with being in your debt. Swift.

UNFA'IRLY, adv. Not in a just manner.—They act unfairly, that they may be sure to be sharp enough. Parnel.

UNFA'IRNESS, s. Unfair dealing; disingenuous couduct.—We shall make some remarks upon his ignorance and unfairness in several incidents that he has slid in by the by. Bentley.

UNFA'ITHFUL, adj. Perfidious; treacherous.

My feet, through wine, unfaithful to their weight,
Betray'd me tumbling from a tow'ry height,

Pope.

Impious; infidel.

Thence shall come

To judge the unfaithful dead; but to reward

His faithful, and receive them into bliss.

Milton.

UNFA'ITHFULLY, adv. Treacherously; perfidiously.—There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled; and more for the good of them that counsel, than for him that is counselled. Bacon.

UNFA'ITHFULNESS, s. Treachery; perfidiousness.—As the obscurity of what some writers deliver, makes it very difficult to be understood; so the unfaithfulness of too many others, makes it unfit to be relied on. Boyle.

UNFA'ALLOWED, adj. Not fallowed.

Th' unfallow'd glebe

Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores

Of golden wheat.

Philips.

UNFA'MILIAR, adj. Unaccustomed; such as is not common.—Chaucer's uncouth, or rather unfamiliar, language, deters many readers. Warton.

UNFA'SHIONABLE, adj. Not modish; not according to the reigning custom.—A man writes good sense, but he has not a happy manner of expression. Perhaps he uses obsolete and unfashionable language. Watts.

UNFA'SHIONABLENESS, s. Deviation from the mode.—Natural unfashionableness is much better than apish, affected postures. Locke.

UNFA'SHIONABLY, adv. Not according to the fashion. Unartfully.

Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time

Into this breathing world, scarce half made up;

And that so lamely and unfashionably,

That dogs bark at me.

Shakspeare.

UNFA'SHIONED, adj. Not modified by art.

Mark but how terribly his eyes appear;

And yet there is something roughly noble there;

Which, in unfashion'd nature, looks divine,

And, like a gem, does in the quarry shine.

Dryden.

Having no regular form.

A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,

Of jarring seeds, and justly chaos nam'd.

Dryden.

UNFA'ST, adj. [unfæst, Sax., infurmus, caducus.] Not safe; not secure.

To UNFA'STEN, v. a. To loose; to unfix.—He had no sooner unfastened his hold, but that a wave forcibly spoiled his weaker hand of hold. Sidney.

UNFA'THERED, adj. Fatherless; having no father.

They do observe

Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakspeare.

UNFA'THOMABLE, adj. Not to be sounded by a line.

—In the midst of the plain a beautiful lake, which the inhabitants thereabouts pretend is unfathomable. Addison.

—That of which the end or extent cannot be found.—A thousand parts of our bodies may be diversified in all the dimensions of solid bodies; which overwhelms the fancy in a new abyss of unfathomable number. Bentley.

UNFA'THOMABLENESS, s. State or quality of being unfathomable.—A sufficient argument of the unfathomableness of this great dispensation of mercy, which can still find further employment for the study and curiosity even of angels. Norris.

UNFA'THOMABLY, adv. So as not to be sounded.—

Cover'd pits, unfathomably deep. Thomson.

UNFA'THOMED, adj. Not to be sounded.

The Titan race

He sing'd with lightning, rowl within the unfathom'd space.

Dryden.

UNFATI'GUED,

UNFATIGUED, adj. Unwearied; untired.

Over dank, and dry,
They journey toilsome, unfatig'd with length
Of march. Philips.

UNFAVOURABLE, adj. Not kind. These communications have been unfavourable to literature. Warton.— Disapproving.—Talivera at last made an unfavourable report to Ferdinand and Isabella. Robertson.

UNFAVOURABLY, adv. Unkindly; unpropitiously.
So as not to countenance, or support.—Bacon speaks not unfavourably of this. Glarville.

UNFEARED, adj. Not affrighted; intrepid; not terrified. Not in use.

Just men
Though Heaven should speak with all his wrath at once,
That with his breath the hinges of the world
Did crack, we should stand upright and unfear'd.
B. Jonson.

Not dreaded; not regarded with terrour.

He,
A most unbounded tyrant, whose successes
Make heaven unfear'd, and villany assur'd
Beyond its power! Beaum. and Fl.

UNFEASIBLE, adj. Impracticable.—I was brought to a dependency of spirit, and a despair of attaining to my search, as being fruitless and unfeasible. Bp. Richardson.

UNFEATHERED, adj. Implumous; naked of feathers.
The mother nightingale laments alone;
Whose nest some prying churl had found, and thence
By stealth convey'd th' unfeather'd innocence. Dryden.

UNFEATURED, adj. Deformed; wanting regularity of features.

Visage rough,
Deformed, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.

UNFE'D, adj. Not supplied with food.
Each bone might through his body well be read,
And every sinew seen through his long fast;
For nought he car'd, his carcase long unfed. Spenser.

UNFE'ED, adj. Unpaid.—It is like the breath of an unfed lawyer; you gave me nothing for't. Shakspeare.

UNFE'ELING, adj. Insensible; void of mental sensibility.

Unlucky Welsted! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his fist the faster. Pope.

UNFE'ELINGLY, adv. Without sensibility.—The German turned his head back, looked down upon the dwarf as Goliath did upon David, and unfeelingly resumed his posture. Sterne.

UNFE'ELINGNESS, s. Want of feeling.—With what flatness and unfeelingness has he spoken of statuary and painting! Warton.

UNFE'IGNED, adj. Not counterfeited; not hypocritical; real; sincere.

Thousand decencies that daily flow
From all her words and actions, mix'd with love,
And sweet compliance, which declare unfeigned
Union of mind. Milton.

UNFE'IGNEDLY, adv. Really; sincerely; without hypocrisy.
Prince dauphin, can you love this lady?—
—I love her most unfeignedly. Shakspeare.

UNFE'LOWED, adj. Not matched. Unused.
UNFE'LT, adj. Not felt; not perceived.

Her looks infus'd
Sweetness into my heart, unfelt before. Milton.

To UNFENCE, v. a. To take away a fence.—There is never a limb, never a vein or artery of the body, but it is the scene and receptacle of pain, whensoever it shall please God to unfence it, and let in some sharp disease or distemper upon it. South.

UNFENCE'D, adj. Naked of fortification.

I'd play incessantly upon these jades;
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air. Shakspeare.

Not surrounded by any inclosure.

UNFERMENTED, adj. Not fermented.—All such vegetables must be unfermented; for fermentation changes their nature. Arbutnot.

UNFERTILE, adj. Not fruitful; not prolific.—Peace is not such a dry tree, such a sapless, unfertile thing, but that it might fructify and increase. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

To UNFETTER, v. a. To unchain; to free from shackles.

Unfetter me with speed,
I see you troubled that I bleed. Dryden.

UNFIGURED, adj. Representing no animal form.—In unfigur'd paintings, the noblest is the imitation of marbles, and of architecture, as arches, friezes. Wotton.

UNFILLED, adj. Not filled; not supplied.—Come not to table, but when thy need invites thee; and if thou beest in health, leave something of thy appetite unfilled.
Bp. Taylor.

UNFILIAL, adj. Unsuitable to a son.

You offer him a wrong
Something unfilial. Shakspeare.

UNFINISHED, adj. Incomplete.—I did dedicate to you a very unfinished piece. Dryden.

UNFIRM, adj. Weak; feeble.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm
Than women's are. Shakspeare.

Not stable.

Take the time, while stagg'ring yet they stand,
With feet unfirm, and prepossess the strand. Dryden.

UNFIT, adj. Improper; unsuitable.—They easily perceive how unfit that were for the present, which was for the first age convenient enough. Hooker.—Unqualified.

Old as I am, for ladies' love unfit,
The power of beauty I remember yet. Dryden.

A genius that can hardly take in the connection of three propositions, is utterly unfit for speculative studies. Watts.

To UNFIT, v. a. To disqualify.—Those excellencies, as they disqualified him for dominion, so they unfitted him for a satisfaction or acquiescence in his vassals. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNFITNESS, s. Want of qualifications; want of propriety.

UNFITTING, adj. Not proper.—Although monosyllables, so rife in our tongue, are unfitting for verses, yet are they the most fit for expressing briefly the first conceits of the mind. Camden.

UNFITLY, adv. Not properly; not suitably.—Others, reading to the church those books which the apostles wrote, are neither untruly nor unfitly said to preach. Hooker.

To UNFIX, v. a. To loosen; to make less fast.

Plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend. Shakspeare.

To make fluid.

Stiff with eternal ice, and hid in snow,
The mountain stands, nor can the rising sun
Unfix her frosts and teach them how to run. Dryden.

UNFIXED, adj. Wandering; erratic; inconstant; vagrant.

So vast the noise, as if not fleets did join;
But lands unfix'd, and floating nations strove. Dryden.

Not determined.

Irresolute on which she should rely:
At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

UNFIXEDNESS, s. The state of being unfixed; power of roving at large.—To abide fixed, as it were, in their own unfixedness, and to be steady in their restless motions, doth it not argue a constant will directing them, and a mighty hand upholding them? Barrow.

UNFLA'GGING, adj. Maintaining spirit; not flagging; not drooping.—That, which is carried on with a continued unflagging vigour of expression, can never be thought tedious. South.

UNFLA'TTERED, adj. Not flattered; not gratified with servile obsequiousness.

Time mocks our youth; and while we number past Delights, and raise our appetite to taste Ensuing, brings us to unflatter'd age. Habington.

UNFLA'TTERING, adj. Not concealing the truth; not gratifying with servile obsequiousness; sincere.

Of the neighbouring lake, In whose unflattering mirror every morn She counsel takes, how best herself to adorn. Sherburne.

UNFLE'DGED, adj. That has not yet the full furniture of feathers; young; not completed by time; not having attained full growth.—Unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

UNFLE'SHED, adj. Not fleshed; not seasoned to blood; raw.

As a generous, unflesh'd hound that hears From far the hunter's horn and cheerful cry, So will I haste. Dryden.

UNFOILED, adj. Unsubdued; not put to the worst.—The usurped powers thought themselves secure in the strength of an unfoiled army of sixty thousand men, and in a revenue proportionable. Temple.

To UNFO'LD, v. a. [unfealban, Saxon.] To expand; to spread; to open.

I saw on him rising Out of the water, heaven above the clouds Unfold her crystal doors; thence on his head A perfect dove descend. Milton.

To tell; to declare.—Unfold to me why you are heavy. Shakspeare.—To discover; to reveal.

Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides, Who covers faults, at last with shame derides. Shakspeare.

To release or dismiss from a fold.—The unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Shakspeare.

To UNFO'OL, v. a. To restore from folly.—Have you any way to unfool me again? Shakspeare.

UNFORBI'D, or UNFORBI'DDEN, adj. Not prohibited.

If unforbid thou may'st unfold What we, not to explore the secrets, ask Of his eternal empire. Milton.

These are the unforbidden trees; and here we may let loose the reins, and indulge our thoughts. Norris.

UNFORBI'DDENNESS, s. The state of being unforbidden.—The bravery you are so severe to, is no where expressly prohibited in Scripture; and this unforbiddenness they think sufficient to evince, that the sumptuousness you condemn is not in its own nature sinful. Boyle.

UNFORCED, adj. Not compelled; not constrained.

This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet Sits smiling to my heart. Shakspeare.

Not impelled; not externally urged. No more can impure man retain and move In that pure region of a worthy love, Than earthly substance can, unforc'd, aspire, And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

Not feigned; not artificially heightened.—Upon these tidings they broke forth into such unforc'd and unfeigned passions, as it plainly appeared that good nature did work in them.—Hayward.—Not violent; easy; gradual.

Windsor the next above the valley swells Into my eye, and doth itself present With such an easy and unforc'd ascent, That no stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

Not contrary to ease.—If one arm is stretched out, the body must be somewhat bowed on the opposite side, in a situation which is unforc'd. Dryden.

UNFORCIBLE, adj. Wanting strength.—The same reason which causeth to yield that they are of some force in the one, will constrain to acknowledge, that they are not in the other altogether unforcible. Hooker.

UNFOREBO'DING, adj. Giving no omens. Unnumber'd birds glide through th'aerial way, Vagrants of air, and unforeboding stray. Pope.

UNFOREKNO'WN, adj. Not foreseen by prescience.—It had no less prov'd certain, unforeknown. Milton.

UNFORESEE'ABLE, adj. Not possible to be foreseen.—By such unlikely and unforeseeable ways does Providence sometimes bring about its greatest designs, in opposition to the shrewdest conjectures and contrivances of men. South.

UNFORESEE'N, adj. Not known before it happened.—Unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd. Dryden.

UNFO'RESKINNED, adj. Circumcised.—Won by a Philistine from the unforeskinn'd race. Milton.

UNFOREWAR'NED, adj. Not forewarned; not admonished before hand.

This let him know Lest willfully transgressing he pretend Surprisal, unadmonish'd, unforewarn'd. Milton.

UNFORFEITED, adj. Not forfeited.—This was the ancient, and is yet the unforfeited glory of our religion. Rowers.

UNFORGI'VING, adj. Relentless; implacable. The sow with her broad snout for rooting up Th' intrusted seed, was judg'd to spoil the crop; The covetous churl, of unforgiving kind, Th' offender to the bloody priest resign'd. Dryden.

UNFORGOTTEN, adj. Not lost to memory.—The thankful remembrance of so great a benefit received, shall for ever remain unforgotten. Knolles.

UNFORMED, adj. Not modified into regular shape.—All putrefaction being a dissolution of the first form, is a mere confusion, and unformed mixture of the parts. Bacon.

UNFORSA'KEN, adj. [unforþyacen, Saxon.] Not deserted.—They extend no farther to any sort of sins continued in or unforsaken, than as they are reconcilable with sincere endeavours to forsake them. Hammond.

UNFORTIFIED, adj. Not secured by walls or bulwarks.

Their weak heads, like towns unfortify'd, Twixt sense and nonsense daily change their side. Pope.

Not strengthened; infirm; weak; feeble. It shews a will most incorrect to heaven; A heart unfortify'd, a mind impatient; An understanding simple, and unschool'd. Shakspeare.

Wanting securities.—They will not restrain a secret mischief, which, considering the unfortify'd state of mankind, is a great defect. Collier.

UNFORTUNATE, adj. Not successful; unprosperous; wanting luck; unhappy. It is used both of a train of events, as an unfortunate life; or of a single event, as an unfortunate expedition; or of persons, as an unfortunate man; or an unfortunate commander.

UNFORTUNATELY, adv. Unhappily; without good luck.—Unconsulting affection unfortunately born to me, made Zelma borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent raiments. Sidney.

UNFORTUNATENESS, adj. Ill luck.—O me, the only subject of the destinies displeasure, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate, than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

UNFOUGHT, adj. Not fought.—They used such diligence in taking the passages, that it was not possible they should escape unfought with. Knolles.

UNFOUL'D, adj. Unpolluted; uncorrupted; not soiled.—The humour and tunicles are purely transparent, to to let in light unfoul'd and unsophisticated by any tincture. More.

UNFOUN'D, adj. Not found; not met with.

Somewhat in her excelling all her kind,

Excited a desire till then unknown;

Somewhat unfound, or found in her alone. Dryden.

UNFOUNDED, adj. Void of foundation.

From them I go

This uncouth errand sole, and one for all

Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread

The unfounded deep. Milton.

Without authority or foundation: as, an unfounded report.

UNFRA'MABLE, adj. Not to be moulded. Not used.

—The cause of their disposition so unframable unto societies, wherein they live, is for that they discern not aright what force these laws ought to have. Hooker.

To UNFRA'ME, v. a. To destroy the frame or construction of.—Sin has unframed the fabric of the whole man. South.

UNFRA'MED, adj. Not framed; not fashioned.

A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,

Of jarring seeds, and justly chaos nam'd

Dryden.

UNFRE'QUENT, adj. Uncommon; not happening often.—Part thereof is visible unto any situation; but being only discoverable in the night, and when the air is clear, it becomes unfrequent. Brown.

To UNFREQUE'NT, v. a. To leave; to cease to frequent. A bad word.

Glad to shun his hostile gripe,

They quit their thefts, and unfrequent the fields. Philips.

UNFREQUENTED, adj. Rarely visited; rarely entered.—With what caution does the hen provide herself a nest in places unfrequent, and free from noise. Addison.

UNFRE'QUENTLY, adv. Not commonly.—They, like Judas, desire death, and not unfrequently pursue it. Brown.

UNFRI'ABLE, adj. Not easily to be crumbled.—The smooth surface, the elastic and unfriable nature of cartilage, render it of all substances the most proper for the place and purpose. Paley.

UNFRI'NDED, adj. Wanting friends; uncountenanced; unsupported.

These parts to a stranger,

Unguided and unfriended, often prove

Rough and inhospitable. Shakspeare.

UNFRI'NDLINESS, s. Want of kindness; want of favour.—You might be apt to look upon such disappointments as the effects of an unfriendliness in nature or fortune to your particular attempts. Boyle.

UNFRI'NDLY, adj. Not benevolent; not kind.—What signifies an unfriendly parent or brother? 'Tis friendship only that is the cement which effectively combines mankind. Gov. of the Tongue.

To UNFRO'CK, v. a. To divest.—Another of her bishops she [queen Elizabeth] threatened with an oath to unfrock; that was her majesty's own word. Hurd.—Unfrocking of a priest. Milton.

UNFRO'ZEN, adj. Not congealed to ice.—Though the more aqueous parts will, by the loss of their motion, be turned into ice, yet the more subtile parts remain unfrozen. Boyle.

UNFRUIT'FUL, adj. Not prolific.

Ah! hopeless, lasting flames! like those that burn

To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn. Pope.

Not fructiferous.

The naked rocks are not unfruitful there;

Their barren tops with luscious food abound. Waller.

Not fertile.—Lay down some general rules for the knowing of fruitful and unfruitful soils. Mortimer.—Not producing good effects.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1648.

UNFRUITFULNESS, s. Barrenness; infecundity.—Had God indulged man the liberty of using what creatures he pleased for his food, he might easily have made himself an amends for the unfruitfulness of the earth, by the many good things which nature had provided for him. Stackhouse.

UNFULFILLED, adj. Not fulfilled.

Fierce desire,

Still unfulfilled with pain of longing, pines. Milton.

UNFU'MED, adj. Not exhaling smoke as in fumigations; not burnt.

The ground

With rose and odours from the shrub unfum'd. Milton.

To UNFU'RL, v. a. To expand; to unfold; to open.—The next motion is that of unfurling the fan, in which are several little flirts and vibrations. Addison.

To UNFU'RNISH, v. a. To deprive; to strip; to divest.

Thy speeches

Will bring me to consider that which may

Unfurnish me of reason. Shakspeare.

To leave naked.

The Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom

Came pouring like a tide into a breach. Shakspeare.

UNFU'RNISHED, adj. Not accommodated with utensils, or decorated with ornaments.—It derogates not more from the goodness of God, that he has given us minds unfurnish'd with those ideas of himself, than that he hath sent us into the world with bodies unclothed. Locke.

UNGA'IN, or UNGA'INLY, adj. [ungægne, Sax.] Awkward; uncouth. Ungain is the colloquial word.—Flora was so ungainly in her behaviour, and such a laughing hoyden. Tatler.—Vain. [The Saxon word is used for irritus as well as ineptus.] Misusing their knowledge to ungainly ends, as either ambition, superstition, or for satisfying their curiosity. Hammond.

UNGA'INFUL, adj. Unprofitable.—He dissuaded me from so ungainful a charge. Bp. Hall.

UNGA'LLED, adj. Unhurt; unwounded.

Let the stricken deer go weep,

The hart ungalled play;

For some must watch, while some must sleep;

So runs the world away. Shakspeare.

UNGA'RRISED, adj. Without a garrison.—On the north side it has an old Turkish ungarrisoned castle. Maundrell.

UNGA'RTERED, adj. Being without garters.—You chid at Sir Protheus, for going ungartered. Shakspeare.

UNGA'THERED, adj. Not cropped; not picked.

We wonder'd why she kept her fruit so long:

For whom so late the ungather'd apples hung. Dryden.

To UNGE'AR, v. a. [ungarian, Sax.] To unharness. Unused.

UNGE'NERATED, adj. Unbegotten; having no beginning.—Millions of souls must have been ungenerated, and have had no being. Raleigh.

UNGE'NERATIVE, adj. Begetting nothing.—He is a motion ungenerative, that's infallible. Shakspeare.

UNGE'NEROUS, adj. Not noble; not ingenuous; not liberal.—To look into letters already opened or dropped, is held an ungenerous act. Pope.—Ignominious.

The victor never will impose on Cato

Ungenerous terms. His enemies confess

The virtues of humanity are Cæsar's. Addison.

UNGE'NIAL, adj. Not kind or favourable to nature.—The northern shires have a more cloudy, ungenial air, than any part of Ireland. Swift.

UNGENTE'EL, adj. Not genteel.—The laws of marriage run in a harsher style towards your sex. Obey is an ungenteel word! Ld Halifax.

UNGENTLE, adj. Harsh; rude; rugged.

Smile, gentle heaven! or strike, ungentle death!
For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.

Shakspeare.

UNGE'NTLEMANLIKE, adj. Unlike a gentleman.
UNGE'NTLEMANLY, adj. Illiberal; not becoming a gentleman.—The demeanour of those under Waller, was much more ungentlemanly and barbarous. Clarendon.

UNGE'NTLENESS, s. Harshness; rudeness; severity.

Reward not thy sheepe, when ye take off his cote.

With twitches and patches as broad as groat:

Let not such ungentleness happen to thine.

Tusser.

Unkindness; incivility.

You have done me much ungentleness

To shew the letter that I writ to you.

Shakspeare.

UNGE'NTLY, adv. Harshly; rudely.—Nor was it ungently received by Lindamira. Arbuthnot.

UNGEOMETRICAL, adj. Not agreeable to the laws of geometry.—All the attempts before Sir Isaac Newton, to explain the regular appearances of nature, were ungeometrical, and all of them inconsistent and unintelligible. Cheyne.

UNGHA, a castle on the eastern coast of Tunis, situated in the heart of morasses; 76 miles south of Kairwan.

UNGHVAR, a palatinate in the north-east of Hungary, adjacent to Poland, and bounded on the west and south by the palatinate of Sempin. It is watered by the rivers Ungh, Laborza, and Latorza, and in the north contains a portion of the Carpathian mountains, called Beszked. Its area is 1270 square miles; its population about 80,000, partly of Hungarian, and partly of Bohemian, Sclavonian, and Rusniak descent. The chief town is Unghvar.

UNGI'LDED, adj. Not overlaid with gold.

You, who each day can theatres behold

Like Nero's palace, shining all with gold,

Our mean, ungilded stage will scorn.

Dryden.

To UNGI'RD, v. a. To loose any thing bound with a girdle.

The blest parent

Ungirt her spacious bosom, and discharg'd

The pond'rous birth.

Prior.

UNGIRT, adj. Loosely dressed.

One tender foot was bare, the other shod;

Her robe ungirt.

Waller.

UNGI'VING, adj. Not bringing gifts.

In vain at shrines th' ungiving suppliant stands:

This 'tis to make a vow with empty hands.

Dryden.

UNGLA'ZED, adj. Wanting window-glasses.

O now a low ruin'd white shed I discern

Until'd and unglaz'd; I believe 'tis a barn.

Prior.

Not covered with glass; a term of pottery.—Unglaz'd earthen vessels easily transmit moisture. Kirwan.

UNGLO'RIFIED, adj. Not honoured; not exalted with praise and adoration.

To UNGLOVE, v. a. To remove the glove from; to uncover.—Unglove your hand. Beaum. and Fl.

UNGLO'VED, adj. Having the hand naked.—When we were come near to his chair, he stood up, holding forth his hand ungloved, and in posture of blessing. Bacon.

To UNGLUE, v. a. To loose any thing cemented.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,

And asks if it be time to rise.

Swift.

To UNGOD, v. a. To divest of divinity.

Were we wak'ned by this tyranny,

To ungod this child again, it could not be

I should love her, who loves not me.

Donne.

Thus men ungodded may to places rise,

And sects may be preferr'd without disguise.

Dryden.

UNGO'DLILY, adv. Impiously; wickedly.—'Tis but an ill essay of that godly fear, to use that very gospel so irreverently and ungodlily. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNGO'DLINESS, s. Impiety; wickedness; neglect of God.—How grossly do many of us contradict the plain precepts of the gospel by our ungodliness and worldly lusts? Tillotson.

UNGO'DLY, adj. Wicked; negligent of God and his laws.

His just, avenging ire,

Had driven out the ungodly from his sight,

And the habitations of the just.

Milton.

Polluted by wickedness.

Let not the hours of this ungodly day

Wear out in peace.

Shakspeare.

UNGO'RED, adj. Unwounded; unhurt.

I stand aloof, and will no reconciliation;

'Till by some elder masters of known honour,

I have a voice and precedent of peace,

To keep my name ungor'd.

Shakspeare.

UNGO'RGED, adj. Not filled; not sated.

The hell-hounds, as ungorged with flesh and blood,

Pursue their prey.

Dryden.

UNGO'T, adj. Not gained; not acquired: Not gotten.

He is as free from touch or soil with her,

As she from one ungot.

Shakspeare.

UNGO'VERNABLE, adj. Not to be ruled; not to be restrained.—They'll judge every thing by models of their own; and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority, and ungovernable by other laws but those of the sword. Glanville.—Licentious; wild; unbridled.—So wild and ungovernable a poet, cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

UNGO'VERNABLY, adv. So as not to be restrained.

Heavens, how unlike their Belgick sires of old!

Rough, poor, content, ungovernably bold.

Goldsmith.

UNGO'VERNED, adj. Being without government.

It pleaseth God above,

And all good men of this ungovern'd isle.

Shakspeare.

Not regulated; unbridled; licentious.

Seek for him,

Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life

That wants the means to lead it.

Shakspeare.

UNGRA'CEFUL, adj. Wanting elegance; wanting beauty.

Raphael answer'd;—

Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of men.

Milton.

UNGRA'CEFULNESS, s. Inelegance; awkwardness.

—To attempt the putting another genius upon him, will be labour in vain; and what is so plastered on, will have always hanging to it the ungracefulness of constraint. Locke.

UNGRA'CIIOUS, adj. Wicked; odious; hateful.

He, catching hold of her ungracious tongue,

Thereon an iron lock did fasten firm and strong.

Spenser.

Offensive; displeasing.—Show me no parts which are ungracious to the sight, as all pre-shortenings usually are. Dryden.—Unacceptable; not favoured.—They did not except against the persons of any, though several were most ungracious to them. Clarendon.

UNGRAMMA'TICAL, adj. Not according to grammar.

—To exclude that ungrammatical misinterpretation on St.

Paul. Barrow.

UNGRA'NTED, adj. Not given; not yielded; not bestowed.

This only from your goodness let me gain,

And, this ungranted, all rewards are vain.

Dryden.

UNGRA'TEFUL, adj. Making no returns, or making ill returns for kindness.—No person is remarkably ungrateful, who was not also insufferably proud. South.—Making no returns for culture.

Most

Most when driv'n by winds, the flaming storm
Of the long files destroys the beauteous form;
Nor will the wither'd stock be green again;
But the wild olive shoots, and shades th' ungrateful plain.
Dryden.

Unpleasing; unacceptable.—It cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to posterity, to see the most exact relation of an action so full of danger. Clarendon.—What is in itself harsh and ungrateful, must make harsh and ungrateful impressions upon us. Atterbury.

UNGRATEFULLY, adv. With ingratitude.—We often receive the benefit of our prayers, when yet we ungratefully charge heaven with denying our petitions. Wake.—Unacceptably; unpleasingly.

UNGRATEFULNESS, s. Ingratitude; ill return for good.—Can I, without the detestable stain of ungratefulness, abstain from loving him, who, far exceeding the beautyfulness of his shape with the beautyfulness of his mind, is content so to abuse himself as to become Dametas's servant for my sake. Sidney.—Unacceptableness; unpleasing quality.

UNGRATIFIED, adj. Not gratified; not compensated.

I should turn thee away ungratified
For all thy former kindness.

Beaum. and Fl.

UNGRAVELY, adv. Without seriousness.

His present portance

Gibingly, and ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakspeare.

UNGROUNDED, adj. Having no foundation.—Ignorance, with an indifferency for truth, is nearer to it than opinion with ungrounded inclination, which is the great source of error. Locke.

UNGRUDGINGLY, adv. Without ill will; willingly; heartily; cheerfully.

If, when all his art and time is spent,
He say 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;
Receive from him the doom ungrudgingly,
Because he is the mouth of destiny.

Donne.

UNGSTEIN, a village of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, in the district of Spire, with 800 inhabitants.

UNGUARDED, adj. Undefended.

Proud art thou met? Thy hope was to have reach'd
The throne of God unguarded, and his side Abandon'd.

Milton.

Careless; negligent; not attentive to danger.—All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Bp. Taylor.

UNGUARDEDLY, adv. For want of guard.—If you find that you have a hastiness in your temper, which unguardedly breaks out into indiscreet sallies, watch. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNGUENT, s. [unguentum, Latin.] Ointment.—With unguents smooth, the lucid marble shone. Pope.

UNGUESSED, adj. Not attained by conjecture.—He me sent, for cause to me unguess'd. Spenser.

UNGUIDED, adj. Not directed; not regulated.

Nature, void of choice,

Does by unguided motion things produce,
Regardless of their order.

Blackmore.

UNGUIGIA, a river of Quito, in the province of Mainas, which enters the Putumayo.

UNGUILITY, adj. [ungyltuz, Saxon.] Innocent; not guilty; not stained with guilt.

Soft pity in thy breast revive to-day,
By this unguilty blood, goddess divine!

Fanshaw.

UNGUI-YACU, a river of Peru, in the province of Luya and Chillaos, which runs west and enters the Capuapana.

UNHABITABLE, adj. [inhabitable, Fr.; inhabitabilis, Lat.] Not capable to support inhabitants; uninhabitable.—The night and day was always a natural day of twenty-four hours, in all places remote from the unhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year. Holder.

UNHACA, a small island in the Indian sea, at the entrance of Lorenzo Marques. Lat. 26. 5. N.

UNHACKED, adj. Not cut; not hewn; not notched with cuts.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our targe undinted.

Shakspeare.

To UNHALLOW, v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to desecrate.—The vanity unhallows the virtue. L'Estrange.

UNHALLOWED, adj. [unhalzob, Saxon.] Unholy; profane.

I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air.

Milton.

To UNHAND, v. a. To loose from the hand.—Still am I call'd. Unhand me, gentlemen. Shakspeare.

UNHANDLED, adj. Not handled; not touched.

Cardinal Campeius

Hath left the cause o' the king unhandled. Shakspeare.

UNHANDSOME, adj. Ungraceful; not beautiful. I was glad I had done so good a deed for a gentlewoman not unhandsome, whom before I had in like sort helped. Sidney.—Illiberal; disingenuous.

UNHANDSOMELY, adv. Inelegantly; ungracefully.—The ruined churches are so unhandsomely patched and thatched, that men do even shun the places for the uncomeliness thereof. Spenser.—Disingenuously; illiberally.

He raves, Sir; and to cover my disdain,
Unhandsomely would his denial feign.

Dryden.

UNHANDSOMENESS, s. Want of beauty.—The sweetness of her countenance did give such a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandsomeness of it; and make the eye force the mind to believe, that there was a praise in that unskilfulness. Sidney.—Want of elegance.—Be not troublesome to thyself, or to others, by unhandsomeness or uncleanness. Bp. Taylor.—Illiberality; disingenuity.

UNHANDY, adj. Awkward; not dexterous. It is somewhere used by Swift.

To UNHANG, v. a. To divest of hangings.

UNHANGED, adj. Not put to death by the gallows.—There live not three good men unhang'd in England. Shakspeare.

UNHAPP, s. Misluck; ill fortune.—She visited that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhap. Sidney.

UNHAPPIED, made unhappy.

You have misled a prince,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineament,
By you unhappied, and disfigur'd clean.

Shakspeare.

UNHAPPILY, adv. Miserably; unfortunately; wretchedly; calamitously.—He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry. Clarendon.—Mischievously.

Though I be barr'd the liberty of talking,
Yet I can think unhappily.

Beaum. and Fl.

UNHAPPINESS, s. Misery; infelicity.

If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
And that be heir to his unhappiness.

Shakspeare.

Misfortune; ill luck.—St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this purpose, though he had the unhappiness not to follow it always himself. Burnet.—Mischievous prank.—She hath often dream'd of unhappiness, and waked herself with laughing. Shakspeare.

UNHAPPY, adj. Wretched; miserable; unfortunate; calamitous; distressed. Of persons or things.—Desire of wandering this unhappy morn. Milton.—Unlucky; mischievous; irregular. Obsolete.—A shrewd knave, and an unhappy! Shakspeare.

To UNHARBOUR, v. a. To drive from shelter

UNHARBURED,

UNHARBOURED, adj. Affording no shelter.
 'Tis chastity:
 She that has that is clad in complete steel;
 And, like a quiver'd nymph, with arrows keen,
 May trace huge forests, and unharbour'd heaths,
 Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.

UNHARDENED, adj. Not hardened; not made impudent; not made obdurate.
 Messengers
 Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth. Shakspeare.

UNHARDY, adj. Feeble; tender; timorous.
 The wisest, unexperienc'd will be ever
 Timorous, and loth, with novice modesty;
 Irresolute, unhardy, unadventurous. Milton.

UNHARMED, adj. Unhurt; not injured.
 In strong proof of chastity well armed,
 From love's weak, childish bow she lives unharm'd.
Shakspeare.

UNHARMFUL, adj. Innoxious; innocent.
 Themselves unharmful, let them live unharm'd;
 Their jaws disabled, and their claws disarm'd. Dryden.

UNHARMONIOUS, adj. Not symmetrical; disproportionate.
 Those pure, immortal elements, that know
 No gross, no unharmonious mixture foul,
 Eject him, tainted now, and purge him off. Milton.

Unmusical; ill-sounding.—His thoughts are improper to his subject, his expressions unworthy of his thoughts, or the turn of both is unharmonious. Dryden.

To UNHARNESS, v. a. To loose from the traces.
 The sweating steers unharness'd from the yoke,
 Bring back the crooked plough. Dryden.

To disarm; to divest of armour.

UNHATCHED, adj. Not disclosed from the eggs.—
 Not brought to light.
 Some unhatch'd practice
 Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakspeare.

UNHAUNTED, adj. Not resorted to.
 Some unhaunted place,
 Far from London, out of the common way. Mir. for Mag.

UNHAZARDED, adj. Not adventured; not put in danger.
 Here I should still enjoy thee day and night
 Whole to myself, unhazarded abroad,
 Fearless at home. Milton.

UNHEALTHFUL, adj. Morbid; unwholesome.—The diseases which make years unhealthful, are spotted fevers; and the unhealthful season is the autumn. Graunt.

UNHEALTHILY, adv. In an unwholesome or unsound manner.—Proving but of bad nourishment in the concoction, it puffs up unhealthily a certain big face of pretended learning. Milton.

UNHEALTHINESS, s. State of being unhealthy.—In less than a week we were sensible of the unhealthiness of the climate. Hawkesworth.

UNHEALTHY, adj. Sickly; wanting health.—No body would have a child cramm'd at breakfast, who would not have him dull and unhealthy. Locke.

UNHEARD, adj. Not perceived by the ear.
 For the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
 Their children's cries unheard. Milton.

Not vouchsafed an audience.—What pangs I feel, unpitied and unheard! Dryden.—Unknown in celebration.—Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd. Milton.

UNHEARD OF. Obscure; not known by fame.
 Free from hopes or fears, in humble ease,
Unheard of may I live and die in peace. Graville.

UNHEARD OF. Unprecedented.—There is a foundation laid for the most unheard of confusion that ever was introduced into a nation. Swift.

To UNHEART, v. a. To discourage; to depress.
 To bite his lip,
 And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakspeare.

UNHEATED, adj. Not made hot.—Neither salts, nor the distilled spirits of them can penetrate the narrow pores of unheated glass. Boyle.

UNHEDGED, adj. Not surrounded by a hedge.
 Our needful knowledge, like our needful food,
Unhedg'd lies open, in life's common field. Young.

UNHEEDED, adj. Disregarded; not thought worthy of notice; escaping notice.—True experiments may, by reason of the uneasy mistake of some unheeded circumstance, be unsuccessfully tried. Boyle.

UNHEEDFUL, adj. Not cautious.
 With an unheedful eye,
 An accidental view, as men see multitudes. Beaum. and Fl.

UNHEEDING, adj. Negligent; careless.
 I have not often seen him; if I did,
 He pass'd unmark'd by my unheeding eyes. Dryden.

UNHEEDY, adj. Precipitate; sudden.
 Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,
 Which all along the southern sea-coast lay,
 Threatening unheedy wreck, and rash decay,
 He nam'd Albion. Spenser.

To UNHELE, v. a. To uncover; to expose to view.
 —Then suddenly both would themselves unhele. Spenser.

UNHELPED, adj. Unassisted; having no auxiliary; unsupported.
Unhelp'd I am, who pity'd the distress'd,
 And none oppressing, am by all oppress'd. Dryden.

UNHELPFUL, adj. Giving no assistance.
 I bewail good Glo'ster's case
 With sad, unhelpful tears. Shakspeare.

The disturbance of her unhelpful and unfit society. Milton.

UNHEWN, part. adj. Not hewn.—In occasions of merriment, this rough-cast, unhewn poetry, was instead of stage plays. Dryden.

UNHIDEBOUND, adj. Lax of maw; capacious.
 Though plenteous, all too little seems
 To stuff this maw, this vast unhidebound corpse. Milton.

UNHINDERED, adj. Not opposed; meeting with no hindrance; exerting itself freely.—Virtue, 'tis true, in its proper seat, and with all its full effects and consequences unhindered, must be confessed to be the chief good, as being truly the enjoyment, as well as the imitation of God. Clarke.

To UNHINGE, v. a. To throw from the hinges.—To displace by violence.
 For want of cement, ribs of rock disjoint'd
 Without an earthquake, from their base would start,
 And hills unhing'd, from their deep roots depart. Blackmore.

To disorder; to confuse.
 Rather than not accomplish my revenge,
 Just or unjust, I would the world unhinge. Waller.

To UNHOARD, v. a. To steal from the hoard.
 Or as a thief, bent to unhoard the cash
 Of some rich burgher, whose substantial doors,
 Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault,
 In at the window climbs, or o'er the tiles. Milton.

UNHOLINESS, s. Impiety; profaneness; wickedness.—Too foul and manifest was the unholiness of obtruding upon men remission of sins for money. Raleigh.

UNHOLY, adj. [unhalig, Saxon.] Profane; not halloed.—Doth it follow that all things now in the church are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.—Impious; wicked.

Far other dreams my erring soul employ;
Far other raptures of unholy joy. Pope.

UNHO'NEST, adj. [inhoneste, Fr.; inhonestus, Lat.] Dishonourable; dishonest. Obsolete.—Honest things be known from unhonest things. Ascham.

UNHO'NOURED, adj. Not regarded with veneration; not celebrated.

Unhonour'd though I am, at least, said she,
Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.

Not treated with respect.

Griev'd that a visitant so long shou'd wait,
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate. Pope.

To UNHO'OP, v. a. To divest of hoops.

Merchants do unhoope
Voluminous barrels. Donne.

UNHOP'ED, or UNHOP'ED for, adj. Not expected; greater than hope had promised.

With unhop'd success

The ambassadors return with promis'd peace. Dryden.

UNHO'PEFUL, adj. Such as leaves no room to hope.—Benedict is not the unhopefullest husband that I know: thus far I can praise him; he is of approved valour. Shakspeare.

To UNHO'RSE, v. a. To beat from an horse; to throw from the saddle.—He would unhorse the lustiest challenger. Shakspeare.

UNHO'SPITABLE, adj. [inhospitalis, Lat.] Affording no kindness or entertainment to strangers; cruel; barbarous.

The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood the unhospitable coast. Dryden.

UNHOST, or AUNHOST, a small town of Bohemia, with 1000 inhabitants; 9 miles west of Prague.

UNHO'STILE, adj. Not belonging to an enemy.

The high prancing steeds

Spurn their dismounted riders; they expire
Indignant, by unhostile wounds destroy'd. Philips.

To UNHO'USE, v. a. To drive from the habitation.

Seek true religion: O where? Mirreus!
Thinking her unhous'd here, and fled from us,
Seek her at Rome. Donne.

UNHO'USED, adj. Homeless; wanting a house.

Call the creatures,

Whose naked natures live in all the spight
Of wreakful heaven; whose bare, unhoused trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer meer nature. Shakspeare.

Hear this,

You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines. Southern.

UNHO'SELLED, adj. Having not the sacrament. See To HOUSEL.

Thus was I sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispatch'd;
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, disappointed, unanel'd. Shakspeare.

UNHU'MAN, adj. Barbarous; inhuman. Not now in use.—Unhuman and remorseless cruelty, shown in the spoil and waste they had made upon all nations round about them for the propagation of their empire, which they were still enlarging as their desires, and their desires as hell. South.

UNHU'MBLED, adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who, freed as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbled, unrepented, unreformed,
Headlong would follow. Milton.

UNHURT, adj. Free from harm.—Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field; and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off unhurt. Bacon.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1648.

UNHURTFUL, adj. Innoxious; harmless; doing no harm.

You hope the duke will return no more, or
You imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. Shakspeare.

UNHURTFULLY, adv. Without harm; innocently.
—We laugh at others as innocently and as unhurtfully, as at ourselves. Pope to Swift.

UNHU'SBANDED, adj. Deprived of support; neglected.

With hanging heads I have beheld
A widow vine stand in a naked field,
Unhusbanded, neglected, all forlorn. Browne.

UNHU'SKED, adj. Having quitted the husk.

Could no unhusked acorne leave the tree,
But there was challenge made whose it might be. Bp. Hall.

UN'NICORN, s. [unicornis, unus and cornu, Lat.] A beast, whether real or fabulous, that has only one horn.—Wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee. Shakspeare.—Some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those nasicornous beetles described by Muffetus. Brown.—A bird. Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are these; headed and footed like the dung-hill cock, tailed like a goose, horned on his forehead, with some likeness, as the unicorn is pictured; spurr'd on his wings, bigger than a swan. Grew.

UNICORN, a post township of the United States in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania; 59 miles west of Philadelphia.

UNIDE'AL, adj. Not ideal; real.—Some will be discovered at a window by the road side, rejoicing when a new cloud of dust gathers toward them, as at the approach of a momentary supply of conversation, and a short relief from the tediousness of unideal vacancy. Johnson.

UNIEH, a seaport of Asia Minor, on the coast of the Black sea, the ancient Ænoe. It is situated on a bay, with a range of finely wooded mountains behind. The houses are built of wood, those next the sea being erected on stone piers or pillars; 40 miles east of Samsoun.

UNJE'ALOUS, adj. Not suspiciously fearful; having no unreasonable mistrust.—The indulgence, under which they enjoy present ease, is founded on the gentle and unjealous temper of the king, which may be shaken and changed by several accidents that may fall out. Clarendon.

UNIFORM, adj. Keeping its tenour; similar to itself.—Though when confusedly mingled, as in this stratum, it may put on a face never so uniform and alike, yet it is in reality very different. Woodward.—Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.—The only doubt is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.

UNIFORM, s. The regimental dress of a soldier.

UNIFORMITY, s. [uniformité, Fr.] Resemblance to itself; even tenour.—There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.—Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another. The great council of Nice ordained that there should be a constant uniformity in this case. Nelson.

UN'FORMLY, adv. Without variation; in an even tenour.—The capillamenta of the nerves are each of them solid and uniform; and the vibrating motion of the ethereal medium may be propagated along them from one end to the other uniformly, and without interruption. Newton.—Without diversity of one from another.

UNIGE'NITURE, s. The state of being the only begotten.—As primogeniture consisteth in prelation, so unigeniture in exclusion. Pearson.

UNIMA'GINABLE, adj. Not to be imagined by the fancy; not to be conceived.

Things to their thought
So unimaginable, as hate in heaven. Milton.

UNIMA'GINABLY, adv. To a degree not to be imagined.

gined.—Little commissures, where they adhere, may not be porous enough to be pervious to the unimaginably subtle corpuscles, that make up the beams of light. Boyle.

UNIMAGINED, adj. Not conceived.

Brighter worlds, their unimagin'd bliss Disclosing.

Thomson.

UNIMITABLE, adj. [inimitable, Fr.; inimitabilis, Lat.] Not to be imitated.—Both these are unimitable. Burnet.

UNIMMORTAL, adj. Not immortal; mortal.

They betook them several ways,
Both to destroy, or unimmortal make
All kinds.

Milton.

UNIMPAIRABLE, adj. Not liable to waste or diminution.—If the superior be unimpairable, it is a strong presumption that the inferiors are likewise unimpaired. Hake-will.

UNIMPAIRED, adj. Not diminished; not worn out.
Yet unimpair'd with labours, or with time,
Your age but seems to a new youth to climb.

Dryden.

UNIMPASSIONED, adj. Innocent; quiet; not endowed with passions.

While there with thee th' enchanted round I walk,
The regulated wild, gay fancy then
Will tread in thought the groves and Attic land;
Will from thy standard taste, refine her own,
Correct her pencil to the purest truth
Of nature; or, the unimpassion'd shades
Forsaking, raise it to the human mind.

Thomson.

UNIMPEACHABLE, adj. Not accusable; not to be charged.

Hence merchants, unimpeachable of sin,
Against the charities of domestic life
Incorporated, seem at once to lose
Their nature.

Cowper.

UNIMPEACHED, adj. Not impeached.—The benevolence of Parnel's disposition remains unimpeached. Goldsmith.

UNIMPLORED, adj. Not solicited.

If answerable stile I can obtain
Of my celestial patroness, who deigns
Her nightly visitation unimplored.

Milton.

UNIMPORTANT, adj. Not momentous.—The attention is wasted on things either frivolous or unimportant. Hurd.—Assuming no airs of dignity. A free, unimportant, natural, easy manner; diverting others just as we diverted ourselves. Pope to Swift.

UNIMPORTING, adj. Not being of importance.—These conclusions are many, and unimporting (upon necessity) to salvation either way. Bp. Hall.

UNIMPORTUNED, adj. Not solicited; not teased to compliance.

Whoever ran
To danger unimportun'd, he was then
No better than a sanguine, virtuous man.

Donne.

UNIMPOSING, adj. Not enjoined as obligatory; voluntary.

Beauteous order reigns,
Manly submission, unimposing toil.

Thomson.

UNIMPROVABLE, adj. Incapable of melioration.—The principal faculty in such is unimprovable. Hammond.

UNIMPROVABLENESS, s. Quality of not being improvable.—This must be imputed to their ignorance and unimprovableness in knowledge, being generally without literature. Hammond.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Not made better; not made more knowing.—Not a mask went unimprov'd away. Pope.—Not taught; not meliorated by instruction.—Shallow, unimproved intellects are confident pretenders to certainty. Glanville.—Uncensured; not disproved. Improve was formerly used in the sense of censure. Obsolete.

Young Fortinbrass
Of unimproved mettle, hot and full.

Shakspeare.

UNINCREASABLE, adj. Admitting no increase.—That love, which ought to be appropriated to God, results chiefly from an altogether, or almost unincreasable elevation and vastness of affection. Boyle.

UNINDIFFERENT, adj. Partial; leaning to a side.—His opinion touching the catholic church was as unindifferent, as, touching our church, the opinion of them that favour this pretended reformation is. Hooker.

UNINDUSTRIOUS, adj. Not diligent; not laborious.—Pride we cannot think so sluggish or unindustrious an agent, as not to find out expedients for its purpose. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNINFECTED, adj. Not infected.—By this means all the outed ministers would be again employed, and kept from going round the uninfected parts of the kingdom. Burnet.

UNINFLAMED, adj. Not set on fire.—When weak bodies come to be inflamed, they gather a much greater heat than others have uninflamed. Bacon.

UNINFLAMMABLE, adj. Not capable of being set on fire.—The uninflammable spirit of such concretes may be pretended to be but a mixture of phlegm and salt. Boyle.

UNINFLUENCED, adj. Not influenced; not prejudiced.—If those elections are uninfluenced and free. Ld. Lyttleton.

UNINFORMED, adj. Untaught; uninstructed.

Nor uninform'd

Of nuptial sanctity, and marriage rites.

Milton.

Unaninated; not enlightened.—The Picts, though never so beautiful, have dead uninformed countenances. Spectator.

UNINGENIOUS, adj. Not ingenious; stupid.—Uningenious paradoxes, and reveries without imagination. Burke.

UNINGENUOUS, adj. Illiberal; disingenuous.—Did men know how to distinguish between reports and certainties, this stratagem would be as unskilful as it is uningenuous. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNINHABITABLE, adj. Unfit to be inhabited.—If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same must be found within that supposed uninhabitable burnt zone, or within the tropics. Raleigh.

UNINHABITABLENESS, s. Incapacity of being inhabited.—Divers radicated opinions, such as that of the uninhabitableness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, are generally grown out of request. Boyle.

UNINHABITED, adj. Having no dwellers.—The whole island is now uninhabited. Sandys.

UNINI, a river which rises in the plains bordering the Amazons, runs east between the Negro and the Amazons, and enters the Negro.

UNINJURED, adj. Unhurt; suffering no harm.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great teacher! to thy promised bliss:
Untouch'd thy tomb, uninjur'd be thy dust,
As thy own fame among the future just.

Prior.

UNINQUISITIVE, adj. Not curious to know; not inquisitive; not prying.—It was an ingenuous, uninquisitive time. Bp. Hurd.

UNINSCRIBED, adj. Having no inscription.

Make sacred Charles's tomb for ever known;
Obscure the place, and uninscrib'd the stone.
Oh fact accurst!

Pope.

UNINSPIRED, adj. Not having received any supernatural instruction or illumination.—Thus all the truths that men, uninspired, are enlighten'd with, came into their minds. Locke.

UNINSTRUCTED, adj. Not taught; not helped by instruction.—It is an unspeakable blessing to be born in those parts where wisdom flourishes, though there are even in these parts several poor, uninstructed persons. Addison.

UNINSTRUCTIVE, adj. Not conferring any improvement.—Were not men of abilities thus communicative, their wisdom wisdom would be in a great measure useless, and their experience uninstructive. Addison.

UNINTELLIGENT, adj. Not knowing; not skilful; not having any consciousness.—We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of our insufficiency. Shakspeare.

UNINTELLIGIBILITY, s. Quality of not being intelligible.—Credit the unintelligibility of this union and motion. Glanville.

UNINTELLIGIBLE, adj. [inintelligible, Fr.] Not such as can be understood.—The Latin, three hundred years before Tully, was as unintelligible in his time, as the English and French of the same period are now. Swift.

UNINTELLIGIBLENESS, s. State of being unintelligible.—I require our theorist to shew us some inconvenience or unintelligibleness in the one more than in the other. Bp. Herb.

UNINTELLIGIBLY, adv. In a manner not to be understood.—To talk of specific differences in nature, without reference to general ideas, is to talk unintelligibly. Locke.

UNINTENTIONAL, adj. Not designed; happening without design.—Besides the unintentional deficiencies of my style, I have purposely transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods over-long. Boyle.

UNINTERESSED, or UNINTERESTED, adj. Not having interest.—The greatest part of an audience is always uninterested, though seldom knowing. Dryden.

UNINTERESTING, adj. Exciting no interest.—The details rise far above the uninteresting precision of patient analysts. Warton.

UNINTERMITTED, adj. Continued; not interrupted.—This motion of the heavenly bodies seems to be partly continued and unintermitted, as that motion of the first moveable partly interpolated and interrupted. Hale.

UNINTERMITTING, adj. Having no interruption; continuing.—To procure an unintermitting joy; to draw life into perpetuity; to keep back the eclipsing sadnesses of the mind:—this is beyond a Solomon. Feltham.

UNINTERPOLATED, adj. Not interpolated.—Berriman and Ernesti think that authenticæ means no more than genuine, uninterpolated. Porson.

UNINTERMIXED, adj. Not mingled.

Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies,
I versify the truth, not poetize.

Daniel.

UNINTERRUPTED, adj. Not broken; not interrupted. Thy constant quiet fills my peaceful breast
With unmixt joy, uninterrupted rest. Roscommon.

UNINTERRUPTEDLY, adv. Without interruption.—A successive augmentation uninterruptedly continued, in an actual existence of believing and congregations in all ages unto the end of the world. Pearson.

UNINTRENCHED, adj. Not intrenched.—It had been cowardice in the Trojans, not to have attempted any thing against an army that lay unfortified and unintrenched. Pope.

UNINTRICATED, adj. Not perplexed; not obscure.—Even, clear, unintricated designs. Hammond.

UNINTRODUCED, adj. Not properly conducted; not duly ushered in; obtrusive.—Think not, unintroduc'd I force my way. Young.

UNINVENTED, adj. Undiscovered.

Not uninvented that, which thou aright
Believ'st so main to our success, I bring.

Milton.

UNINVESTIGABLE, adj. Not to be searched out.—The number of the works of this visible world being uninvestigable by us, afford us a demonstrative proof of the unlimited extent of the Creator's skill. Ray.

UNINVITED, adj. Not asked.

His honest friends, at thirly hour of dusk,
Come uninvited.

Philips.

UNINURED, adj. Unaccustomed; not habituated.

Protected mice,
The race exiguous, uninur'd to wet,
Their mansions quit, and other countries seek.

Philips.

To UNJOIN', v. a. To separate; to disjoin. [They] unjoynen the things that ben conjoynd. Chaucer.

UNJOINTED, adj. Disjoined; separated.

I hear the sound of words; their sense the air

Dissolves unjointed ere it reach my ear.

Milton.

Having no articulation.—They are all three immovable or unjointed, of the thickness of a little pin. Grew.

UNIOLA [Dimin. from the union of the glumes], in Botany, a genus of the class triandria, order digynia, natural order of gramina, gramineæ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: glume many-flowered, many-valved; valves imbricate in a double row, awl-shaped, compressed, navicular, keeled, one closed over the other; the last pair many-flowered, containing an ovate flated spikelet, sharp at the edge. Corolla two-valved; valves lanceolate-compressed, like those of the calyx; the inner valve surpassing the other a little. Stamina: filaments three, capillary. Anthers oblong, linear. Pistil: germ conical. Styles two, erect, simple. Stigmas pubescent. Pericarp none. Corolla incloses the seed. Seed one, ovate-oblong.—Essential Character. Calyx many-valved. Spikelet ovate, keeled.

1. Uniola paniculata.—Panicled, spikelets ovate.—Native of Virginia and Carolina. Called there sea-side oat.

2. Uniola mucronata.—Spike distich; spikelets ovate; calyxes somewhat awned. Culm a foot high, even. Leaves narrow, smooth, with striated sheaths.—Native of the East Indies.

3. Uniola spicata.—Subspiked; leaves rolled in, rigid. Culm a span high, with alternate rigid leaves, rolled in and mucronate.—Native of North America on the coast.

UNION, s. [unio, Lat.] The act of joining two or more so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,

And gladly of our union hear thee speak,

One heart, one soul in both!

Milton.

Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.—The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God. Bp. Taylor.—A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;

And in the cup an union shall he throw,

Richer than that which four successive kings

In Denmark's crown have worn.

Shakspeare.

UNION, one of the Grenadine islands, in the West Indies. Lat. 12. 30. N. long. 61. 20. W.—2. A river of the United States, in Maine, which runs south into Blue Hill bay.—3. A post township of the United States, in Lincoln county, Maine. Population 1266.—4. A township of the United States, in Tolland county, Connecticut. Population 752.—5. A township of the United States, in Broome county, New York, on the Susquehannah.—6. A post village of the United States, in Nassau county, New York.—7. A post village of the United States, in Greenwich county, New York.—8. A village of the United States, in Bern county, New York.—9. A post village of the United States, in Peru county, New York.—10. A township of the United States, in Essex county, New Jersey.—11. A post township and borough of the United States, and capital of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, on the Redstone.—12. A township of the United States, in Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania.—13. A township of the United States, in Fayette county, Pennsylvania.—14. A township of the United States, in Mifflin county, Pennsylvania.—15. A county of the United States, in Pennsylvania.—16. A post township of the United States, in Loudon county, Virginia.—17. UNION, or Shakerstown, a township of the United States, in Warren county, Ohio. It is a pleasant settlement of Shakers.—18. A township of the United States, in Knox county, Ohio.—19. A township of the United States, in Licking county, Ohio.—20. A township of the United States, in Madison county, Ohio.—21. A township of the United States, in Miami county, Ohio.—22. A township

A township

A township of the United States, in Highland county, Ohio.—23. A township of the United States, in Gallia county, Ohio.—24. A township of the United States, in Fairfield county, Ohio.—25. A township of the United States, in Delaware county, Ohio.—26. A township of the United States, in Belmont county, Ohio.—27. A township of the United States, in Champaign county, Ohio.—28. A township of the United States, in Muskingum county, Ohio.—29. A township of the United States, in Ross county, Ohio.—30. A township of the United States, in Scotia county, Ohio.—31. A post township of the United States, in Montgomery county, Ohio.—32. A district of the United States, in the north part of South Carolina.—33. A county of the United States, in Illinois.—34. A post town of the United States, and capital of Monroe county, Virginia.

UNION BRIDGE, a post village of the United States, in Frederick county, Maryland.

UNION MILLS, a post village of the United States, in Frederick county, Maryland.

UNION MILLS, a post village of the United States, in Fluvanna county, Virginia, on the Rivanna.

UNION SPRINGS, a post village of the United States, in Aurelius county, New York.

UNIONTOWN, a post township of the United States, in Frederick county, Maryland.

UNIONTOWN, a post township of the United States, in Muskingum county, Ohio.

UNIONVILLE, a post township of the United States, and capital of Union district, South Carolina; 75 miles north of Columbia. Population 130.

UNJO'YFUL, adj. Not joyful; sad.—This unjoyful set of people. Tatler.

UNJO'YOUS, adj. Not gay; not cheerful.—Where nothing can be hearty, it must needs be both unjoyous and injurious to any perceiving person so detained. Milton.

UNIPAROUS, adj. Bringing one at a birth.—Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous. Brown.

UNIQUE, adj. [Fr.] Sole; without an equal; without another of the same kind known to exist: an affected and useless term of modern times.

UNISON, adj. [unus and sonus, Lat.] Sounding alone. Sounds intermix'd with voice Choral, or unison. Milton.

UNISON, s. A string that has the same sound with another.—When moved matter meets with any thing like that, from which it received its primary impress, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unisons. Glanville.—A single unvaried note; an exact agreement of sound.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While a long, solemn unison went round.

Pope.

UNI'SONOUS, adj. Being in unison.—These apt notes were about forty tunes, of one part only, and in one unisonous key. Warton.

UNIT, s. [unus, unitus, Lat.] One; the least number; or the root of numbers.—Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.—A gold coin of king James I., value 20s.

UNI'TABLE, adj. Capable of being united. Phillips.

UNITA'RIAN, s. One of a sect allowing divinity to God the Father alone; an anti-trinitarian.—Socinians, under the name of Unitarians, have appeared with great boldness, and have—filled the nation with their numerous pamphlets, printed upon a public stock, and given away gratis among the people, whereby many have been deluded. Lestie.

To UNITE, v. a. [unitus, Lat.] To join two or more into one.

Whatever truths
Redeem'd from error, or from ignorance,
Thin in their authors, like rich veins of ore,
Your works unite, and still discover more.

Dryden.

To make to agree.—The king proposed nothing more than to unite his kingdom in one form of worship. Clarendon.—To make to adhere.—The peritonæum, which is a dry body, may be united with the muscularous flesh. Wise-man.—To join.—Let the ground of the picture be well united with colours of a friendly nature. Dryden.—To join in interest.—Unto their assembly, mine honour be not thou united. Gen.

To UNITE, v. n. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert.

If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them.

Shakspeare.

To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.—To grow into one.

From my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son
Of God Most High; so God with Man unites.

Milton.

U N I T E D S T A T E S.

The history of the United States has been already given under the articles AMERICA, p. 470, LONDON, 198, 260, 360, and NORTH AMERICA. Since those articles were written, North American has been engaged in no martial exploits. Her government has been occupied during a long peace in administering to the wants of the people and to the security of the empire. But she has nothing wherewith to fill the page of history. There is little of conflict or of party in her internal organization, and the settlement of her boundaries or the regulations of her commerce comprize all her foreign relations. "The people of the United States," says the eloquent Maclaren, "find themselves in a condition to devote their whole energies to the cultivation of their vast natural resources, undistracted by wars, unburdened by oppressive taxes, unfettered by old prejudices and corruptions. Enjoying the united advantages of an infant and a mature society, they are able to apply the highly refined science and art of Europe to the improvement of the virgin soil and unoccupied natural riches of America. They start unincumbered by a thousand evils, political and moral, which weigh down the energies of the old world. The volume of our history lies before them: they may adopt our improvements, avoid our errors, take warning from our sufferings, and with the combined lights of our experience and their own, build up a more perfect form of society. Even already, they have given some momentous and some salutary truths to the world. It is their rapid growth which has first developed the astonishing results of the productive powers of population. We can now calculate with considerable certainty, that America, which yet presents to the eye, generally, the aspect of an untrodden forest, will, in the short space of one century, surpass Europe in the number of its inhabitants. We even hazard little in predicting, that, before the tide of civilization has rolled back to its original seats, Assyria, Persia, and Palestine, an intelligent population of two or three hundred millions will have overspread the new world, and extended the empire of knowledge and the arts from Cape Horn to Alayska. Among this vast mass of civilized men, there will be but two languages spoken. The effect of this single circumstance in accelerating the progress of society, can scarcely be calculated. What a field will then be opened to the man of science, the artist, the popular writer, who addresses a hundred millions of educated persons? What a stimulus given to mental energy and social improvement, when every new idea, and every useful discovery, will be communicated instantaneously to so great a mass of intelligent beings, by the electric agency of the post and the press! With the united intellect and resources of a society framed on such a gigantic scale, what mighty designs will then be practicable! Imagination is lost in attempting to estimate the effects of such accumulated means and powers. One result, however, may be anticipated. America must then become the centre of knowledge, civilization, and power; and the present leading states of Europe (Russia perhaps excepted), placed on the arena amidst such colossal associates as the American Republics, will sink to a subordinate rank, and cease to exert any greater influence on the fate of the world, than the Swiss Cantons do at the present day."

mass

The territory of the United States is situated between the 25th and 49th degrees of north latitude, and between the 67th and 124th degrees of west longitude from London. Its extreme length east and west is 2780 miles, its greatest breadth north and south 1230 miles, and its area, according to Mr. Mellish, 2,076,410 square English miles. It is bounded on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, on the north by the British possessions, on the west by the Pacific Ocean, and on the south by Mexico and the Mexican Gulf. The Mississippi divides it into two parts nearly equal in extent. In the north-east angle of this territory, there is a space of more than 100 miles square, of very barren ground, interposed between New Brunswick and Lower Canada, the possession of which has long been the subject of negotiation between the British and American governments.

Two chains of mountains separate this extensive territory into three great natural divisions. 1. The Atlantic region, or the country lying east of the Alleghany mountains. 2. The valley of the Mississippi, or the country watered by the Mississippi, Missouri, and their numerous branches. 3. The Pacific region, or the country lying west of the Rocky mountains.

The Alleghany mountains commence in Lower Canada, below Quebec, and passing along the northern boundary of Maine, and through New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and the two Carolinas, they terminate in the upper parts of Georgia and Alabama, preserving a south-west direction throughout. They consist of three, four, five, or more distinct ridges, with wide and fertile valleys interposed. Their entire length is 1100 miles; their breadth varies from 110 to 150. In the northern half their height is greatest, but most unequal; detached peaks are numerous, and the ridges indistinctly marked. In the south, the ridges are lower, but better defined, and their summits are often distinguished by a very uniform continuous level.

The Rocky mountains are a continuation of the Mexican Cordilleras, and extend to the Polar Ocean. They pass through the territory of the United States, at the distance of 500 miles from the Pacific Ocean, and consist of several elevated chains, occupying a breadth of 300 miles, with deep valleys between them.

The Atlantic region was the first settled, and is the most populous and improved portion of the United States, but not the most favoured as to soil and climate. It may be considered as the eastern slope of the Alleghanies. Including all the countries watered by rivers flowing into the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico, east of the Mississippi, it is about 1700 miles in length, with an average breadth of 250, and embraces an area of 400,000 square miles. It includes three well marked varieties of soil and surface. 1. The alluvial district, consisting of sand, gravel, and clay, comprising a stripe of level land, extending along the coast from New York southward, with a breadth varying from 20 miles to 100. The surface is level or slightly undulating; and it embraces large tracts of marsh near the coast. The soil is poor and sandy, producing almost nothing but pines, except in the alluvial tracts which skirt the rivers. About one-half of the surface of New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland, one-fifth of Virginia, one-third of the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama, fall under this description. 2. The upland country, extending from the alluvial tract to the feet of the mountains, with a breadth varying from 20 to 200 miles. The soil here is chiefly formed from the detritus of the primitive rocks, and is generally fertile, and well adapted for tillage. 3. The ridges of the Alleghanies, and the valleys between them, which bear a strong growth of natural wood, have generally a rich soil capable of tillage, wherever the surface is not rocky or too steep; and are almost free from marshes. In part of Pennsylvania, New York, and in the six New England States, where the Alleghanies spread out into an irregular broken surface, the soil possesses a mixed character. The northern parts of New England are mountainous, the southern hilly or uneven. The soil, comparatively speaking, is rocky, has little depth, and is better adapted for pasture than tillage, and improves generally as we advance inwards from the coast.

The basin or Valley of the Mississippi, which extends from the Alleghanies to the Rocky mountains, is not so large as the basin of the Amazon by one-third, but being situated in the best part of the temperate zone, it may be pronounced the finest valley in the world. Its breadth east and west is 1400 miles; its length in the opposite direction 1200, and its area 1,400,000 square miles. It comprehends a great diversity of soil, surface, and climate. 1. The basin of the Ohio, including the Cumberland, 700 miles long and 300 broad, is a rich and beautiful country; the garden of the United States. The lower parts of the surface are from 500 to 800 feet above the level of the sea, and are finely diversified with round topped arable hills, rising 400 or 500 feet above their base. The rivers generally run in deep hollows, sometimes mere ravines, but often spreading out into valleys, which include lands of exuberant fertility. This district includes Kentucky, Tennessee, with part of Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. 2. The territory extending from the basin of the Ohio north-westward to Lake Superior, including the country between the Missouri and Upper Mississippi. The surface is sometimes undulating, sometimes so level that the waters stagnate on it, till carried off by evaporation; and it is not broken by any notable elevations, except one long ridge extending between the Missouri and Mississippi, and two low eminences called the Ocooch and Smoky mountains. The soil is naturally rich, and covered with luxuriant herbage; but the climate is severe.

The last and largest division of this great valley, extending from the Mississippi and Missouri to the Rocky mountains, consists of two very different qualities of soil, which graduate into each other, but, on the great scale, may be conceived to form two parallel tracts of nearly equal extent, parted by the 98th meridian. In the middle of the eastern section, and, as it were, in the very bottom of the great basin of the Mississippi, lie the Ozark mountains, a chain like the Alleghanies, of great length and breadth, and small height. Their sides, which slope with gentle declivities, are deeply furrowed with streams, and partly covered with small timber. The Arkansas and Red River are the only streams which cut their way through this chain. On the east side of the Ozark chain is the Great Swamp, 200 miles long and 20 broad, which is converted into a lake by the annual overflow of the Mississippi, but is dry during the heats of summer. The country round it is rich bottom or meadow land, clothed with excellent timber. The country for one or two hundred miles west of the Ozarks is also good, but less wooded.

The Pacific Region extends from the Rocky mountains to the ocean, and embraces an area of 300,000 square miles. It consists almost entirely of the basin of the Columbia river. A chain of mountains runs through it from south to north, about 150 miles from the coast, between which and the Rocky mountains there is a high valley, 300 miles broad, intersected by smaller chains, but well wooded and watered, and enjoying a pure air and a fruitful soil. The land between the outer chain and the coast is nearly of the same description, but much lower, and overcharged with moisture from frequent and heavy rains. The climate is remarkably mild and equable.

The rage for emigration to the United States is at present on the decline. At the same time there is still so much of it, as renders it highly desirable that minute information should be had as to the different parts of the country. We may refer our readers to many modern works, but especially to "The Americans as they are," an excellent little treatise, which seems to comprize all that is requisite. We cannot in our confined limits attempt any thing like an abridgment of the author's observations, but shall present our readers with his conclusions, as contained in the following summary:—

"Whoever changes his country should have before him a complete view and a clear idea of the state in which he intends to settle, as well as of the rest of the union: he ought to depend upon his own means, on himself in short, and not upon others. Upon no other terms will prosperity and happiness attend the emigrant's exertions in the United States. The foreign mechanic who, emigrating into the United States, selects the states of New York, Pennsylvania, or Ohio, will find sufficient occupation, his trade respected, and his industry rewarded by wealth and political consequence. The manufacturer with a moderate capital, will choose Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and the like places. The merchant who is possessed of two or 3000 dollars, and settles in Ohio, in the north-western part of Pennsylvania, or over in Illinois, will, if he be prudent and steady, have no reason to complain of the Yankees. The farmer, with a capital, of from three to 4000 dollars, will fix upon the state of Ohio, in preference to any other, especially if he comes accompanied only by his own family, and is therefore obliged to rely on the friendly assistance of his neighbours. He will there prefer the lands adjacent to navigable rivers, or to the rise of the new canal. If he goes beyond Ohio, he will find eligible situations in Illinois, and in Missouri. Any one who can command a capital exceeding 10,000 dollars, who is not incumbered with a large family, and whose mind does not revolt at the idea of being the owner of slaves, will choose the state of Mississippi, or of Louisiana, and realize there in a short time a fortune beyond his most sanguine expectations. He has his choice there of the unsold lands along the Mississippi, and Red-river, in the parishes of Plaquemines or Bayou Bastier; in the interior of La Fourche, Iberville, Attacapas, Opelousas, Rapides, Natchitoches, Concordia, New Feliciana, and all the way up the Mississippi, to Walnut-hills, four hundred miles above New Orleans. All that has been urged against the unhealthiness of the country may be answered in these few words, Louisiana, though not at every season of the year equally salubrious, is far healthier than Cuba, Jamaica, and the West Indies in general. Thousands of people live free from the attacks of any kind of fever. On the plantations there is not the least danger.—In New Orleans the yellow fever has not appeared these four years past, and the place is so far from being unhealthy now, that the mortality for the last three years was less in this place than in Boston, New York and Philadelphia. Cleanliness, sobriety, a strict attention to the digestive system, and the avoiding of strong liquors, and exposure to heat, or to the rising miasmata, will keep every one as healthy in Louisiana as any where else. The neglect of proper precautions will cause as serious inconvenience in Louisiana as in any other country. This is the real condition of the state, and those acquainted with it will readily bear testimony to the correctness of my opinion, that it holds out not only to British emigrants, but also to capitalists of that country, advantages far surpassing those of their own vast dominions in any quarter of the globe."

"In Louisiana they should embark a part of their capital, not in land speculations, or in buying extensive tracts, which they have to sell in the course of time in small parcels, but in plantations. These are sources of wealth far superior to the gold mines of Mexico, and are guaranteed by a firm constitution, and by the character and the habits of a liberal people."

UNI'TEDLY, adv. With union; so as to join.—The eyes, which are of a watery nature, ought to be much painted, and unitedly on their lower parts; but boldly touched above by the light and shadows. Dryden.

UNI'TER, s. The person or thing that unites.—Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both. Glanville.

UNITIMONI, a river of Guiana, which rises in the mountains of Parima, and running west, enters the Maguiritaris.

UNI'TION, s. [union, Fr.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little-used.—As long as any different substance keeps off the union, hope not to cure a wound. Wiseman.

UNI'TIVE, adj. Having the power of uniting.—That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. Norris.

UNI'TY, s. [unitas, Lat.] The state of being one.—Those heretics introduced a plurality of Gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.—Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity. Locke.—Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear

You see, there is such unity in the proofs. Shakspeare.

Agreement; uniformity.—To the avoiding of dissension, it availeth much, that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine. Hooker.—Principle of dramatic writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation is preserved.—The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed. Dryden.—[In law.] "Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example,—I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished; by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none." Cowel.

UNI'TY, a post township of the United States, in Kennebeck county, Maine.

UNI'TY, a township of the United States, in Cheshire county, New Hampshire.

UNI'TY, a post township of the United States, in Montgomery county, Maryland.

UNI'TY, a township of the United States, in Columbiana county, Ohio.

UNJU'DGED, adj. Not judicially determined.

Causes unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,

And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.

UNIVE'RSAL, adj. [universalis, Lat.] General; extending to all.—All sorrowed: if all the world could have seen't, the woe had been universal. Shakspeare.—Total; whole.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began.

Dryden.

Not particular; comprising all particulars.—An universal was the object of imagination, and there was no such thing in reality. Arbuthnot.

UNIVE'RSAL, s. The whole; the general system of the universe. Not in use.—Plato calleth God the cause and original, the nature and reason of the universal. Raleigh.

UNIVE'RSALIST, s. One who affects to understand all particulars.—A modern freethinker is an universalist in speculation; any proposition whatsoever he's ready to decide; self-assurance supplies all want of abilities! Bentley.

UNIVERSA'LITY, s. [universalitas, school Lat.] Not particularity; generality; extension to the whole.—A special conclusion cannot be inferred from a moral universality, nor always from a physical one; though it may be always inferred from an universality that is metaphysical. Watts.

UNIVE'RSALLY, adv. Throughout the whole; without exception.—There best beheld, where universally admir'd. Milton.

UNIVE'RSALNESS, s. Universality.

They'll object

'Gainst th' universabness of this clear notion. More.

UNIVERSE,

UNIVERSE, s. [univers, Fr.; universum, Lat.] The general system of things.

Creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe. Shakspeare.

UNIVERSITY, s. [universitas, Lat.] University was first used for any community or corporation; afterwards confined to academies. Anderson on Commerce.—A school, where all the arts and sciences are taught and studied.—While I play the good husband at home, my son and servants spend all at the university. Shakspeare.—The whole; the universe. Obsolete.

The great womb
From whence all things in the university
Yclad in divers forms do gaily bloom,
And after fade away.

More.

UNIVOCAL, adj. [univocus, Lat.] Having one meaning.—Univocal words are such as signify but one idea, or but one sort of thing: equivocal words are such as signify two or more different ideas, or different sorts of objects. Watts.—Certain; regular; pursuing always one tenor.—This conceit makes putrefactive generations correspondent unto seminal productions; and conceives inequivocal effects, and univocal conformity unto the efficient. Brown.

UNIVOCALLY, adv. In one term; in one sense.—How is sin univocally distinguished into venial and mortal, if the venial be not sin? Bp. Hall.—In one tenor.—All creatures are generated univocally by parents of their own kind; there is no such thing as spontaneous generation. Ray.

UNIVOCATION, s. [unus and vocatus, Lat.] Agreement of name and meaning.—The univocation of Tartar cities with those of Israel. Whiston.

UNJUST, adj. [injuste, Fr.; injustus, Lat.] Iniquitous; contrary to equity; contrary to justice. It is used both of persons and things.

I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakspeare.

UNJUSTIFIABLE, adj. Not to be defended; not to be justified.—If we could look into effects, we might pronounce boldly; but for a man to give his opinion of what he sees but in part, is an unjustifiable piece of rashness. Addison.

UNJUSTIFIABLENESS, s. The quality of not being justifiable.—When it is unlawful upon the unjustifiableness of the ground, we sin in it till we put an end to it. Kettlewell.

UNJUSTIFIABLY, adv. In a manner not to be defended.

UNJUSTIFIED, adj. Not cleared from the imputation of guilt; not justified.

I go
Unjustified for ever from your sight. Dryden.

UNJUSTLY, adv. In a manner contrary to right.

If aught against my life
Thy country sought of thee, it sought unjustly. Milton.

UNKED, or UNKID, adj. Unusual; odd; strange.—A physician must practice according to the actions of physick;—he must not minister after any unked manner, but onely according to the usual and ordinarie opinion of the learned in physick. Abstract of Acts.—Lonely; solitary. A provincial expression.

UNKEL, a small town of the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine, on the east bank of the Rhine; 25 miles south-south-east of Cologne.

UNKEMMED, or UNK'EMPT, adj. [incomptus, Lat.] Uncombed.—Laden she is with long unkemmed hairs. May.—Unpolished.

Thenot, to that I chose thou dost me tempt;
But ah! too well I wot my humble veine,
And how my rimes been rugged and unkempt. Spenser.

To UNKENNEL, v. a. To drive from his hole.—I warrant you, colonel, we'll unkennel him. Dryden.—To rouse from its secrecy or retreat.

If his occult guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Shakspeare.

UNKENT, adj. Unknown. Obsolete.

Go, little book, thyself present,
As child whose parent is unkent,
To him, that is the president
Of nobleness and chivalrie. Spenser.

UNKEPT, adj. Not kept; not retained. Unobserved; unobeyed.—Many things kept generally heretofore, are now in like sort generally unkept, and abolished every where. Hooker.

UNKIND, adj. Not favourable; not benevolent.
In nature there's no blemish but the mind;
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind. Shakspeare.

Unnatural.
They, however shameful and unkinde.
Yet did possesse their horrible intent. Spenser.

UNKINDLINESS, s. Unfavourableness.—I have often heard the chief of our city complaining of the unfruitfulness of the earth, and sometimes again of the unkindliness of the weather, now for a good space hurtful to the fruits. Hake-will.

UNKINDLY, adj. Unnatural; contrary to nature.
They with their filthiness,
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser.

Malignant; unfavourable.
The goddess, that in rural shrine,
Dwell'st here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song
Forbidding every bleak, unkindly fog,
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood. Milton.

UNKINDLY, adv. Without kindness; without affection.
The herd, unkindly wise,
Or chaces him from thence, or from him flies. Denham.

Contrarily to nature.
All works of nature,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mixed. Milton.

UNKINDNESS, s. Malignity; ill-will; want of affection.
To UNKING, v. a. To deprive of royalty.

It takes the force of law: how then, my lord!
If as they would unking my father now,
To make you way. Southern.

UNKINGLIKE, or UNKINGLY, adj. Unbecoming a king; base; ignoble.—The unkingly thirst of gold. Thomson.

UNKISSED, adj. Not kissed.—Foul words are but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkist. Shakspeare.

UNKLE, or UNCLE, s. [oncle, Fr.] The brother of a father or mother.

UNKNI'GHTLY, adj. Unbecoming a knight.
To UNKNIT, v. a. [uncnycan, Sax., solvere.] To unweave; to separate.

Would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made. Shakspeare.

UNKNIT, part. adj. Not united; not knit.
The petty brawls and quarrels,
Late urg'd betwixt the Alberti and your family,
Must, yes and shall, like tender unknit joints,
Fasten again together of themselves. Beaumont and Fl.

UNKNOTTED, adj. Freed from knots; untwisted; unentangled.—All simple, single, pure, pervious, unknotted. More.—Unknotted twine. Dyer.

UNKNOTTY, adj. Having no knots.—Unknotty fir. Sandys.

To UNKNO'W, v. a. To cease to know.

It's already known;
Oh! can you keep it from yourselves, unknow it? Smith.

UNKNO'WABLE, adj. Not to be known.—Here too even individuals, however of themselves unknowable, become objects of knowledge, as far as their nature will permit. Harris.

UNKNO'WING, adj. Ignorant; not knowing: with of.
Let me speak to the yet unknowing world,
How these things came about. Shakspeare.

Not practised; not qualified.
These were they, whose souls the furies steel'd,
And curs'd, with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

UNKNO'WINGLY, adv. Ignorantly; without knowledge.

The beauty I behold has struck me dead:
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance. Dryden.

UNKNO'WN, adj. Not known.
'Tis not unknown to you,
How much I have disabled my estate. Shakspeare.

Greater than is imagined.—The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknown advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.
—Not having cohabitation.

I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn. Shakspeare.

Not having communication.—At a little inn, the man of the house, formerly a servant in the family, to do honour to his old master, had, unknown to Sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post. Addison.

UNLABO'RIOUS, adj. Not laborious; not difficult to be done.—The licensers doubtless took this office up, looking on it through their obedience to the parliament, whose command perhaps made all things easy and unlaborious to them. Milton.

UNLABOURED, adj. Not produced by labour.
Unlabour'd harvests shall the fields adorn,
And cluster'd grapes shall blush on every thorn. Dryden.

Not cultivated by labour.
Not eastern monarchs on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of the unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

Spontaneous; voluntary.
Their charms, if charms they have, the truth supplies,
And from the theme unlabour'd beauties rise. Tickell.

To UNLACE, v. a. To loose any thing fastened with strings.

He could not endure so cruel case,
But thought his arms to leave, and helmet to unlace.
Spenser.

Unlace yourself, for that harmonious chime
Tells me from you that now it is bed-time. Donne.

To UNLA'DE, v. a. To remove from the vessel which carries.

He's a foolish seaman,
That, when his ship is sinking, will not Unlade his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

To exonerate that which carries.
The venturous merchant, who design'd for far,
And touches on our hospitable shore,
Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
Shall here unlade him, and depart no more. Dryden.

To put out. Used of a vessel.—We landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlade her burden. Acts.

UNLA'ID, adj. Not placed; not fixed; not pacified; not stilled; not suppressed.
No evil thing that walks by night,
Blue, meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity. Milton.

Not laid out as a corpse.
Parts of me they judg'd decay'd,
But we last out still unlaid. B. Jonson.

UNLAME'NTED, adj. Not deplored.
Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The pride of fools, and pageant of a day. Pope.

UNLA'RDED, adj. Not intermixed or foisted in by way of improvement.—Speak the language of the company you are in; speak it purely, and unlarded with any other. Ld. Chesterfield.

To UNLA'TCH, v. a. To open by lifting up the latch.
My worthy wife
The door unlatch'd; and, with repeated calls,
Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

UNLA'VISH, adj. Not prodigal; not wasteful.—Unlavish wisdom never works in vain. Thomson.

UNLA'VISHED, adj. Not wasted; not thrown away.
My breast unsullied by the lust of gold,
My time unlavish'd in pursuit of power. Shenstone.

UNLA'WFUL, adj. Contrary to law; not permitted by the law.
The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps, unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

UNLA'WFULLY, adv. In a manner contrary to law or right.—He that gains all that he can lawfully this year, next year will be tempted to gain something unlawfully. Bp. Taylor.—Illegitimately; not by marriage.—I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. Shakspeare.

UNLA'WFULNESS, s. Contrariety to law; state of being not permitted.—If those alleged testimonies of Scripture did indeed concern the matter to such effect as was pretended, that which they should infer were unlawfulness. Hooker.—Illegitimacy.

To UNLE'ARN, v. a. To forget, or disuse what has been learned.—A wicked man is not only obliged to learn to do well, but unlearn his former life. Rogers.

UNLE'ARNED, adj. [unɛləɹnɛd, Saxon.] Ignorant; not informed; not instructed.
Some at the bar, with subtily defend
The cause of an unlearned, noble friend. Dryden.

Not gained by study; not known.—They learned mere words, or such things chiefly as were better unlearned. Milton.—Not suitable to a learned man.—I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, wit, nor invention. Shakspeare.

UNLE'ARNEDLY, adv. Ignorantly; grossly.—He, in his epistle, plainly affirmeth, they think unlearnedly, who are of another belief. Brown.

UNLE'AVENED, adj. Not fermented; not mixed with fermenting matter.—They baked unleavened cakes of the dough, for it was not leavened. Exod.

UNLE'CTURED, adj. Not taught by lecture.—A science yet unlectur'd in our schools. Young.

UNLE'ISUREDNESS, s. Business; want of time; want of leisure. Not in use.—My essay touching the Scripture having been written partly in England, partly in another kingdom, it were strange if there did not appear much unevenness, and if it did not betray the unleisureddness of the wandering author. Boyle.

UNLE'SS, conjunct. [the Sax. imperative onler, from onlejan, to dismiss; formerly written oneles and oneless. Horne Tooke.] Except; if not; supposing that not.
Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon. Shakspeare.

UNLE'SSONED, adj. Not taught.
The full sum of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd;
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn. Shakspeare.

UNLE'TTERED, adj. Unlearned; untaught.

The unletter'd Christian, who believes in gross,
Plods on to heaven, and ne'er is at a loss. Dryden.

UNLE'VELLED, adj. Not laid even.—All unlevelled the gay garden lies. Tickell.

UNLIB'DINOUS, adj. Not lustful; pure from carnality.

In those hearts

Love unlibidinous reign'd; nor jealousy
Was understood, the injur'd lover's hell. Milton.

UNLICENSED, adj. Having no regular permission.

Ask what boldness brought him hither
Unlicensed. Milton.

UNLI'CKED, adj. Shapeless; not formed: from the opinion that the bear licks her young to shape.

Shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear-whelp. Shakspeare.

UNLIGHTED, adj. Not kindled; not set on fire.

The sacred wood, which on the altar lay,
Untouch'd, unlighted glows. Prior.

UNLI'GHTSOME, adj. Dark; gloomy; wanting light.

First the sun,

A mighty sphere, he fram'd, unlightsome first,
Thought of ethereal mould. Milton.

UNLI'KE, adj. [unzelic, Saxon.] Dissimilar; having no resemblance.

Some she disgrac'd, and some with honours crown'd;
Unlike successes equal merits found. Pope.

Improbable; unlikely; not likely.—Make not impossible that which but seems unlike. Shakspeare.

UNLI'KELIHOOD, or UNLI'KELINESS, s. Improbabi-lity.—There are degrees herein, from the very neighbourhood of demonstration, quite down to improbability and unlikeliness, even to the confines of impossibility. Locke.

UNLI'KELY, adj. Improbable; not such as can be reasonably expected.—A very unlikely envy she hath stumbled upon. Sidney.—Not promising any particular event.—
Effects are miraculous and strange, when they grow by unlikely means. Hooker.

UNLI'KELY, adv. Improbably.—The pleasures we are to enjoy in that conversation, not unlikely may proceed from the discoveries each shall communicate to another, of God and nature. Pope.

UNLI'KENESS, s. Dissimilitude; want of resemblance.
—Imitation pleases, because it affords matter for enquiring into the truth or falsehood of imitation, by comparing its likeness or unlikeness with the original. Dryden.

UNLI'MITABLE, adj. Admitting no bounds.—He tells us 'tis unlimited and unlimitable. Locke.

UNLI'MBER, adj. Unyielding.—To which temper more septentrional unlimber nations have not yet bent themselves.
Wotton.

UNLI'MITED, adj. Having no bounds; having no limits.—So unlimited is our impotence to recompence or repay God's dilection, that it fetters our very wishes. Boyle.

—Undefined; not bounded by proper exceptions.—With gross and popular capacities, nothing doth more prevail than unlimited generalities, because of their plainness at the first sight; nothing less, with men of exact judgment, because such rules are not safe to be trusted over far. Hooker.

—Unconfined; not restrained.—Ascribe not unto God such an unlimited exercise of mercy, as may destroy his justice.
Rogers.

UNLI'MITEDLY, adv. Boundlessly; without bounds.
—Many ascribe too unlimitedly to the force of a good meaning, to think that it is able to bear the stress of whatsoever commissions they shall lay upon it. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNLI'MITEDNESS, s. State of being unlimited; largeness. Dr. Johnson.

UNLI'NEAL, adj. Not coming in the order of succession.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. Shakspeare.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1649.

To UNLINK, v. a. To untwist; to open.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself;
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself. Shakspeare.

UNLI'QUIFIED, adj. Unmelted; undissolved.—These huge, unwieldy lumps remained in the melted matter, rigid and unliquified, floating in it like cakes of ice in a river.
Addison.

UNLI'QUORED, adj. Not moistened; not smeared with any liquid.—How have we seen churches and states like a dry unliquored coach, set themselves on fire, with their own motion! Bp. Hall.—Not filled with liquor.—
He that could endure with a sober pen to sit and devise laws for drunkards to carouse by, I doubt me whether the very sobriety of such a one, like an unliquored Silenus, were not stark drunk. Milton.

UNLI'STENING, adj. Deaf; not hearing; not regarding.

Unlistening, barbarous force, to whom the sword
Is reason, honour, law. Thomson.

UNLI'VELINESS, s. Dulness.—Who knows not that the bashful muteness of a virgin may oft-times hide all the unliveliness, and natural sloth, which is really unfit for conversation? Milton.

UNLIVELY, adj. Not lively; dull. Ash.

To UNLOAD, v. a. To disburden; to exonerate; to free from load.

Like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloadeth thee. Shakspeare.

To put off any thing burdensome.—To you duke Hum-phry must unload his grief. Shakspeare.

To UNLOCK, v. a. [unlucan, Sax., aperire.] To open what is shut with a lock.—I have seen her unlock her closet, take forth paper. Shakspeare.

She springs a light,

Unlocks the door, and entering out of breath,
The dying saw, and instruments of death. Dryden.

To open in general.

My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakspeare.

UNLOCKED, adj. Not fastened with a lock.

UNLO'OKED, or UNLO'OKED for, adj. Unexpected; not foreseen.—How much unlook'd for is this expedition!
Shakspeare.

To UNLO'OSE, v. a. [unlefan, Sax., solvere, to loose.]
To loose.

York, unloose your long-imprisoned thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakspeare.

To UNLO'OSE, v. n. To fall in pieces; to loose all union and connexion.—Without this virtue, the publick union must unloose; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint. Collier.

UNLO'SABLE, adj. Not to be lost.—Whatever may be said of the unlosable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies, that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta-position and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded. Boyle.

UNLO'VED, adj. Not loved.

What though I be not fortunate;
But miserable most to love unlov'd? Shakspeare.

UNLO'VELINESS, s. Unamiableness; inability to create love.—The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of dishonest servants, large promises, and each thing else that might help to coun-tervail his own unloveliness. Sidney.

UNLO'VELY, adj. That cannot excite love. There seems by this word generally more intended than barely negation. See UNLOVELINESS.

A beauty which on Psyche's face did throw Unlovely blacknesse.

UNLOV'ING, adj. Unkind; not fond.

Thou, blest with a goodly son,
Didst yield consent to disinherit him;
Which argued thee a most unloving father. Shakespeare.

UNLU'CKILY, adv. Unfortunately; by ill luck.

Things have fallen out so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter. Shakespeare.

UNLUC'KINESS, s. Unfortunateness; mischievousness.
—As there is no moral in these jests, they ought to be discouraged, and looked upon rather as pieces of unluckiness than wit. Addison.

UNLU'CKY, adj. Unfortunate; producing unhappiness. This word is generally used of accidents slightly vexatious.—You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of those unlucky accidents which make such experiments miscarry. Boyle.—Unhappy; miserable; subject to frequent misfortunes.

Then shall I you recount a rueful case,
Said he; the which with this unlucky eye
I late beheld. Spenser.

Slightly mischievous; mischievously waggish.
His friendship is counterfeit, seldome to trust;
His doings unluckie, and ever unjust. Tusser.

Ill-omen'd; inauspicious.
When I appear, see you avoid the place,
And haunt me not with that unlucky face. Dryden.

UNLU'STROUS, adj. Wanting splendour; wanting lustre.

Should I join gripes with hands
Made hard with hourly falsehood, as with labour;
Then glad myself with peeping in an eye,
Base and unlustrous as the smoky light
That's fed with stinking tallow. Shakespeare.

To UNLU'TE, v. a. To separate vessels closed with chymical cement.

UNMA'DE, adj. Not yet formed; not created.
Then might'st thou tear thy hair,
And fall upon the ground as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave. Shakespeare.

Deprived of form or qualities.—The first earth was perfectly unmade again, taken all to pieces, and framed a-new. Woodward.—Omitted to be made.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.

UNMA'IDENLY, adj. Unbecoming a maiden.—The wanton gesticulations of a virgin in a wild assembly of gallants warned with wine, could be no other than riggish and unmaidenly. Bp. Hall.

UNMA'IMED, adj. Not deprived of any essential part.
Not disfigur'd in his shape,
Enjoying all his limbs unmaim'd he lies. Sir J. Beaumont.

UNMA'KABLE, adj. Not possible to be made.—If the principles of bodies are unalterable, they are also unmakable by any but a divine power. Grew.

To UNMA'KE, v. a. To deprive of former qualities before possessed. To deprive of form or being.
They've made themselves, and their fitness now
Does unmake you. Shakespeare.

UNMA'LEABLE, adj. Not malleable.—A harsh, unmalleable stuff. Fanshaw.

To UNMA'N, v. a. To deprive of the constituent qualities of a human being, as reason.—Gross errors unman, and strip them of the very principles of reason, and sober discourse. South.—To emasculate. To break into resolution; to deject.

Her clamours pierce the Trojans' ears,
Unman their courage, and augment their fears. Dryden.

UNMA'NAGEABLE, adj. Not manageable; not easily governed.—None can be concluded unmanageable by the milder methods of government, till they have been thoroughly tried upon him; and if they will not prevail, we make no excuses for the obstinate. Locke.—Not easily wielded.

UNMA'NAGED, adj. Not broken by horsemanship.—Like colts, or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones and lifeless blocks. Bp. Taylor.—Not tutored; not educated.—Savage princes flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought, and betray, in their actions, an unguided force, and unmanage'd virtue. Felton.

UNMA'NLIKE, or UNMA'NLY, adj. Unbecoming a human being.—It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others' virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing, without doing injury to them. Sidney.—Where the act is unmanly or the expectation contradictory to the attributes of God, our hopes we ought never to entertain. Collier.—Unsuitable to a man; effeminate.

New customs,
Though never so ridiculous,
Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd. Shakespeare.

UNMA'NNED, adj. Not furnished with men.
Set me with him—
Upon the main-mast of an unmann'd ship,
And let the wind and tide hale me along. Kyd.

Not tamed: a term of falconry.
No colt is so unbroken,
Or hawk yet half so haggard or unmann'd. B. Jonson.

UNMA'NNERED, adj. Rude; brutal; uncivil.
If your barking dog disturb her ease,
Th' unmanner'd malefactor is arraign'd. Dryden.

UNMA'NNERLINESS, s. Breach of civility; ill behaviour.—A sort of unmannerliness is apt to grow up with young people, if not early restrained; and that is a forwardness to interrupt others speaking. Locke.

UNMA'NNERLY, adj. Ill bred; not civil; not complaisant.—He will prove the weeping philosopher, when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth. Shakespeare.

UNMA'NNERLY, adv. Uncivilly.
Forgive me,
If I have us'd myself unmannerly. Shakespeare.

UNMANU'RED, adj. Not cultivated.
The land,

In antique times, was savage wilderness;
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Spenser.

UNMA'RKED, adj. Not observed; not regarded.—I got a time, unmarked by any, to steal away, I cared not whither, so I might escape them. Sidney.

UNMA'RRED, adj. Uninjured; not spoiled.
And at the foote thereof a gentle flud
His silver waves did safely tumble downe
Unmarr'd with ragged mosse or filthy mud. Spenser.

UNMA'RRIED, adj. Having no husband, or no wife.—Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects, for they are light to run away. Bacon.

To UNMA'RRY, v. a. To separate from the matrimonial contract; to divorce.—Is it imaginable there should be among these a law which God allowed not, a law giving permissions laxative to unmarry a wife and inarry a lust, a law to suffer a kind of tribunal-adultery? Milton.

To UNMA'SK, v. a. To strip of a mask.—To strip of any disguise.—With full cups they had unmask'd his soul. Roscommon.

To UNMA'SK, v. n. To put off the mask.

My husband bids me; now I will unmask.
This is that face was worth the looking on. Shakspeare.

UNMA'SKED, adj. Naked; open to the view.
O I am yet to learn a statesman's art;
My kindness, and my hate unmask'd I wear,
For friends to trust, and enemies to fear. Dryden.

UNMA'STERABLE, adj. Unconquerable; not to be subdued.—The factor is unmasterable by the natural heat of man; not to be dulcified by concoction, beyond unsavoury condition. Brown.

UNMA'STERED, adj. Not subdued.—Not conquerable.
Weigh what loss your honour may sustain, if you
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity. Shakspeare.

UNMA'TCHABLE, adj. Unparalleled; unequalled.
UNMA'TCHED, adj. Matchless; having no match, or equal.

That glorious day, which two such navies saw,
As each, unmatch'd, might to the world give law;
Neptune, yet doubtful whom he should obey,
Held to them both the trident of the sea. Dryden.

UNME'ANING, adj. Expressing no meaning; having no meaning.—With round, unmeaning face. Pope.

UNME'ANT, adj. Not intended.
The flying spear was after Ilus sent:
But Rhætas happen'd on a death unmeant. Dryden.

UNME'ASURABLE, adj. Boundless; unbounded.
Common mother! thou
Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,
Teems and feeds all. Shakspeare.

UNME'ASURABLY, adv. Beyond all bounds; beyond measure.—Men who think so unmeasurably of themselves, as the deists. Leslie.

UNME'ASURED, adj. Immense; infinite.
Does the sun dread the imaginary sign,
Nor farther yet in liquid æther roll,
Till he has gain'd some unfrequented place,
Lost to the world in vast, unmeasur'd space. Blackmore.

Not measured; plentiful beyond measure.—From him all perfect good, unmeasur'd out, descends. Milton.

UNME'DDLING, adj. Not interfering with the affairs of others.—A good wife, a tender mother, and an unmeddling queen. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNME'DDLINGNESS, s. Absence of interposition or intermeddling.—If then we be but sojourners and that in a strange land, here must be an απεργαστην, an unmeddlingness with these worldly concerns. Bp. Hall.

UNME'DDLED with, adj. Not touched; not altered.—The flood-gate is opened and closed for six days, continuing other ten days unmeddled with. Carew.

UNME'DITATED, adj. Not formed by previous thought.

Neither various style,
Nor holy rapture, wanted they, to praise
Their Maker, in fit strains pronounc'd, or sung Unmeditated. Milton.

UNMEET, adj. [unmetē, Sax.] Not fit; not proper; not worthy.

Prove you that any man with me convers'd
At hours unmeet, refuse me, hate me. Shakspeare.

UNMEETLY, adv. Not properly; not suitably.
So both together travell'd, till they met
With a faire maiden clad in mourning weed
Upon a mangy jade unmeetly set. Spenser.

UNMEETNESS, s. [unmetnyjre, Sax.] Unfitness; unsuitableness.—He that loved not to see the disparity of several cattle at the plough, cannot be pleased with vast unmeetness in marriage. Milton.

UNMELLOWED, adj. Not fully ripened.

His years but young, but his experience old;
His head unmellow'd, but his judgement ripe. Shakspeare.

UNMELO'DIOUS, adj. Harsh; grating; not melodious.

The ruthless driver goads them on,
And ay of barking dogs the bitter throng
Makes them renew their unmelodious moan. Thomson.

UNMELTED, adj. Undissolved by heat.
Snow on Ætna does unmelted lie,
Whence rowling flames, and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.

UNMENTIONED, adj. Not told; not named.—They left not any error in government unmentioned or unpressed, with the sharpest and most pathetic expressions. Clarendon.

UNMERCHANTABLE, adj. Unsaleable; not vendible.—They feed on salt, unmerchantable pilchard. Carew.

UNMERCIFUL, adj. Cruel; severe; inclement.—For the humbling of this unmerciful pride in the eagle, providence has found out a way. L'Estrange.—Unconscionable; exorbitant.—Not only the peace of the honest, unwriting subject was daily molested, but unmerciful demands were made of his applause. Pope.

UNMERCIFULLY, adv. Without mercy; without tenderness.—A little warm fellow fell most unmercifully upon his Gallick majesty. Addison.

UNMERCIFULNESS, s. Inclemency; cruelty; want of tenderness.—Consider the rules of friendship, lest in justice turn into unmercifulness. Bp. Taylor.

UNMERITABLE, adj. Having no desert. Not in use.
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert
Unmeritable, shuns your high request. Shakspeare.

UNMERITED, adj. Not deserved; not obtained otherwise than by favour.

This day, in whom all nations shall be blest,
Favour unmerited by me, who sought
Forbidden knowledge by forbidden means. Milton.

UNMERITEDNESS, s. State of being undeserved.—As to the freeness or unmeritedness of God's love; we need but consider, that we so little could at first deserve his love, that he loved us even before we had a being. Boyle.

UNMET, adj. Not met.
Winds lose their strength, when they do empty fly,
Unmet of woods or buildings. B. Jonson.

UNMIGHTY, adj. [unmihrtz, Sax., impotens.] Not powerful; weak.

UNMILD, adj. [unmild, Saxon, immitis.] Not mild; fierce.

UNMILDNESS, s. Want of mildness.—Whereas the terror of the law was a servant to amplify and illustrate the mildness of grace; now, the unmildness of evangelic grace shall turn servant, to declare the grace and mildness of the rigorous law. Milton.

UNMILKED, adj. Not milked.
The ewes still folded with distended thighs,
Unmilk'd, lay bleating in distressful cries. Pope.

UNMILLED, adj. [of coin.] Not milled. Mason.—It is called by some the unmilled guinea, as having no grain upon the rim. Leake.

UNMINDED, adj. Not heeded; not regarded.
He was

A poor, unminded outlaw, sneaking home;
My father gave him welcome to the shore. Shakspeare.

UNMINDFUL, adj. Not heedful; not regardful; negligent; inattentive.—I shall let you see, that I am not unmindful of the things you would have me remember. Boyle.

UNMINDFULLY, adv. Carelessly. Scott.

UNMINDFULNESS, s. Carelessness; heedlessness; negligence; inattention. Scott.

To UNMINGLE, v. a. To separate things mixed.—It will will unmingle the wine from the water; the wine ascending, and the water descending. Bacon.

UNMINGLEABLE, adj. Not susceptible of mixture. Not used.—The sulphur of the concrete loses by the fermentation, the property of oil being unmingleable with water. Boyle.

UNMINGLED, adj. Pure; not vitiated by any thing mingled.

Vessels of unmingled wine,
Mellifluous, undecaying, and divine. Pope.

UNMIRY, adj. Not fouled with dirt.
Pass, with safe, unmiry feet,
Where the rais'd pavement leads athwart the street. Gay.

UNMISSED, adj. Not missed.—Why should he not steal away, unasked and unmissed, till the hurry of passions in those, that should have guarded him, was a little abated? Gray.

UNMITIGABLE, adj. That may not be softened.
She did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers,
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine. Shakespeare.

UNMITIGATED, adj. Not softened.—With public accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancour. Shakespeare.

UNMIXED, or UNMIXT, adj. Not mingled with any thing; pure; not corrupted by additions.
Thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmix'd with baser matter. Shakespeare.

Together out they fly,
Inseparable now, the truth and lie;
And this or that unmixt no mortal ear shall find. Pope.

UNMO'ANED, adj. Not lamented.
Fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shakespeare.

UNMOIST, adj. Not wet.
Volatile Hermes, fluid and unmoist,
Mounts on the wings of air. Philips.

UNMOISTENED, adj. Not made wet.—The incident light that meets with a grosser liquor, will have its beams more or less interruptedly reflected, than they would be if the body had been unmoistened. Boyle.

UNMOLESTED, adj. Free from disturbance; free from external troubles.
Safe on my shore each unmolested swain,
Shall tend the flocks, or reap the bearded grain. Pope.

UNMONIED, adj. Having no money; wanting money.
Apples with cabbage-net y-cover'd o'er,
Galling full sore th' unmonied wight, are seen. Shenstone.

To UNMONO'POLIZE, v. a. To rescue from being monopolized.—Unmonopolizing the rewards of learning and industry from the greasy clutch of ignorance and high feeding. Milton.

To UNMO'OR, v. a. To loose from land, by taking up the anchors.
We with the rising morn our ships unmoor'd
And brought our captives, and our stores aboard. Pope.

Prior seems to have taken it for casting anchor.
Soon as the British ships unmoor,
And jolly long-boat rows to shore. Prior.

UNMORALIZED, adj. Untutored by morality.—This is censured as the mark of a dissolute and unmoralized temper. Norris.

UNMORTGAGED, adj. Not mortgaged.—This he has repeated so often, that at present there is scarce a single able unmortgaged. Addison.

UNMORTIFIED, adj. Not subdued by sorrow and severities. If our conscience reproach us with unmortified sin, our hope is the hope of an hypocrite. Rogers.

UNMOVABLE, adj. Such as cannot be removed or altered.—Wherein consists the precise and unmovable boundaries of that thick species. Locke.

UNMOVABLY, adv. Unalterably.—As the good angels are unalterably determined to choose what is good; so the evil angels are as unmoveably determined still to adhere to that which is evil. Ellis.

UNMOVED, adj. Not put out of one place into another.
Nor winds, nor winter's rage o'erthrows
His bulky body, but unmov'd he grows. Dryden.

Not changed in resolution.
Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, uneduc'd. Milton.

Not affected; not touched with any passion.
Cæsar the world's great master and his own,
Unmov'd, superiour still in every state,
And scarce detested in his country's fate. Pope.

Unaltered by passion.
I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwept. Dryden.

UNMOVING, adj. Having no motion.—The celestial bodies, without impulse, had continued unactive, unmoving heaps of matter. Cheyne.—Having no power to raise the passions; unaffecting.

To UNMO'ULD, v. a. To change as to the form.
Its pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage,
Character'd in the face. Milton.

UNMOURNED, adj. Not lamented; not deplored.
O let me here sink down
Into my grave unmention'd and unmourn'd. Southern.

To UNMU'FFLE, v. a. To put off a covering from the face.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars! and thou fair moon,
That won't st to love the traveller's benizon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos, that reigns here
In double night, of darkness and of shades. Milton.

UNMURMURED, adj. Not murmured at.—It may pass unmurmur'd, undisputed. Beaumont and Fl.

UNMUSICAL, adj. Not harmonious; not pleasing by sound.
Let argument bear no unmusical sound,
Nor jars interpose, sacred friendship to grieve. B. Jonson.

To UNMU'ZZLE, v. a. To loose from a muzzle.—Now unmuzzle your wisdom. Shakespeare.

UNNA, a considerable river in the north-west of European Turkey, which rises in the mountains of Herzegovina, flows through Bosnia along the border of Croatia, and falls into the Save at Uszticza. It is navigable for a considerable distance from its mouth.

UNNA, a small town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark, on a small stream called the Kettlebeck. It has 2400 inhabitants. 18 miles N. E. of Arensburg.

UNNAM'ED, adj. Not mentioned.
Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt,
Unnam'd in heav'n. Milton.

Not having received a name.—Things by their names I call, though yet unnam'd. Milton.

UNNATIVE, adj. Not native.
Whence this unnative fear,
To generous Britons never known before? Thomson.

UNNATURAL, adj. Contrary to the laws of nature; contrary to the common instincts.

Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it. Shakspeare.

Acting without the affections implanted by nature.

Rome, whose gratitude
Tow'rds her deserving children, is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam,
Should now eat up her own. Shakspeare.

Forced; not agreeable to the real state of persons or things; not representing nature.—In an heroic poem, two kinds of thoughts are carefully to be avoided; the first, are such as are affected and unnatural; the second, such as are mean and vulgar. Addison.

To UNNATURALIZE, v. a. To divest of the affections implanted by nature.—Here he strives, as it were, to unnaturalize himself, and lay by his natural sweetness of disposition, almost to forget common humanity. Hales.

UNNATURALLY, adv. In opposition to nature.—All the world have been frighted with an apparition of their own fancy, or they have most unnaturally conspired to cozen themselves. Tillotson.

UNNATURALNESS, s. Contrariety to nature.—The God, which is the God of nature, doth never teach unnaturalness. Sidney.

UNNAVIGABLE, adj. Not to be passed by vessels; not to be navigated.

Pindar's unnavigable song,
Like a swift stream from mountains pours along. Cowley.

UNNAVIGATED, adj. Not sailed over. Mason.—I could venture to traverse a far greater space of sea, till then unnavigated. Cook.

UNNECESSARILY, adv. Without necessity; without need; needlessly.—These words come in without any connexion with the story, and consequently unnecessarily. Broome.

UNNECESSARINESS, s. Needlessness.—These are such extremes as afford no middle for industry to exist, hope being equally out-dated by the desperateness or unnecessariness of an undertaking. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNNECESSARY, adj. Needless; not wanted; useless.—Let brave spirits, fitted for command by sea or land, not be laid by, as persons unnecessary for the time. Bacon.

UNNEEDFUL, adj. Not wanted; needless.—The text was not unnecessary. Milton.

UNNEIGHBOURLY, adj. Not kind; not suitably to the duties of a neighbour.—Parnassus is but a barren mountain, and its inhabitants make it more so, by their unneighbourly deportment. Garth.

UNNEIGHBOURLY, adv. In a manner not suitable to a neighbour; with malevolence; with mutual mischief.

These two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unneighbourly. Shakspeare.

UNNERVATE, adj. Weak; feeble. A bad word.—Scaliger calls them fine and lively in Musæus; but abject, unnervate, and unharmonious in Homer. Broome.

To UNNERVE, v. a. To weaken; to enfeeble.—The precepts are often so minute and full of circumstances, that they weaken and unnerv his verse. Addison.

UNNERVED, adj. Weak; feeble.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword,
Th' unnerv'd father falls. Shakspeare.

UNNETH, or UNNETHES, adv. [This is from un and eath, Saxon, easy, and ought therefore to be written uneath; which see.] Scarcely; hardly; not without difficulty. Obsolete.

Diggon, I am so stiffe and stanke,
That unneth I may stand any more;
And how the western wind bloweth sore,
Beating the wither'd leaf from the tree. Spenser.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1649.

UNNOBLE, adj. Mean; ignominious; ignoble.
I have offended reputation;
A most un noble swerving. Shakspeare.

UNNOBLY, adv. Meanly; ignobly.—You do the most un nobly to be angry. Beaum. and Fl.

UNNOTED, adj. Not observed; not regarded; not heeded.

They may jest,
'Till their own scorn return to them unnoted. Shakspeare.

Not honoured.
A shameful fate now hides my hopeless head,
Unwept, unnoted, and for ever dead. Pope.

UNNOTICED, adj. Not observed; not taken notice of.
The loyal bee, the spider that beneath
Some lowly rafter weaves her fine-spun woof,
And millions more, that in this ample world,
Unnotic'd, and unnam'd, claim each his place,
God's general plan fulfil. Roberts.

UNNUMBERED, adj. Innumerable.
The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks;
They are all fire, and every one doth shine. Shakspeare.

UNNURTURED, adj. Not nurtured; not educated.—The most ignorant, clouded, unnurtured brain amongst you may reap some profit from this discourse. Hammond.

UNOBEYED, adj. Not obeyed.
Not leave
Unworshipp'd, unobey'd, the throne supreme. Milton.

UNOBJECTED, adj. Not charged as a fault, or contrary argument.—What will he leave unobjected to Luther, when he makes it his crime that he defied the devil. Atterbury.

UNOBJECTIONABLE, adj. Not to be objected against.—A translation that should be unobjectionable to my brethren of the Roman-Catholic communion. Dr. Geddes.

UNOBNOXIOUS, adj. Not liable; not exposed to any hurt.

In fight they stood
Unworned, unobnoxious to be pain'd. Milton.

UNOBSURED, adj. Not obscured; not darkened.
O, who can speak the vigorous joys of health,
Unlogg'd the body, unobscur'd the mind! Thomson.

UNOBSEQUIOUSNESS, s. Incompliance; disobedience.—They make one man's particular failings, confining laws to others; and convey them, as such, to their successors, who are bold to misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy, presumption. Brown.

UNOBSERVABLE, adj. Not to be observed; not discoverable.—A piece of glass reduced to powder, the same which, when entire, freely transmitted the beams of light, acquiring by contusion, a multitude of minute surfaces, reflects, in a confused manner, little and singly unobservable images of the lucid body, that from a diaphanous, it degenerates into a white body.—Boyle.

UNOBSERVANCE, s. Inattention; regardlessness.—Among those uncontrollable levellers of the world, fate or fortune in the profane lexicon, and in the Christian's undiscovered providence, may pass for the first; opinion, and time or the grave, for the other two. The two first require the more serious inquiry into, for the universality of their power, and yet general unobservance of it. Whitlock.

UNOBSERVANT, adj. Not obsequious. Not attentive.—The unobservant multitude may have some general, confused apprehensions of a beauty, that gilds the outside frame of the universe. Glanville.

UNOBSERVED, adj. Not regarded; not attended to; not heeded; not minded.—The motion in the minute parts of any solid body, which is the principal cause of violent motion, though unobserved, passeth without sound. Bacon.

UNOBSERVEDLY, adv. Without being observed.—It seems to me more likely, that he went thither secretly and unobservedly, in the dusk of the evening, or in a disguise. Patrick.

UNOBSE'RVING, adj. Inattentive; not heedful.—His similitudes are not placed, as our unobserving critics tell us, in the heat of any action; but commonly in its declining. Dryden.

UNOBSTRU'CTED, adj. Not hindered; not stopped.

Unobstructed matter flies away, Ranges the void and knows not where to stay. Blackmore.

UNOBSTRU'CTIVE, adj. Not raising any obstacle.

Why should he halt at either station? Why Not forward run in unobstructive sky? Blackmore.

UNOBTAINED, adj. Not gained; not acquired.—As the will doth now work upon that object by desire, which is motion towards the end, as yet unobtained: so likewise upon the same hereafter received, it shall work also by love. Hooker.

UNOBTRU'SIVE, adj. Not obtrusive; not forward; modest; humble.

Serene, of soft address; who mildly make An unobtrusive offer of their hearts, Abhorring violence. Young.

UNOBVIOUS, adj. Not readily occurring.—Of all the metals, not any so constantly discloseth its unobvious colour, as copper. Boyle.

UNOCCUPIED, adj. Unpossessed.—If we shall discover further to the north pole, we shall find all that tract not to be vain, useless, or unoccupied. Ray.

UNOFFENDED, adj. Not offended.

This general calm Is sure the smile of unoffended heaven. Johnson.

UNOFFENDING, adj. Harmless; innocent. Thy unoffending life I could not save; Nor weeping could I follow to thy grave. Dryden.

Sinless; pure from fault.—If those holy and unoffending spirits, the angels, veil their faces before the throne of His Majesty; with what awe should we, sinful dust and ashes, approach that infinite power we have so grievously offended. Rogers.

UNOFFENSIVE, adj. Giving no offence.—His unoffensive and cautious return to those ill laid demands. Fell.

UNOFFERED, adj. Not proposed to acceptance.—For the sad business of Ireland, he could not express a greater sense, there being nothing left on his part unoffered or undone. Clarendon.

UNOFTEN, adv. Rarely.—The man of gallantry not unoften has been found to think after the same manner. Harris.

To UNOIL, v. a. To free from oil. A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask, Guesses his meaning, and unails the flask. Dryden.

UNOILED, adj. Not smeared with oil. His wounded ear complaints eternal fill, As unoi'd hinges, querulously shrill. Young.

UNONA [So named from the union of the anthers upon the germ], in Botany, a genus of the class polyandria, order polygynia, natural order of coadunatae, anonæ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth three-leaved, very small, acute, pressed close. Corolla: petals six, lanceolate, sessile, gibbous at the base on the outside, at the same time excavated within into the shape of a pitcher. Stamina: filaments none. Anthers very numerous, oblong, collected into a ball within the pitcher of the corolla. Pistil: germs many, sessile. Styles about ten, bristle-shaped, approximating, rather longer than the anthers. Stigma. Pericarp: berries many, pedicelled, ovate, gibbous, jointed like a necklace. Seeds two or three, ovate, very smooth, one above the other.—Essential Character. Calyx three-leaved; petals six; berries two or three-seeded, jointed like a necklace.

1. Unona discreta.—Leaves lanceolate silky beneath. This is a tree with wand-like narrow flexile branches.

Flower of Annona, but the fruit is different purple sapid aromatic, which distinguishes the genus as in Theobroma and Abroma. Branches pubescent.—Native of Surinam.

2. Unona tomentosa.—Leaves lanceolate tomentose. This is a shrub five feet in height, with an upright stem, and weak reclining branches. Flowers yellow-green, terminating, solitary, hanging down by a very long peduncle. Berries red-green, subsessile, adhering to a hemispherical receptacle.—Native of Cochinchina.

3. Unona discolor.—Leaves ovate-oblong smooth on both sides. This is a tree with round purplish smooth branches, scarcely villose at the end.—Native of the East Indies.

4. Unona concolor.—Leaves oblong acuminate smooth on both sides concolor; peduncles two-flowered.—Native of Guiana.

UNO'PENED, adj. Not opened; not unclosed.—In Germany I have known many a letter returned unopened, because one title in twenty has been omitted in the direction! Ld. Chesterfield.

UNO'PENING, adj. Not opening.

Benighted wanderers, the forest o'er, Curse the sav'd candle, and unopening door. Pope.

UNO'PERATIVE, adj. Producing no effects.—The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it; but an imperfect velleity, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in the end, with a direct abhorrence of the means. South.

UNOPPOSED, adj. Not encountered by any hostility or obstruction.

Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have reach'd The height of thy aspiring unoppos'd, The throne of God unguarded. Milton.

UNO'RDERLY, adj. Disordered; irregular.—Since some ceremonies must be used, every man would have his own fashion; whereof what other would be the issue, but infinite distraction, and unorderly confusion in the church. Sanderson.

UNO'RDINARY, adj. Uncommon; unusual. Not used.—I do not know how they can be excused from murder, who kill monstrous births, because of an unordinary shape, without knowing whether they have a rational soul or no. Locke.

UNO'RGANIZED, adj. Having no parts instrumental to the motion or nourishment of the rest.—It is impossible for any organ to regulate itself: much less may we refer this regulation to the animal spirits, an unorganized fluid. Grew.

UNO'RIGINAL, or UNO'RIGINATED, adj. Having no birth; ungenerated.

I toil'd out my uncouth passage, forc'd to ride The untractable abyss, plung'd in the womb Of unoriginal night, and chaos wild. Milton.

UNORNAME'TAL, adj. Plain; without ornament.—I cannot forbear taking notice of one other mark of integrity which appears in all the compositions of the sacred writers, and particularly the evangelists; and that is, the simple, unaffected, unornamental, and unostentatious manner in which they deliver truths so important and sublime, and facts so magnificent and wonderful. West.

UNORNAMENTED, adj. Not adorned; not dressed with ornaments.—I have bestowed so many garlands upon your shrine, which till my time used to stand unornamented. Coventry.

UNOSTENTA'TIOUS, adj. Not boastful; modest. See an example of the word under unornamental.

UNO'RTHODOX, adj. Not holding pure doctrine.—A fat benefice became a crime against its incumbent; and he was sure to be unorthodox, that was worth the plundering. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNO'WED, adj. Having no owner.

England now is left To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth The unowed interest of proud, swelling state. Shakspeare.

UNO'WNED

UNO'WNED, adj. Having no owner. Not acknowledged; not claimed.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not;
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister. Milton.

UNPACIFIC, adj. Not of a peaceable turn; not gentle.—Many such works of our disunited and unpacific ancestors were undoubtedly destroyed, either by their first constructors, or by new invaders, by agreement or by conquest, and sometimes by civil dissensions, in the early martial ages. Warton.

UNPA'CIFED, adj. Not composed; not calmed.
A western, mild and pretty whispering gale
Came dallying with the leaves along the dale,
And seem'd as with the water it did chide,
Because it ranne so long unpacified. Browne.

To UNPA'CK, v. a. To disburden; to exonerate.
I, the son of a dear father murder'd,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words. Shakspeare.

To open any thing bound together.—He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which, when he had unpacked, a great many cracked of themselves. Boyle.

UNPA'CKED, adj. Not collected by unlawful artifices.
The knight
Resolv'd to leave him to the fury
Of justice, and an unpack'd jury. Hudibras.

UNPA'ID, adj. Not discharged.—Receive from us kneetribute not unpaid. Milton.—Not receiving dues or debts. Th' embroider'd suit, at least, he deem'd his prey;
That suit an unpaid taylor snatch'd away. Pope.

UNPA'ID for. That for which the price is not yet given; taken on trust.

Richer, than doing nothing for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid for silk. Shakspeare.

UNPA'INED, adj. Suffering no pain.

Too unequal work we find,
Against unequal arms to fight in pain;
Against unpain'd, impassive. Milton.

UNPA'INFUL, adj. Giving no pain.—That is generally called hard, which will put us to pain, sooner than change figure; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts, upon an easy and unpainful touch. Locke.

UNPALATABLE, adj. Nauseous; disgusting.
The man who laughed but once to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles pass,
Might laugh again to see a jury chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law. Dryden.

To UNPA'RADISE, v. a. To deprive of happiness resembling that of paradise. This is an old word. "Unparadis'd, brought from joy to misery." Cockeram.

Could you, so rich in rapture, fear an end,
That ghastly thought would drink up all your joy,
And quite unparadise the realms of light. Young.

UNPA'RAGONED, adj. Unequaled; unmatched.—Either your unparagon'd mistress is dead, or she is outpriz'd by a trifle. Shakspeare.

UNPA'RALLELED, adj. Not matched; not to be matched; having no equal.

I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame, unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakspeare.

UNPA'RDONABLE, adj. [impardonable, Fr.] Irremissible.—Oh, 'tis a fault too unpardonable. Shakspeare.

UNPA'RDONABLY, adv. Beyond forgiveness.—Luther's conscience turns these reasonings upon him, and infers, that Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.

UNPA'RDONED, adj. Not forgiven.—How know we that our souls shall not this night be required, laden with those unpardoned sins, for which we proposed to repent to-morrow. Rogers.—Not discharged; not cancelled by a legal pardon.—My returning into England unpardoned, hath destroyed that opinion. Raleigh.

UNPA'RDONING, adj. Not forgiving.
Curse on the unpardoning prince whom tears can draw
To no remorse; who rules by lion's law;
And deaf to prayers, by no submission bow'd,
Rends all alike, the penitent and proud. Dryden.

UNPA'RLIAMENTARINESS, s. Contrariety to the usage or constitution of parliament.—Sensible he was of that disrespect, reprehending them for the unparliamentariness of their remonstrance in print. Clarendon.

UNPA'RLIAMENTARY, adj. Contrary to the rules of parliament.—The secret of all this unprecedented proceeding in their masters, they must not impute to their freedom in debate, but to that unparliamentary abuse of setting individuals upon their shoulders, who were hated by God and man. Swift.

UNPA'RTED, adj. Undivided; not separated.
Too little it eludes the dazzled sight,
Becomes mix'd blackness, or unparted light. Prior.

UNPA'RTIAL, adj. Equal; honest; not now in use.—Clear evidence of truth, after a serious and unpartial examination. Sanderson.

UNPA'RTIALLY, adv. Equally; indifferently.—Deem it not impossible for you to err; sift unpartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred these opinions in you. Hooker.

UNPA'SSABLE, adj. Admitting no passage.—Every country which shall not do according to these things, shall be made not only unpassable for men, but most hateful to wild beasts. Esther.—Not current; not suffered to pass.—Making a new standard for money, must make all money which is lighter than that standard, unpassable. Locke.

UNPA'SSIONATE, or UNPA'SSIONATED, adj. Free from passion; calm; impartial.—More sober heads have a set of misconceits, which are as absurd to an unpassioned reason, as those to our unbiassed senses. Glanville.

UNPA'SSIONATELY, adv. Without passion.—Make us unpassionately to see the light of reason and religion. King Charles.

UNPA'STORAL, adj. Not pastoral; not becoming pastoral manners.—One of them closes his bitter complaint with this very unpathetic and unpastoral idea — that "the portcullis of the castle of his heart was fallen." Warton.

UNPA'THED, adj. Untracked; unmarked by passage.

A course more promising,
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain.
To miseries enough. Shakspeare.

UNPATHETIC, adj. Not passionate; not moving. See an example of the word under unpastoral.

UNPA'TRONIZED, adj. Not having a patron.—Unpatronized, and unsupported, he cleared himself by the openness of innocence, and the consistency of truth. Johnson.

UNPA'TTERED, adj. Having no equal.—Should I prise you less, unpattern'd sir? Beaum. and Fl.

UNPA'VED, adj. Not paved.—The streets of the city lying then unpaved. Hakewill.

UNPA'WNED, adj. Not given to pledge.
He roll'd his eyes, that witness'd huge dismay,
Where yet unpawn'd, much learned lumber lay. Pope.

To UNPA'Y, v. a. Not to pay; not to compensate.—Whilst thy unpay'd musicians, crickets, sing. Lovelace.—To undo. A low ludicrous word.—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villainy you have done her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance. Shakspeare.

UNPE'ACEABLE, adj. Quarrelsome; inclined to disturb the tranquillity of others.—The design is to restrain men from things, which make them miserable to themselves, unpeaceable and troublesome to the world. Tillotson.

UNPE'ACEFUL,

UNPE'ACEFUL, adj. Unpacific; violent; without peace.—Forbid unpeaceful passions to rebel. Cowley.

Rash war and perilous battle their delight,
Unpeaceful death their choice. Thomson.

To UNPE'G, v. a. To open any thing closed with a peg.
Unpeg the basket on the house's top;
Let the birds fly. Shakspeare.

UNPE'NETRABLE, adj. Impenetrable.—An unpenetrable rock, an unaccessible desert. Herbert.

UNPENITENT, adj. Impenitent.
God will not relieve the unpenitent,
Nor to the prayers of wicked souls consent. Sandys.

UNPEN'SIONED, adj. Not kept in dependence by a pension.

Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain
Flatt'ers and bigots, ev'n in Louis' reign;
And I not strip the gilding off a knave, Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.

To UNPE'OPLE, v. a. To depopulate; to deprive of inhabitants.—Shall war unpeople this my realm? Shakspeare.

UNPERCE'IVABLE, adj. Not readily to be perceived; not obvious.—It enforced those precepts seemingly unreasonable, by such promises as were as seemingly incredible, and unperceivable. Pearson.

UNPERCE'IVED, adj. Not observed; not heeded; not sensibly discovered; not known.—The ashes, wind unperceived shakes off. Bacon.

He alone,
To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam. Milton.

UNPERCE'IVEDLY, adv. So as not to be perceived.—Some oleaginous particles, unperceivedly, associated themselves to it. Boyle.

UNPER'FECT, adj. [imperfait, Fr.; imperfectus, Lat.] Incomplete.—Apelles' picture of Alexander at Ephesus, and his Venus, which he left at his death unperfect in Chios, were the chiefest. Peacham.—An unperfect actor on the stage. Shakspeare.—He fell into a poor and unperfect account of the difference of divine miracles and diabolical; which I modestly refuted. Bp. Hall.

UNPER'FECTED, adj. Not perfected; not completed.—To see that performed, which only he left unperfected. Hammond.

UNPER'FECTLY, adv. Imperfectly.—The mind of a man distracted amongst many things, must needs entertain them brokenly and unperfectly. Hales.

UNPER'FECTNESS, s. Imperfection; incompleteness.—Virgil and Horace, spying the unperfectness in Ennius and Plautus, by true imitation of Homer and Euripides, brought poetry to perfectness. Ascham.

UNPER'FORMED, adj. Undone; not done.—A good law without execution, is like an unperformed promise. Bp. Taylor.

UNPER'FORMING, adj. Not discharging its office.

O unperforming hand!
That never could'st have err'd in a worse time. Dryden.
This is so unperforming an hypothesis, that it answers for nothing. A. Baxter.

UNPER'RISHABLE, adj. Lasting to perpetuity; exempt from decay.—We are secured to reap in another world everlasting, unperishable felicities. Hammond.

UNPER'RISHED, adj. Not violated; not destroyed.—He presumed, that faith being observed unperished should please Almighty God above all things. Sir T. Elyot.

UNPER'RJURED, adj. Free from perjury.
Beware of death; thou can'st not die unperjur'd,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind:
Thy vows are mine. Dryden.

To UNPERPLE'X, v. a. To relieve from perplexity.

This extasy doth unperplex
(We said) and tell us what we love. Donne.

UNPERPLE'XED, adj. Disentangled; not embarrassed.—In learning, little should be proposed to the mind at once; and that being fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining part, yet unknown, simple unperplexed proposition. Locke.

UNPERSPI'RABLE, adj. Not to be emitted through the pores of the skin.—Bile is the most unperspirable of animal fluids. Arbutnot.

UNPERSUA'DABLE, adj. Inexorable; not to be persuaded.—He, finding his sister's unpersuadable melancholy, through the love of Amphialus, had for a time left her court. Sidney.

UNPE'TRIFIED, adj. Not turned to stone.—In many concreted plants, some parts remain unpetrified; that is, the quick and livelier parts remain as wood, and were never yet converted. Brown.

UNPHILOSOP'HICAL, adj. Unsuitable to the rules of philosophy, or right reason.—Your conceptions are unphilosophical. You forget that the brain has a great many small fibres in its texture; which, according to the different strokes they receive from the animal spirits, awaken a correspondent idea. Collier.

UNPHILOSOP'HICALLY, adv. In a manner contrary to the rules of right reason.—They forget that he is the first cause of all things, and discourse most unphilosophically, absurdly, and unsuitably to the nature of an infinite being; whose influence must set the first wheel a-going. South.

UNPHILOSOP'HICALNESS, s. Incongruity with philosophy.—I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis were it not unchristian. Norris.

To UNPHILOSOP'HIZE, v. a. To degrade from the character of a philosopher. A word made by Pope.—Our passions, our interests flow in upon us, and unphilosophize us into mere mortals. Pope.

UNPHY'SICKED, adj. Not indebted to medicine; not influenced by medicine.—Free limbs, unphysick'd health, due appetite. Howell.

UNPIER'CED, adj. Not penetrated; not pierced.—The unpierc'd shade imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton.
True Witney broad-cloth, with its shag unshorn, Unpierc'd, is in the lasting tempest worn. Gay.

UNPI'LLARED, adj. Deprived of pillars.
See the cirque falls! the unpillar'd temple nods!
Streets pav'd with heroes! Tiber choak'd with gods! Pope.

UNPI'LLOWED, adj. Wanting a pillow.
Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm,
Leans her unpillow'd head, fraught with sad fears. Milton.

To UNPIN, v. a. To open what is shut, or fastened with a pin.

Unpin that spangled breast-plate which you wear,
That the eyes of busy fools may be stopt there. Donne.

UNPI'NKED, adj. Not marked with eyelet holes—Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i' th' heel. Shakspeare.

UNPI'TIED, adj. Not compassionated; not regarded with sympathetic sorrow.

Richard yet lives; but at hand, at hand
Insues his piteous and unpitied end. Shakspeare.

UNPI'TIFUL, adj. Not merciful.—Not exciting pity.
Future times, in love, may pity her;
Sith graces such unpitiful should prove. Davies.

UNPI'TIFULLY, adv. Unmercifully; without mercy.
He beat him most pitifully.

—Nay, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully.
Shakspeare.

UNPI'TYING, adj. Having no compassion.
To shame, to chains, or to a certain grave,
Lead on, unpitying guides, behold your slave. Granville.

UNPLA'CABLE, adj. Not to be appeased; implacable.
—Boiling

—Boiling with an unplacable hatred against him. Fotherby.

UNPLA'CED, adj. Having no place of dependence.—Unplac'd, unpension'd. Pope.

UNPLA'GUED, adj. Not tormented.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you.
Shakspeare.

UNPLA'NTED, adj. Not planted; spontaneous.

Figs there unplanted through the fields do grow,
Such as fierce Cato did the Romans show. Wallcr.

UNPLA'USIBLE, adj. Not plausible; not such as has a fair appearance.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glosing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Wind me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton.

UNPLA'USIVE, adj. Not approving.
'Tis like he'll question me,
Why such unplausive eyes are bent on him. Shakspeare.

UNPLEA'DABLE, adj. Not capable to be alleged in plea.—It is a blindness brought upon man, because he would not see; otherwise all ignorance, that is merely negative and inculpable presumption, is utterly inconsistent with, and makes absolutely unpleadable. South.

UNPLEA'SANT, adj. Not delighting; troublesome; uneasy.

O sweet Portia!

Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper. Shakspeare.

UNPLEA'SANTLY, adv. Not delightfully; uneasily.—We cannot boast of good-breeding, and the art of life; but yet we don't live unpleasantly in primitive simplicity and good humour. Pope.

UNPLEA'SANTNESS, s. Want of qualities to give delight.—All men are willing to skulk out of such company; the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasantness of it. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNPLEA'SED, adj. Not pleased; not delighted.

Condemn'd to live with subjects ever mute,
A salvage prince, unpleas'd, though absolute. Dryden.

UNPLEA'SING, adj. Offensive; disgusting; giving no delight.—Hence the many mistakes, which have made learning so unpleasing and so unsuccessful. Milton.

UNPLEA'SINGNESS, s. Want of qualities to please.—It being an unseemly affront to the sequestered and veiled modesty of that sex, to have her unpleasingness bandied up and down, and aggravated, in open court. Milton.

UNPLEA'SIVE, adj. Not pleasing.—Grief is never but an unpleasing passion; the rest have some life and contentment in them. Bp. Hall.

UNPLI'ANT, adj. Not easily bent; not conforming to the will.—The chisel hath more glory than the pencil; that being so hard an instrument, and working upon so unpliant stuff, can yet leave strokes of so gentle appearance. Wotton.

UNPLO'WED, adj. Not plowed. Good sound land, that hath lain long unplowed. Mortimer.

To UNPLU'ME, v. a. To strip of plumes; to degrade.—In the most ordinary phenomena in nature, we shall find enough to shame confidence, and unplume dogmatizing. Glanville.

UNPOE'TICAL, or UNPOE'TICK, adj. Not as becomes a poet.

Nor for an epithet that fails,
Bite off your unpoetick nails.
Unjust! why you shou'd in such veins,
Reward your fingers for your brains? Bp. Corbet.

UNPOE'TICALLY, adv. In a manner unbecoming a poet.—How coldly and unpoetically Pope has copied the appeal to the nymphs on the death of Daphnis, in comparison of Milton on Lycidas! Dr. Warton.
VOL. XXIV. No. 1650.

UNPO'INTED, adj. Having no point or sting.—The conclusion,—here, would have shewn dull, flat, and unpointed; without any shape or sharpness. B. Jonson.—Not observing punctuation.—Clumsy verse unlick'd, unpointed. Dryden.

To UNPO'ISON, v. a. To remove poison from.—Such a course could not, but in a short time, have unpoisoned their perverted minds. South.

UNPO'IZED, adj. Wanting equipoise.

Of on the brink of ruin—
Trotter'd the rash democracy unpoiz'd. Thomson.

UNPO'ISHED, adj. Not smoothed; not brightened by attrition.—Palladio, having noted in an old arch at Verona, some part of the materials cut in fine forms, and some unpolish'd, doth conclude, that the antients did leave the outward face of their marbles, or free-stone, without any sculpture, till they were laid in the body of the building. Wotton.—Not civilized; not refined.

Those first unpolish'd matrons, big and bold,
Gave suck to infants of gigantick mould. Dryden.

UNPOLITE, adj. [impoli, Fr.; impolitus, Lat.] Not elegant; not refined; not civil.—Discourses for the pulpit should be cast into a plain method, and the reasons ranged under the words, first, secondly, and thirdly; however they may be now fancied to sound unpolite, or unfashionable. Watts.

UNPOLITENESS, s. Want of elegance.—Sad outcries are made of the unpoliteness of the style. Blackwall.—Want of courtesy or civility.

UNPO'LLED, adj. Unplundered.

Richer than unpoll'd
Arabian wealth and Indian gold. Fanshaw.

Not registered as a voter.

UNPOLLU'TED, adj. [impollutus, Lat.] Not corrupted; not defiled.

Lay her i' th' earth;
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring! Shakspeare.

UNPO'PULAR, adj. Not fitted to please the people.—The practices of these men, under the covert of feigned zeal, made the appearance of sincere devotion ridiculous and unpopular. Addison.

UNPOPULA'RITY, s. Want of qualities to please the people.—You are afraid of the unpopularity of the ground. Ld. Lyttelton.

UNPO'RTABLE, adj. Not to be carried.—Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather or counter-tide. Ralagh.

UNPO'RTIONED, adj. Not endowed with a fortune.
Has virtue charms? I grant her heavenly fair;
But if unportion'd, all will interest wed;
Though that our admiration, this our choice. Young.

UNPO'RTUOUS, adj. Having no ports.—Had the west of Ireland been an unportuous coast, the French naval power would have been undone. Burke.

UNPOSSE'SSED, adj. Not had; not held; not enjoyed.

He claims the crown—
—Is the chair empty? is the sword unsway'd?
Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd? Shakspeare.

UNPOSSE'SSING, adj. Having no possession.
Thou unpossessing bastard, dost thou think,
That I would stand against thee? Shakspeare.

UNPO'SSIBLE, adj. Not possible. In modern editions of the Bible the word is finically altered to impossible.—With men this is unpossible; but with God all things are possible. St. Matt.

UNPRA'CTICABLE, adj. Not feasible; not practicable.—I try'd such of the things that came into my thoughts, as were not in that place and time unpracticable.
5 B thought^y

Boyle.

UNPRACTISED, adj. Not skilful by use and experience; raw; being in the state of a novice.

The full sum of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd. Shakspeare.

Not known; or not familiar by use.

His tender eye, by too direct a ray,
Wounded, and flying from unpractis'd day. Prior.

UNPRAISED, adj. Not celebrated; not praised.

The land,
In antique times was savage wilderness;
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Spenser.

UNPRECA'RIOUS, adj. Not dependent on another.
The stars, which grace the high expansion bright,
By their own beams, and unprecarious light,
At a vast distance from each other lie. Blackmore.

UNPRECEDENTED, adj. Not justifiable by any example.—The secret of all this unprecedented proceeding in their masters, they must not impute to freedom. Swift.

UNPRECISE, adj. Loose; not exact.—Chatterton gave a vague unprecise explanation from his own head, or from imperfect remembrance. Warton.

To UNPREDICT, v. n. To retract prediction.
Means I must use, thou say'st: prediction else
Will unpredict, and fail me of the throne. Milton.

UNPREFERRED, adj. Not advanced.—To make a scholar, keep him under, while he is young, or unpreferred.
Collier.

UNPREGNANT, adj. Not prolific; not quick of wit.
This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant,
And dull to all proceedings. Shakspeare.

UNPREJU'DICATE, or UNPREJU'DICATED, adj. Not prepossessed by any settled notions.—Let me appeal to the hearts of all judicious and unprejudicated readers. Bp. Hall.

UNPREJUDICED, adj. Free from prejudice; free from prepossession; not preoccupied by opinion; void of preconceived notions.—The meaning of them may be so plain, as that any unprejudiced and reasonable man may certainly understand them. Tillotson.

UNPREJUDICEDNESS, s. State of being unprejudiced.—Hearing the reason of the case with patience and unprejudicedness, is an equity which men owe to every truth that can in any manner concern them. Clarke.

UNPRELA'TICAL, adj. Unsuitable to a prelate.—The archbishop of York, by such unprelatical, ignominious arguments, in plain terms advised him to pass that act. Clarendon.

UNPREMEDITATED, adj. Not prepared in the mind beforehand.

Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated. Shakspeare.

UNPREPARED, adj. Not fitted by previous measures.
In things which most concern
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

Not made fit for the dreadful moment of departure,
I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No; heavens forefend. Shakspeare.

UNPREPAREDNESS, s. State of being unprepared.—I believe my innocency and unpreparedness to assert my rights and honour, make me the most guilty in their esteem; who would not so easily have declared a war against me, if I had first assaulted them. King Charles.

UNPREPOSSESSED, adj. Not prepossessed; not preoccupied by notions.—It finds the mind naked, and unprepossessed with any former notions, and so easily and insensibly gains upon the assent. South.

UNPRESS'ED, adj. Not pressed.—Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome? Shakspeare.—Not inforced.—They left not any error in government unmentioned, or unpressed, with the sharpest and most pathetic expressions. Clarendon.

UNPRESUMPTUOUS, adj. Not presumptuous; submissive; humble.

Who, with filial confidence inspir'd,
Can lift to heaven an unpresumptuous eye,
And smiling say, "My Father made them all." Cowper.

UNPRETENDING, adj. Not claiming any distinctions.—Bad writers are not ridiculed, because ridicule ought to be a pleasure: but to undecide and vindicate the honest and unpretending part of mankind from imposition. Pope.

UNPREVAILING, adj. Being of no force.—Throw to earth this unprevailing woe. Shakspeare.

UNPREVENTED, adj. Not previously hindered.
A pack of sorrows, which would press you down,
If unprevented, to your timeless grave. Shakspeare.

Not preceded by any thing.
Thy grace
Comes unprevented, unimplor'd, unsought. Milton.

To UNPRIEST, v. a. To deprive of the orders of a priest.—Leo, bishop of Rome, only unpriests him. Milton.

UNPRIESTLY, adj. Unsuitable to a priest.—King Edgar, in his oration to the clergy, rebuked the priestes very sore for bankettyng with their wives; for pretermittynge their canonical hours; for their unpriestly apparellings. Bale.

UNPRINCELY, adj. Unsuitable to a prince.—I could not have given my enemies greater advantages, than by so unprincely an inconstancy. King Charles.

UNPRINCIPLED, adj. Not settled in tenets or opinions.
I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
As that the single want of light and noise
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts. Milton.

UNPRINTED, adj. Not printed.—Defer it, till you have finished these that are yet unprinted. Pope.

UNPRISONED, adj. Set free from confinement.
Several desires led parts away,
Water declin'd with earth, the air did stay;
Fire rose, and each from other but unty'd,
Themselves unprison'd were, and purify'd. Donne.

UNPRIZABLE, adj. Not valued; not of estimation.
A baubling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprizable. Shakspeare.

UNPRIZED, adj. Not valued.
Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy,
Can buy this unpriz'd, precious maid of me. Shakspeare.

UNPROCLAIMED, adj. Not notified by a public declaration.

The Syrian king, who to surprize
One man, assassin-like, had levy'd war,
War unproclaim'd. Milton.

UNPRODUCTIVE, adj. Having no power to produce; not efficient; barren.

UNPROFANED, adj. Not violated.
Unspoil'd shall be her arms, and unprofan'd
Her holy limbs with any human hand:
And in a marble tomb laid in her native land. Dryden.

UNPROFICIENCY, s. Want of improvement.—Let mine eyes run down with tears, night and day, for the obstinate unproficiency of the sons of my mother under the heavy hand of my God. Bp. Hall.

UNPROFITABLE, adj. Useless; serving no purpose.—The church being eased of unprofitable labours, needful offices may the better be attended. Hooker.

UNPROFITABLENESS, s. Uselessness.—We are so persuaded of the unprofitableness of your science, that you can but leave us where you find us; but if you succeed, you increase the number of your party. Addison.

UNPROFITABLY, adv. Uselessly; without advantage.

I should not now unprofitably spend
Myself in words, or catch at empty hope,
By airy ways, for solid certainties.

B. Jonson.

UNPROFITED, adj. Having no gain.
Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofitd return.

Shakspeare.

UNPROJEC'TED, adj. Not planned; not formed in the mind.

UNPROLIFIC, adj. Barren; not productive.—Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unprolifc, or destroy them. Hale.

UNPROMISING, adj. Giving no promise of excellence; having no appearance of value.—If he be naturally listless and dreaming, this unpromising disposition is none of the easiest to be dealt with. Locke.

UNPROMPTED, adj. Not dictated.

Oh no, we must not, will not, cannot part;
And my tongue talks, unprompted by my heart. Congreve.

UNPRONO'UNCED, adj. Not uttered; not spoken.

Imperfect words, with childish trips,
Half unpronounc'd, slide through my infant lips. Milton.

UNPRO'PER, adj. Not peculiar.
Millions nightly lie in those unproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar.

Shakspeare.

Unfit; not right.

UNPRO'PERLY, adv. Contrarily to propriety; improperly.

I kneel before thee, and unproperly
Shew duty as mistaken all the while
Between the child and parent.

Shakspeare.

UNPROPHE'TICAL, or UNPROPHE'TIC, adj. Not foreseeing or foretelling future events.—How unprophetical would it be, to say they should some time know what they already knew. Ellis.

UNPROPI'TIOUS, adj. Not favourable; inauspicious.
'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray
Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd ev'ry bay,
Sick was the sun.

Pope.

UNPROPO'RTIONABLE, adj. Not suitable; not such as is fit.—I wish the present caution may be more attended to, not to bestow an unproportionable part of our time or value on this slight exercise of man's slightest faculty. Gov.
of the Tongue.

UNPROPO'RTIONATE, adj. Not proportioned; not suited.—It [to raise the dead] is an act beyond the activity of any creature, and unproportionate to the power of any finite agent. Pearson.

UNPROPO'RTIONED, adj. Not suited to something else.

Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportion'd thought his act.

Shakspeare.

UNPROPO'SED, adj. Not proposed.—The means are unpropos'd. Dryden.

UNPRO'PPED, adj. Not supported; not upheld.

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves; the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unpropp'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden.

UNPRO'SPEROUS, adj. [improspcr, Lat.] Unfortunate; not prosperous.

Nought unprosp'rous shall thy ways attend,
Born with good omens, and with heav'n thy friend. Pope.

UNPRO'SPEROUSLY, adv. Unsuccessfully.—When a prince fights justly, and yet unprosperously, if he could see all those reasons for which God hath so ordered it, he would think it the most reasonable thing in the world. Bp.
Taylor.

UNPRO'SPEROUSNESS, s. State of being unprosper-ous.—The unprosperousness of the arm of flesh, the several failings of the second causes which we have idolized so often.

Hammond.

UNPROTE'C'TED, adj. Not protected; not supported;
not defended.—By woeful experience, they both did learn, that to forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, endure. Hooker.

UNPRO'VED, adj. Not tried; not known by trial.

There I found a fresh, unproved knight,
Whose manly hands, imbru'd in guilty blood,
Had never been.

Spenser.

Not evinced by argument.—There is much of what should be demonstrated, left unproved by those chymical experiments. Boyle.

To UNPROVIDE, v. a. To divest of resolution or qualifications; to unfurnish.

I'll not expostulate with her, lest

Her beauty unprovide my mind again.

Shakspeare.

UNPROVIDED, adj. Not secured or qualified by previous measures.—Where shall I find one that can steal well?
O, for a fine thief of two-and-twenty, or thereabout; I am heinously unprovided. Shakspeare.—Not furnished; not previously supplied.—Those unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea. King Charles.—The seditious had neither weapons, order, nor counsel; but being in all things unprovided, were slain like beasts. Hayward.

UNPROVOKED, adj. Not provoked.

The teeming earth, yet guiltless of the plough,

And unprovok'd, did fruitful stores allow.

Dryden.

UNPROVOKING, adj. Giving no offence.—I stabbed him a stranger, unprovoking, inoffensive. Fleetwood.

UNPRUDENTIAL, adj. Imprudent.—The most unwise and unprudential act as to civil government. Milton.

UNPRUN'ED, adj. Not cut; not lopped.

The whole land is full of weeds;

Her fruit trees all unprun'd.

Shakspeare.

UNPU'BLIC, adj. Private; not generally known, or seen.—Virgins must be retired and unpublic: for all freedom of society is a violence done to virginity, not in its natural, but in its moral capacity; that is, it loses part of its severity and strictness, by publishing that person, whose work is religion, whose thoughts must dwell in heaven.
Bp. Taylor.

UNPU'BLISHED, adj. Secret; unknown.

All blest secrets;

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,

Spring with my tears.

Shakspeare.

Not given to the public.—Apply your care wholly to those which are unpublish'd. Pope.

UNPUNISHED, adj. [impunitus, Lat.] Not punished; suffered to continue in impunity.

The vent'rous victor, march'd unpunish'd hence,

And seem'd to boast his fortunate offence.

Dryden.

UNPURCHASED, adj. Unbought.

Unpurchas'd plenty our full tables loads,

And part of what they lent, return t' our gods.

Denham.

UNPU'RE, adj. Not clean; not pure.—Of so unpure constitutions, that we can present no object but sin. Donne.

UNPURGED, adj. Not purged; unpurified.

Is Brutus sick?

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,

To tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,

To add unto his sickness?

Shakspeare.

UNPURIFIED, adj. Not freed from recement.—Not cleansed from sin.—Our sinful nation having been long in the furnace, is now come out, but unpurified. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNPU'RPOSED, adj. Not designed; not intentional.

Do it,
Or thy preccdent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakspeare.

UNPURSU'ED, adj. Not pursued.
All night the dreadless angel unpursu'd
Through heaven's wide champain held his way. Milton.

UNPUTRIFIED, adj. Not corrupted by rottenness.—
Meat and drink last longer unputrified, or unsouered in winter than in summer. Bacon.—No animal unputrified, being burnt, yields any alkaline salt; but, putrified, yields a volatile alkali. Arbuthnot.

UNQUALIFIED, adj. Not fit.—Till he has denudated himself of all these incumbrances, he is utterly unqualified for these agonies. Dec. of Chr. Piety.—Not softened; not abated.

UNQUALIFIEDNESS, s. State of being unqualified.
The inadvcrtency and unqualifiedness of copyers. Biblioth. Bibl.

To UNQUALIFY, v. a. To disqualify; to divest of qualification.—Arbitrary power so diminishes the basis of the femalc figure, as to unqualify a woman for an evening walk. Addison.

UNQUALITIED, adj. Deprived of the usual faculties.
Not in use.—He is unqualitied with very shame. Shakspeare.

UNQUARRELEABLE, adj. Such as cannot be impugned.—There arise unto the examination such satisfactory and unquarrelable reasons, as may confirm the causes generally received. Brown.

To UNQUEEN, v. a. To divest of the dignity of queen.

Embalm me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakspeare

UNQUELLED, adj. Unsubdued.
To sing unquell'd amid the lashing wave;
To laugh at danger. Thomson.

Not kept down.
Beneath thy meadows glow, and rise unquell'd
Against the mower's scythe. Thomson.

UNQUE'NCHABLE, adj. Unextinguishable.—We represent wildfires burning in water and unquenchable.
Bacon.

The people on their holidays,
Impetuous, insolent, unquenchable. Milton.

UNQUE'NCHABLENESS, s. Unextinguishableness.—
I was amazed to see the unquenchableness of this fire.
Hakewill.

UNQUE'NCHED, adj. Not extinguished.—We have heats of dungs, and of lime unquenched. Bacon.—Not extinguishable.—Sadness, or great joy, equally dissipate the spirits, and immoderate exercise in hot air, with unquenehed thirst. Arbuthnot.

UNQUESTIONABLE, adj. Indubitable; not to be doubted.—The duke's carriage was surely noble throughout; of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of fame than danger. Wotton.—That cannot bear to be questioned without impatience: this seems to be the meaning here.—What were his marks?—A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not.
Shakspeare.

UNQUESTIONABLY, adv. Indubitably; without doubt.—If the fathers were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat.

UNQUESTIONED, adj. Not doubted; passed without doubt.—Other relations in good authors, though we do not positively deny, yet have they not been unquestioned by some. Brown.—Indisputable; not to be opposed.

It did not please the gods, who instruct the people;
And their unquestion'd pleasures must be served. B. Jonson.

Not interrogated; not examined.

She, muttering prayers as holy rites she meant,
Through the divided crowd unquestion'd went. Dryden.

UNQUI'CK, adj. Motionless; not alive.
His senses droop, his steady eyes unquieck;
And much he ails, and yet he is not sick. Daniel.

UNQUI'CKENED, adj. Not animated; not ripened to vitality.

Every fœtus bears a secret hoard,
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd;
Which num'rous, but unquicken'd progeny,
Clasp'd, and enrapp'd, within each other lie. Blaekmore.

UNQUI'ET, adj. [inquiet, Fr.; inquietus, Lat.] Moved with perpetual agitation; not calm; not still.—From grammatick flats and shallows, they are on the sudden transported to be tossed and turmoiled with their unballasted wits, in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy. Milton.—
Disturbed; full of perturbation; not at peace.

Go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. Shakspeare.

Restless; unsatisfied.
She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A vain, unquiet, glitt'ring, wretched thing. Pope.

To UNQUI'ET, v. a. To disquiet; to make uneasy.—
Having weighed the matter, and deeply pondered the gravity thereof, wherewith they were greatly troubled and unquieted, resolved finally that the archbishop should reveal the same to the king's majesty. Ld. Herbert.

UNQUI'ETLY, adv. Without rest.
Who's there besides foul weather?—
— One minded like the weather, most Unquietly. Shakspeare.

UNQUI'ETNESS, s. Want of tranquillity.
Thou, like a violent noise, cam'st rushing in,
And mak'st them wake and start to new unquietness. Denham.

Want of peace.—It is most enemy to war, and most hateth unquietness. Spenser.—Restlessness; turbulence.
What pleasure can there be in that estate,
Which your unquietness has made me hate? Dryden.

Perturbation; uneasiness.—From inordinate love, and vain fear, comes all unquietness of spirit, and distraction of our senses. Bp. Taylor.

UNQUI'ETUDE, s. Disquietude; uneasiness; restlessness.—It will bewray a kind of unquietude and discontentment, till it attain the former position. Wotton.

UNRA'CKED, adj. Not poured from the lees.—Rack the one vessel from the lees of the raked vessel into the un-raked vessel. Bacon.

UNRA'KED, adj. Not thrown together and covered.
Used only of fires.

Cricket, to Windsor chimnies shalt thou leap:
Where fires thou find'st unrak'd and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids. Shakspeare.

UNRA'NSACKED, adj. Not pillaged.—He gave that rich city for a prey unto his soldiers, who left neither house nor corner thereof, unransacked. Knolles.

UNRA'NSOMED, adj. Not set free by payment for liberty.

Unransom'd here receive the spotless fair,
Accept the hecatomb the Greeks prepare. Pope.

To UNRA'VEL, v. a. To disentangle; to extricate;
to clear.—He has unravell'd the studied cheats of great artificers.
Fell.—To disorder; to throw out of the present order.

O the traitor's name!
I'll know it; I will, art shall be conjur'd for it,
And nature all unravell'd. Dryden.

To clear up the intrigue of a play.—The solution, or un-ravelling.

ravelling of the intrigue commences, when the reader begins to see the doubts cleared up. Pope.

To UNRA'VEL, v. n. To be unfolded.

In an eternity what scenes shall strike!

Adventures thicken! novelties surprise!

What webs of wonder shall unravel there! Young.

UNRA'ZORED, adj. Unshaven.—As smooth as Hebe's their unrazor'd lips. Milton.

UNRE'ACHED, adj. Not attained.

Labour with unequal force to climb

That lofty hill, unreach'd by former time. Dryden.

UNRE'AD, adj. Not read; not publicly pronounced.—

These books are safer and better to be left publicly unread. Hooker.—Untaught; not learned in books.

Uncertain whose the narrower span,

The clown unread, or half-read gentleman. Dryden.

UNRE'ADINESS, s. Want of readiness; want of promptness.—This imprecation and unreadiness, when they find in us, then turn it to the soothing up of themselves in that accursed fancy. Hooker.—Want of preparation.—Nothing is so great an enemy to tranquillity and a contented spirit, as the amazement and confusions of unreadiness and inconsideration. Bp. Taylor.

UNRE'ADY, adj. Not prepared; not fit.

The fairy knight

Departed thence, albe (his woundes wide
Not thoroughly heal'd) unready were to ride. Spenser.

Not prompt; not quick.—From a temperate inactivity, we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason; or by a content in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof. Brown.—Awkward; ungain.—Young men, in the conduct of actions, use extreme remedies at first, and, that which doubleth all errors, will not acknowledge or retract them; like an unready horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Bacon.—Undressed. Obsolete.

All. How now, my lords? what all unready so?

Bast. Unready? ay, and glad we've 'scaped so well.

Shakspeare.

UNRE'AL, adj. Unsubstantial; having only appearance.

Hence, terrible shadow!

Unreal mockery, hence! Shakspeare.

UNRE'APED, adj. Not reaped; uncut.

To stay the thunder, or forbid the hail

To thresh the unreap'd ear. Carew.

UNRE'ASONABLE, adj. Not agreeable to reason.—

It is unreasonable for men to be judges in their own cases; self-love will make men partial to themselves and their friends. Locke.—Exorbitant; claiming or insisting on more than is fit.—Since every language is so full of its own proprieties, that what is beautiful in one is often barbarous in another, it would be unreasonable to limit a translator to the narrow compass of his author's words. Dryden.—Greater than is fit; immoderate.—Those that place their hope in another world, have, in a great measure, conquered the dread of death, and unreasonable love of life. Atterbury.—Irrational.

UNRE'ASONABLENESS, s. Inconsistency with reason.—The unreasonableness and presumption of those that thus project, have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition. Hammoud.—Exorbitance; excessive demand.—The unreasonableness of the propositions is not more evident, than that they are not the joint desires of their major number. King Charles.

UNRE'ASONABLY, adv. In a manner contrary to reason.—Unreasonably disposed to give a fairer hearing to a Pagan philosopher, than to a Christian writer. Addison.—More than enough.

I'll not over the threshold till my lord return from the wars.

—Fye! you confine yourself most unreasonably.

Shakspeare.

To UNRE'AVE, v. a. [now unravel, from un and reave,
VOL. XXIV. No. 1650.

or ravel, perhaps the same with rive, to tear, or break asunder.] To unwind; to disentangle.

Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,

Devis'd a web her wooers to deceive;

In which the work that she all day did make

The same at night she did unreave. Spenser.

Not to tear asunder; not to rive; not to unroof.—Couldst thou think that a cottage not too strongly built, and standing so bleak in the very mouth of the winds, could for any long time hold right and unreaved? Bp. Hall.

UNRE'BATED, adj. Not blunted.—A number of fencers try it out with *unrebat*ed swords. Hakewill.

UNREBU'KABLE, adj. Obnoxious to no censure.—Keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of Christ. 1 Tim.

UNRECE'IVED, adj. Not received.—Where the signs and sacraments of his grace are not, through contempt, unreceived, or received with contempt, they really give what they promise, and are what they signify. Hooker.

UNRE'CLAIMED, adj. Not tamed.

A savageness of unreclaimed blood,

Of general assault. Shakspeare.

Not reformed.—This is the most favourable treatment a sinner can hope for who continues unreclaimed by the goodness of God. Rogers.

UNRECONCI'ABLE, adj. Not to be appeased; implacable.

Let me lament,

That our stars unreconcilable, should have divided
Our equalness to this. Shakspeare.

Not to be made consistent with.—He had many infirmities and sins, unreconcilable with perfect righteousness. Hammoud.

UNRE'CONCILED, adj. Not reconciled.

If you bethink yourself of any crime

Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace,

Solicit for it straight. Shakspeare.

UNRECO'RDED, adj. Not kept in remembrance by public monuments.

Unrecorded left through many an age,

Worthy to have not remain'd so long unsung. Milton.

UNRECO'VERABLE, adj. Not to be recovered; past recovery.—Irresolution loosens all the joints of state: like an ague, it shakes not this or that limb, but all the body is at once in a fit. 'Tis the dead palsy, that, without almost a miracle, leaves a man unrecoverable. Feltham.

UNRECO'VERED, adj. Not recovered.—The only cause of unrecover'd spoil. Drayton.

UNRECO'UNTED, adj. Not told; not related.

This is yet but young, and may be left

To some ears unrecounted. Shakspeare.

UNRECRU'ITABLE, adj. Incapable of repairing the deficiencies of an army.—Empty and *unrecruit*able colonels of twenty men in a company. Milton.

UNRECU'RING, adj. Irremediable.

I found her straying in the park,

Seeking to hide herself; as doth the deer,

That hath received some unrecuring wound. Shakspeare.

UNRE'DUCED, adj. Not reduced.—The earl divided all the rest of the Irish countries unreduced into shires. Davies.

UNREDU'CIBLE, adj. Not reducible. Ash.

UNREDU'CIBLENESS, s. Impossibility of being reduced.—A third property of matters belonging to Christianity, and which also renders them mysterious, is, their strangeness and unreducibility to the common methods and observations of nature. South.

UNREFINED, adj. Not refined.

No mines are current; unrefin'd and gross,

Coals make the sterling, nature but the dross. Cleveland.

UNREFO'RMABLE, adj. Not to be put into a new form form.—The rule of faith is alone unmoveable and unreformable; to wit, of believing in one only God omnipotent, creator of the world, and in his son Jesus Christ born of the virgin Mary. Hammond.

UNREFORMED, adj. Not amended; not corrected.—This general revolt, when overcome, produced a general reformation of the Irishry, which ever before had been unreformed. Davies.

UNREFRACTED, adj. Not refracted.—The sun's circular image is made by an unrefracted beam of light. Newton.

UNREFRESHED, adj. Not cheered; not relieved.—Its symptoms are a spontaneous lassitude, being unrefreshed by sleep. Arbutnot.

UNREGARDED, adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.

We, ever by his might,
Had throne to ground the unregarded right. Spenser.

UNREGENERACY, s. State of being unregenerate.—If a sinful disposition disannul our prayers, much more a state of unregeneracy. South.

UNREGENERATE, adj. Not brought to a new life.—This is not to be understood promiscuously of all men, unregenerate persons as well as regenerate. Stephens.

UNREGISTERED, adj. Not recorded.

Hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakspeare.

UNREINED, adj. Not restrained by the bridle.

Lest from thy flying steed unrein'd, as once
Bellerophon, though from a lower clime
Dismounted, on th' Aleian field I fall. Milton.

UNREJOICING, adj. Unjoyous; gloomy; sad; dismal.—Here Winter holds his unrejoicing court.—Thomson.—Siberia's unrejoicing wilds. Warton.

UNRELATED, adj. Not allied by kindred.—'Tis not the example of an ordinary or inconsiderable person, of a stranger, of one indifferent or unrelated to us. Barrow.—Having no connection with any thing.—They arise—from the purposed conciseness of the writer; who in the occasional mention of any matter unrelated, or not essential to, the dispensation, always affects a studied brevity. Warburton.

UNRELATIVE, adj. Having no relation to, or connection with.—If you pitch upon the treaty of Munster, do not interrupt it by dipping and deviating into other books unrelative to it. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNRELATIVELY, adj. Without relation to any thing else.—They saw the measures they took, singly and unrelatively, or relatively alone to some immediate object. Ld. Bolingbroke.

UNRELENTING, adj. Hard; cruel; feeling no pity.

By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakspeare.

UNRELIEVABLE, adj. Admitting no succour.—As no degree of distress is unrelievable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion. Boyle.

UNRELIEVED, adj. Not succoured.

The goddess griev'd,
Her favour'd host should perish unreliev'd. Dryden.

Not eased.—The uneasiness of unreliev'd thirst is not lessened by continuance, but grows the more unsupportable. Boyle.

UNREMARKABLE, adj. Not capable of being observed—Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this fleeting and unremarkable superficialities, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby.—Not worthy of notice.

UNREMEDIAL, adj. Admitting no remedy.—He so handled it, that it rather seemed he had more come into a defence of an unremediable mischief already committed, than that they had done it at first by his consent. Sidney.

UNREMEDIED, adj. Not cured.—Unremedied loneliness. Milton.

UNREMEMBERED, adj. Not retained in the mind; not recollected.—I cannot pass unremembered, their manner of disguising the shafts of chimneys in various fashions, whereof the noblest is the pyramidal. Wotton.

UNREMEMBERING, adj. Having no memory.
That unrememb'ring of its former pain,
The soul may suffer mortal flesh again. Dryden.

UNREMEMBRANCE, s. Forgetfulness; want of remembrance.—Some words are negative in their original language, but seem positive, because the negation is unknown; as amnesty, an unremembrance, or general pardon. Watts.

UNREMITTING, adj. Not relaxing; not abating; persevering.—Loos'd be the whirlwind's unremitting sway. Shenstone.

UNREMOVABLE, adj. Not to be taken away.

You know the fiery quality of the duke,
How unremovable and fixt he is
In his own course. Shakspeare.

UNREMOVABLENESS, s. Impracticability of being removed.

UNREMOVABLY, adv. In a manner that admits no removal.—His discontents are unremovably coupled to his nature. Shakspeare.

UNREMOVED, adj. Not taken away.—It is impossible, where this opinion is imbibed and unremoved, to found any convincing argument. Hammond.—Not capable of being removed.—Like Teneriff or Atlas unremov'd. Milton.

UNRENEWED, adj. Not made anew; not renewed.—The corruption of a man's heart, unrenewed by grace, is the cause of its own hardness. South.

UNREPAID, adj. Not recompensed; not compensated.
Hadst thou full pow'r

To measure out his torments by thy will;
Yet what couldst thou, tormentor, hope to gain?
Thy loss continues, unrepaid by pain. Dryden.

UNREPEALED, adj. Not revoked; not abrogated.—When you are pinched with any unrepealed act of parliament, you declare you will not be obliged by it. Dryden.

UNREPENTANCE, s. State of being unrepentant.—The necessity of destruction, consequent upon unrepentance, is drawn chiefly from the determination of the Divine Will, which hath so appointed it. Wharton.

UNREPENTED, adj. Not expiated by penitential sorrow.—They are no fit supplicants to seek his mercy in the behalf of others, whose own unrepented sins provoked his just indignation. Hooker.—With what confusion will he hear all his unrepented sins produced before men and angels? Rogers.

UNREPENTING, or UNREPENTANT, adj. Not repenting; not penitent; not sorrowful for sin.
Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbled, unrepentant, unreform'd,
Headlong would follow. Milton.

UNREPINING, adj. Not peevishly complaining.
Barefoot as she trod the flinty pavement,
Her footsteps all along were mark'd with blood;
Yet silent on she pass'd, and unrepining. Rowe.

UNREPININGLY, adv. Without peevish complaint.—His indisputable will must be done, and unrepiningly received by his own creatures. Wotton.

UNREPLENISHED, adj. Not filled.—Some air retreated thither, kept the mercury out of the unreplenished space. Boyle.

UNREPRIEVABLE, adj. Not to be respited from penal death.

Within me is a hell; and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confin'd, to tyrannize
In unreprievable condemned blood. Shakspeare.

UNREPRIEVED, adj. Not respited from penal death.
There

There to converse with everlasting groans,
Unrespited, unpitied, unreproved. Milton.

UNREPRO'ACHED, adj. Not upbraided; not censured.—Sir John Hotham, unreproached, uncursed by any imprecation of mine, pays his head. King Charles.

UNREPRO'VABLE, adj. Not liable to blame.—You hath he reconciled, to present you holy, unblameable, and unreprovable in his sight. Col.

UNREPRO'VED, adj. Not censured.—Christians have their churches, and unreproved exercise of religion. Sandys.—Not liable to censure.

The antique world, in his first flowering youth,
With gladsome thanks, and unreproved truth,
The gifts of sovereign bounty did embrace. Spenser.

UNREPU'GNANT, adj. Not opposite.—When Scripture doth yield us natural laws, what particular order is thereunto most agreeable; when positive, which way to make laws repugnant unto them. Hooker.

UNREPUTABLE, adj. Not creditable.—When we see wise men examples of duty, we are convinced that piety is no unreputable qualification, and that we are not to be ashamed of our virtue. Rogers.

UNREQUE'STED, adj. Not asked.—With what security can our ambassadors go, unrequested of the Turkish emperor, without his safe conduct? Knolles.

UNREQUITABLE, adj. Not to be retaliated.—Some will have it that all mediocrity of folly is foolish, and because an unrequitable evil may ensue, an indifferent convenience must be omitted. Brown.

UNRESENTED, adj. Not regarded with anger.—The failings of these holy persons passed not unresented by God; and the same scripture which informs us of the sin, records the punishment. Rogers.

UNRESERVE, s. Absence of reserve; frankness; openness.—With these he [Dr. Bathurst] lived in the freedom of social unreserve, tempering the rigour of an authoritative character with the affability of a companion, and the graces of an agreeable conversation. Warton.

UNRESERVED, adj. Not limited by any private convenience.—The piety our heavenly Father will accept, must consist in an entire, unreserved obedience to his commands; since whosoever offends in one precept, is guilty of the whole law. Rogers.—Open; frank; concealing nothing.

UNRESERVEDLY, adv. Without limitations.—I am not to embrace absolutely and unreservedly the opinion of Aristotle. Boyle.—Without concealment; openly.—I know your friendship to me is extensive; and it is what I owe to that friendship, to open my mind unreservedly to you. Pope.

UNRESERVEDNESS, s. Unlimitedness; largeness.—The tenderness and unreservedness of his love, made him think those his friends or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.—Openness; frankness.—The freedom and unreservedness, with which Boileau and Racine communicated their works to each other, is hardly to be paralleled. Dr. Warton.

UNRESISTED, adj. Not opposed.—The ætherial spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist, nor retard, the planets, which roll through as free and unresisted as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley.—Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.

Those gods! whose unresisted might Have sent me to these regions void of light. Dryden.

UNRESISTIBLE, adj. Not to be resisted.—Such a destruction as should, like a flood, overwhelm the whole nation; and, as an unresistible torrent, break down and wash all away before it. Mede.

UNRESISTING, adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.

The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence,
But meek and unresisting innocence:
A patient useful creature. Dryden.

UNRESOLVABLE, adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.—For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin infatuates before it destroys. South.

UNRESOLVED, adj. Not determined; having made no resolution; sometimes with of.

Turnus unresolv'd of flight,
Moves tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dryden.

Not solved; not cleared.—I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolved. Locke.

UNRESOLVING, adj. Not resolving; not determined.—She her arms about her unresolving husband threw. Dryden.

UNRESPECTABLE, adj. Not entitled to respect. Malone.

UNRESPECTED, adj. Not regarded.—They live unwoo'd, and unrespected fade. Shakspeare.

UNRESPECTIVE, adj. Inattentive; taking little notice.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look into me with considerate eyes. Shakspeare.

Mean; despicable. Malone.

Nor the remainder viands
We do not throw in unrespective sieve,
Because we now are full. Shakspeare.

UNRESPITED, adj. Admitting no respit, pause, or intermission.

There to converse with everlasting groans,
Unrespited, unpitied, unrepriev'd,
Ages of hopeless end. Milton.

UNREST, s. [onraste, Teut.] Disquiet; want of tranquillity; unquietness.—Of thought cometh the wakyngys and unrestis. Ld. Rivers.

Wise behest, those creeping flames by reason to subdue,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Spenser.

UNREST, an island in the Eastern seas, near the coast of Java; 9 miles west of Batavia.

UNRESTORED, adj. Not restored.

Then countries stol'n, and captives unrestor'd,
Give strength to every blow, and edge his sword. Addison.

Not cleared from an attainder.—The son of an unrestored traitor has no pretences to the quality of his ancestors. Collier. Not cured.—If unrestor'd by this, despair of cure. Young.

UNRESTRAINED, adj. Not confined; not hindered.

My tender age, in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease, and pageants entertain'd,
My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.

Licentious; loose.
The taverns he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shakspeare.

Not limited.—Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution, a non-usance, or abolition. Brown.

UNRETRACTED, adj. Not revoked; not recalled.—The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNREVEALED, adj. Not told; not discovered.

Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures,
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing. Spenser.

UNREVENGED, adj. Not revenged.
So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unrevenged all. Fairfax.

UNREVEREND, or UNRE'VARIANT, adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.—See not your bride in these unreverend robes. Shakspeare.

UNREVERENTLY, adv. Disrespectfully.
I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself.

B. Jonson,
UNREVE'RSSED,

UNREVERSED, adj. Not revoked; not repealed.
She hath offer'd to the doom,
Which unreversed stands in effectual force,
A sea of melting tears. Shakspeare.

UNREVOKED, adj. Not recalled.—Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand. Milton.

UNREWARD'ED, adj. Not rewarded; not recompensed.—Providence takes care that good offices may not pass unrewarded. L'Estrange.

UNRI'DDLE, v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.

Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes! Suekling.

The Platonick principles will not unriddle the doubt.
Glanville.

UNRI'DDLER, s. One who solves an enigma.
Ye safe unriddlers of the stars, pray tell,
By what name shall I stamp my miracle? Lovelace.

UNRIDICULOUS, adj. Not ridiculous.—If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this austereness unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives thereof. Brown.

UNRI'G, v. a. To strip of the tackle.
Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.

UNRI'GHT, adj. [unriɪt, Sax.] Wrong.—Shew that thy judgment is not unright. Wisdom.

UNRI'GHTEOUS, adj. [unriɪtʃʊs, Sax. See RIGHT-EOUS.] Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.

Within a month!
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears,
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married.—Oh most wicked speed! Shakspeare.

UNRI'GHTEOUSLY, adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.—A man may fall undeservedly under public disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Collier.

UNRI'GHTEOUSNESS, s. [unriɪtʃʊsnɛs, Saxon.] Wickedness; injustice.—Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.

UNRI'GHTFUL, adj. Not rightful; not just.
Thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne. Shakspeare.

UNRI'NG, v. a. To deprive of a ring.
Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vis. franc. pledge. Hudibras.

UNRI'OTED, adj. Free from rioting; not disgraced by riot.

A chaste unrioted house, and never stain'd
With her lord's fortune. May.

UNRI'P, v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between rip and unrip.] To cut open.

Like a traitor,
Didst break that vow, and, with thy treach'rous blade,
Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sov'reign's son. Shakspeare.

UNRI'PE, adj. [unriɪp, Sax.] Immature; not fully concocted.

Purpose is of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shakspeare.

Not seasonable; not yet proper.
He fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen. Dryden.

Too early.—Who hath not heard of the valiant, wise, and just Dorilaus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney.

UNRI'PENED, adj. Not matured.
Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripen'd beauties of the north. Addison.

UNRI'PENESS, s. Immaturity; want of ripeness.—The ripeness, or unripeness, of the occasion, must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes; and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.

UNRI'VALLED, adj. Having no competitor.
Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd shrine,
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign. Pope.

Having no peer or equal.
UNRI'VET, v. a. To unfasten the rivets of; to loosen.—There was a necessity to unrivet those usurpations. Hale.

UNRO'BE, v. a. To undress; to disrobe.—When, on the exit, souls are bid to unrobe. Young.

UNRO'L, v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.
O horror!

The queen of nations, from her ancient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume. Dryden.

UNROMA'NTICK, adj. Contrary to romance.—It is a base, unromantick spirit not to wait on you. Swift.

UNRO'OF, v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere so prevail'd with me. Shakspeare.

UNRO'OSTED, adj. Driven from the roost.
Thou dotard! thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Partlet here. Shakspeare.

UNRO'OT, v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.

Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flocks, folds, and trees, an undistinguish'd prey. Dryden.

UNRO'OT, v. n. To be unrooted.
Make their strengths totter, and their topless fortunes
Unroot and reel to ruin. Beaum. and Fl.

UNRO'UGH, adj. [unpuh, Sax.; non hirsutus.] Smooth; unbearded.

Siward's son,
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood. Shakspeare.

UNRO'UNDED, adj. Not shaped; not cut to a round.

Those unfil'd pistols,
That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which negligently left unrounded, look
Like many-angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer. Donne.

UNRO'UTED, adj. Not thrown into disorder.
One strong squadron
Stands firm, and yet unrouted. Beaum. and Fl.

UNRO'YAL, adj. Unprincipally; not royal.—By the advice of his envious counsellors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Musidorus and Pyrocles, as if they had done traitoriously. Sidney.

UNRU'FFLE, v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.

Where'er he guides his finny coursers,
The waves unruffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.

UNRU'FFLED, adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.
Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand thy shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison.

UNRU'LED, adj. Not directed by any superior power.—The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any; for they to whom whom she was committed, fainted in their labour, or forsook their charge. Spenser.

UNRU'LINESS, s. Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.—No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their sacrifices they never sacrificed so much as one lust. South.

UNRU'LY, adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.

In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Theron, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chace the savage beast with busy pain. Spenser.

To UNRUMPLE, v. a. To free from rumples; to open out.

Daffodils, late from earth's slow womb
Unrumple their swoll'n buds, and show their yellow bloom. Addison.

To UNSA'DDEN, v. a. To relieve from sadness.—Music unsaddens the melancholy, quickens the dull, awaketh the drowsy. Whitlock.

To UNSA'DDLE, v. a. To take off the saddle from a horse.—Before we could alight from and unsaddle our horses, and unpack our things, our house was entirely finished. Transl. of Thunberg's Trav.

UNSA'DDLED, adj. [unʒəʔəbelað, Sax.] Not having the saddle on.

UNSAFE, adj. Not secure; hazardous; dangerous.—If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker.

UNSA'FELY, adv. Not securely; dangerously.—As no man can walk, so neither can he think, uneasily or unsafely; but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts amiss, which a virtuous man never doth. Grew.

UNSAID, adj. [unʒæð, Sax.] Not uttered; not mentioned.—Chanticleer shall wish his words unsaid. Dryden.

UNSA'ILABLE, adj. Not navigable.

He finds

The sea unsailable for dangerous winds. May.

To UNSAINT, v. a. To deprive of saintship.—The Jews, like the men here of late, for ever unsainting all the world besides themselves. South.

UNSALEABLE, adj. Not vendible; unmerchantable.

UNSA'LTED, adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.—The muriatic scurvy, induced by too great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated. Arbuthnot.

UNSA'LU'TED, adj. [insalutatus, Lat.] Not saluted.

Gods! I prate;

And the most noble mother in the world
Leave unsaluted. Shakspeare.

UNSA'NCTIFIED, adj. Unholy; not consecrated; not pious.

UNSA'NG, CAPE, a cape on the east coast of the island of Borneo. Long. 119. 21. E. Lat. 5. 18. N.

UNSA'TED, adj. Not satisfied; insatiate.

Alas, that he amid the race of men,
That he, who thinks of purest gold with scorn,
Should with unsated appetite demand,
And vainly court, the pleasure it procures! Shenstone.

UNSA'TIABLE, adj. [insatiabilis, Latin.] Not to be satisfied; greedy without bounds.—Unsatiable in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker.

UNSA'TIATE, adj. Not satisfied.

Self-love, vain-glory, strife, and fell debate,
Unsatiate covetise. More.

UNSATISFA'CTORINESS, s. Failure of giving satisfaction.—That which most deters me from such trials, is their unsatisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1650.

UNSATISFA'CTORY, adj. Not giving satisfaction.—Not clearing the difficulty.—That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an unsatisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown.

UNSA'TISFIED, adj. Not contented; not pleased.—Flashy wits, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me. Digby.—Not settled in opinion.—Concerning the analytical preparation of gold, they leave persons unsatisfied. Boyle.—Not filled; not gratified to the full.

Though he were unsatisfied in getting,
Yet in bestowing he was most princely. Shakspeare.

UNSA'TISFIEDNESS, s. The state of being not satisfied.—Between my own unsatisfiedness in conscience, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chuse rather what was safe, than what seemed just. King Charles.

UNSA'TISFYING, adj. Unable to gratify to the full.—Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.

UNSA'TISFYINGNESS, s. Incapability of gratifying to the full.—They understand the variety and the unsatisfyingness of the things of this world. Bp. Taylor.

UNSA'VOURILY, adv. So as to displease or disgust.—So often and so unsavourily has it been repeated, that the reader may well cry, Down with it, down with it, for shame! Milton.

UNSA'VOURINESS, s. Bad taste.—Bad smell.—If we concede a national unsavouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less subject hereto than any. Brown.

UNSA'VOURY, adj. Tasteless.—Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job.—Having a bad taste.

Unsavoury food, perhaps,

To spiritual natures. Milton.

Having an ill smell; fetid.—Some may emit an unsavoury odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.—Unpleasing; disgusting.—Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsavoury, when they come to be disputed of, because disputation pre-supposeth some difficulty in the matter. Hooker.—Unsavoury news: but how made he escape? Shakspeare.

To UNSAY, v. a. To retract; to recant; to deny what has been said.

Call you me fair? that fair again unsay;
Demetrius loves you, fair. Shakspeare.

Say and unsay, feign, flatter, or abjure. Milton.

How soon

Would height recall high thoughts, how soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore! Milton.

To say, and strait unsay, pretending first
To fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader, but a liar trac'd. Milton.

There is nothing said there, which you may have occasion to unsay hereafter. Atterbury.

UNSCA'LY, adj. Having no scales.—The jointed lobster, and unscaly soal. Gay.

UNSCA'NNED, adj. Not measured; not computed.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to his heels. Shakspeare.

UNSCA'RED, adj. Not frightened away.
Then sleep was undisturb'd by care, unscar'd
By drunken howlings. Cowper.

UNSCA'RRED, adj. Not marked with wounds.
And must she die for this? O let her live;
So she may live unscar'd from bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter. Shakspeare.

UNSCATTERED, adj. Not dispersed; not thrown into confusion.—At that time no little murmur, and sedition, was moved in the host of the Greeks; which notwithstanding was wonderfully pacified, and the army unscattered, by the majesty of Agamemnon joining to him counsellors Nestor and the witty Ulysses. Sir T. Elyot.

UNSCHENK, a large village in the central part of European Russia, in the government of Tambov.

UNSCHOLASTIC, adj. Not bred to literature.—Notwithstanding these learned disputants, it was to the unscholastic statesman, that the world owed their peace and liberties. Locke.

UNSCO'LED, adj. Uneducated; not learned.—When the apostles were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, they were, St. Paul excepted, unschool'd and unlettered men. Hooker.

UNSCO'RCHED, adj. Not touched by fire.

His hand,

Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd. Shakspeare.

UNSCO'URED, adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.

Th' enrolled penalties,

Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by th' wall,
And none of them been worn. Shakspeare.

UNSCRA'TCHED, adj. Not torn.

I with much expedient march

Have brought a counter-check before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your city's threaten'd cheeks.

Shakspeare.

UNSCRE'ENED, adj. Not covered; not protected.—Those balls of burnished brass, the tops of churches are adorned with, derive their glittering brightness from their being exposed, unscreened, to the sun's refulgent beams. Boyle.

To UNSCRE'W, v. a. To loosen; to unfasten by screwing back.—Upon his refusing to take the oath, they put his thumbs in the screws, and drew them so hard, that, as they put him to extreme torture, so they could not un-screw them again. Burnet.

UNSCRIPTURAL, adj. Not defensible by Scripture.—The doctrine delivered in my sermon was neither new nor unscriptural, nor in itself false. Atterbury

To UNSE'AL, v. a. [un-jælan, Sax.; solvere.] To open any thing sealed.

I must unseal

Another mystery. Beaum. and Fl.

This new glare of light,

Cast sudden on his face, unseal'd his sight. Dryden.

UNSE'ALD, adj. Wanting a seal.

Your oaths

Are words, and poor conditions but unseal'd. Shakspeare.

Having the seal broken.

To UNSE'AM, v. a. To rip; to cut open.

He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nape to th' chops,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shakspeare.

UNSE'ARCHABLE, adj. Inscrutable; not to be explored.

All is best, though we oft doubt
What the unsearchable dispose
Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close.

Milton.

UNSE'ARCHABLENESS, s. Impossibility to be explored.—The unsearchableness of God's ways should be a bridle to restrain presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error. Bramhall.

UNSE'ARCHED, adj. Not explored; not examined.—Since you have your tricks, and your veiances, we will not leave a wrinkle of you unsearch'd. Beaum. and Fl.—Search through this garden; leave unsearch'd no nook. Milton.

UNSE'ASONABLE, adj. Not suitable to time or occasion; unfit; untimely; ill-timed.—Zeal, unless it be rightly guided, when it endeavours the most busily to please God, forceth upon him those unseasonable offices which please him not. Hooker.—Not agreeable to the time of the year. Like an unseasonable stormy day,

Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd in tears. Shakspeare.

Late; as, unseasonable time of night.

UNSE'ASONABLENESS, s. Disagreement with time or place.—The moral goodness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral or natural actions, falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale.

UNSE'ASONABLY, adv. Not seasonably; not agreeably to time or occasion.—Some things it asketh unseasonably, when they need not to be prayed for, as deliverance from thunder and tempest, when no danger is nigh. Hooker.

UNSE'ASONED, adj. Unseasonable; untimely; ill-timed. Out of use.

Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add Unto your sickness. Shakspeare.

Unformed; not qualified by use.—'Tis an unseason'd courtier; advise him. Shakspeare.—Irregular; inordinate.—The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if done in hostility. Hayward.—Not kept till fit for use. Not salted; as, unseasoned meat.

To UNSE'AT, v. a. To throw from the seat.

At once the shock unscated him; he flew
Sheer o'er the shaggy barrier. Cowper.

UNSE'CONDED, adj. Not supported.

Him did you leave

Second to none, unseconded by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage. Shakspeare.

Not exemplified a second time.—Strange and unseconded shapes of worms succeeded. Brown.

To UNSE'CRET, v. a. To disclose; to divulge.—He that consulteth what he should do, should not declare what he will do; but let princes beware, that the unsecreting of their affairs comes not from themselves. Bacon.

UNSE'CRET, adj. Not close; not trusty.

Who shall be true to us,

When we are so unsecret to ourselves? Shakspeare.

UNSECURE, adj. Not safe.

Love, though most sure,

Yet always to itself seems unsecure. Denham.

UNSEDU'CED, adj. Not drawn to ill.

Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, uneduc'd, unterrify'd. Milton.

UNSEE'ING, adj. Wanting the power of vision.

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shakspeare.

To UNSEE'M, v. n. Not to seem. Not in use.

You wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseeming to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid. Shakspeare.

UNSEE'MLINESS, s. Indecency; indecorum; uncomeliness.—All as before his sight whom we fear, and whose presence to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker.

UNSEE'MLY, adj. Indecent; uncomely; unbecoming.—Adultery of the tongue, consisting in corrupt, dishonest, and unseemly speeches. Perkins.

UNSEE'MLY, adv. Indecently; unbecomingly.—Charity doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own. 1 Cor.

UNSEE'N, adj. Not seen; not discovered.

A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple.
Shakspeare.
Invisible;

Invisible; undiscoverable.—The weeds of heresy being grown into ripeness, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterward freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.—Unskilled; unexperienced.—He was not unseen in the affections of the court, but had not reputation enough to reform it. Clarendon.

UNSEIZED, adj. Not seized; not taken possession of.

Our fortune rolls as from a smooth descent,
And from the first impression takes the bent;
But, if unseiz'd she glides away like wind,
And leaves repenting folly far behind. Dryden.

UNSELDOM, adj. [unʒelbən, Sax.] Not seldom.

UNSELFISH, adj. Not addicted to private interest.—The most interested cannot purpose any thing so much to their own advantage, notwithstanding which the inclination is nevertheless unselfish. Spectator.

UNSENSED, adj. Wanting distinct meaning; without a certain signification.—The Romanists look on the letter of Holy Scripture but as so many dead and unsensed characters, of variable and uncertain signification. Puller.

UNSENSIBLE, adj. Not sensible; now written insensible.—Your land has lain long bedrid and unsensible. Beaumont and Fl.

UNSENT, adj. Not sent.

UNSENT for. Not called by letter or messenger.—If a physician should go from house to house unsent for, and enquire what woman hath a cancer, or what man a fistula, he would be as unwelcome as the disease itself. Bp. Taylor.

UNSEPARABLE, adj. Not to be parted; not to be divided.

Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Who twine as 'twere in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
Break out to bitterest enmity. Shakespeare.

UNSEPARATED, adj. Not parted.

There seek the Theban bard;
To whom Persephone, entire and whole,
Gave to retain th' unseparated soul. Pope.

UNSEPULCHRED, adj. Having no grave; unburied.

But why use I a word
Of any act but what concerns my friend? dead, undeplor'd, Unsepulch'r'd. Chapman.

UNSERVICEABLE, adj. Useless; bringing no advantage or convenience.

The beast, impatient of his smarting wound,
Thought with his wings to fly above the ground,
But his late wounded wing unserviceable found. Spenser.

UNSERVICEABLENESS, s. Unfitness for any thing; uselessness.—The rawness and unserviceableness of our trained bands in the beginning of the late wars. Sanderson.

UNSERVICEABLY, adv. Without use; without advantage.—It does not enlarge the dimensions of the globe, or lie idly and unserviceably there, but part of it is introduced into the plants which grow thereon, and the rest either remounts again, with the ascending vapour, or is wash'd down into rivers. Woodward.

UNSET, adj. Not set; not placed.—They urge that God left nothing in his word undescribed, nothing unset down; and therefore charged them strictly to keep themselves unto that without any alteration. Hooker.

To UNSETTLE, v. a. To make uncertain.—Such a doctrine unsettles the titles to kingdoms and estates; for if the actions from which such settlements spring were illegal, all that is built upon them must be so too; but the last is absurd, therefore the first must be so likewise. Arbutnot.—To move from a place.—As big as he was, did there need any great matter to unsettle him? L'Estrange.—To overthrow.—The course of nature, being settled by divine power, can be unsettled by no less. Fleetwood.

To UNSETTLE, v. n. To become unsettled.—His wits begin to unsettle. Shakespeare.

UNSETTLED, adj. Not fixed in resolution; not determined; not steady.

A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains. Shakespeare.

Unequable; not regular; changeable.—March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most windy and tempestuous, the most unsettled and unequable seasons in most countries. Bentley.—Not established.

My cruel fate,

And doubts attending an unsettled state,
For'd me to guard my coast. Dryden.

Not fixed in a place or abode.—David supposed that it could not stand with the duty which he owed unto God, to set himself in an house of cedar trees, and to behold the ark of the Lord's covenant unsettled. Hooker.

UNSETTLEDNESS, s. Irresolution; undetermined state of mind.—Whence comes that main imperfection of our lives, unsettledness, and flitting from one thing to another, frequently relapsing into sins once forsaken? Whence are we so easily carried with every wind of fear, hope, commodity? All is, because we are not yet resolved. Hales.—Uncertainty; fluctuation.—The unsettledness of my condition has hitherto put a stop to my thoughts concerning it. Dryden.—Want of fixity.—When the sun shines upon a river, though its waves roll this way and that by the wind, yet for all their unsettledness, the sun strikes them with a direct and certain beam. South.

UNSETTLEMENT, s. Unsettledness; irresolution.—For want of faith enduing us with such knowledge, all human wisdom was so blind and lame, so various, so uncertain, nothing but confusion, unsettlement, and dissatisfaction arising from mere ratiocination. Barrow.

UNSEVERED, adj. Not parted; not divided.

Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' th' war do grow together. Shakespeare.

To UNSEX, v. n. To make otherwise than the sex commonly is.

All you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me, from the crown to th' toe, top full
Of direst cruelty. Shakespeare.

To UNSHACKLE, v. a. To loose from bonds.—A laudable freedom of thought unshackles their minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the public good. Addison.

UNSHADED, adj. Not overspread with darkness.

Fair as unshaded light, or as the day
In its first birth, when all the year was May. Davenant.

UNSHADOWED, adj. Not clouded; not darkened.—He alone sees all things with an unshadowed, comprehensive vision, who eminently is all. Glanville.

UNSHAKABLE, adj. Not subject to concussion.

Your isle stands,
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unshakable, and roaring waters. Shakespeare.

The unshakable bottom of divine authority. South.—Not to be moved in resolution.—Our Saviour expressed his unshakable faith in God, under so fierce a trial, so dreadful a temptation. Barrow.

UNSHAKED, adj. Not shaken. Not in use.

I know but one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakespeare.

UNSHAKEN, adj. Not agitated; not moved.

Purpose is
Of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken, when they mellow be. Shakespeare.
Not

Not subject to concussion ; not weakened in resolution ; not moved.

Ill wast thou shrouded then,
O patient Son of God ! yet only stood'st Unshaken.

Milton.

UNSHA'MED, adj. Not shamed.
The brave man seeks not popular applause ;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can :
Force is of brutes, but honour is of man.

Dryden.

UNSHA'MEFACED, adj. Wanting modesty ; not bashful ; impudent.—Both unshamefaced whores. Bale.

UNSHA'MEFACEDNESS, s. Want of modesty ; impudence.—Old lady Bacon, the learned widow of the lord keeper, writing an expository epistle to lord Essex on account of his gallantries with a married lady, complains of the frail fair one's "unshamefacedness," of her "unwifelike and unshamefaced demeanour." Chalmers.

To UNSHA'PE, v. a. To confound ; to ruffle ; to throw into confusion.

This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant.

And dull to all proceedings.

Shakspeare.

UNSHA'PEN, adj. [unſceapen, Sax.] Misshapen ; deformed.—This unshapen earth we now inhabit, is the form it was found in when the waters had retired. Burnet.

UNSHA'RED, adj. Not partaken ; not had in common.

Bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss ;
Tedious unshar'd with thee, and odious soon.

Milton.

To UNSHE'ATH, v. a. To draw from the scabbard.—Executioner, unsheath thy sword. Shakspeare.

UNSHED, adj. Not spilt.—To blood unshed the rivers must be turn'd. Milton.

UNSHELTERED, adj. Wanting a screen ; wanting protection.—He is breeding that worm, which will smite this gourd, and leave him unsheltered to that scorching wrath of God, which will make the improvement of Jonah's passionate wish, that God would take away his life, his most rational desire. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNSHIELDED, adj. Not guarded by the shield.

He try'd a tough, well-chosen spear !
Though Cygnus then did no defence provide,
But scornful offer'd his unshielded side.

Dryden.

To UNSHIP, v. a. To take out of a ship.—At the Cape we landed for fresh water ; but discovering a leak, we unshipped our goods and watered there. Swift.

UNSHOCKED, adj. Not disgusted ; not offended.—Thy spotless thoughts unshock'd the priest may hear. Tickell.

UNSHOD, adj. [unſceodð, Sax.] Having no shoes.—The king's army, naked and unshod, would, through those enclosed parts, have done them little harm. Clarendon.

UNSHO'OK, part. adj. Not shaken.

Pit, box, and gall'ry in convulsions hurl'd,
Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting world.

Pope.

UNSHO'RN, adj. [unſcopen, Sax.] Not clipped.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood,
Of oaks unshorn, a venerable wood.

Dryden.

UNSHO'T, part. adj. Not hit by shot.

He that on her his bold hand lays,
With Cupid's pointed arrow plays ;
They, with a touch, they are so keen,
Wound us unshot, and she unseen.

Waller.

To UNSHO'UT, v. a. To annihilate, or retract a shout.

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius ;
Repeat him with the welcome of his mother. Shakspeare.

UNSHOWERED, adj. Not watered by showers.

Nor is Osiris seen

In Memphian grove or green,

Trampling the unshower'd grass with lowings loud. Milton.

UNSHRI'NKING, adj. Not recoiling ; not shunning danger or pain.

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt ;
He only liv'd but till he was a man ;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But, like a man, he died.

Shakspeare.

UNSHU'NNABLE, adj. Inevitable.

'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prerogativ'd are they less than the base ;
'Tis destiny unshunnable like death.

Shakspeare.

UNSI'FTED, adj. Not parted by a sieve.

The ground one year at rest, forget not thou
With richest dung to hearten it again,
Or with unsifted ashes,

May.

Not tried ; not known by experience.
Affection ! pugh ! you speak like a green girl,
Unsifted in such perilous circumstance.

Shakspeare.

UNSI'GHT, adj. Not seeing. A low word, used only with unseen, as in the example following. Probably formed by corruption of unsighted.

They'll say our business to reform
The church and state is but a worm ;
For to subscribe, unsight, unseen,
To an unknown church discipline.

Hudibras.

UNSI'GHTED, adj. Invisible ; not seen.

Beauties that from worth arise,
Are like the grace of deities,
Still present with us, though unsighted.

Suckling.

UNSI'GHTLINESS, s. Deformity ; disagreeableness to the eye.—The unsightliness in the legs may be helped by wearing a laced stocking. Wiseman.

UNSI'GHTLY, adj. Disagreeable to the sight.

Amongst the rest, a small, unsightly root,
But of divine effect, he cull'd me out.

Milton.

UNSIGNIFICANT, adj. Wanting meaning or importance : now insignificant.—An empty, formal, insignificant name. Hammond.

UNINCERE'RE, adj. [insincerus, Lat.] Not hearty ; not faithful.

My friends, that each in kindness vie,
Might well expect one parting sigh ;
Might well demand one tender tear ;
For when was Damon unsincere ?

Shenstone.

Not genuine ; impure ; adulterated.—I have so often met with chemical preparations, which I have found unsincere, that I dare scarce trust any. Boyle.—Not sound ; not solid.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear ;
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere.

Dryden.

UNINCERITY, s. Adulteration ; cheat ; dishonesty of profession.—A spirit of sea-salt may, without any unsincerity, be so prepared, as to dissolve crude gold. Boyle.

To UNSI'NEW, v. a. To deprive of strength.

Nor are the nerves of his compacted strength,
Stretch'd and dissolv'd into unsinew'd length.

Denham.

UNSI'NEWED, adj. Nerveless ; weak.

Two special reasons
May to you, perhaps, seem much unsinew'd,
And yet to me are strong.

Shakspeare.

UNSI'NGED, adj. Not scorched ; not touched by fire.—Three men passed through a fiery furnace, untouched, unsinged. Stephens.

UNSI'NGLED, adj. Not separated ; keeping in companies ; not single.

Quite otherwise the stags, a trembling train,
In herds unsingled, scour the dusty plain.

Dryden.

UNSI'NKING, adj. Not sinking.

Anxur

Anxur feels the cool refreshing breeze
Blown off the sea, and all the dewy strand Lies cover'd with a smooth, unsinking sand. Addison.

UNSI'NNING, adj. [unfýnnɪŋ, Sax.] Impeccable; without sin.—It hath treasures of mercy for those who have not obeyed the law in the strictness of perfect unsinning obedience. Hammond.

UNSKI'LFUL, adj. Wanting art; wanting knowledge.—This overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve. Shakspeare.

UNSKI'LFULLY, adv. Without knowledge; without art.—You speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darkened in your malice. Shakspeare.

UNSKI'LFULNESS, s. Want of art; want of knowledge.—Let no prices be heightened by the necessity or unskilfulness of the contractor. Bp. Taylor.

UNSKI'LLED, adj. Wanting skill; wanting knowledge: with in before a noun, and to before a verb.

Poets, like painters, thus unskill'd to trace
The naked nature, and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art. Pope.

UNSLAIN, adj. Not killed.—If there were any who felt a pity of so great a fall, and had yet any sparks of unslain duty left in them towards me, yet durst they not shew it. Sidney.

UNSLAK'ED, adj. Not quenched.
Her desires new rous'd,
And yet unslak'd, will kindle in her fancy,
And make her eager to renew the feast. Dryden.

UNSLEE'PING, adj. Ever wakeful.
And roscate dew's dispos'd
All but th' unsleeping eyes of God to rest. Milton.

UNSLEE'PY, adj. [unflæpɪz, Sax., insomnis.] Not sleeping.

UNSLIPPING, adj. Not liable to slip; fast.
To knit your hearts
With an unslipping knot, take, Antony,
Octavia to wife. Shakspeare.

UNSLOW, adj. [unflæp, Sax.] Not slow.
UNSMIRCHED, adj. Unpolluted; not stained.
That drop of blood that's calm proclaims me bastard;
Cries cuckold to my father; brands the harlot
Ev'n here, between the chaste and unsmirch'd brow
Of my true mother. Shakspeare.

UNSMOK'ED, adj. Not smoked.
His antient pipe in sable dy'd,
And half unsmok'd lay by his side. Swift.

UNSMO'OTH, adj. Rough; not even; not level. Not used.
Those blossoms, and those dropping gums
That lie bestrown, unsightly and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.

UNSO'CIABLE, adj. [insociabilis, Lat.] Not kind; not communicative of good; not suitable to society.—Such a behaviour deters men from a religious life, by representing it as an unsociable state, that extinguishes all joy. Addison.

UNSO'CIABLY, adv. Not kindly; without good-nature.—These are pleas'd with nothing that is not unsociably sour, ill-natur'd, and troublesome. L'Estrange.

UNSO'CIAL, adj. Not beneficial to society; hurtful to society. Mason.
Why brand these pleasures with the name
Of soft unsocial toils. Shenstone.

UNSO'FT, adj. [unsofte, Saxon,] Not soft; hard.—His beard unsoft. Chaucer.

UNSO'FT, adv. Not with softness.—Great climbers fall unsoft. Spenser.

UNSO'ILED, adj. Not polluted; not tainted; not stained.

Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsoil'd name, the austereness of my life,
Will your accusation outweigh. Shakspeare.

UNSO'LD, adj. Not exchanged for money.
Mopsus the sage, who future things foretold,
And t' other seer, yet by his wife unsoild. Dryden.

UNSO'LDIERED, adj. Wanting the accomplishments of a soldier.

This young prince had the ordering
(To crown his father's hopes) of all the army;
Who (to be short) put all his power to practise,
Fashion'd and drew them up; but, alas! so poorly,
So raggedly and loosely, so unsoldier'd,
The good duke blush'd. Beaum. and Fl.

UNSO'LDIERLIKE, or UNSO'LDIERLY, adj. Unbecoming a soldier.—The general should have turned his eyes away from so unsoldierly an action. Rymer.

UNSOLICITED, adj. Not required; not solicited.—Thanks must be voluntary; not only unconstrained, but unsolicited; else they are either trifles or snares. Id. Halifax.

UNSO'LID, adj. Fluid; not coherent.—The extension of body is nothing but the cohesion of solid, separable moveable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of unsoild, inseparable and unmoveable parts. Locke.
Having no foundation.

Ah! whither now are fled
Those dreams of greatness! those unsoild hopes Of happiness! Thomson.

UNSO'LVED, adj. Not explicated.—Why may not a sincere searcher of truth, by labour and prayer, find out the solution of those perplexities, which have hitherto been unsoived? Watts.

UNSO'LVIBLE, adj. Not explicable.—If unsoivable otherwise, there is still the more assurance of undeniable demonstration. More.

UNSOO'T, adj. Not sweet. See SOOTE, and SWEET.—Follies—rotten and unsoote. Spenser.

UNSO'PHI'STICATE, or UNSO'PHI'STICATED, adj. Not adulterated; not counterfeit.—The humour and tuncles are purely transparent, to let in light and colours, unfouled and unsophisticated by any inward tincture. More.

UNSORROWED, adj. Not bewailed; unlamented.—What heaps of grievous transgressions have we committed, the best, the perfectest, the most righteous of us all, and yet clean pass them over unsorrowed for, and unrepented of! Hooker.

UNSO'RTED, adj. Not distributed by proper separation.—Their ideas, ever indifferent and repugnant, lie in the brain unsorted, and thrown together without order. Watts.—Not suitable. Mason.—The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named uncertain; the time itself unsorted. Shakspeare.

UNSO'UGHT, adj. Had without seeking.
Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth,
That would be woo'd, and not unsought be won. Milton.

They new hope resume,
To find whom at the first they found unsought. Milton.
Thou that art ne'er from velvet slipper free,
Whence comes this unsought honour unto me? Fenton.

Not searched; not explored.
Hopeless to find, yet loth to leave unsought,
Or that, or any place that harbours men. Shakspeare.

To UNSO'UL, v. a. To divest of mind; to deprive of understanding.—Such debauchedness of life, when it hath unsouled the man, buries the beast in excess and riot. Hewyt.

UNSO'ULED, adj. Without soul; without intellectual or vital principle.

Death with most grim and grisly visage seen,
Yet is he nought but parting of the breath,
Ne aught to see, but like a shade to ween,
Unbodied, unsould, unheard, unseen. Spenser.

UNSO'UND, adj. Sickly ; wanting health.

Intemp'rate youth

Ends in an age imperfect, and unsound. Denham.

Not free from cracks.—Rotten ; corrupted.—Not orthodox.—These arguments being sound and good, it cannot be unsound or evil to hold still the same assertion. Hooker.—Not honest ; not upright.

Do not tempt my misery.

Lest it should make me so unsound a man,

As to upbraid you with those kindnesses

That I have done for you. Shakspeare.

Not true ; not certain ; not solid.

Their vain humours, fed

With fruitless follies and unsound delights. Spenser.

Not fast ; not calm.

The now sad king,

Toss'd here and there, his quiet to confound,

Feels sudden terror bring cold shivering ;

Lists not to eat ; still muses ; sleeps unsound. Daniel.

Not close ; not compact.—Some lands make unsound cheese, notwithstanding all the care of the good housewife. Mortimer.

Not sincere ; not faithful.

This Boobyclud soon drops upon the ground

A certain token that his love's unsound ;

While Lubberkin sticks firmly. Gay.

Not solid ; not material.

Of such subtle substance and unsound,

That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths are unbound. Spenser.

Erroneous ; wrong.

What fury, what conceit unsound,

Presenteth here to death so sweet a child ? Fairfax.

Not fast under foot.

UNSO'UNDED, adj. Not tried by the plummet.

Glo'ster is Unsound yet, and full of deep deceit. Shakspeare.

UNSO'UNDNESS, s. Erroneousness of belief ; want of orthodoxy.—If this be unsound, wherein doth the point of unsoundness lie ? Hooker.—Corruptness of any kind.—Neither is it to all men apparent, which complain of unsound parts, with what kind of unsoundness every such part is possessed. Hooker.—Want of strength ; want of solidity.—The unsoundness of this principle has been often exposed and is universally acknowledged. Addison.

UNSOURED, adj. Not made sour.—Meat and drink last longer unputrified and unsour'd in winter than in summer. Bacon.—Not made morose.

Secure these golden early joys,

That youth unsour'd with sorrow bears. Dryden.

UNSO'WN, adj. Not propagated by scattering seed.—

Mushrooms come up hastily in a night, and yet are unsown. Bacon.

UNSPA'RED, adj. Not spared.

Whatever thing

The scythe of time mows down, devour unspared. Milton.

UNSPA'RING, adj. Not parsimonious.

She gathers tribute large, and on the board

Heaps with unsparring hand. Milton.

Not merciful.—The unsparring sword of justice. Milton.

To UNSPE'AK, v. a. To retract ; to recant.

I put myself to thy direction, and

Unspeak mine own defraction ; here abjure

The taints and blames I laid up on myself. Shakspeare.

UNSP'EAKABLE, adj. Not to be expressed ; ineffable ; unutterable.—A thing, which uttered with true devotion and zeal of heart, affordeth to God himself that glory, that aid to the weakest sort of men, to the most perfect that solid comfort, which is unsp'eakable. Hooker.

UNSP'EAKABLY, adv. Inexpressibly ; ineffably.—When nature is in her dissolution, and presents us with nothing but bleak and barren prospects, there is something unsp'eakably cheerful in a spot of ground which is covered with trees, that smile amidst all the rigours of winter. Speculator.

UNSP'E'CIFED, adj. Not particularly mentioned.—Were it not requisite that it should be concealed, it had not passed unspecified. Brown.

UNSP'E'CULATIVE, adj. Not theoretical.—Some unspeculative men may not have the skill to examine their assertions. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNSP'E'D, adj. Not dispatched ; not performed.

Venustus withdraws,

Unsped the service of the common cause. Garth ;

UNSP'ENT, adj. Not wasted ; not diminished ; not weakened ; not exhausted.—The sound inclosed within the sides of the bell, cometh forth at the holes, unspent and more strong. Bacon.

To UNSP'E'RE, v. a. To remove from its orb.

You put me off with limber vows ; but I,

Though you wou'd seek t' unspere the stars with oaths,

Should yet say, Sir, no going. Shakspeare.

UNSP'IED, adj. Not searched ; not explored.

With narrow search I must walk round

This garden, and no corner leave unspy'd. Milton.

Not seen ; not discovered.

Resolv'd to find some fault, before unspy'd,

And disappointed, if but satisfy'd. Tickell.

UNSP'ILT, adj. Not shed.

That blood which thou and thy great grandsire shed ;

And all that since these sister nations bled,

Had been unspilt, had happy Edward known,

That all the blood he spilt had been his own. Denham.

Not spoiled ; not marred.

To borrow to-day, and to-morrow to mis,

For lender or borrower noance it is ;

Then have of thine owne, without lending, unspilt. Tusser.

To UNSP'IRIT, v. a. To dispirit ; to depress ; to deject.—Denmark has continued ever since weak and unsp'irit, bent only upon safety. Temple.

UNSP'IRITUAL, adj. Not spiritual ; carnal.—These divisions, the character of a carnal and unspiritual temper, at once weaken and dishonour the protestant cause. Puller.

To UNSP'IRITUALIZE, v. a. To deprive of spirituality.—There are several enjoyments in themselves very lawful, and yet such as, upon a free unwary use of them, will by degrees certainly indispose and unspiritualize the mind. South.

UNSPO'ILED, adj. Not plundered ; not pillaged.—All the way that they fled, for very despight, in their return they utterly wasted whatsoever they had before left unspoiled.

Spenser.—Not marred ; not hurt ; not made useless ; not corrupted.—Bathurst, yet unspoil'd by wealth. Pope.

UNSPO'TTED, adj. Not marked with any stain.

A milk-white hind,

Without unspotted, innocent within. Dryden.

Seven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,

And for Diana seven unspotted ewes. Dryden.

Immaculate ; not tainted with guilt.

Satyran bid him other business ply,

Than hunt the steps of pure, unspotted maid. Spenser.

UNSPO'TTEDNESS, s. State of being unspotted or not tainted with guilt.—Charity, and unspottedness, is the pure and undefiled religion. Feltham.

UNSPUA'RED, adj. Not formed ; irregular.

When he speaks,

'Tis like a chime a-mending, with terms unspuar'd ;

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,

Would seem hyperboles. Shakspeare.

UNST,

UNST, the most northern of the Shetland isles, being situated in 61. 12. N. Lat. From south to north it is about 10 miles long, and in some places 7 miles broad, and its area includes about 40 square miles. The general aspect is diversified into hill and dale, with several small lakes; and the arable land is disposed in strips by the shore, more especially at the south end, where it is pretty broad. Altogether it amounts to about 1875 acres, under crops. The gardens are well stored with culinary vegetables and the smaller fruits, with a display of most flowers that Scotland can produce. The artichoke also is in great perfection in this island. The live stock consists of cattle; little horses, extremely hardy creatures, but none exceeding ten hands and a half in height, owing probably to the hard treatment they meet with, never being indulged with a stable, even in the coldest weather. The sheep are of a pretty large size compared with the rest of the Zetland sheep, and they have remarkably fine fleeces: there are also many swine, of a considerable size. Rabbits are also exceedingly abundant. The domestic poultry, including turkeys, are very numerous. Of game there is neither grouse nor partridge, but the corn rail is frequently heard; and there are multitudes of aquatic birds, such as snipe, plover, curlew, duck, swan, goose, heron; also wild pigeons. The birds of prey are eagles, (extremely destructive to the lambs), hawks, ravens, crows. Unst forms a parish of itself, which contains 2288 inhabitants.

UNSTA'BLE, adj. [instabilis, Lat.] Not fixed; not fast. Thus air was void of light, and earth unstable. Dryden.—Inconstant: irresolute.—A double-minded man is unstable. James.

UNSTA'ID, adj. Not cool; not prudent; not settled into discretion; not steady; mutable.

To the gay gardens his unstead desire
Him wholly carried, to refresh his sprights Spenser.

UNSTA'IDNESS, s. Indiscretion; volatile mind. Uncertain motion.—The oft changing of his colour, with a kind of shaking unsteadiness over all his body, he might see in his countenance some great determination mixed with fear. Sidney.

UNSTA'INED, adj. Not stained; not dyed; not discoloured; not dishonoured; not polluted.—Pure and unstained religion ought to be the highest of all cares appertaining to public regimen. Hooker.

To UNSTA'ITE, v. a. To put out of dignity.

High-battled Cæsar will
Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to th' shew
Against a sword. Shakspeare.

UNSTA'TUTABLE, adj. Contrary to statute.—That plea did not avail, although the lease were notoriously unstatutable, the rent reserved, being not a seventh part of the real value. Swift.

UNSTA'UNCHED, adj. Not stopped; not stayed.

With the issuing blood
Stifle the villain, whose unstaunched thirst
York and young Rutland could not satisfy. Shakspeare.

UNSTE'ADFAST, adj. Not fixed; not fast; not resolute.

I'll read you matter,
As full of peril and adventurous spirit,
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear. Shakspeare.

UNSTE'ADILY, adv. Without any certainty. Inconstantly; not consistently.—He that uses his words loosely and unsteadily, will not be minded, or not understood. Locke.

UNSTE'ADINESS, s. Want of constancy; irresolution; mutability.—A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics. Addison.

UNSTE'ADY, adj. Inconstant; irresolute.
And her unsteady hand hath often plac'd
Men in high pow'r, but seldom holds them fast. Denham.
Not fixed; not settled.

UNSTE'ADFASTNESS, s. Want of steadfastness.—The unquietness and unsteadfastness of some dispositions affecting, every year, new forms of things. K. James.

UNSTEE'PED, adj. Not soaked.—Other wheat was sown unsteeped, but watered twice a day. Bacon.

UNSTILL, adj. [unrille, Sax.] Unquiet.
To UNSTING, v. a. To disarm of a sting.—He has disarmed his afflictions, unstung his miseries: and though he has not the proper happiness of the world, yet he has the greatest that is to be enjoyed in it. South.

UNSTINTED, adj. Not limited.—In the works of nature is unstinted goodness shewn us by their author. Skelton.

UNSTI'RRED, adj. Not stirred; not agitated.—Such seeming milks suffered to stand unstirred, let fall to the bottom a resinous substance. Boyle.

To UNSTITCH, v. a. To open by picking the stitches.—Cato well observes, though in the phrase of a tailor, friendship ought not to be unripped, but unstitched. Collier.

UNSTON, a township of England, in Derbyshire; 4½ miles north-by-west of Chesterfield. Population 439.

UNSTO'OPING, adj. Not bending; not yielding.
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
Th' unstooping firmness of my upright soul. Shakspeare.

To UNSTO'P, v. a. To free from stop or obstruction; to open.—Such white fumes have been afforded, by unstopping a liquor diaphanous and red. Boyle.

UNSTO'PPED, adj. Meeting no resistance.
The flame unstop'd, at first more fury gains,
And vulcan rides at large with loosen'd reins. Dryden.

UNSTO'RMED, adj. Not taken by assault.
The doom
Of towns unstorm'd, and battles yet to come. Addison.

UNSTRA'INED, adj. Easy; not forced.—By an easy and unstrained derivation, it implies the breath of God. Hakewill.

UNSTRA'ITENED, adj. Not contracted.—The eternal wisdom, from which we derive our beings, enriched us with all these ennoblements that were suitable to the measures of an unstrained goodness, and the capacity of such a creature. Glanville.

UNSTRE'NGTHENED, adj. Not supported; not assisted.—The church of God is neither of capacity so weak, nor so unstrengthened with authority from above, but that her laws may exact obedience at the hands of her own children. Hooker.

To UNSTRING, v. a. To relax any thing strung; to deprive of strings.

My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed viol or harp. Shakspeare.

To loose; to untie.
Invaded thus, for want of better bands,
His garland they unstring, and bind his hands. Dryden.

UNSTRU'CK, adj. Not moved; not affected.
Over dank and dry,
They journey toilsome, unfatigu'd with length
Of march, unstruck with horror at the sight
Of Alpine ridges bleak. Philips.

UNSTRUT, a river in the west of Germany, which rises in the Eichsfeld, receives the Salza, the Gera, the Helbe, the Loss, the Kipper, the Helme, &c. and joins the Saale, about two miles north of Naumburg.

UNSTU'DIED, adj. Not premeditated; not laboured. In your conversation I cou'd observe a clearness of notion, express'd in ready and unstudied words. Dryden.

UNSTU'FFED, adj. Unfilled; not crowded.
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye;
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie:
But where unbruised youth with unstuft brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.

Shakspeare.
UNSU'BJECT,

UNSUBJECT, adj. Not subject; not liable; not obnoxious. Unused.

UNSUBMITTING, adj. Not obsequious; not readily yielding; disdainful submission.

A Hampden too is thine, illustrious land,
Wise, strenuous, firm, of unsubmitting soul. Thomson.

UNSUBSTANTIAL, adj. Not solid; not palpable.

Welcome, thou unsubstantial air that I embrace;
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakspeare.

Not real.—If empty, unsubstantial beings may be ever made use of on this occasion, there were never any more nicely imagined and employed. Addison.

UNSUCCESS'ED, adj. Not succeeded.

Unjust equal o'er equals to let reign;
One over all, with unsucceeded power. Milton.

UNSUCCESSFUL, adj. Not having the wished event; not fortunate.

O the sad fate of unsuccessful sin!
You see yon heads without, there's worse within. Cleaveland.

UNSUCCESSFULLY, adv. Unfortunately; without success.—The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently; while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully, and, perhaps, in the issue, unsuccessfully too. South.

UNSUCCESSFULNESS, s. Want of success; event contrary to wish.—Admonitions, fraternal or paternal, then more public reprehensions, and upon the unsuccessfulness of all these milder medicaments, the censures of the church. Hammond.

UNSUCCESSIVE, adj. Not proceeding by flux of parts.—The unsuccessive duration of God with relation to himself, doth not communicate unto other created beings the same manner of duration. Hale.

UNSU'CKED, adj. Not having the breasts drawn.—Un-suck'd of lamb or kid that tend their play. Milton.

UNSUPPORTABLE, adj. Not supportable; intolerable; not to be endured.

UNSUFFICIENCE, s. [insuffisance, Fr.] Inability to answer the end proposed.—The error and unsufficiency of the arguments, doth make it on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hooker.

UNSUFFICIENT, adj. [insuffisant, Fr.] Unable; inadequate.

UNSUGARED, adj. Not sweetened with sugar.—Try it with sugar put into water formerly sugared, and into other water unsugared. Bacon.

UNSUITABLE, adj. Not congruous; not equal; not proportionate.—Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion; richly suited, but unsuitable, just like the brooch and the toothpick, which we wear not now. Shakspeare.

UNSUITABLENESS, s. Incongruity; unfitness.—The unsuitableness of one man's aspect to another man's fancy has raised such an aversion, as has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.

UNSUITING, adj. Not fitting; not becoming.

Whilst you were here, o'erwhelmed with your grief,
A passion most unsuiting such a man. Shakspeare.

Leave thy joys, unsuiting such an age,
To a fresh comer, and resign the stage. Dryden.

UNSULLIED, adj. Not fouled; not disgraced; pure.

My maiden honour yet is pure
As the unsullied lily. Shakspeare.

UNSUNG, adj. Not celebrated in verse; not recited in verse.

Thus was the first day ev'n and morn,
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton.

UNSUN'NED, adj. Not exposed to the sun.—I thought her as chaste as unsunn'd snow. Shakspeare.

UNSUPERFLUOUS, adj. Not more than enough. Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion. Milton.

UNSUPPLANTED, adj. Not forced or thrown from under that which supports it.

Gladsome they quaff, yet not encroach on night,
Season of rest; but well bedew'd repair
Each to his home with unsupplanted feet. Philips.

Not defeated by stratagem.

UNSUPPLIABLE, adj. Not to be supplied.—The unsuppliable defect of any necessary antecedent must needs cause a nullity of all those consequences which depend upon it. Chillingworth.

UNSUPPLIED, adj. Not supplied; not accommodated with something necessary.

Prodigal in every other grant,
Her sire left unsupply'd her only want. Dryden.

UNSUPPORTABLE, adj. [insupportable, Fr.] Intolerable; such as cannot be endured.—The uneasiness of unrelieved thirst, by continuance grows the more unsupportable. Boyle.

UNSUPPORTABLENESS, s. State of being unsupportable.—The unsupportableness of this many times doth cause men in the bitterness of their souls to chuse strangling and death rather than life. Wilkins.

UNSUPPORTABLY, adv. Intolerably.—For a man to do a thing, while his conscience assures him that he shall be infinitely, unsupportably miserable, is certainly unnatural. South.

UNSUPPORT'ED, adj. Not sustained; not held up.

Them she up-stays
Gently with myrtle-band, mindless the while Herself, though fairest, unsupported flower. Milton.

Not assisted.—Nor have our solitary attempts been so discouraged, as to despair of the favourable look of learning upon our single and unsupported endeavours. Brown.

UNSUPPRESSED, adj. Not suppressed; not kept under; not extinguished.—Driven away by unsuppressed tumults. King Charles.

UNSURE, adj. Not fixed; not certain.

What is love? 'tis not hereafter:
Present mirth hath present laughter;
What's to come is still unsure. Shakspeare.

UNSURMOUNTABLE, adj. [insurmountable, Fr.] insuperable; not to be overcome.

UNSUSCEPTIBLE, adj. Incapable; not liable to admit. She a goddess died in grain,
Was unsusceptible of stain. Swift.

UNSUSPECT, or UNSUSPECT'ED, adj. Not considered as likely to do or mean ill.

Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings. Shakspeare.

Author unsuspect,

Friendly to man, far from deceit or guile. Milton.

UNSUSPECTING, adj. Not imagining that any ill is designed.

When Albion sends her eager sons to war,
Pleas'd, in the general's sight, the host lie down
Sudden, before some unsuspecting town;
The captive race, one instant makes our prize,
And high in air Britannia's standard flies. Pope.

UNSUSPICIOUS, adj. Having no suspicion.

He his guide requested to let him lean
With both his arms on those two massy pillars,
That to the arched roof gave main support.
He unsuspicious led him. Milton.

UNUSTAINABLE, adj. Not to be sustained.—The weapon of the slanderer is an envenomed arrow, full of deadly poison, which by no force can be resisted, by no art declined; declined; whose impression is, altogether inevitable and unsustainable. Barrow.

UNSUSTAINED, adj. Not supported; not held up.

Its head, though gay,
Hung drooping, unsustain'd. Milton.

To UNSWATHE, v. a. To free from folds or convolutions of bandage.—In the morning an old woman came to unswathe me. Addison.

UNSWAYABLE, adj. Not to be governed or influenced by another.

He bow'd his nature, never known before
But to be rough, unswayable and free. Shakspeare.

UNSWAYED, adj. Not wielded; not held in the hand.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—
—Is the chair empty? is the sword unsway'd?
Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd? Shakspeare.

UNSWAYEDNESS, s. Steadiness; state of being un-governed by another.—That constancy and unswayedness in our lives and actions, that rock which no tempest can move. Hales.

To UNSWEAR, v. n. Not to swear; to recant any thing sworn.

The ape was glad to end the strife so light,
And thereto swore; for who would not oft swear,
And oft unswear, a diadem to bear? Spenser.

To UNSWEAR, v. a. To recal what is sworn.—Unswear that oath again; I'll tell you all. Beaum. and Fl.

To UNSWEAT, v. a. To ease after fatigue; to cool after exercise.

UNSWEATING, adj. Not sweating.
In frost and snow, if you complain of heat,
They rub th' unswearing brow, and swear thy sweat. Dryden.

UNSWEET, adj. [unþæt, Saxon.] Not sweet; disagreeable.

Long were to tell the troublous storms that toss
The private state, and make the life unsweet. Spenser.

UNSWEPT, adj. Not brushed away; not cleaned by sweeping.

What custom wills in all things, should we do't,
The dust of antique time would lie unswept. Shakspeare.

UNSWORN, adj. Not bound by an oath.

You are yet unsworn:
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men. Shakspeare.

To UNTA'CK, v. a. To disjoin; to separate.—Little ado methinks I find in untacking these pleasant sophisms. Milton.—Faith alone can untack our minds and affections from this world, rearing our souls from earth, and fixing them in heaven. Barrow.

UNTAINTED, adj. Not sullied; not polluted.
Sweet prince th' untainted virtue of your years
Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit. Shakspeare.

Not charged with any crime.
And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd
Untainted, unexamined, free at liberty. Shakspeare.

Not corrupted by mixture.
The conscious walls conceal the fatal secret;
Th' untainted winds refuse th' infecting load. Smith.

UNTAINTEDLY, adv. Without spot; without imputation of crime.—A school untaintedly loyal. South.

UNTAINTEDNESS, s. State or quality of being untainted.—Purity and untaintedness in respect of any mixture or corruption. Bp. Hall.

UNTA'KEN, adj. Not taken.—Until this day remaineth the veil untaken away. 2 Cor.

UNTA'KEN up. Not filled.—The narrow limits of this discourse, will leave no more room untaken up by heaven. Boyle.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1651.

UNTA'LKED of, adj. Not mentioned in the world.

No happiness can be, where is no rest;
The unknown, untalk'd of man is only blest. Dryden.

UNTA'MEABLE, adj. Not to be tamed; not to be subdued.—Gold is so untameable by the fire, that after many meltings and violent heats, it does scarce diminish. Wilkins.

UNTA'MED, adj. [untæmēs, Sax., indomitus.] Not subdued; not suppressed; not softened by culture or discipline.—A people very stubborn and untamed; or, if ever tamed, yet lately have quite shaken off their yoke, and broken the bonds of their obedience. Spenser.

To UNTANGLE, v. a. To loose from intricacy or convolution.

O time, thou must untangle this, not I;
It is too hard a knot for me t' untie. Shakspeare.

UNTA'STED, adj. Not tasted; not tried by the palate.
If he chance to find

A new repast, or an untasted spring,
Blesses his stars, and thinks it luxury. Addison.

UNTA'STING, adj. Not perceiving any taste.
Cydonian oil,

Whose balmy juice glides o'er the untasting tongue. Smith.
Not trying by the palate.

UNTA'UGHT, adj. Uninstructed; uneducated; ignorant; unlettered.—A lie is continually in the mouth of the untaught. Eccelus.—Debar'd from instruction.—He that from a child untaught, or a wild inhabitant of the woods, will expect principles of sciences, will find himself mistaken. Locke.—Unskilled; new; not having use or practice.

Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,
Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour. Shakspeare.

UNTA'XED, adj. Not charged with taxes.
Calm around the common room

I puff'd my daily pipe's perfume;—
And din'd untax'd, untroubled, under
The portrait of our pious founder. Warton.

Exempt from reproach.—Common speech leaves no virtue untax'd. Bacon.

To UNTEA'CH, v. a. To make to quit, or forget what has been inculcated.—That elder berries are poison, as we are taught by tradition, experience will unteach us. Brown.

UNTEA'CHABLE, adj. That cannot be taught.—The unteachable man hath a soul to all reason and good advice invincible. Milton.

UNTE'EMING, adj. [untæmenō, Sax.] Barren.
UNTE'MPERED, adj. Not tempered.—One built up a wall, and others daubed it with untempered mortar. Ezek.

UNTE'MPTED, adj. Not embarrassed by temptation.—In temptation dispute not, but rely upon God, and contend not with him but in prayer, and with the help of a prudent untempted guide. Bp. Taylor.—Not invited by any thing alluring.

Untempted, or by wager or by price,
He would attempt to climb the precipice. Cotton.

UNTE'NABLE, adj. Not to be held in possession.—Not capable of defence.—He produced a warrant, that the town being untenable, he should retire. Clarendon.—Casaubon abandons a post that was untenable. Dryden.

UNTE'NANTED, adj. Having no tenant.—The country seems to be full stocked with cattle, no ground being untenanted. Temple.

UNTE'NDED, adj. Not having any attendance.—They fall, unblest, unteneded, and unmournd. Thomson.

UNTE'NDER, adj. Wanting softness; wanting affection.
So young, and so untender?
—So young, my lord, and true. Shakspeare.

UNTE'NDERED, adj. Not offered.
Cassibelan granted Rome a tribute,
Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee lately
Is left untender'd. Shakspeare.

To UNTE'NT, v. a. To bring out of a tent.
Will he not, upon our fair request,
Untent his person, and share the air with us? Shakspeare.

UNTE'NTED, adj. Having no medicaments applied.
Blasts and fogs upon thee!
The untented woundings of a father's curse
Pierce every sense about thee! Shakspeare.

UNTE'RRIFIED, adj. Not affrighted; not struck with fear.

Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, unsecur'd, unterrify'd. Milton.

UNTERSEEN, a small town and bailiwick of the Swiss canton of Bern, on the Aar; 26 miles south-east of Bern, and 23 south-south-west of Lucerne.

UNTERWALDEN, a canton situated almost in the centre of Switzerland, to the east of Bern, and south of Lucerne. It is one of the smallest in the republic, containing only 300 square miles, with 22,000 inhabitants. It consists of four vallies covered with meadows and pasture lands, and surrounded by lofty mountains, which form part of the Alps, and rise to various heights, from 3000 to 10,000 feet; two of these, the Tittlis and Surenes, are covered with glaciers and perpetual snow. In other parts, lakes, rocks, and caverns, are the characteristics of this romantic country.

The canton is divided into two parts, by an extensive forest; and its chief towns, or rather villages, are Sarnen and Stanz. The constitution of this canton is democratic.

UNTHANK, a township of England, in Cumberland; 5½ miles north-west of Penrith.—2d. A hamlet in the same county; 13 miles west-by-south of Alnwick.

UNTHA'NKED, adj. Not repaid with acknowledgement of kindness.

Their batter'd admiral too soon withdrew,
Unthank'd by our's for his unfinish'd fight. Dryden.

Not received with thankfulness.

Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live:
Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.

UNTHA'NKFUL, adj. [unðancfull, Sax.] Ungrateful; returning no acknowledgement for good received.—He is kind to the unthankful. St. Luke.

UNTHA'NKFULLY, adv. Without thanks; without gratitude.—I judged it requisite to say something, to prevent my being thought to have unthankfully taken one of the chief passages of my discourse from a book to which I was utterly a stranger. Boyle.

UNTHA'NKFULNESS, s. [unðancfullneffe, Saxon.] Neglect or omission of acknowledgement for good received; want of sense of benefits; ingratitude.—Thou diest in thine unthankfulness; and thine ignorance makes thee away. Shakspeare.

UNTHA'WED, adj. Not dissolved after frost.

Your wine lock'd up,
Or fish deny'd the river yet unthaw'd. Pope.

To UNTHI'NK, v. a. To recal or dismiss a thought.—Unthink your speaking, and say so no more. Shakspeare.

UNTHI'NKING, adj. Thoughtless; not given to reflection.—The unthinking part contract an unreasonable aversion to that ecclesiastical constitution. Addison.

UNTHI'NKINGNESS, s. Constant want of thought. Mason.—In this kind of indifference or unthinkingness I will suppose he might pass some considerable part of his youth. Ld. Halifax.

UNTHOR'NY, adj. Not obstructed by prickles.—It were some extenuation of the curse, if in sudore vultus tui were confinable unto corporal exertations, and there still remained a paradise, or unthorny place of knowledge. Brown.

UNTHOUGHT, part. adj. Not supposed to be. Mason.
So sweetly taken to the court of bliss,
As spirits had stol'n her spirits in a kiss
From off her pillow and deluded bed,
And left her lovely body unthought dead. B. Jonson.

UNTHOUGHT of. Not regarded; not heeded.
That shall be the day, when'er it lights,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought of Harry chance to meet. Shakspeare.

To UNTHRE'AD v. a. To loose.
He with his bare wand can unthread thy joints,
And crumble all thy sinews. Milton.

UNTHRE'ATENED, adj. Not menaced.—Sir John Hotham was unapproached and unthreatened, by any language of mine. King Charles.

UNTHRIFT, s. An extravagant; a prodigal.
My rights and royalties
Pluckt from my arms perforce, and giv'n away
To upstart unthrifts. Shakspeare.

UNTHRIFT, adj. Profuse; wasteful; prodigal; extravagant.

In such a night,
Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew
And, with an unthrift love, did run from Venice. Shakspeare.

UNTHRIFTILY, adv. Without frugality.—Our attainments cannot be overlarge, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthriftilly. Collier.

UNTHRIFTINESS s. Waste; prodigality; profusion.—The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the moat should they endeavour to expiate that unthriftiness, by a more careful managery for the future. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNTHRIFTY, adj. Prodigal; profuse; lavish; wasteful.—The castle I found of good strength, having a great moat round about it; the work of a noble gentleman, of whose unthriftly son he had bought it. Sidney.—Not in a state of improvement.—Our absence makes us unthriftly to our knowledge. Shakspeare.—Not easily made to thrive or fatten. A low word.—Grains given to a hide-bound, or unthriftly horse, recover him. Mortimer.

UNTHRIVING, adj. Not thriving; not prospering; not growing rich.—Let all who thus unhappily employ their inventive faculty, consider, how unthriving a trade it is finally like to prove, that their false accusations of others will rebound in true ones on themselves. Gov. of the Tongue.

To UNTHRO'NE, v. a. To pull down from a throne.
Him to unthrone, we then
May hope, when everlasting fate shall yield
To fickle chance, and chaos judge the strife. Milton.

UNTY'DY, adj. Not tidy; not seasonable; not ready.—They were poore, abject, and untidy. Bale.—Hither to ye are come by an untidy parliament. Archd. Arnway.

To UNTIE, v. a. [untizan, Sax.] To unbind; to free from bonds.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare.

To loosen; to make not fast; to unfasten.
The chain I'll in return untie,
And freely thou again shalt fly. Prior.

To loosen from convolution or knot.
The fury heard; while on Cocytus' brink,
Her snakes untied, sulphureous waters drink. Pope.

To set free from any obstruction.—All the evils of an untied tongue, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Bp. Taylor.—To resolve; to clear.—A little more study will solve those difficulties, untie the knot, and make your doubts vanish. Watts.

UNTYED, adj. Not bound; not gathered in a knot.
Her hair
Unty'd, and ignorant of artful aid,
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd. Prior.

Not fastened by any binding, or knot.—Your horse should be ungartered, your shoe untied, and every thing about about you demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakspeare.

—Not fast. Not held by any tie or band.

UNTIL, adv. To the time that.

Treasures are acted,

As soon as thought; though they are never believ'd
Until they come to act. Denham.

To the place that.

In open prospect nothing bounds our eye,
Until the earth seems join'd unto the sky. Dryden.

To the degree that.—Thou shalt push Syria until they be consumed. 2 Chron.

UNTIL, prep. To. Used of time.—His sons were priests of the tribe of Dan until the day of the captivity. Judges.—To. Used of objects. Obsolete.

So soon as he from far descriv'd
Those glistering arms, that heaven with light did fill,
He rous'd himself full blithe, and hasten'd them until.

Spenser.

To UNTILE, v. a. To strip of tiles.—It is natural, when a storm is over, that hath only untiled our houses and blown down some of our chimneys, to consider what further mischiefs might have ensued, if it had lasted longer. Swift.

UNTILLED, adj. Not cultivated.—The glebe untill'd, might plenteous crops have borne. Blackmore.

UNTIMBERED, adj. Not furnished with timber; weak.

Where's then the saucy boat,
Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now
Co-rival'd greatness? or to harbour fled,
Or made a toast for Neptune? Shakspeare.

UNTIMELY, adj. Happening before the natural time.
Boundless intemp'rance hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne. Shakspeare.

Ill-timed, in any respect.

So untimely breach
The prince himselfe half seemed to offend. Spenser.

UNTIMELY, adv. Before the natural time.
He only fair, and what he fair hath made;
All other fair, like flowers untimely fade. Spenser.

UNTINGED, adj. Not stained; not discoloured.—It appears what beams are untinged, and which paint the primary, or secondary iris. Boyle.—Not infected.—Your inattention I cannot pardon; Pope has the same defect, neither is Bolingbroke untinged with it. Swift.

UNTRABLE, adj. Indefatigable; unwearied.
A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were
To an untrable and continueate goodness. Shakspeare.

UNTIRED, adj. Not made weary.
Hath he so long held out with me untir'd,
And stops he now for breath? Shakspeare.

UNTITLED, adj. Having no title.
O nation miserable!
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd;
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Shakspeare.

UNTO, prep. [It was the old word for to; now obsolete.] To. See TO.—O continue thy loving-kindness unto them. Ps.—It was their hurt untruly to attribute such great power unto false gods. Hooker.

UNTO'LD, adj. Not related.
Better a thousand such as I,
Their grief untold, should pine and die;
Than her bright morning, overcast
With sullen clouds, should be defac'd. Waller.

Not revealed.—Obscene words are very indecent to be heard: for that reason, such a tale shall be left untold by me. Dryden.—Not numbered.

To UNTO'NB, v. a. To disinter.—John, king of England, being wished by a courtier to untomb the bones of one who, whilst he was living, had been his greatest enemy,— oh no, he said, would all mine enemies were as honourably buried! Fuller.

UNTOUCHABLE, adj. Not to be touched.—Their persons sacred. untouchable as to prejudice. Feltham.

UNTOUCHED, adj. Not touched; not reached.—Achilles, though dipt in Styx, yet having his heel untouched by that water, was slain in that part. Brown.—Not moved; not affected.—They, like persons wholly untouched with his agonies, and unmoved with his passionate intreaties, sleep away all concern for him or themselves. Sidney.—Not meddled with.

We must pursue the sylvan lands;
The abode of nymphs, untouch'd by former hands. Dryden.

UNTO'WARD, adj. Froward; perverse; vexatious; not easily guided, or taught.

Have to my window; and if she be froward,
Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward.
Shakspeare.

Awkward; ungraceful.

Vast is my theme, yet unconceiv'd, and brings Untoward words, scarce loosen'd from the things. Creech.

Some clergymen hold down their heads within an inch of the cushion; which, besides the untoward manner, hinders them from making the best advantage of their voice. Swift.—Inconvenient; troublesome; unmanageable.

The Rabbins write, when any Jew
Did make to God or man a vow,
Which afterwards he found untoward,
Or stubborn to be kept, or too hard;
Any three other Jews o' th' nation,
Might free him from the obligation. Hudibras.

UNTO'WARDLY, adj. Awkward; perverse; froward.—They learn, from unbred or debauched servants, untowardly tricks and vices. Locke.

UNTO'WARDLY, adv. Awkwardly; ungainly; perversely.—He that provides for this short life, but takes no care for eternity, acts as untowardly and as crossly to the reason of things, as can be. Tillotson.

UNTO'WARDNESS, s. Perverseness.—Christ hath prevailed with God to overlook the untowardness of our nature. Bp. Wilson.

UNTRA'CEABLE, adj. Not to be traced.—The workings of providence are secret and untracable, by which it disposes of the lives of men. South.

UNTRA'CED, adj. Not marked by any footsteps.
Nor wonder, if advantag'd in my flight,
By taking wing from thy auspicious height,
Through untrac'd ways, and airy paths I fly,
More boundless in my fancy than my eye. Denham.

UNTRA'CKED, adj. Not marked by any footsteps; untraced.—In untrack'd woods concealing his offence. Sandys.

UNTRA'CTABLE, adj. [intractable, Fr.; intractibilis, Latin.] Not yielding to common measures and management; not governable; stubborn.—If any father have a son thus perverse and untractable, I know not what more he can do but pray for him. Locke.—Rough; difficult.—I forc'd to ride the untractable abyss. Milton.

UNTRA'CTABLENESS, s. Unwillingness, or unfitness to be regulated or managed; stubbornness.—The great difference in men's intellectuals arises from a defect in the organs of the body, particularly adapted to think; or in the dulness or untractableness of those faculties, for want of use. Locke.

UNTRA'DING, adj. Not engaged in commerce.—Men leave estates to their children in land, as not so liable to casualties as money, in untrading and unskilful hands. Locke.

UNTRA'INED, adj. Not educated; not instructed; not disciplined.—My wit untrain'd in any kind of art. Shakspeare.—Irregular; ungovernable.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion:

To court each place of fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

UNTRANSFERABLE, adj. Incapable of being given from one to another.—In parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, though the sovereignty remains still entire and untransferable, in the prince. Howell.

UNTRANSLATABLE, adj. Not capable of being translated.—To me these lines appear untranslatable. Gray.

UNTRANSLATED, adj. Not translated.—The first thing proposed was, whether the name Jehovah should be retained untranslated. Hales.

UNTRANSPARENT, adj. Not diaphanous; opaque.—Though held against the light they appear'd of a transparent yellow, yet looked on with one's back turn'd to the light, they exhibited an untransparent blue. Boyle.

UNTRAVELLED, adj. Never trodden by passengers.—We find no open track, or constant manuduction in this labyrinth, but are ofttimes fain to wander in America, and untravelled parts. Brown.—Having never seen foreign countries.—An untravelled Englishman cannot relish all the beauties of Italian pictures; because the postures expressed in them are often such as are peculiar to that country. Addison.

To UNTRE'AD, v. a. To tread back; to go back in the same steps.

We will untread the steps of damned flight,
And, like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd.

Shakspeare.

UNTRE'ASURED, adj. Not laid up; not repositied.

Her attendants
Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early
They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistress.

Shakspeare.

UNTRE'ATABLE, adj. Not treatable; not practicable.—Men are of so untreatable a temper, that nothing can be obtained of them. Dee. of Chr. Piety.

UNTRIED, adj. Not yet attempted.

That she no ways nor means may leave untry'd,
Thus to her sister she herself apply'd. Denham.

Not yet experienced.

Never more
Mean I to try, what rash untry'd I sought,
The pain of absence from thy sight. Milton.

Not having passed trial.

The father secure,
Ventures his filial virtue, though untry'd,
Against whate'er may tempt. Milton.

UNTRI'UMPHABLE, adj. Which allows no triumph.

What towns, what garrisons might you,
With hazard of this blood subdue;
Which now y'are bent to throw away
In vain, untriumphable fray? Hudibras.

UNTRI'UMPHED, adj. Not triumphed over.

I —
Suffer'd you ouly, when I conquer'd all,
To go untriumph'd. May.

UNTRO'D, or UNTRO'DDEN, adj. Not passed; not marked by the foot.

The way he came, not having mark'd, return
Was difficult, by human steps untrod. Milton.
Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in ev'ry step? Addison.

UNTRO'LLED, adj. Not bowled; not rolled along.

Hard fate! untroll'd is now the charming dye;
The playhouse and the parks unvisited must lie. Dryden.

UNTRO'UBLED, adj. Not disturbed by care, sorrow, or guilt.

Quiet untroubled soul, awake! awake!
Arm, fight and conquer, for fair England's sake. Shakspeare.

Not agitated; not confused; free from passion.
Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his aery jaunt, though hurry'd sore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.

Not interrupted in the natural course.
Would they think with how small allowance
Untroubled nature doth herself suffice,
Such superfluities they would despise. Spenser.

Transparent; clear; not mudded.—The equal distribution of the spirits in the liquor with the tangible parts, ever representeth bodies clear and untroubled. Bacon.

UNTRO'UBLEDNESS, s. State of being untroubled; unconcern.—He hath robbed the sceptick of his indifference and untroubledness. Hammond.

UNTRUE, adj. False; contrary to reality.—By what construction shall any man make those comparisons true, holding that distinction untrue. Hooker.—False; not faithful.

I cannot break so sweet a bond,
Unless I prove untrue;
Nor can I ever be so fond,
To prove untrue for you. Suckling.

UNTRU'LY, adv. Falsely; not according to truth.—On these mountains it is generally received that the ark rested, but untruely. Ralegh.

UNTRU'STINESS, s. Unfaithfulness.—Secretary Peter, under pretence of gravity, covered much untrustiness of heart. Hayward.

UNTRU'TH, s. Falsehood; contrariety to reality.—Moral falsehood; not veracity.
He who is perfect, and abhors untruth,
With heavenly influence inspires my youth. Sandys.

Treachery; want of fidelity.

I would,
So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's. Shakspeare.

False assertion.—In matter of speculation or practice, no untruth can possibly avail the patron and defender long; and things most truly, are likewise most behovefully spoken. Hooker.

UNTUNABLE, adj. Unharmonious; not musical.
My news in dumb silence will I bury,
For they are harsh, untunable, and bad. Shakspeare.

UNTUNABLENESS, s. Want of harmony.—The moderns have perhaps practised no species of poetry with so little success, and with such indisputable inferiority to the ancients, as the Ode; which seems owing to the harshness and untunableness of modern languages, abounding in monosyllables, and crowded with consonants. Dr. Warton.

To UNTU'NE, v. a. To make incapable of harmony.
Take but degree away, untune that string,
Aud hark what discord follows. Shakspeare.
To disorder.

O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature;
Th' untuned and jarring senses, O wind up
Of this child-changed father. Shakspeare.

UNTURNED, adj. Not turned.
New crimes invented, left unturn'd no stone,
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own. Dryden.

UNTU'TORED, adj. Uninstructed; untaught.
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl; and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakspeare.

To UNTWINE, v. a. To open what is held together by convolution.

But since the sisters did so soon untwine
So fair a thread, I'll strive to piece the line. Waller.

To open what is wrapped on itself.—It turns finely and softly three or four turns, caused by the untwining of the beard by the moisture. Bacon.—To separate that which clasps round any thing.—Divers worthy gentlemen of England, all the Syren songs of Italy could never untwine from the mast of God's word. Ascham.

To UNTWIST, v. a. To separate any things involved in each other, or wrapped up on themselves.—The interest of prince and people is so enfolded in a mutual embrace, that they cannot be untwisted without pulling a limb off. Bp. Taylor.

To UNTY, v. a. [See To UNTIE.] To loose.

O time! thou must untangle this, not I:
It is too hard a knot for me to unty. Shakspeare.

To UNVA'IL, v. a. To uncover; to strip of a veil. This word is unvail, or unveil, according to its etymology. See VAIL, and VEIL.—Troy reviv'd, her mourning face unvail'd. Denham.

UNVALUABLE, adj. Inestimable; being above price.—Secure the innocence of children, by imparting to them the unvaluable blessing of a virtuous and pious education. Atterbury.

UNVALUED, adj. Not prized; neglected.

He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and the health of the whole state. Shakspeare.

Inestimable; above price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels. Shakspeare.

UNVANQUISHABLE, adj. Not to be subdued.—An unvanquishable fort against the impressions and assaults of all adversary forces. Bp. King.

UNVANQUISHED, adj. Not conquered; not overcome.—Victory doth more often fall by the error of the unvanquished, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.

UNVARIABLE, adj. [invariable, Fr.] Not changeable; not mutable.—The two great hinges of morality stand fixt and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and whatever has a contrary influence, is evil. Norris.

UNVARIED, adj. Not changed; not diversified.

They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With sure returns of still-expected rhymes. Pope.

UNVARNISHED, adj. Not overlaid with varnish.—Not adorned; not decorated.

I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms
I won his daughter with. Shakspeare.

UNVARYING, adj. Not liable to change.—We cannot keep by us any standing, unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant fleeting succession, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as inches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.

To UNVEIL, v. a. [See VEIL, and VAIL.] To uncover; to divest of a veil.

To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn unveils her smiling ray. Pope.

To disclose; to show.

Now unveil'd the toilet stands display'd,
Each silver vase in mystick order laid. Pope.

UNVEILEDLY, adv. Plainly; without disguise.—Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unveiledly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands, that scorns to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.

UNVENERABLE, adj. Not worthy of respect. Mason.

For ever

Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou
Tak'st up the princess by that forced baseness
Which he hath put upon't. Shakspeare.

UNVENTILATED, adj. Not fanned by the wind.

This, animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The idle deep corrupted would contain Blue deaths. Blackmore.

UNVERDANT, adj. Having no verdure; spoiled of its green.

Ungraceful 'tis to see without a horn
The lofty hart, whom branches best adorn,
A leafless tree, or an unverdant mead,
And as ungraceful is a hairless head. Congreve.

UNVERITABLE, adj. Not true.—All these proceeded upon unveritable grounds. Brown.

UNVERSED, adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

UNVEXED, adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.

Unvex'd with thought of wants which may betide;
Or for to-morrow's dinner to provide. Dryden.

UNVIOLATED, adj. Not injured; not broken.—He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated. Clarendon.

UNVIRTUOUS, adj. Wanting virtue.—If they can find in their hearts that the poor, unvirtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be the ministers. Shakspeare.

To UNVISARD, v. a. To unmask.—What a death it is to the prelates to be thus unvisarded, thus uncased. Milton.

UNVISITED, adj. Not resorted to.

In some wild zone

Dwell, not unvisited of heaven's fair light, Secure. Milton.

UNVITIATED, adj. Not corrupted.

Restore your ladyship's quiet; render then
Your niece a virgin, and unvitiated. B. Jonson.

UNUCUMURI, a small river of the Portuguese territory, on the banks of the great river Amazons, which runs east, between the rivers Negro and Amazons, and enters a lake.

UNUNIFORM, adj. Wanting uniformity.—Such an ununiform piety is in many so exactly apportioned to Satan's interest, that he has no cause to wish the change of his tenure. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

To UNVOTE, v. a. To destroy by a contrary vote; to annul a former vote.—This was so sacred a rule, that many of those that voted with the court the day before, expressed their indignation against it, as subverting the very constitution of Parliaments, if things might thus be voted, and unvoted again from day to day. Burnet.

UNVO'WELLED, adj. Without vowels.—I wrote, that Moses left unvowelled copies to the tribes, save one which had both accents and vowels to the priests. Skinner.

UNVO'YAGEABLE, adj. Not to be passed over or voyaged.

Nor this unvoyageable gulph obscure,
Detain from following thy illustrious track. Milton.

UNURGED, adj. Not incited; not pressed.

The time was once, when thou unurg'd would'st vow,
That never words were music to thine ear,
Unless I spake. Shakspeare.

UNUSED, adj. Not put to use; unemployed.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not

That capability and godlike reason,
To rust in us unus'd.

Shakspeare.

Not accustomed.

What art thou?

Not from above: no, thy wan looks betray
Diminish'd light, and eyes unus'd to day.

Dryden.

UNUSEFUL, adj. Useless; serving no purpose.—I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be unuseful in the capacities it was intended for. Glanville.

UNUSUAL, adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.—With this unusual and strange course they went on, till God, in whose heaviest worldly judgments I nothing doubt but that there may lie hidden mercy, gave them over to their own inventions. Hooker.

UNUSUALLY, adv. Not in the usual manner.

UNUSUALNESS, s. Uncommonness; infrequency.—It is the unusualness of the time, not the appearance, that surprises Alcinous. Broome.

UNUTTERABLE, adj. Ineffable; inexpressible.

Sighs now breath'd

Unutterable; which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heaven with speedier flight
Than loudest oratory.

Milton.

UNVULGAR, adj. Not common.

Heat my brain

With Delphic fire

That I may sing my thoughts in some unvulgar strain.

B. Jonson.

UNVULNERABLE, adj. Exempt from wound; not vulnerable.

The god of soldiers inform

Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove
To shame unvulnerable, and stick i' the wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw. Shakspeare.

UNWAITED, adj. Not attended.

To wander up and down unwaited on,
And unregarded in my place and project,
Is for a sowter's soul, not an old soldier's. Beaum. and Fl.

UNWAKENED, adj. Not roused from sleep.

The more

His wonder was, to find unwaken'd Eve
With tresses discompos'd.

Milton.

UNWALLED, adj. Having no walls.—He came to Tauris, a great and rich city, but unwalled, and of no strength. Knolles.

UNWARES, adv. Unexpectedly; before any caution, or expectation.

She, by her wicked arts,

Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will.

Spenser.

UNWARILY, adv. Without caution; carelessly; heedlessly.

The best part of my powers

Were in the washes all unwarily
Devour'd by the unexpected flood.

Shakspeare.

UNWARINESS, s. Want of caution; carelessness.—The same temper which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwarinesses as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition. Spectator.

UNWARLIKE, adj. Not fit for war; not used to war; not military.

Avert unwarlike Indians from his Rome,
Triumph abroad, secure our peace at home.

Dryden.

UNWARMED, adj. Not excited; not animated.—They—heard, unwarm'd, the martial trumpet blow. Addison.

UNWARNED, adj. [unwærnod, Sax.] Not cautioned; not made wary.—Unexperienced young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another, and judge by the outside. Locke.

To UNWARP, v. a. To reduce from the state of being warped.—When the bark [of the cork-tree] is off, they unwarp it before the fire, and press it even. Evelyn.

UNWARPED, adj. Not biassed; not turned aside from the true direction.—An honest zeal unwarp'd by party-rage. Thomson.

UNWARRANTABLE, adj. Not defensible; not to be justified; not allowed.—At very distant removes an extemporary intercourse is feasible, and may be compassed without unwarrantable correspondence with the people of the air. Glanville.

UNWARRANTABLENESS, s. State of being unwarrantable.—The unwarrantableness is hid and concealed in the glory of the success. Abp. Saneroff.

UNWARRANTABLY, adv. Not justifiably; not defensibly.—A true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, will not suffer you to rise up to that confidence, which some men unwarrantably pretend to, nay unwarrantably require of others. Wake.

UNWARRANTED, adj. Not ascertained; uncertain.—The subjects of this kingdom believe it is not legal for them to be enforced to go beyond the seas, without their own consent, upon hope of an unwarranted conquest; but to resist an invading enemy, the subject must be commanded out of the counties where they inhabit. Bacon.

UNWARY, adj. [unwærj, Sax.] Wanting caution; imprudent; hasty; precipitate.

Nor think me so unwary,

To bring my feet again into the snare

Where once I have been caught.

Milton.

Unexpected. Obsolete.

All in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddenness of that unwary sight,
And wonder'd at his breathless hasty mood.

Spenser.

UNWASHED, or UNWASHEN, adj. [unwærçen, Sax.] Not washed; not cleansed by washing.

Another lean unwash'd artificer

Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death. Shakspeare.

UNWASTED, adj. Not consumed; not diminished.

Why have those rocks so long unwasted stood,
Since, lavish of their stock, they through the flood
Have, ages past, their melting crystal spread,
And with their spoils the liquid regions fed? Blackmore.

UNWASTING, adj. Not growing less; not decaying.

Purest love's unwasting treasure;

Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure;

Sacred Hymen! these are thine.

Pope.

UNWAYED, adj. Not used to travel; not seasoned in the road.—Beasts, that have been rid off their legs, are as much for a man's use, as colts that are unwayed, and will not go at all. Suckling.

UNWEAKENED, adj. Not weakened.—By reason of the exaction of some air out of the glass, the elastic power of the remaining air was very much debilitated, in comparison of the unweakened pressure of the external air. Boyle.

UNWEAPONED, adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.—As the beasts are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against unweaponed men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Raleigh.

UNWEARABLE, adj. Not to be tired; indefatigable.—Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them unwearable. Hooker.

UNWEARABLY, adv. So as not to be fatigued.—Let us earnestly and unwearably aspire thither. Bp. Hall.

UNWEARIED, adj. Not tired; not fatigued.

The Creator from his work

Desisting, though unwearied, up return'd.

Milton.

Their bloody task unweary'd, still they ply. Waller.—Still th' unweary'd sire pursues the tuneful strain. Dryden.—Indefatigable; continual; not to be spent; not sinking under fatigue.

He

He joy'd to range abroad in fresh attire,
Through the wide compass of the airy coast,
And with unwearied limbs each part t' enquire. Spenser.

UNWE'ARIEDLY, adv. Indefatigably.—Absolute perfection is, I well know, unattainable; but I know too, that a man of parts may be unweariedly aiming at, and pretty near attain it. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNWE'ARY, adj. [unweary, Sax.] Not weary.
To UNWE'ARY, v. a. To refresh after weariness.—My business here is to unweary myself, after my studies, not to drudge. Dryden.

To UNWE'AVE, v. a. To unfold; to undo what has been woven.

That I should thus unweave the web of fate,
Decrease his subjects, and subvert his state. Sandys.

UNWE'D, adj. Unmarried.—This servitude makes you to keep unwed. Shakspeare.

UNWE'DGEABLE, adj. Not to be cloven.
Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakspeare.

UNWEE'DED, adj. Not cleared from weeds.
Fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature,
Possess it merely. Shakspeare.

UNWEE'PED, adj. Not lamented. Now unwept.
He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.

UNWEET'ING, adj. Ignorant; unknowing.
Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear,
As all unweeting of that well she knew;
And pained himself with busy care to rear
Her out of careless swoon. Spenser.

UNWEET'INGLY, adv. Without knowledge; ignorantly.—As by the way unweetingly I strayed. Spenser.

UNWEIGHED, adj. Not examined by the balance.—Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many. 1 Kings.—Not considerate; negligent.

Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips unweigh'd,
Deem not unjustly by my doom oppress'd,
Of human race the wisest and the best. Pope.

UNWEIGH'ING, adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.—Wise? why, no question but he was—a very superficial, ignorant unweighing fellow. Shakspeare.

UNWELCOME, adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakspeare.

UNWELL, adj. Not well; slightly indisposed; not in perfect health.—I am neither well nor ill, but unwell. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNWEPT, adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.
Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shakspeare.

UNWET, adj. Not moist.
Once I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwet;
Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
My tears shall set thee first afloat within thy tomb. Dryden.

UNWHI'PT, adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.

Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipt of justice. Shakspeare.

UNWHO'LE, adj. This is a Saxon expression, unhæl, non sanus æger, &c. Not sound; sick; infirm.

UNWHO'LESOME, adj. Insalubrious; mischievous to health.—The discovery of the disposition of the air, is good for the prognostics of wholesome and unwholesome years. Bacon.—Corrupt; tainted.—We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this gross, wat'ry pumpkin: we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakspeare.

UNWHO'LESOMENESS, s. State or quality of being unwholesome.—He had made it the metropolis, had the river affected him; by whose unwholesomeness he forsook it. Sir T. Herbert.

UNWIELDILY, adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.
Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze;
Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.

UNWIELDINESS, s. Heaviness; difficulty to move, or be moved.—The supposed unwieldiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.

UNWIELDY, adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.—An ague, meeting many humours in a fat, unwieldy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits carried him out of the world. Clarendon.

UNWILL'ING, adj. [unpillenð, Sax.] Loth; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.—The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself. Hooker.

UNWILL'INGLY, adv. Not with good-will; not without lothness.

The whining school-boy with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. Shakspeare.

UNWILL'INGNESS, s. Lothness; disinclination.—Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker.

To UNWIND, v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound. [unwinda, Sax.] To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.—All his subjects having by some years learned, so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound so deeply an entered vice. Sidney.—To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.

As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakspeare.

To UNWIND, v. n. To admit evolution.—Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer.

UNWIP'ED, adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found Upon their pillows. Shakspeare.

UNWIS'E, adj. [unwis, Sax.] Weak; defective in wisdom.—Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakspeare.

UNWIS'ELY, adv. [unwislice, Sax.] Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.

Unwisely we the wiser East
Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

To UNWIS'H, v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.—To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Brown.

UNWIS'HED, adj. Not sought; not desired.
To his unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sov'reignty. Shakspeare.

UNWIS'T, adj. Unthought of; not known.—Of hurt unwist most danger doth redound. Spenser.—Applied to persons; unapprised. Mason.

He found himselfe unwist so ill bestad,
That lim he could not wag. Spenser.

To UNWIT, v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.

Friends all but now; even now
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then but now,
As if some planet had unwitted men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shakspeare.

UNWITHDRA'WING, adj. Continually liberal.

Wherefore did Nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks?

Milton.

UNWITHERED, adj. Not withered; not faded.—
The roses in her cheek unwithered. Habington.

UNWITHERING, adj. Not liable to wither or fade.

The spiry myrtle with unwithering leaf
Shines there and flourishes.

Cowper.

UNWITHSTOO'D, adj. Not opposed.

Cressy plains,
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silure's vigour unwithstood,
Cou'd do in rigid fight.

Philips.

UNWITNESSED, adj. Wanting testimony; wanting notice.—Lest their zeal to the cause should any way be un- witnessed. Hooker.

UNWITTILY, adv. Without wit.—This man was wanton and merry, unwittily and ungracefully merry.
Cowley.

UNWITTINGLY, adv. [Properly unweetingly, from unweeting. Dr. Johnson.—Yet the Saxons had unpičenb for unwitting, and unpičan, to be ignorant.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.—In these fatal things it falls out that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accessory to their determinations. Sidney.

UNWITTY, adj. Not witty; wanting wit.

He shines, ere long, a rural squire,
Pours fourth unwitty jokes, and swears,
And bawls, and drinks, but chiefly stares!

Shenstone.

UNWIVED, adj. Without a wife.—A competent multitude of virgins might be sent over to furnish his unwived bachelors. Selden.

To UNWOMAN, v. a. To deprive of the qualities becoming a woman.

She, whose wicked deeds
Unwoman'd her.

Sndys.

UNWOMANLY, adj. Unbecoming a woman.

She flies with eager fury to my face,
Offering me most unwomanly disgrace.

Daniel.

UNWONT, adj. [A contraction of unwonted.] Unaccustomed; unused.

But my flow'ring youth is foe to frost,
My ship unwont in storms to be tost.

Spenser.

UNWONTED, adj. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.

His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwonted sun to view.

Spenser.

Unaccustomed; unused.—Sea calves unwonted to fresh waters fly. May.

UNWONTEDNESS, s. Uncommonness; what is not usual.—The chief thing that moved their passion and prejudice was but unwontedness and tradition. Bp. Taylor.

UNWOO'ED, adj. Not wooed; not courted.—They live unwoo'd, and unrespected fade. Shakspeare.

UNWORKING, adj. Living without labour.—Lazy and unworking shopkeepers in this being worse than gamesters, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the public pay them for it. Locke.

UNWORMED, adj. Not wormed.

She is mad with love,
As mad as ever unworm'd dog was.

Beaum. and Fl.

UNWORN, part. adj. Not worn; not impaired.—So that six thousand years together, hath this great machine stood, always one and the same, unimpaired in its beauty, unworn in its parts, unwearied and undisturbed in its motions. Barrow.

UNWORSHIPPED, adj. Not adored.

He resolv'd to leave

Unworshipp'd, unobey'd the throne supreme.

Milton.

UNWORTHILY, adv. [unpuplice, Sax.] Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, base knight,

To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed.

Shakspeare.

UNWORTHINESS, s. Want of worth; want of merit.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us

To chide him from our eaves, for he persists. Shakspeare.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrant-ably pretended to by some. Wake.

UNWORTHY, adj. [unpeopð, Sax.] Not deserving:
whether good or bad.—Every particular accident, not un- worthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over.
Knowles.—Wanting merit.—Are these unworthy men chosen to offices? Whitgift.—Mean; worthless; contemptible.—Not suitable; not adequate.—I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden.—Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:

Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,

He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid.

Dryden.

UNWO'UND, part. pass. and pret. of unwind. Un-twisted.—Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitch'd ropes unwound are more lasting. Mörtimer.

UNWO'UNDED, adj. [unpunbeð, Sax.] Not wounded.

We may offend

Our yet unwounded enemies.

Milton.

Not hurt.

Oh! blest with temper:

She who can love a sister's charms, or hear

Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear.

Pope.

To UNWRA'P, v. a. To open what is folded.

To UNWRE'ATH, v. a. To untwine.—The beards of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle.

UNWRITING, adj. Not assuming the character of an author.—The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested. Arbutnot.

UNWRITTEN, adj. [unpwičen, Sax.] Not written; not conveyed by writing; oral; traditional.—A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another.
Spenser.—Not containing writing.

UNWROUGHT, adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.

Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,

Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought.

Fairfax.

UNWRUNG, adj. Not pinched.—We that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwring. Shakspeare.

UNXIA [from ungo, unxi, to smear or anoint], in Botany, a genus of the class syngenesia, order polygamia superflua, natural order of compositæ discoideæ, corymbifera (Juss.)
—Generic Character. Calyx common roundish, five-leaved; leaflets ovate. Corolla compound, radiate; ray indistinct.
Corollets hermaphrodite five in the disk; females as many in the ray. Proper to the hermaphrodites funnel-form, five-cleft; to the females ovate, small. Stamina in the her-maphrodites. Filaments five. Anther cylindrical, tubular.
Pistil to each. Germ ovate. Style simple. Stigma bifid.
Pericarp none. Calyx unchanged. Seeds to all ovate, hard, naked. Recepticle naked.—Essential Character. Calyx five-

five-leaved; leaflets ovate. Florets of both disk and ray five. Seed down none. Receptacle naked.

Unxia camphorata.—Stem herbaceous, filiform, dichotomous, two feet high. Leaves opposite at the divisions, sessile, lanceolate, five-nerved, hirsute, soft. Flowers solitary from the divisions, subpeduncled, the size of a pea.—Native of Surinam, where it is called Camphor-plant.

UNYIELDED, adj. Not given up.

O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,
Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound. Dryden.

UNYIELDING, adj. Not giving place as inferior.—A zeal, unyielding in their country's cause. Thomson.

TO UNYOKE, v. a. [ungeocian, unucian, Sax.] To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already;
Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south. Shakspeare.

To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shakspeare.

UNYOKED, adj. Having never worn a yoke.

Seven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,
And for Diana sev'n unspotted ewes. Dryden.

Licentious; unrestrained.

I will a-while uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness. Shakspeare.

UNZONED, adj. Not bound with a girdle.

Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom. Prior.

VOBARNO, a town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Milan; 13 miles north-north-east of Brescia.

VOBSTER, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Mells, Somersetshire.

VOBURG, or VOHBURG, a town of Germany, in Bavaria, on the Danube; 10 miles east of Ingolstadt.

VOCABLE, s. [vocable, old Fr.; vocabulum, Lat.] A word.—We will next endeavour to understand that vocable, or term, tyrannus, that is, a tyrant or an evil king. Sir G. Buck.

VOCABULARY, s. [vocabularium, Lat.; vocabulaire, Fr.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a word book.—Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabularies and dictionaries of several sorts. Watts.

VOCAL, adj. [vocal, Fr.; vocalis, Lat.] Having a voice.

Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise. Milton.

Uttered or modulated by the voice.

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.

VOCALITY, s. [vocalitas, Lat.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.—L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spiritaly. Holder.

TO VOCALIZE, v. a. To form into voice.—It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx to give it the sound of human voice. Holder.

VOCALLY, adv. In words; articulately.—Although it is as natural to mankind, to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale.

VOCATION, s. [vocatio, Latin.] Calling by the will of God.—Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls.

Hooker.—Summons.—What can be urged for them who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of mere wantonness make themselves ridiculous. Dryden.—Trade; employment; calling.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1651.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakspeare.

It is used ironically in contempt.

But lest you should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake,
Or when a whore in her vocation,
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

VOCATIVE, adj. [vocativus, Latin.] Denoting the grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

TO VOCIFERATE, v. n. [vocifero, Lat.] To clamour; to make outcries. Johnson.

VOCIFERATION, s. [vociferatio, vocifero, Latin.] Clamour; outcry.—The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbuthnot.

VOCIFEROUS, adj. [vocifero, Latin.] Clamorous; noisy.—Thrice three vociferous heralds rose to check the rout. Chapman.

VOCKLABRUCK, a town of Upper Austria, on the Vockl; 36 miles south-west of Lintz.

VOCONIAN LAW, a testamentary law prepared by Q. Voconius, tribune of the people, which prohibited every citizen from making any woman universal legatee, not excepting an only daughter, and enjoined a daughter's fortune, after her father's death, to be proportioned to his estate, according to the estimation of prudent men; and this proportion was usually one-fourth of her father's estate; and, moreover, that all the legacies of the testator should not exceed one half of his estate. This was intended as a supplement to the Furian law; the time of its passing is fixed by Cicero, de Senect. to the year of Rome 584, when Q. Marcius Philippus and Cn. Servilius Cæpio were consuls. It was revoked by Augustus in favour of Livia, to whom he was resolved to devise by will a great part of his estate. However, though, by the abrogation of this law, married women were not restrained from receiving any legacies above a certain sum, yet Augustus bestowed on such women as had vowed perpetual virginity the same rewards and privileges as upon mothers.

VOGEL, a small island in the Eastern seas. Lat. 5. 12. S. long. 130. 46. E.

VOGEL ISLANDS, a cluster of small islands near the west coast of Siam. Lat. 7. 38. N. long. 98. 55. E.

VOGELSBERG, a lofty mountain of the Swiss canton of the Grisons, about 10,200 feet above the level of the sea.

VOGELSBERG, a range, or rather groupe of mountains in the west of Germany, between Upper Hesse Fulda and the Wetterau. It is cold and rugged, but is productive in flax, and has good pasturage.

VOGHERA, a province in the north of Italy, subject to the king of Sardinia, and adjacent to Austrian Italy. On a superficial extent of 100 square miles, it has 105,000 inhabitants.

VOGHERA, a considerable town of Italy, the chief place of the preceding province, on the river Staffora; 10 miles north-east of Tortona.

VOGOGNA, a small town in the north of Italy, in the province of Novara; 12 miles north-east of Casale.

VOGTLAND, a circle or district of Germany, in the kingdom of Saxony, occupying a space of 700 square miles, with 90,000 inhabitants, in the south-west corner of the kingdom. The chief town is Plauen.

VOGUE, s. [vogue, French, from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode; popular reception.—It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to vouch a man's saintship from the vogue of the world. South.

VOHEMARO CAPE, a cape on the east coast of the island of Madagascar. Lat. 13. 20. S. long. 54. 44. E.

VOHENSTRAUS, a small town of Germany in Bavaria; 45 miles north-by-east of Ratisbon.

VOICE, s. [vox, vocis, Lat.] Sound emitted by the mouth.

I assay to see
The works of men; or heare mortalitie
Expire a voice.

Chapman.

Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.—Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon.—Any sound made by breath.

O Marcus, I am warm'd; my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory.

Addison.

Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.
Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it.

Shakspeare.

Language; words; expression.—Let us call on God in the voice of his church.

Fell.

To VOICE, v. a. To rumour; to report.
Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd so regardfully?

Shakspeare.

To vote. Obsolete.
Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the grain, to voice him consul.

Shakspeare.

To VOICE, v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.—Stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims.

Bacon.

VOICED, adj. Furnished with a voice.—Ovid advised women, who are so angel-like voiced, to learn, by music's rules, to order it.

Austin.

VOID, adj. [uide, Fr.] Empty; vacant.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along.

Shakspeare.

Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.—If it be void, and to purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in?
Unsupplied; unoccupied.—Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void.
Wanting; unfurnished; empty.—How void of reason are our hopes and fears!
Senseless, lifeless idol, void and vain.

Pope.

VOID, s. An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense.

Pope.

To VOID, v. a. [vider, Fr.] To quit; to leave empty.
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field.

Shakspeare.

To emit; to pour out.—The ascending water is vented by fits, every circuvolution voiding only so much as is contained in one helix.

Wilkins.

Believ'd the heavens were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one.

Hudibras.

To vacate; to nullify; to annul.—It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money so borrowed.

To VOID, v. n. To be emitted.—By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily.

Wiseman.

How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth.

Shakspeare.

VOID, a town of France, department of the Maesc; 6 miles south-by-east of Commercy.

VOIDABLE, adj. Such as may be annulled.—If the metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had bona notabilia in divers dioceses, grants letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence.

Ayliffe.

VOIDANCE, s. The act of emptying. Ejection from a benefice.

VOIDER, s. A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.

A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil, should I pick their bones.

Cleveland.

VOIDNESS, s. Emptiness; vacuity.
Through him the cold began to covet heat,
And water fire; the light to mount on hie,
And th' heavy down to poise; th' hungry t' eat,
And voidness to seek full satiety.

Spenser.

Nullity; inefficacy; want of substantiality.—If thereby you understand their nakedness and voidness of all mixt bodies, good divines are of opinion, that the work of the creation was not in itself distinguished by days.

VOIL, LOCH, a lake of Scotland, in Perthshire, in the parish of Balquhiddy, about three miles long and one broad; the source of the river Balvag, one of the principal branches of the Teith.

VOIRON, a town of France, department of the Isere, on the river Morges; 14 miles north-west of Grenoble. Population 5400.

VOIRONS, MONT, a mountain of Switzerland, on the borders of the lake of Geneva, about 3400 feet above the level of the lake.

VOISENON, (Claude Henry de Fusee du,) a literary person of singular character, was born at the chateau of Voisenon, near Melun, in 1708, and educated for the ecclesiastical profession. He commenced his career of advancement by being grand-vicar to the see of Boulogne; but having fought a duel, he afterwards contented himself with the abbacy of Jard, which was probably a family benefice. He was of a lively, humorous disposition, and as he knew how to trifle agreeably, he was admitted into fashionable society. As a writer, he published several romances, the best of which is said to be a kind of moral tale, entitled "L'Histoire de la Felicité." His comedies of "Mariages assortis," 1754, and "La Coquette fixée," 1746, are reckoned to contain strokes of humour which would not have been disavowed even by Moliere. He was also the author of many fugitive pieces. His literary reputation caused him to be elected into the French Academy; and the duke of Choiseul settled on him a pension of 6000 livres to write a French history. He died in 1775, and his works were collected in 1782 by his friend, Mad. de Turpin, in 5 vols. Svo. Nouv. Dict. Hist.

VOITEUR, a small town in the east of France, department of the Jura; 6 miles north of Lons le Saulnier.

VOITURE, s. Carriage; transportation by carriage. Not in use.—They ought to use exercise by voiturc or carriage. Arbutnot.

VOITURE, (Vincent,) born at Amiens in the year 1598, was a lively French writer. At the court of Lewis XIII. he was well received, whose brother, Gaston, duke of Orleans, made him master of the ceremonies, and introducer of foreign ambassadors, and whom he followed in his retirement to Languedoc. In 1634 he was admitted into the French Academy, of which he was a distinguished member, as he was well acquainted with the Latin, Italian, and Spanish languages. He held the office of interpreter to the queen-mother, and was employed in several court commissions. At Madrid he ingratiated himself with the count d'Olivares, and for the gratification of his curiosity made a tour to Africa. His Spanish verses were taken for those of Lopez de Vega; and at Rome he was elected, on account of his Italian literature, a member of the Academy degli Umoristi. His peculiar excellence, like that of Balzac, consisted in letter-writing, which he was very slow in executing, and in which he displayed much wit and pleasantry, often degenerating into affectation, and sometimes into indelicacy. His letters, however, notwithstanding their imperfections and faults, were much admired, and served as a passport into the politest companies. His poems were of a similar character to that that of his letters. They consist of epistles, elegies, sonnets, rondeaus, ballads, and songs. Moreri.

VOLA, CAPE, a cape of South America, on the north coast of Caraccas. Lat. 12. N. long. 72. W.

VOLANO, a small town of Italy, in the States of the Church; 28 miles east of Ferrara.

VO'LANT, adj. [volans, Lat.] Flying; passing through the air.—The volant, or flying automata, are such mechanical contrivances as have self-motion, whereby they are carried aloft in the air, like birds. Wilkins.—Nimble; active.

His volant touch

Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse, the resonant fugue. Milton.

VO'LATILE, adj. [volatilis, Latin.] Flying; passing through the air.—The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly. Bacon.—[volatile, Fr.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.

In vain, though by their powerful art they bind Volatile Hermes. Milton.

Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit; airy.—Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind. Watts.

VO'LATILE, s. [volatile, Fr.] A winged animal.—The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles. Brown.

VO'LATILENESS, or VOLA'TILITY, s. [volatilité, Fr.] The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.—Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or pliantness, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.—Mutability of mind; airiness; liveliness.—Had we but the same delight in heavenly objects, did we but receive the truth in the love of it, and mingle it with faith in the hearing, this would fix that volatileness and flittiness of our memories, and make every truth as indelible as it is necessary. Bp. Hopkins.

VO'LATILIZA'TION, s. The act of making volatile.—Chemists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar. Boyle.

To VO'LATILIZE, v. a. [volatiliser, Fr.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.—Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton.

VOLCANELLO, a small islet of the Mediterranean, belonging to the Lipari group. It is of volcanic origin, and though formerly separated from the larger island of Volcano, by a narrow channel, it is now connected with it by a neck of land, formed during a violent eruption. It is of a triangular form, and, like Volcano, uninhabited. It continues to emit smoke from different parts of its surface.

VOLCA'NO, s. [Italian.] A burning mountain.

Why want we then encomiums on the storm,
Or famine, or volcanos? They perform
Their mighty deeds; they hero-like can slay,
And spread their ample deserts in a day. Young.

Many volcanoes are lofty mountains, surmounted by a truncated cone, having an aperture at the summit, nearly circular, and of greater or less depth, called the crater, from which the eruptions issue; but not unfrequently the eruptions burst from the side or the foot of the mountain, and they sometimes break forth at a great depth under the sea. The greatest number of active volcanoes are situated near the sea or large lakes, from which circumstance it has been supposed, by some geologists, that water is an agent in all volcanic eruptions. Most isolated volcanic mountains have a pyramidal or conical form, ascending at a moderate angle of inclination from the base to an elevated plain, from the centre of which rises the cone in which the principal crater is situated,

The sides of this cone are generally steep, and are covered with volcanic sand, pumice, or scoræ. The matter of which it is composed, as well as the shape, evidently indicate that it has been formed by substances thrown out of the volcano in a perpendicular direction, which in their descent have accumulated round the aperture, and from the laws of gravity have assumed a conical form. The shape of the cone is changed during great eruptions, sometimes they have been known to sink down and disappear, new volcanic cones forming in other parts of the mountain. A considerable part of the cone of Vesuvius fell down during the eruption of 1794. In 1727, when M. d'Orville visited Vulcano, one of the Lipari or Æolian isles, there were two distinct volcanic cones, each placed on an eminence, and containing a crater in a state of active eruption; whereas, at present, there is but one cone conspicuous in the island, the summit being single. Spallanzani, who visited these islands about sixty years after M. d'Orville, made inquiries of some of the oldest inhabitants respecting the double cone and crater of Vulcano, and he found some few persons who retained a recollection of it. The regular conical form does not characterize all volcanoes. The volcanic mountains in America, according to Humboldt, present a considerable diversity, both in shape and situation, from those in the old world.

In Europe and in Asia, as far as the interior of the latter continent is known, no burning volcano is situated in a chain of mountains; all being at a greater or less distance from these chains. In the new world, on the contrary, the volcanoes, the most stupendous for their masses, form a part of the Cordilleras themselves. The mountains of micaslate and gniess, in Peru and New Granada, immediately touch the volcanic porphyries of the province of Quito and Pasto. To the south and north of these countries, in Chili and in the kingdom of Guatemala, the active volcanoes are grouped in rows. They are the continuation of the chains of primitive rocks; and if the volcanic fire has broken out in some plains far from the Cordilleras, as in mount Sangay and Jorullo, we must consider this phenomenon as an exception to the law which nature seems to have imposed on these regions.

The Peak of Teneriffe forms a pyramidal mass like Etna, Tungurahua, and Popocatepetl, but this character is far from being common to all volcanoes. We have seen, says Humboldt, some in the southern hemisphere, which, instead of having the form of a cone or bell, are lengthened in one direction, having the ridge sometimes smooth, at others rough, with small pointed rocks. This structure is peculiar to Antisan and Pichinca, two burning mountains of the province of Quito, and the absence of the conical form ought never to be considered as opposed to a volcanic origin.

M. Humboldt deduces the following inferences from his observations on the shape of different volcanoes. That mountains with slender conical peaks, are those which are subject to eruptions of the greatest violence, and at the nearest periods to each other. Mountains with lengthened summits, rugged, with small stony masses, are very old volcanoes nearly extinguished. Rounded summits, in the form of domes or bells, indicate those doubtful kinds of porphyries which are supposed to have been heated in their original place, and forced up in a softened state without ever having flowed as lavas. To the first of these mountains belong Cotopaxi, the Peak of Teneriffe, and that of Orizava, in Mexico. The second is common to Carguarazo and Pichinca, in the province of Quito, and to the volcano of Puracy, near Popayan, and perhaps also to Hecla, in Iceland. The third and last form is seen in the majestic figure of Chimborazo, and in the great Sarcony, in Auvergne. See ÆTNA and LAVA.

VOLCANO, an island of the Mediterranean, belonging to Sicily, the most southern of the Lipari group, situated between the island of Lipari and the Sicilian coast, and separated from the former by a narrow channel. The circumference of its base is about 12 miles. In all parts of the island, the traces of fire are distinctly visible. The portion of it opposite to Lipari is sterile, without the smallest trace of vegetation; towards the south and east, however, it is covered with trees and

and other vegetable productions. The mountain presents the appearance of a cone. Its ascent, though by no means easy, is sufficiently practicable. It is about three thousand feet in height: the crater is very large, its form oval, its circuit about a mile, its depth about 400 yards. It has no opening of consequence, but a smooth surface throughout, emitting not lava, but quantities of smoke and vapour. At night these look like a bright cloud, and give a reddish tinge to the atmosphere. The mountain has a remarkable cavern, containing a small mineral spring. It seems to have undergone considerable alteration in its form since the days of antiquity, having had then two summits, and, according to some writers, three distinct craters. It is totally uninhabited. Lat. 38. 30. N. long. 15. 13. E.

VOLCANO, LITTLE, one of the Lipari islands. Lat. 38. 32. N. long. 15. 12. E.; also an island in the Pacific ocean, about 24 miles north from Egmont island, one of those called Queen Charlotte's islands. Lat. 10. 17. S. long. 165. 4. E.; also an island in Dampier's straits, near the coast of New Britain, so named from its being the seat of a volcano. Lat. 5. 32. 20. S. long. 143. 9. E.

VOLCANO BAY, an extensive bay in the south-eastern extremity of the island of Java, so called by captain Broughton, from the volcanoes on the shore. This bay is very capacious; its entrance between two points 33 miles asunder; and it has 50 fathoms water in the centre.

VOLCHOV, a river of European Russia, in the government of Novgorod, which joins the lakes Ladoga and Ilmea. As the latter lake is of dangerous navigation, a canal has been dug between the Volchov at Novgorod, and the Msta.

VOLCKACH, a town of Bavarian Franconia, on the Maine; 15 miles east-by-north of Wurtzburg.

VOLCZYSK, a small town of European Russia, in the government of Podolia, district of Kaminiac.

VOLE, s. [vole, Fr.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.

Past six, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vole.

Swift.

VOLENDAM, a village of the Netherlands, in the province of North Holland, with 800 inhabitants.

VO'LERY, s. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.—An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volarity; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Locke.

VOLHYNIA, an extensive government of the Russian empire, lying to the east of the kingdom of Poland, between the governments of Grodno and Podolia. Its territorial extent is 29,300 square miles, and its population about 1,200,000, little more than half the number of Scotland on a surface of equal extent.

VOLITATION, s. [volito, Lat.] The act or power of flying.—Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown.

VOLUTION, s. [volitio, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.—To say that we cannot tell whether we have liberty, because we do not understand the manner of volition, is all one as to say, that we cannot tell whether we see or hear, because we do not understand the manner of sensation. Wilkins.

VO'LITIVE, adj. Having the power to will.—They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.

VOLKAMERIA [so named by Linnæus in memory of John George Volkamer, physician at Nürimberg], in Botany, a genus of the class didynamia, order angiospermia, natural order of personatæ vitices (Juss.).—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leaved, turbinate, five-cleft, nearly equal, acute. Corolla monopetalous, ringent; tube cylindrical, twice as long as the calyx; border five-parted, nearly equal, flat; segments reflexed to one side, gaping chiefly on the upper side. Stamina: filaments four, filiform, very long, on the gaping side of the corolla. Anthers simple. Pistil: germ four-cornered. Style filiform, length of the stamens. Stigma bifid; one of the segments acute, the other indistinct. Pericarp: berry (drupe) roundish two-celled, four-grooved. Seed: nut solitary, two-celled, grooved. The fruit is called by some a berry; by others a drupe; and by others again a capsule.—Essential Character. Calyx five-cleft. Corolla segments directed the same way. Drupe two-seeded. Nuts two-celled.

1. Volkameria aculeata, or prickly volkameria.—Leaves oblong, acute, quite entire; spines from the rudiments of the petioles. This is a shrub five or six feet high, branched, upright, the whole loaded with white flowers, which have no scent.—Native of the West Indies.

2. Volkameria ligustrina, or long-leaved smooth volkameria.—Leaves oblong-lanceolate, quite entire; petioles, peduncles, and calyxes hirsute.—Native of the island of Mauritius.

3. Volkameria inermis, or ovate-leaved smooth volkameria.—Leaves ovate, quite entire, shining; petioles, peduncles, and calyxes smooth.—Native of the East Indies.

4. Volkameria capitata, or headed volkameria.—Leaves ovate, quite entire, scabrous; flowers in terminating heads; calyx leafy.—Native of Guinea.

5. Volkameria serrata, or serrate-leaved volkameria.—Leaves broad-lanceolate, serrate subsessile. Branches roundish.—Native of the East Indies.

6. Volkameria scandens, or climbing volkameria.—Leaves petioled, cordate ovate, quite entire; panicle corymbed terminating; branchlets dichotomous. This is a scandent tree, with very long flexuose four-cornered branches, tomentose at the top.—Native of the vast forests of Ceylon.

7. Volkameria Japonica, or Japanese volkameria.—Unarmed, leaves cordate, ovate acute, toothed; racemes directed one way. This a vast lofty tree, smooth and branched.—Native of Japan.

8. Volkameria Kämpferi, or Kämpfer's volkameria.—Leaves cordate, pubescent, toothletted; panicle terminating divaricate on coloured peduncles.—Native of China and Japan.

Propagation and Culture.—The plants are propagated in Europe by cuttings, which readily put out roots, when they are planted in pots, and plunged into a moderate hot bed, covering them close with hand glasses. The cuttings may be planted any time from the middle of May to the end of July, when they have put out roots; separate the plants carefully and put each into a separate small pot: plunge the pots into a gentle hot bed, till they get fresh roots: then inure them to the open air, if the weather be warm; and continue them abroad in a sheltered situation until the nights begin to be cold; when they must be removed into the house. There they require some warmth; they should be placed therefore in a moderate stove. In too much heat they are subject to shoot and grow weak; but they will not survive the winter in a common greenhouse.

VOLKELMARK, a small town of Austrian Illyria, in Carinthia, on the Drave; 16 miles east of Clagenfurt.

VOLKMARSHEIM, a town of Prussian Westphalia; 18 miles west-north-west of Cassel.

VOLKNARSDORF, a town of Saxony, near Leipsic.

VOLKOVISK, a town of European Russia; 56 miles east of Grodno.

VOLLENHOFEN, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Overysse, with a harbour on the Zuyder Zee; 14 miles north-north-west of Zwolle.

VO'LLEY, s. [volée, Fr.] A flight of shot.—From the wood a volley of shot slew two of his company. Raleigh.

More on his guns relies, than on his sword;

From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd. Waller.

A burst; an emission of many at once.—A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off. Shakspeare.

To VO'LLEY, v. n. To throw out.

The holding every man shall beat as loud

As his strong sides can volley.

Shakspeare.

To VO'LLEY, v. a. To discharge as with a volley.

Another

Another hound—

Against the welkin vollies out his voice. Shakspeare.

VOLLIED, adj. Disploded; discharged with a volley.

I stood

Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting vollied thunder made all speed. Milton.

VOLLORE, a town of France, in Auvergne, department of the Puy de Dome; 6 miles south-east of Thiers.

VOLME, a small river of Prussian Westphalia, which falls into the Roer.

VOLMERSTEIN, a small town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark; 8 miles south-west of Schwiert.

VOLNEY, a township of the United States, in Oswego county, New York; 50 miles west of Rome.

VOLO, an ancient town of European Turkey, in Thessaly, situated on an arm of the sea called the gulf of Volo; 38 miles north-west of Larissa. Lat. 39. 28. N. long. 23. 12. E. Its population amounts to nearly 5000.

VOLOGDA, a province or government of European Russia, lying to the south of that of Archangel, and to the east of those of Novgorod and Olonez. It extends from lat. 58. 30. to 65. N., and from long. 38. 20. to 49. 20. E., being one of the largest, but worst peopled governments of the empire; for while its territorial extent is 149,000 square miles, its population probably does not amount to 654,000.

VOLOGDA, a town of European Russia, and the capital of the above province; 365 miles east-by-south of Petersburg, and 248 north-north-east of Moscow.

VOLOKOLAMSK, a town of European Russia; 73 miles west-north-west of Moscow.

VOLONNE, a town of France, department of the Lower Alps; 6 miles east-south-east of Sisteron.

VOLOTSCHINSK, a town of European Russia, in the government of Vohlynia.

VOLPE, a cape on the north coast of Sardinia. Lat. 40. 4. N. long. 9. 47. E.

VOLPEDO, a town of Italy, in the province of Tortona, on the small river Curone; 6 miles east of Tortona. Population 1000.

VOLPERSDORF, a village of Prussian Silesia; 14 miles south of Glatz.

VOLPIANO, a town of Italy, in the Piedmontese province of Turin; 12 miles north-by-east of Turin. Population 3700.

VOLT, s. [volte, Fr.] Volt signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a centre; so that these two treads make parallel tracts, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the centre. Farrier's Dict.

VOLSK, an inland town of European Russia, in the government of Saratov, on the Wolga; 70 miles north-east of Saratov. Population 4600.

VOLTA, a town of Milan, near the Mincio; 12 miles north-by-west of Mantua.

VOLTA, a considerable river of Guinea, in Western Africa, forming the boundary between the Gold and Slave coasts.

VOLTAGGIO, a small town of Italy, among the Appennines; 15 miles north of Genoa.

VOLTAIRE (Marie François Arouet de), was born at Chatenay, near Paris, in the year 1694, and in his earliest youth indicated a partial fondness for verse. In pursuing his literary education at the Jesuits' college of Louis-le-Grand, he had for his preceptor father Porée; and at the age of 12, distinguished himself by compositions above his years. The celebrated Ninon de l'Enclos, to whom he was presented, left him a legacy of 2000 livres, which he destined for a juvenile library. Dissatisfied with law, for the profession of which his father designed him, he devoted his whole attention to poetry. His father made an attempt to divert him from his favourite pursuit, by sending him as a page in the suite of the Marquis de Chateaufeuf, ambassador from France to Holland; but falling in love with the daughter of Mad. du Noyer, a refugee, he was sent back to Paris, and excluded from his father's house. In this situation he was taken under the protection of M. de Caumartin, his father's friend; and at his country-house he had the advantage of conversing with the elder Caumartin, who inspired him with his own enthusiastic admiration of Henry IV. and Sully. He indulged a disposition for writing lampoons; and for one of these, aimed at the government, he was imprisoned for a year in the Bastille. At this time he had composed his tragedy of "Œdipe," which was brought on the stage in 1718, and much applauded. The regent was also highly pleased with it, and granted him permission to return to Paris, after his release from the Bastille. His father, much interested in his favour by attending at one of the representations of his tragedy, was reconciled to him, and gave up all thoughts of making him a lawyer. At Brussels, which he visited in 1722, he became acquainted with the poet Rousseau; but in consequence of this interview, they became enemies for life. On his return, his "Mariamne" was exhibited, and did not succeed. In 1726, he was again lodged in the Bastille, in consequence of a quarrel with the chevalier de Rohan; and obtained liberation, after a confinement of six months, upon condition of leaving the kingdom. England was the country of his choice, and he brought with him his poem of the "Henriade." It was printed in London by subscription, patronized by king George I. and Caroline princess of Wales, and yielded a profit which laid the foundation of his fortune. His manners, however, did not suit those of England, and his conversation was thought licentious. Having obtained permission to return to France in 1728, he put his money into a lottery, and engaged in other lucrative speculations, and thus amassed a large capital, which he augmented by his economy. His tragedy of "Brutus," brought on the stage in 1730, was not very popular; and as his dramatic reputation was ambiguous, he was advised by Fontenelle and La Motte to abandon this species of composition, alleging that it was not adapted to his genius. His reply was the production of his "Zaire," which was regarded as the most affecting piece on the French stage, after the "Phedre" of Racine. On account of his "Lettres Philosophiques," he was considered as an avowed enemy to revelation and ecclesiastical authority; and the parliament of Paris issued a decree, which ordered his work to be committed to the flames, and his person to be arrested. Upon this he quitted the capital, and retired to Cyrei, near Vassi, in Champagne, the seat of the Marquis du Chatelet, where they employed themselves in making experiments, and where Voltaire wrote his "Elements of the Newtonian Philosophy." He also continued to write tragedies, so that his "Alzire" appeared in 1736, and his "Mahomet" in 1741; but the latter, charged with being an attack upon religion, was withdrawn from the stage. His "Merope," exhibited in 1743, was received with the greatest applause. Before this time he had made his peace at court by a political service, which it is not necessary for us to relate; and he farther ingratiated himself with the royal family by his piece for the festivities on the marriage of the Dauphin, entitled "La Princesse de Navarre." Received at court, he became gentleman of the chamber in ordinary, and historiographer of France; and, under the latter character, drew up his history of the war of 1741. He also engaged in other courtly offices, and wrote the manifesto of the French court in favour of the Pretender, on his expedition to Scotland. In 1746, he was admitted into the French academy. In consequence of urgent invitations on the part of the King of Prussia, and assurance of a pension of 22,000 livres, with other benefits, he arrived at Potsdam in June, 1750; and was received by the king with the most flattering tokens of respect. Here it was his practice to spend two hours in the day with his majesty, during which he employed himself in correcting his works; and the rest of his time was at his own disposal. His tranquillity, quillity, however, was soon interrupted, on occasion of a dispute between Maupertuis and Koenig; for though the king desired him not to interfere, he took part against Maupertuis, and Frederick sent him his dismissal. During his absence on a visit to the duchess of Saxe-Gotha, Maupertuis, as he says, used his influence to lower him in the king's estimation; and, therefore, instead of returning to Berlin, he proceeded towards France; but at Frankfort he was arrested by the king's order, and obliged to restore his poems, with which he had been intrusted for correction, together with his key, cross, and the brevet for his pension. It was now his wish to reside at Paris; but he could not obtain permission for this purpose, as he had published a licentious poem, "La Pucelle d'Orleans," which had raised a violent outcry against him; and, therefore, after a year's stay at Colmar, he purchased a country-house near Geneva; and having gratified his petulant disposition by interfering in the political disputes of this place, he thought proper to remove, and bought an estate at Ferney, in the Pays de Gex. Here he lived, as one of his biographers has said, "like a petty prince in his own territory;"—"improving his own village by encouraging colonists, and introducing manufactures, which, through his influence, obtained a sale in many countries of the continent."—"A declared enemy to tyranny and oppression of every kind, he undertook the protection of several sufferers from injustice, among whom were the family of Calas, a noted victim of religious bigotry. He made the enormity of these abuses of power known throughout Europe, and set himself up as a kind of general censor, to whose tribunal the highest ranks were amenable." He poured forth from this retreat a variety of works, which were sought after and generally read. In his retreat he was visited by the most distinguished persons who came near his abode, and he corresponded with some of the chief sovereigns of Europe. Nevertheless he was not happy. Impatient and restless in his disposition, and irritable in his temper, he was self-tormented. In advanced life he wished again to emerge from obscurity; and in February, 1778, he visited Paris, where he had many admirers, and where he was regarded also with aversion and alarm. Here his vanity and love of admiration and praise must be fully gratified, by the manner in which he was received at the theatre, after the exhibition of his "Irene," which he had brought with him. As soon as he was seated in his box, after having received repeated plaudits in his way to it, an actor placed a crown on his head. When the play was concluded, the drawing up of the curtain displayed all the actors and actresses surrounding a bust of Voltaire, and by turns covering it with garlands of laurel; and Mad. Vestris, advancing to the front of the stage, pronounced some verses to his praise, composed on the spot by a nobleman, amid the shouts of the audience. This reception produced effects on his feeble frame, which probably hastened its dissolution. Of this Voltaire himself seems to have been apprised, when he said in a tone of deep melancholy, "I am come to Paris to find glory and a tomb." Unable to sleep, it is thought that he accelerated his death by taking too large a dose of opium. When he was thought to be near his last moments, the Marquis de Vilette, with whom he resided, sent for the rector of St. Sulpice to administer the last offices which are thought essential to the safety of a Catholic Christian. What passed between Voltaire and the rector on this occasion has been differently stated; but it is certain that he died, without the last sacraments, on the 30th of May, 1778, in the 85th year of his age. It is said that the archbishop of Paris absolutely refused to allow him Christian burial, and that his body was secretly conveyed for interment to Sellieres, an abbey of Bernardines, between Nogent and Troyes. It was thence brought, by a decree of the national assembly in 1791, to be repositied in St. Genevieve's at Paris.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1652.

"The physiognomy of Voltaire," says his biographer, "was indicative of his disposition. It is said to have partaken of the eagle and the monkey; and to the fire and rapidity of the former animal, he united the mischievous and malicious propensities of the latter. With strong perceptions of moral excellence and elevation, he was little and mean in conduct, a victim to petty passions and caprices; never at rest either in mind or body, never tranquil or sedate. If he was a philosopher, it was in his opinions, not in his actions. He had been accustomed from his youth to pay as much homage to rank and wealth as his vanity would permit; his tastes of life were vitiated, and his manners corrupted: he could not, therefore, be a consistent friend to virtue and liberty, though he might occasionally be captivated with her charms, and even zealous in their support. He was habitually avaricious, though he performed some generous acts, which, however, he took care to make known. He was too selfish to inspire love, and too capricious to merit esteem. He had numerous admirers, but probably not one friend."

As a poetical writer, he was distinguished by his "Henriade," which was considered as the principal epic poem in the French language, and by his tragedies, which are said to have more variety of style and subject than those of Corneille and Racine; but in comedy and lyric composition he was not equally successful. The morality of his moral epistles, which are excellent in their manner, is liable to many objections. As a prose writer, Voltaire has been commended for that kind of middle style, which is pure, unaffected, lively, precise, and always in good taste. In the department of history, his principal works are the "Essai sur Histoire generale," and the "Siècles de Louis XIV. et de Louis XV." His "Histoire de Charles XII." is a model of biography. All the works of Voltaire amount to 30 vols. 4to. of the Genevan edition, and 71 vols. 8vo. in the more complete edition of Basil. Gen. Biog.

VOLTAISM. See GALVANISM and ELECTRICITY.

VOLTERA, an inland town of Italy, in Tuscany, situated on high ground on the river Era; 24 miles south-by-west of Florence. Population 5000.

VOLTERRA (Daniele di), the cognomen of an artist of great renown, whose real name was Daniele Ricciarelli. He was a native of Volterra, and born in 1509, and was first a disciple of Giovanni Antonio Razzi, called Il Sodoma, and afterwards of Baldassare Peruzzi. Unemployed in his native city, and without means of improvement, he went to Rome, and wrought some time for cardinal Trivulzi, to whom a picture of the Flagellation he had brought with him served as a recommendation. He afterwards assisted Pierino del Vaga in the capella Massimi at the Trinita da Monti: and in San Marcello, where he finished, from the designs of del Vaga, the four Evangelists, with various other figures, and ornamental enrichments. From designs of the same master he also painted a frieze in the hall of the palazzo Massimi, and these works combined gave him so much renown, that signora Elena Orsina was induced to employ him to adorn her family chapel in the church of the Trinita da Monti.

He had in the mean time cultivated the friendship of Michel Angiolo and Sebastian del Piombo, and by their communion, and the study of their works, aggrandized his style and formed his manner; and the work which he produced in the capella Orsini, the Descent from the Cross, testified how worthy he was of such society. The work of this chapel, which was adorned not only with an altar-piece, but also with various other designs historical and ornamental, and all in fresco, occupied him seven years. The merit of the principal picture above-mentioned, has placed it, in public estimation, on a level with the Transfiguration by Raffaele, and the Communion of St. Jerome by Dominichino; and induced the French, in their rage for spoliation, to attempt the removal of it from the wall. And they effected it, though they never transported it to France, but in doing so, they cut away so much of the angles of the chapel that the roof fell in, but not till the picture had been removed out of danger. It was afterwards turned, so that its face was made visible, and an attempt was made by some ignorant pretender to enliven the colours by means of oil or varnish: the consequence has been, that the surface is become black; and

J. Busse sc.

VOLTAIRE.

Engraved for the Encyclopædia Londinensis 1728.

and the figures scarcely discernible; and thus this grand work, one of the principal features of modern Rome, one of the greatest monuments of human ingenuity, and the support of the well-earned renown of an artist ranked among the best, has been sacrificed to ambition, vanity, and folly. Happily the composition is preserved by Dorigny's print, and there is a great number of copies of it. Lanzi is of opinion, that M. Angelo must have aided Volterra in this great work, particularly in the composition, as the other parts in the chapel are so far inferior to it. He is known to have been partial to him, and on terms of intimacy. One day calling in his absence at his study, he left behind a sketch of a colossal head, which Volterra never would permit to be removed, and which remains to this day. And when Pierino del Vaga died, and Angelo had the works of the Vatican assigned to him, he interested himself for and procured the appointment of Volterra to supply his place. To him also, with the consent of Angelo, pope Paul III. intrusted the slight clothing which is thrown over the nudities in the Last Judgment in the Sistini chapel, for which service however he was branded with the ludicrous name of Il Brachellone, the breeches-maker.

After his appointment in the Vatican, he was ordered to complete the paintings in the Sala Regia begun by his predecessor, which he did, but not, as Vasari says, with skill equal to that he had exhibited in the chapel Orsini.

When Julius III. mounted the papal throne, he dismissed Volterra from his superintendance, but afterwards assigned to him one half of a hall to paint, of which Salviati had the other part, but Volterra did little or nothing in it, having been disappointed in not finding the whole intrusted to him.

He added, by means of his disciples, several other designs to the works in the Trinita da Monti, but turned his own mind principally to sculpture, and painted but little after this time. He died at Rome in 1566, aged 57.

VOLTRI, a small but populous town of Italy; 9 miles west of Genoa.

VOLTSCHANSK, a town of European Russia, in the government of Slobodsk-Ukraine, with 2700 inhabitants; 60 miles north-east of Charkov.

VOLTURNO, a river of Naples, which takes its rise in the Appennines, and falls into the gulf of Gaeta; 20 miles north-west of Naples.

VOLUBILITY, s. [volubilis, Lat.] The act or power of rolling.—Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness. Watts.—Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakspeare.

Mutability; liableness to revolution.—He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next: and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression. L'Étrange.

VOLUBLE, adj. [volubilis, Lat.] Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.—Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hammond.—Rolling; having quick motion.

This less voluble earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there. Milton.

Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.—A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and flippant. Addison.—These with a voluble and flippant tongue, become mere echoes. Watts.—Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.—Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further conscionable, than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection. Shakspeare.

VOLUBLY, adv. In a voluble manner.

This he as volubly would vent,
As if his stock would ne'er be spent. Hudibras.

VOLVIC, a town of France, department of the Puy de Dome; 7 miles north-west of Clermont en Auvergne. Population 2100.

VOLUME, s. [volumen, Latin.] Something rolled, or convolved. As much as seems convolved at once: as a fold a serpent, a wave of water.

Threescore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shakspeare.

[volume, Fr.] A book: so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a staff.

Calmly, I do beseech you.—
Aye, as an hostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by th' volume. Shakspeare.

VOLUMINOUS, adj. Consisting of many complications.—The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton.—Consisting of many volumes, or books.

If heaven write aught of fate, by what the stars
Voluminous, or single characters
In their conjunction met, give me to spell. Milton.

Copious; diffusive.—He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

VOLUMINOUSLY, adv. In many volumes or books.—The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where handled. Granville.

VOLUMINOUSNESS, s. State of being voluminous.—His works [Aquinas's] mount to that voluminousness, they have very much by repetitions. Dodwell.

VOLUMIST, s. One who writes a volume; an author. Not in use.—Ye write them [volumes] in your closets, and unwrite them in your courts; hot volumists, and cold bishops! Milton.

VOLUNTARILY, adv. [volontiers, French.] Spontaneously; of one's accord; without compulsion.—Sith there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them. Hooker.

VOLUNTARINESS, s. State of being voluntary.—The voluntariness of an action is not able to defame it, if there be no irregularity imputable to the action itself, abstracted from the voluntariness. Hammond.

VOLUNTARY, adj. [volontaire, Fr.; voluntarius, Lat.] Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.—God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent; intending before-hand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker.—Willing; acting with willingness.

Then virtue was no more, her guard away,
She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope.

Done by design; purposed.—If a man be lopping a tree, and his ax-head fall from the helve, out of his hand, and kills another passing by; here is indeed manslaughter, but no voluntary murder. Perkins.—Done without compulsion.—Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke.—Acting of its own accord; spontaneous.

Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VOLUNTARY, s. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

All th' unsettled humours of the land;
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries. Shakspeare.

A piece of music play'd at will, without any settled rule.
Whistling winds, like organs, play'd,
Until their voluntaries made
The waken'd earth in odours rise,
To be her morning sacrifice. Cleveland.
By

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepared for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator.

VOLUNTEER, s. [voluntaire, Fr.] A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.—Congreve, and the author of the Relapse, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collier.

To VOLUNTEER, v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking,
The city needs not your new tricks for breaking:
And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUNTOWN, a township of the United States, in Windham county, Connecticut; 16 miles north-by-east of Norwich.

VOLUPTUARY, s. [voluptuarius, Lat.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.—The parable was intended against the voluptuaries; men who liv'd like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS, adj. [voluptuosus, Lat.] Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

Then swoll'n with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks; venereal trains,
Soft'ned with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

VOLUPTUOUSLY, adv. Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.—Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakspeare.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS, s. Luxuriousness; addictedness to excess of pleasure.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones
Call on him for't. Shakspeare.

VOLUSKA, a small sea-port of Austrian Illyria, in Istria; 6 miles west of Fiume.

VOLUTATION, s. [volutatio, Lat.] Wallowing; rolling.—In the sea, when the storm is over, there remains still an inward working and volutation. Bp. Reynolds.

VOLUTE, s. [volute, Fr.] A member of a column. That part of the capitals of the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionic, and eight in the Composite. These *volute*s are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus: whence that ancient architect calls the voluta pulvinus. Harris.—It is said there is an Ionic pillar in the Santa Maria Transtevere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison.

VO' MICA, s. [Lat.] An encysted tumour in the lungs.—If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood. Arbuthnot.

VO' MIC NUT, s. The nucleus of a fruit of the Strychnos. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill.

To VO' MIT, v. n. [vomo, Latin.] To cast up the contents of the stomach.—The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. More.

To VO' MIT, v. a. [vomir, Fr.] To throw up from the stomach; often with up or out.—Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbuthnot.—To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VO' MIT, s. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

An emetic medicine; a medicine that causes vomit.—This vomit may be repeated often, if it be found successful. Blackmore.

VOMITION, s. [from vomo, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.—How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch? Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grey.

VO' MITIVE, adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetic; causing vomits.—From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitive, occasion black ejections. Brown.

VO' MITORY, adj. [vomitarius, Latin.] Procuring vomits; emetic.—Since regulus of stibium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitary operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Brown.

VONDEL (Joost Vandem), a Dutch poet, was the son of parents who belonged to the sect of Mennonites, and born at Cologne in the year 1587. His education was merely adapted to trade, and having married in 1610, he commenced business as a hosier at Amsterdam; but with talents superior to his station, he entrusted his wife with the conduct of his trade, and directed his attention to literary and religious speculations. In the disputes between the Arminians and Gomarists, he took part with the former, and joined their communion. His first poetical productions were the mere fruits of untaught genius; but apprehending that he might derive advantage from those sources of information to which he had no access, on account of his ignorance of the learned languages, he began, at the age of 30 years, to learn the Latin and French, and to study logic. Attached to the Arminian party, he exposed the injustice of the sentence against Barneveldt in an allegorical tragedy, entitled "Palamedes, or Innocence oppressed," for which he was prosecuted and fined. Conceiving prejudices against the reformed religion, probably on account of the attachment of the Dutch ministers to the Orange faction, he became a Roman Catholic; and afterwards published a tragedy, entitled "Gisbert Van Amstel," or the capture of Amsterdam by Florence V., count of Holland; and many other poems, one on the subject of "The Mysteries, or the Secrets of the Altar." He also translated into Dutch verse Virgil, Horace, and Ovid's Metamorphoses, by which he gained considerable reputation. But, like many authors, he neglected his affairs, and suffered pecuniary embarrassments. He lived, however, to a great age, and closed life in 1679; in his 92d year; having acquired the honour of being regarded as one of the principal ornaments of his country. His works amount to nine vols. 4to. Moreri.

VONIZZA, a fortified town of European Turkey, in Epirus, situated at the foot of Mount Zoromeros, on the gulf of Arta; 50 miles south of Joannina. Lat. 39. 15. N. long. 21. 2. E.

VOORBURG, a village of the Netherlands, in South Holland; 2 miles east of the Hague. Population 1700.

VOORN, an island of the Netherlands, situated between two mouths of the Maese. It is tolerably fertile in corn. The chief place is Briel.

VOORSCHOTEN, a village of the Netherlands, with 1100 inhabitants; 3 miles south-south-west of Leyden.

VOORST, an inland town of the Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, with 4400 inhabitants; 12 miles east of Arnheim.

VOPISCUS (Flavius), a Latin historian, was a native of Syracuse, and flourished about A. D. 304. He began his history with the reign of Aurelian, which he prosecuted with those of Tacitus and his brother Flavianus, and Probus. He then published an account of the four tyrants, Firmus, Saturninus, terminus, Proculus, and Bonosus, and also of the three emperors Carus, Numerianus, and Carinus. These are extant, and are contained in the "Historiæ Augustæ Scriptores." Among the best of these is Vopiscus, who excelled in learning, and also in chronological arrangement. He is said to have given credit to the wonderful works of Apollonius Tyaneus, whose life he had an intention of writing.

VORA'CIOUS, adj. [vorax, Lat.] Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious.—So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Gov. of the Tongue.—Rapacious; greedy.

VORA'CIOUSLY, adv. Greedily; ravenously.—He [Dr. Johnson] was voraciously fond of good eating. Boswell.

VORA'CIOUSNESS, or VORA'CITY, s. [voracité, Fr.; voracitas, Latin.] Greediness; ravine; ravenously.—Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham.—Distinguishing himself by voraciousness of appetite. Tatler.

VORA'GINOUS, adj. [voraginosus, Latin.] Full of gulfs. Scott.

VORARLBERG, a mountainous district of the Austrian states, bordering on Switzerland, the lake of Constance and Bavaria. Its area is about 940 square miles; its population 85,000. The chief town is Bregenz.

VORAU; a town of the Austrian states, in Styria; 61 miles south-by-west of Vienna.

VORCHHEIM, a town of Bavaria, on the Regnitz; 20 miles north of Nuremberg. Population 2300.

VORDEN, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, with 2500 inhabitants; 15 miles east-by-south of Zutphen.

VORDEN, a town of Germany, in Hanover; 15 miles north-by-east of Osnabruck.

VORDENBERG, a town of the Austrian states, in Upper Styria; 4 miles north of Leoben.

VORDINGBORG, a sea-port of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, situated on a bay opposite to Falster; 52 miles south-south-west of Copenhagen.

VORDONI, a small town of the Morea, situated on the river Vasilipotamo (Eurotus); 7 miles south-by-east of Misitra.

VOREPPE, a town of France, department of the Isere, on the small river Roise; 9 miles north-west of Grenoble. Population 2100.

VOREY, a town of France, department of the Upper Loire, with 1600 inhabitants; 11 miles north-east of Le Puy.

VORINGEN, a town of Germany; 7 miles north of Sigmaringen.

VORONEZ, a river of European Russia, which rises in the government of Tambov, and joins the Don a little below.

VORONEZ, a province or government in the interior of European Russia, bounded on the east by the country of the Don Cossacks, and lying between lat. 48. and 54. N. Its area, equal to that of Scotland, is 31,000 square miles; but its population hardly amounts to 800,000.

VORONEZ, the capital of the above government, on the river Voronez; 292 miles south of Moscow. Population between 12,000 and 15,000.

VORONOVKA, a small town of European Russia, in the government of Kiev.

VOROSPUTAK, a village of Transylvania, in the county of Weissenburg.

VOROSVAGAS, or CERWENICA, a large village of Hungary, county of Saros.

VORSCHUTZ, a large village of Germany, in Hesse Cassel, near Gudensberg.

VORSFELDE, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Brunswick, with 1000 inhabitants; 21 miles north-east of Brunswick.

VORSKLA, a river of European Russia, in the Ukraine, which falls into the Dnieper.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1652.

VORST, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the government of Cleves.

VORSTIUS, CONRAD (Von Dem Vorst), an eminent Arminian divine, born at Cologne in 1569. Having been entered at the college of St. Lawrence in Cologne in 1587, he left it without taking a degree, because his conscience would not allow his swearing adherence to the decrees of the council of Trent. At this time the circumstances of his family rendered it expedient for him to turn his attention to trade, for which he qualified himself by learning arithmetic and the French and Italian languages. He is known as the author of several theological writings, chiefly relating to the controversy between the Roman Catholics and his Protestant antagonists. His son, William Henry Vorstius, published some works in rabbinical literature. Bayle.

VORTEX, s. In the plural vortices. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.—Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets, Bentley.

VOR'TICAL, adj. Having a whirling motion.—If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water, being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton.

VORTICELLA, in the Linnæan system of Zoology, a genus of Vermes Infusoria, the characters of which are, that the body is naked and contractile, with a rotatory or whirling motion. Gmelin enumerates fifty-one species.

VOS (Martin de), an eminent Flemish painter, son of Peter de Vos, who was himself an artist and member of the academy at Antwerp. He was born at Antwerp in 1520. His father initiated him in the art, but he afterwards studied under F. Floris until he was twenty-three, and then pursued the cultivation of his mind in Italy. The residence he made at Venice introduced him to the acquaintance of Tintoretto, who not only instructed him in the principles of his practice, but employed him to paint landscapes in his pictures. Hence De Vos became an admirable colourist, and gained considerable reputation and employment. He painted portraits of the family of the Medici, and some historical pictures for them; and after an absence of eight years, returned to Flanders. His celebrity accompanied him, and procured him several commissions to paint pictures for churches at Antwerp, and at other places in the Netherlands. In portraiture also he was much employed, and he certainly advanced beyond his contemporaries, in the nature and truth which he gave to his productions. His principal works in the cathedral of Antwerp, are the Marriage of Cana; the Incredulity of Thomas; the Miracle of the Loaves; and the Resurrection; and a fine picture of his of the Last Supper is in the church of St. James. He became a member of the academy at Antwerp in 1559, and died, at the age of 84, in 1604. He had a brother, Peter de Vos, who also painted history, but whose works are not much known; a nephew also of his was a painter, William de Vos, who had considerable talents, and gained much employment and reputation.

VOS (Paul de), another painter of that name, but of a different family, was born at Alost in 1600. His works of animals and birds are very much in the style of Snyders, and are deservedly esteemed. There are many of them in the royal collection in Spain.

VOS (Simon de), born at Antwerp in 1643, was a pupil of Rubens, and became eminent as a painter both of history and portraits. Some of his paintings in the churches of Antwerp have been mistaken for the production of his great master. Sir Joshua Reynolds speaks highly of his picture of St. Norbert receiving the Sacrament, in the church of St. Michael, in which he says, "a great number of portraits are introduced extremely well painted," and afterwards commends him as a portrait-painter; particularly speaking of his own portrait in the poor house of Antwerp, painted by himself in black, leaning on the back of a chair, with a scroll of blue paper in his hand, so highly finished in the broad manner of Corregio, that nothing can exceed it. S. de Vos was living in 1662.

VOSCH, a lake of European Russia, in the government of Novgorod.

VOSGES, a great chain of mountains in the east of France, extending from north to south, in a line nearly parallel to the course of the Rhine, from Bale to Spire. The length of the main chain of the Vosges is about 130 miles; but there is a farther chain or range extending westward into France, traversing the department of the Vosges, and ending near Sedan, in the hills and forest land of the Ardennes.

VOSGES, a department in the north-east of France, formed of a part of Lorraine, and adjoining the departments of the Meurthe and Upper Saone. Its extent, equal to two of our average sized counties, is about 2400 square miles; its population somewhat above 334,000.

VOSKERENSK, a town of European Russia, in the government of Moscow; 36 miles west-north-west of Moscow.

VOSNESENSK, a small and lately built town of European Russia, on the Bog; 80 miles north-north-west of Cherson.

VOSSIUS (Gerard John), was born near Heidelberg, in 1577, and perfected himself in the classics, mathematics, philosophy, and theology, at Leyden. Availing himself of a copious library left him by his father, he became director of the college at Dordrecht, where he married twice, and had a numerous family. In 1614, he was appointed director of the college of Leyden, and afterwards professor of eloquence and chronology in the university. By avowing himself favourable to the sentiments of the Remonstrants, he became obnoxious to the Gomarists, and at the synod in Tergou, in 1620, he was deprived of his professorship; but in consequence of the prevalence of Arminianism in England, he obtained the office of prebend in the church of Canterbury. After his return to Holland, he accepted the chair of history in the schola illustris of Amsterdam in 1633, which he occupied till his death in 1649, at the age of 72. The most useful of his writings are two books in Greek and Latin poetry. Among his other works are "De Origine Idolatriæ;" "De Scientiis Mathematicis;" "De quatuor Artibus popularibus;" "Historia Pelagiana;" "Institutiones Rhetoricæ, Grammaticæ, Poeticæ;" "Etymologicon Linguae Latinae;" "De Vitiis Sermonis;" "De Philosophorum Sectis." A collection of these were printed at Amsterdam, in 6 vols. fol. 1695—1701. Moreri.

This learned and laborious author, in his "Theologia Gentili," and other works, frequently speaks of music, and has a distinct chapter on the subject in his treatise on the four popular arts, grammar, gymnastics, music, and painting. Yet he tells us little concerning ancient or modern music after the time of Guido; contenting himself with giving definitions of the terms used in the ancient music of the Greeks. He heaps quotation on quotation, telling us how highly the Greeks estimated music; but attempts not to explain any of their doctrines. Like Mr. Bryant, he tries to shake our faith in what antiquity firmly believed. In writing "De Art. Poet. Nat." cap. xiii., he doubts whether Orpheus, Musæus, or Linus ever existed; and rather thinks that these ideal names are derived from the Phœnician language used by Cadmus and his descendants.

VOSSIUS (Isaac), younger son of the preceding, was born at Leyden in 1618, and in consequence of his natural talents, and the advantage of education under his father, acquired early reputation among the learned. Queen Christina, prepossessed by report in his favour, invited him to her court, and acquired, under his instruction, a knowledge of the Greek language. On the death of his father, in 1649, he quitted the court of Christina, and employed himself in the composition of various learned works. In 1670, he visited England, and received the degree of LL.D. at Oxford; and in 1673, he was presented by Charles II. with a canonry of Windsor, and in this situation he passed the residue of his days. His credulity led king Charles to say of him, "that he would believe any thing but the Bible." When he was on his death-bed, he was visited by Dr. Hascard, dean of Windsor, who urged him to receive the sacraments, if not for the love of God, at least for the honour of the chapter: he replied, "I wish you would instruct me how to compel the farmers to pay what they owe me; that is the service I desire of you at present." Thus disposed, he left the world in February, 1688, at the age of seventy. His very valuable library was purchased by the university of Leyden. Of his numerous publications the most important are the following: "Periplus Scylacis Caryandensis, et Anonymi Periplus ponti Euxini," Gr. et Lat. cum notis, Amst. 1639, 4to. "Justini Historia cum Notis," Leyd. 1640; "Ignatii Epistolæ et Barnabi Epistola," Amst. 1646, 4to.; "Dissertatio de vera Ætate Mundi;" "Pomponius Mela de Situ Orbis," Hagæ, Com. 1658 and 1659; "De Septuaginta Interpretibus eorumque Translatione et Chronologia Dissertationes," 1661; in which he attempted to establish the preference of the chronology of the Septuagint to that of the Hebrew text; which he defended in other tracts; "De Poematum Cantu et Viribus Rhythmi," Oxon. 1675; "De Sybillinis aliisque quæ Christi natalem præcesserit Oraculis," ib. 1679; "Variarum Observationum Liber," Lond. 1685, 4to.; "Catulli Opera cum Comment," ib. 1684. Moreri.

He was an enthusiastic and redoubted champion for the music of the ancient Greeks, and from his belle Latinitè and prejudices in its favour, is more frequently quoted by implicit believers in its perfection, than any other modern who has treated the subject.

Vossius, in his celebrated book, "De Poematum Cantu et Virih. Rhythmi," published 1675, Oxon., seems more ready to grant every possible and impossible excellence to the Greek musicians than, when alive, they could have asked. None of the poetical fables, or mythological allegories, relative to the power and excellence of their music, put the least violence upon his credulity. A religious bigot, who insists upon our swallowing implicitly every thing, however hard of digestion, is less likely to make converts to his opinions, than he who puts our faith to few trials; and Vossius overcharged his creed so much, that it is of no authority.

He does not attribute the efficacy of the Greek and Roman music to the richness of its harmony, or the elegance, the spirit, or pathos of its melody, but wholly to the force of rhythm. "As long," says he, p. 75, "as music flourished in this rhythmical form, so long flourished that power which was so adapted to excite and calm the passions." According to this opinion, there was no occasion for mellifluous sounds, or lengthened tones; a drum, cymbal, or the violent strokes of the Curetes and Salii on their shields, as they would have marked the time more articulately, so they would have produced more miraculous effects than the sweetest voice, or most polished instrument. In another place he tells us, that "to build cities, surround them with walls, to assemble or dismiss the people, to celebrate the praises of gods and men, to govern fleets and armies, to accompany all the functions and ceremonies of peace and war, and to temper the human passions, were the original offices of music: in short, ancient Greece may be said to have been wholly governed by the lyre."

It appears from this passage, and from the tenor of his whole book, that this author will not allow us to doubt of a single circumstance, be it ever so marvellous, relative to the perfection and power of ancient music; the probable and the improbable are equally articles of his belief; so that with such a lively faith, it is easy to imagine that he ranks it among mortal sins to doubt of the ancients having invented and practised counterpoint; and he consequently speaks with the highest indignation against the moderns, for daring to deny that they were in possession of a simultaneous harmony, mony, though, according to him, they used it with such intelligence and discretion, as never to injure the poetry by lengthening, shortening, or repeating words and syllables at their pleasure, nor by that most absurd of all customs, singing different words to several different airs at the same time.

This author's remarks, however, on the little attention that was paid by the composers of his time to prosody, merit some respect.

VOSTERMAN (John), was born at Bommel in 1643. He was the son of a portrait-painter, who taught him the first rudiments of design, but afterwards he received the instructions of Zachtleven. He became renowned for his ingenuity and his vanity. At Paris he assumed the style and title of baron, but soon found his honours were too dear to be supported. He returned to his native country, and was employed by the marquis de Bethema to paint views on the Rhine, and also as a collector of works of art. He came to England in the time of Charles II., and was engaged by the king to paint a view of Windsor; but was not much employed, and being extravagant, soon got into confinement, from which he was released by a contribution from his countrymen.

He accompanied Sir W. Soames on his mission to Constantinople, intending to take views of all the principal places by the way; but Sir W. dying on the road, his plan was broken up, and it is not known exactly what became of him afterwards. The scenery of his pictures is generally taken from the borders of the Rhine, and painted with chaste and agreeable colour, and admirable aerial perspective; and his figures and small boats are touched with spirit and neatness.

VOSTITZA, a district of the Morea, in Achaia, extending along the coast of the gulf of Lepanto; 25 miles east of Patras, and 40 north-west of Corinth.

VO'TARESS, s. A woman devoted to any worship or state.

His mother was a votaresse of my order;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakespeare.

VO'TARIST, s. [devotus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship; votary.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here?
Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold!
No, gods, I am no idle votarist. Shakespeare.

VO'TARY, s. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service; worship, study, or state of life. Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakespeare.

VO'TARY, adj. Consequent to a vow.—Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bacon.

VOTE, s. [votum, Lat.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Roscommon.

United voice of persons in public prayer. Not now in use.—And here may be taken in those interchangeable votes of priest and people, which are interposed, "O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for thy Name's sake! O God, we have heard with our ears," &c., and therefore now, "Arise, O Lord, help us, and deliver us for thine honour." Bp. Prideaux.

To VOTE, v. a. To choose by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.—You are not only in the eye and ear of your master; but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you. Bacon.—To give by vote.—The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds by way of recompence for their sufferings. Swift.

VO'TER, s. One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.—Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally seduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander. Swift.

VOTERSAY, a small island of the Hebrides, in the sound of Harris.

VOTIAKS, a half civilized tribe of Finish descent, who are scattered through the provinces of Viatka, Orenburg, and Kazan, or that part of Russia in Europe which adjoins Russia in Asia.

VO'TIVE, adj. [votivus, Latin.] Given by vow; observed in consequence of a vow.—Votive abstinence some constitutions may endure. Feltham.

To VOUCH, v. a. [voucher, Norman French.] To call to witness; to obtest.—Some vouch great names, because they think they deserve; but I, because I need such. South.—To attest; to warrant; to declare; to maintain by repeated affirmations.—They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury.

To VOUCH, v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness; to give testimony.—He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

VOUCH, s. Warrant; attestation.—What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself? Shakespeare.

VOUCHER, s. One who gives witness to any thing.—All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator.—Testimony.—The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it. Locke.

To VOUCHSAFE, v. a. To permit any thing to be done without danger.—To condescend to grant.—He grew content to mark their speeches, and marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Sidney.

To VOUCHSAFE, v. n. To deign; to condescend; to yield.

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakespeare.

VOUCHSAFEFEMENT, s. Grant; condescension.—The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore, to his creatures, incommunicable perfections. Boyle.

VOVES, a town of France, department of the Eure and Loire, with 1000 inhabitants; 15 miles south-east of Chartres.

VOUET (Simon), an eminent painter of the French school, born at Paris in 1582, was the son of Lawrence Vouet, a painter of little celebrity. When he was about twenty years old, he accompanied the baron de Sansy to Constantinople, where he painted from recollection the picture of the grand seignior. On his return he staid at Rome, and obtained the patronage of pope Urban VIII. and his nephew the cardinal, by whom he was employed in St. Peter's, and the Barberini palace. Here he resided 14 years, and was elected head of the academy of St. Luke in 1624.

Louis XIII. appointed him, on his return to Paris in 1627, his principal painter; and employed him munificently in most of his palaces. He also painted pictures for many churches in Paris. He died there in 1641.

Vouet at first was careful and rich in his designs and his execution; but as his engagements increased in number, he adopted a style flimsy and even careless; fluttered in the parts and had no grandeur in the conception. He is the father of the French school before the revolution, and corrupted the art by its delusive facility. He was the teacher of Le Brun, Mignard, and others, but had more honour in having trained Le Seuer to the practice of art; who, nevertheless, had the sense sense to aim at the taste of design seen in the works of Raffaele rather than in those of his master.

VOUGA, a small town of Portugal, in the province of Beira, on the river Vouga; 37 miles north of Coimbra.

VOUILLE, a town of France, department of the Vienne; 8 miles north of Poitiers.

VOULTE, a town of France, department of the Ardeche, on the Rhone; 12 miles south-west of Valence.

VOUNEUIL, a town of France, department of the Vienne; 15 miles north-east of Poitiers.

VOURLA, a sea-port of Asia Minor, on the site of the ancient Clazomenc, which was one of the twelve great cities of Ionia; 25 miles west of Smyrna.

VOUTE, LA, a town of France, department of the Ardeche, on the Rhone; 18 miles north of Viviers. Population 1400.

VOUTE, LA, a town of France, department of the Upper Loire; 9 miles south of Brioude.

VOUTEZAC, a town of France, department of the Correze; 9 miles north-west of Brives. Population 2100.

VOUTING, a city of China, of the second rank, in Shantung. Lat. 37. 35. N. long. 117. 19. E.

VOUVRAY, a town of France, on the Loire; 6 miles north-east of Tours. Population 2500.

VOUZIERS, a town of France, department of the Ardennes, situated on the Aisne; 20 miles south-east of Rethel. Population 1600.

VOW, s. [væu, Fr.; votum, Lat.] Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions is consecrated to a particular purpose.—If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.—A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever woman spoke.

Shakspeare.

To VOW, v. a. [voveo, Lat.] To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.—Vow and pay unto the lord. Ps.—To devote: a ceremonial phrase.—To Master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.

To VOW, v. n. To make vows of solemn promises.

Dost see how unregarded now

That piece of beauty passes?

There was a time, when I did vow

To that alone; but mark the fate of faces.

Suckling.

VOW CHURCH, a parish of England, in Herefordshire; 11½ miles west-by-south of Hereford.

VO'WED, part. pass. Consecrated by solemn declaration.

Me in my vow'd

Picture the sacred wall declares t' have hung

My dank and dropping weeds

To the stern god of sea.

Milton.

VO'WEL, s. [vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.—Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Broome.

VO'WELLED, adj. Furnished with vowels.

But Italy, reviving from the trance

Of Vandal, Goth, and monkish ignorance,

With pauses, cadence, and well vowell'd words,

And all the graces a good ear affords,

Made rhyme an art.

Dryden.

VO'WER, s. One who makes a vow.—I think it needless that the vower should be well convinced of the greatness of his sin, in making such a [rash] vow. Sanderson.

VOWFELLOW, s. One bound by the same vow.

Who are the votaries,

That are vowfellows with this virtuous king? Shakspeare.

VOWMINE, a hamlet of England, in Herefordshire; 13 miles south-south-west of Kington.

VOXA, a river of European Russia, in Finland, which issues from the lake of Saima, and falls into the Lake Ladoga.

VOYAGE, s. [from viam agere, Lat. The old Engl. word is viage. Huloet's Dict.]—A travel by sea or land, formerly; now applied only to that by sea.

Guyon forward gan his voyage make,

With his black palmer, that him guided still. Spenser.

Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.—If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakspeare.—The practice of travelling.—All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.

To VOYAGE, v. n. To travel; now appropriated to travelling by sea.—My life hath not been unexpensive in learning and voyaging about. Milton.

To VOYAGE, v. a. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain

Voyag'd the unreal, vast, unbounded deep

Of horrible confusion.

Milton.

VOYAGER, s. [voyageur, Fr.] One who travels by sea.

Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;

A private voyager I pass the main.

Pope.

UP, adv. [up, Saxon; op, Dutch and Danish.] Aloft; on high; not down.—From those two brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles.—Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.—His chamber being commonly stived with suiters, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him, his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Wotton.—In the state of being risen from a seat.—Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that Sir Roger was up. Addison.—From a state of decumbiture or concealment.—In a state of being built.

Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night;

But where to-morrow?—well, all's one for that.

Shakspeare.

Above the horizon.—As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges.—To a state of proficiency.—Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of Christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.—In a state of exaltation.

Henry the Fifth is crown'd; up vanity!

Down royal state! all you sage counsellors hence.

Shakspeare.

In a state of climbing.

Straight the rumor flew

Up to the city; which heard, up they drew

By daies first brake.

Chapman.

In a state of insurrection.

Thou hast fir'd me; my soul's up in arms,

And mans each part about me.

Dryden.

In a state of being increased or raised.—Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be pour'd unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.—From a remote place, coming to any person or place.—As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.—Into order: as he drew up his regiment.—From younger to elder years.—I am ready to die from my youth up. Ps.—Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.—Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.—Up and down. Backward and forward.

The skipping king he rambled up and down,

With shallow jesters.

Shakspeare.

UP to. To an equal height with.—Tantalus was punished punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison.—Up to. Adequately to.—The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.

Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.

She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise:
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace.

Sidney.

It is added to verbs, implying some accumulation, or increase.—If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison.

UP, interject. A word exhorting to rise from bed.

Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey.

Pope.

A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.

Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst afore.

Up, grisly ghosts; and up my rueful rime;

Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more.

Spenser.

UP, prep. From a lower to a higher part; not down.—In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary; in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.

UPA, a river of New Granada, in the province of Antioquia, which runs north, and turning west, enters the great river Magdalena.

UPAMENA, a river of Brazil, which runs into the Atlantic. Lat 4. 30. S. long. 37. 32. W.

UPAMENA, a settlement of New Granada, in the province of San Juan de los Llanos.

UPANO, a river of Quito, in the province of Quixos and Macas, formed by the rivers Zuna, Vulcano, and Abanico.

UPAR, or UPARI, a long and beautiful valley of the province and government of Santa Martha, in the new kingdom of Granada. It is more than 40 miles from north to south, and more than 30 wide from east to west.

UP-AVON, or UPHAVEN, a parish of England, in Wiltshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Pewsey. Population 408.

To UPBE'AR, v. a. preter. upbore; part. pass. upborn. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.—Upborn with indefatigable wings. Milton.—To raise aloft.

A monstrous wave upbore

The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore.

Pope.

To support from falling.

Vital powers gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man.

Spenser.

UPBERY, or OBURY, a hamlet of England, in Bedfordshire; 9 miles from Luton.

To UPBIND, v. a. To bind up.—O Peace, thy injur'd robes upbind! Collins.

To UPBLOW, v. a. To blow up; to make tumid.—His belly was upblowne with luxury. Spenser.

To UPBRA'ID, v. a. [upzēbræban, upzēbrēban, Sax.] To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful. It has commonly with, sometimes of, before the thing imputed; sometimes it has only an accusative of the thing, as in Milton, and sometimes the person without the thing, or the thing without the person.

If you refuse your aid, yet do not

Upbraid us with our distress.

Shakspeare.

To object as matter of reproach: with to before the person.

May they not justly to our climes upbraid,
Shortness of night, and penury of shade,

Prior.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1652.

To urge with reproach.

I have too long born

Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs. Shakspeare.

To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.—Be ashamed of upbraidings speeches before friends: and after thou hast given upbraid not. Ecclus.—

To bring reproach upon; to shew faults by being in a state of comparison.—Ah, my son, how evil fits it me to have such a son, and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness! Sidney.—To treat with contempt. Not in use.

There also was that mighty monarch laid,

Low under all, yet above all in pride;

That name of native sire did foul upbraid,

And would, as Ammon's son, be magnify'd.

Spenser.

UPBRA'IDER, s. One that reproaches.—The latter hath no *upbraid*ers. B. Jonson.

UPBRA'IDING, s. Reproach.—Thou say'st his meat was sauc'd with thy upbraidings. Shakspeare.

UPBRA'IDINGLY, adv. By way of reproach.—He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. B. Jonson.

To UPBRA'Y, v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.

Vile knight,

That knights and knighthood dost with shame upbray,

And shew'st th' ensample of thy childish might,

With silly, weak, old women thus to fight.

Spenser.

UPBRO'UGHT, part. pass. of upbring. Educated; nurtured.

Divinely wrought,

And of the brood of angels, heav'nly born,

And with the crew of blessed saints upbrought,

Each of which did her with her gifts adorn.

Spenser.

UPCAST, [Participle from To cast up. The verb To upcast is not in use.] Thrown upwards.

Beasts with upcast eyes forsake their shade,

And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd.

Dryden.

UPCAST, s. A term of bowling; a throw; a cast.—Was there ever man had such luck? when I kiss'd the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away! Shakspeare.

UPCHURCH, a parish of England, in Kent; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-by-south of Chatham. The spire of the parish church is accounted a sea-mark.

UPCOT, a hamlet of England, in Devonshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Taunton.

To UPDRA'W, v. a. To draw up.

Which through veins

Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,

Rose a fresh fountain.

Milton.

To UPGA'THER, v. a. To contract.

Himself he close upgather'd more and more

Into his den, that his deceitful train,

By his there being might not be bewraid,

Ne any noise, ne any question made.

Spenser.

To UPGRO'W, v. n. To grow up.

Over-head upgrew

Insuperable height of loftiest shade.

Milton.

UPHALL, or STRATHBROK, a parish of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, containing 3922 acres. Population 800.

UPHAM, a parish of England, in Southamptonshire; 3 miles north-north-west of Bishop's Waltham. Population 400.

UPHAND, adj. Lifted by the hand.—The uphand sledge is used by underworkmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Mozon.

To UPHE'AVE, v. a. To heave up; to lift up.

Immediately the mountains huge appear

Emergent, and their broad bare backs upheave

Into the clouds.

Milton.

UPHELD, pret. and part. pass. of uphold. Maintained; sustained.

He who reigns
Monarch in heaven, till then, as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.

UPHILL, adj. Difficult; like the labour of climbing a hill.—What an uphill labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Richardson.

UPHILL, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 8 miles north-west-by-west of Axbridge, near the passage to Wales, across the Bristol channel.

To UPHOARD, v. a. To treasure; to store; to accumulate in private places.

If thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure, in the womb of earth,
Speak of it. Shakspeare.

UPHOE, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Lavedons, Buckinghamshire.

To UPHOLD, v. a. preter. upheld; and part. pass. upheld, and upholden. To lift on high.

The mournful train with groans and hands upheld,
Besought his pity. Dryden.

To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

While life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare.

To keep from declension.—There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are fair pleaded; for that upholds, in the client, the reputation of his council, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.—To support in any state of life.—Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Raleigh.—To continue; to keep from defeat.—Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater hurt to the course of their whole proceedings: Hooker.—To keep from being lost.

Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakspeare.

To continue without failing.—A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds a current communication of discourse with him. Holder.—To continue in being.—A due proportion is held betwixt the parts, as well in the natural body of man, as the body politic of the state, for the upholding of the whole. Hakewill.

UPHOLDER, s. A supporter.
Suppose then Atlas ne'er so wise:
Yet when the weight of kingdoms lies
Too long upon his single shoulders,
Sink down he must, or find upholders. Swift.

A sustainer in being.—The knowledge thereof is so many manuductions to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Creator and upholder of them. Hale.—An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.—The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects. Arbutnot.

UPHOLLAND, a township of England, in Lancashire; 3 miles from Wigan.

UPHOLSTERER, s. One who furnishes houses; one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.—If a corner of the hanging wants a single nail, send for the upholsterer. Swift.

Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
Your barber, cook, upholsterer. Pope.

UPHOLSTERY, s. The articles made or sold by upholsterers.

UPIA, a river of the new kingdom of Granada, in the province of San Juan de los Llanos, which enters the Meta.

UPIENI, a river of Brazil, in the province of Seara, which enters the sea between the river Acuma and the point of Arecifes.

UPLAMOOR, a village of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, in the parish of Nielston.

UPLAND, s. [uplanð, Sax.] Higher ground.—Men at first, after the flood, lived in the uplands and sides of the mountains, and by degrees sunk into the plains. Burnet.

UPLAND, adj. Higher in situation.
Sometimes with secure delight,
The upland hamlets will invite. Milton.

Rude; savage. This is the meaning in Chapman; probably because the uplanders, having less commerce, were less civilized.

And long'd to see this heap of fortitude,
That so illiterate was, and upland rude,
That lawes divine nor humane he had learn'd. Chapman.

UPLAND, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Kirklington, North Riding of Yorkshire.

UPLAND, a province of Middle Sweden, bounded by the gulf of Bothnia, the Baltic, the lake of Malar, and Westmannland. Upland contains Upsal, and several other towns.

UPLANDISH, adj. [uplanðisc, Sax.] Higher in situation; mountainous.—He caused fifteen miles' space of uplandish ground, where the sea had no passage, to be cut and digged up. Robinson.—Inhabiting mountains; rustic; rude.—Some are more domestical and tame; and others again, are altogether wild, uplandish, and agrestial. Swan.

To UPLAY, v. a. To hoard; to lay up.
We are but farmers of ourselves; yet may,
If we can stock ourselves and thrive, uplay
Much, much good treasure for the great rent-day. Donne.

To UPLEAD, v. a. To lead upward.
Upled by thee
Into the heaven of heavens I have presum'd,
An earthly guest. Milton.

UPLEADON, a hamlet of England, in Gloucestershire, on the river Ledon; 3 miles east-by-north of Newent.—2d. A hamlet of Herefordshire; 4 miles from Ledbury.

UPLEATHAM, a township of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles north-by-east of Guisborough.

To UPLIFT, v. a. To raise aloft.
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And, with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd
At Ravenspurg. Shakspeare.

UPLIME, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 4 miles south-south-east of Axminster. Population 629.

To UPLOCK, v. a. To lock up.
So am I as the rich; whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet uplocked treasure. Shakspeare.

UPLOWMAN, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 5 miles east-north-east of Tiverton. Population 377.

UPMINSTER, a parish of England, in Essex, so called from its lofty situation, its name signifying a church on the hill; 1½ mile east-south-east of Horn Church.

UPMOST, adj. [an irregular superlative formed from up.] Highest; topmost.

Away! ye skum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils;
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice, when rated to depart. Dryden.

UPNOR CASTLE, in England, is situated west of the river Medway, near Fendsbury, and almost opposite Chatham Dock, and was built by queen Elizabeth for the defence of the Medway, which is the usual rendezvous of the royal navy. Its platform carries 37 guns, that command two reaches of the river, and defend all the ships that ride between them and Rochester.

UPON, prep. [The Sax. upa, uþon, signifies above, and M. Goth. ufar, higher.] Not under; noting being on the top.

As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move. Shakspeare.

Not

Not within; being on the outside.—Blood that is upon the altar. Ex.—Thrown over the body, as clothes.—I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her night-gown upon her. Shakspeare.—By way of imprecation or infliction.

Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world;
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads. Shakspeare.

It expresses obtestation, or protestation.

How? that I should murder her?

Upon the love and truth, and vows, which I
Have made to thy command! — I, her! — her blood!

Shakspeare.

It is used to express any hardship or mischief.—If we would neither impose upon ourselves, nor others, we must lay aside that fallacious method of censuring by the lump. Burnet.—In consequence of. Now little in use.—Let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever. Shakspeare.—In immediate consequence of.—This advantage we lost upon the invention of fire-arms. Addison.—In a state of view.

Is it upon record? or else reported
Successively, from age to age?

Shakspeare.

Supposing a thing granted.—If you say necessity is the mother of arts and inventions, and there was no necessity before, and therefore these things were slowly invented, this is a good answer upon our supposition. Burnet.—Relating to a subject.

Ambitious Constance would not cease,
'Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son.

Shakspeare.

With respect to.—The king's servants, who were sent for, were examined upon all questions proposed to them. Dryden.—In consideration of.—Upon the whole matter, and humanly speaking, I doubt there was a fault somewhere. Dryden.—In noting a particular day.—Constantia he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to be solemnized. Addison.—Noting reliance or trust.

We now may boldly spend upon the hope
Of what is to come in.

Shakspeare.

Near to; noting situation.—The Lucquese plead prescription for hunting in one of the duke's forests, that lies upon their frontiers. Addison.—In the state of.—They were entertained with the greatest magnificence that could be, upon no greater warning. Bacon.—On occasion of.—The earl of Cleveland, a man of signal courage, and an excellent officer upon any bold enterprise, advanced. Clarendon.—Noting assumption: as, he takes state upon him; he took an office upon him.—Since he acts as his servant, he takes his judicial determination upon himself, as if it were his own. Kettlewell.—Noting the time when an event came to pass. It is seldom applied to any denomination of time longer than a day.—In one day, even upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month. Esth.—Noting security.—We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and upon our vineyards. Nehem.—Noting attack.—The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. Judges.—On pain of.—To such a ridiculous degree of trusting her she had brought him, that she caused him send us word, that upon our lives we should do whatsoever she commanded us. Sidney.—At the time of; on occasion of.—Impartially examine the merits and conduct of the presbyterians upon these two great events, and the pretensions to favour which they challenge upon them. Swift.—By inference from.—Without it, all discourses of government and obedience, upon his principles, would be to no purpose. Locke.—Noting attention.—He presently lost the sight of what he was upon; his mind was filled with disorder and confusion. Locke.—Noting particular pace.—Provide ourselves of the virtuoso's saddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.—Exactly; according to; full.

In goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge the number
Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

Shakspeare.

By; noting the means of support.—Upon a closer inspection of these bodies, the shells are affixed to the surfaces of them in such a manner, as bodies; lying on the sea-shores, upon which they live. Woodward.—Upon is, in many of its significations, now contracted into on, especially in poetry. See ON.—The meaning of this particle is very multifarious; for it is applied both to place, which seems its original signification; to time; which seems its secondary meaning; and to intellectual or corporeal operations. It always retains an intimation, more or less obscure, of some substratum, something precedent, or some subject. It is not easy to reduce it to any general idea.

UP-OTTERY, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 5 miles north-north-east of Honiton. Population 820.

UPPER, adj. [a comparative from up.] Superior in place; higher.

With speed to-night repair;
For not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wandering walks in upper air.

Dryden

Higher in power or dignity.—The like corrupt and unreasonable custom prevailed far, and got the upper-hand of right reason with the greatest part. Hooker.

UPPER, a township of the United States, in Scioto county, Ohio. Population 496.

UPPER LAKE, a lake of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, four miles from Lough Lane, with which it communicates by a river, which runs between Torc mountain and Gleenaa mountain.

UPPER SAVAGE ISLANDS, islands in Hudson's bay. Lat. 62. 32. N. long. 70. 48. W.

UPPER THREE RUNS, a post village of the United States, in Barnwell district, South Carolina.

UPPERBY, or UPRIGHTBY, a hamlet of England, in Cumberland; 1½ mile south of Carlisle.

UPPERMOST, adj. Highest in place.—In all things follow nature, not painting clouds in the bottom of your piece, and waters in the uppermost parts. Dryden.—Highest in power or authority.—The lower powers are gotten uppermost, and we see like men on our heads, as Plato observed of old, that on the right hand, which is indeed on our left. Glanville.—'Tis all one to the common people who's uppermost. L'Estrange.—Predominant; most powerful.

As in perfumes compos'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all;
So she was all a sweet.

Dryden.

UPPERSWELL, a small village of England, in Gloucestershire, near Stow-on-the-Wold.

UPPERVILLE, a post village of the United States, in Loudon county, Virginia.

UPPINGHAM, a market town of England, in the county of Rutland. It stands upon an eminence, from whence it is supposed to have derived its name, and is a neat and well built little town consisting chiefly of one street. By a statute of Henry VII. the standard for weights and measures is kept here. Market on Wednesday for cattle and corn, which is well frequented; with two annual fairs in March and July, for horses, cattle, and coarse linen cloth; 6 miles south of Oakham, and 19 north-by-west of London. On the left a road strikes off to Leicester, and on the right to Stamford. Population 1484.

UPPINGTON, a parish of England, in Salop; 3½ miles west-south-west of Wellington.

UPPISH, adj. Proud; arrogant. A low word.

To UPRAISE, v. a. To raise up; to exalt.

This would interrupt his joy
In our confusion and our joy upraise
In his disturbance.

Milton.

To UPREAR, v. a. To rear on high.
Heav'n-born charity! thy blessings shed;
Bid meagre want uprear her sickly head.

Gay.
UPRIGH'T,

UPRIGHT, adj. [Saxon, uprīhtæ.] This word, with its derivatives, is in prose accented on the first syllable; but in poetry seems to be accented indifferently on the first or second. Straight up; perpendicularly erect.—Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright. Shakspeare.—Erected; pricked up.

Stood Theodore surpris'd in deadly fright,
With chatt'ring teeth, and bristling hair upright. Dryden.

Honest; not declining from the right.

Such neighbour nearness should not partialize
Th' unstooping firmness of my upright soul. Shakspeare.

UPRIGHT, s. Elevation; orthography.—You have the orthography, or upright of this ground-plat, and the explanation thereof, with a scale of feet and inches. Moron.

UPRIGHT BAY, a bay near the western extremity of the straits of Magellan. Lat. 53. 8. S. long. 75. 35. W.

UPRIGHT CAPE, a cape in the straits of Magellan, on the shore of Terra del Fuego. Lat. 53. 6. S. long. 75. 32. W.—2. A cape on the east end of Gore island, in the North Pacific ocean. Lat. 60. 30. N. long. 172. 13. W.

UPRIGHT, POINT, a cape on the east coast of New Holland. Lat. 35. 38. N. long. 209. 43. W.

UPRIGHTLY, adv. Perpendicularly to the horizon.—Honestly; without deviation from the right.

To live uprightly then is sure the best,
To save ourselves, and not to damn the rest. Dryden.

UPRIGHTNESS, s. Perpendicular erection. This was anciently accented on the second.

So the fair tree, which still preserves
Her fruit and state, while no wind blows,
In storms from that uprightness swerves,
And the glad earth about her strows
With treasure from her yielding boughs. Waller.

Honesty; integrity.—The hypocrite bends his principles and practice to the fashion of a corrupt world; but the truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

To UPRISE, v. n. To rise from decumbency.

Uprose the virgin with the morning light,
Obedient to the vision of the night. Pope.

To rise from below the horizon.—Uprose the sun. Cowley.—To rise with acclivity.

Was that the king that spurr'd his horse so hard
Against the steep uprising of the hill? Shakspeare.

UPRISE, s. Appearance above the horizon.
Did ever raven sing so like a lark.
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise. Shakspeare.

Act of rising from decumbency.

Instead of musick and base flattering tongues,
Which wait to first salute my lord's uprise,
The cheerful lark wakes him with early songs. P. Fletcher.

UPRISING, s. Act of rising from below the horizon.—He gives those rebels battle at the sun's first uprising. Sir T. Herbert.—Act of rising from decumbency.—Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine uprising. Ps.

UPROAR, s. [oproer, Dutch. This word likewise is accented on the first syllable in prose; in verse, indifferently on either.] Tumult; bustle; disturbance; confusion.

Others with vast Typhoean rage more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind: hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton.

To UPROAR, v. a. To throw into confusion. Not in use.

Had I power, I should
Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth. Shakspeare.

To UPROLL, v. a. To roll up.

Thither they [the waters]
Hasted with glad precipitance, uproll'd
As drops on dust conglobing from the dry. Milton.

To UPRO'OT, v. a. To tear up by the root.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre;
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher,
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard, and straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heaven. Dryden.

To UPRO'USE, v. a. To waken from sleep; to excite to action.—Thou art uprou's'd by some distemperature. Shakspeare.

UPSAL, an ancient town of Sweden, in a district of the same name, province of Upland. The coronation of the kings of Sweden is still performed here; 35 miles north of Stockholm. Lat. 59. 51. 50. long. 17. 39. 0. E.

UPSALA, GAMLA or OLD, in Sweden, formerly the chief town of the province of Upland, now an inconsiderable place, containing only a church and a few cottages; 3 miles north of Upsal.

UPSALL, a hamlet of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles west of Guisborough.

UPSALL CASTLE, a hamlet of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-north-east of Thisk.

To UPSE'T, v. a. To overturn; to overthrow. A low word.

UPSHIRE, a hamlet of England, in Essex, near Waltham Abbey. Population 547.

UPSHOT, s. Conclusion; end; last amount; final event.

In this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall on th' inventors' heads. Shakspeare.

UPSIDE down, [an adverbial form of speech; formerly up-so-down, or upsodown. "It maketh a londe turne up so downe." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7. "A mannes conscyence stereth up so downe the memory." Bp. Fisher, Ps.] With the lower part above the higher.—In the day-time they fish in their boats, which they draw unto the land at night; and, turning them upside down, sleep under them. Heylin.—In confusion; in complete disorder.

In his lap a mass of coin he told,
And turned upside down to feed his eye,
And covetous desire, with his huge treasure. Spenser.

UPSALD, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Kirklington, North Riding of Yorkshire.

To UPSPRING, v. n. To spring up.

The flames upspring, and cruelly they creep
From wall to roof. Sackville.

These in flocks

Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.

UPSPRING, s. This word seems to signify upstart; a man suddenly exalted. Not used.

The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse;
Keeps wassel, and the swagg'ring upspring reels. Shakspeare.

To UPSTA'ND, v. n. To be erected.

Sea calves unwonted to fresh rivers fly;
The water snakes with scales upstanding die. May.

To UPSTA'RT, v. n. To spring up suddenly.

Thus having spoke, he sat; thus answer'd then,
Upstarting from his throne, the king of men,
His breast with fury fill'd. Dryden.

UPSTART, s. One suddenly raised to wealth, power, or honour; what suddenly rises and appears.—Trade, he said, carried from us the commodities of our country, and made a parcel of upstarts, as rich as men of the most antient families. Addison.

UPSTART, adj. Suddenly raised.

My rights and royalties
Plucked from my arms perforce, and given away
To upstart unthrifths. Shakespeare.

UPSTART, CAPE, a cape on the north-east coast of Holland. Lat. 19. 39. S. long. 212. 32. W.

To UPSTAY, v. a. To sustain; to support.

Them she upstays
Gently with myrtle band; mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flow'r. Milton.

UPSTREET, a hamlet of England, in the county of Kent, situated on the river Stour, near the isle of Thanet; 6½ miles from Canterbury.

To UPSWA'RM, v. a. To raise in a swarm. Out of use.

You've taken up the subjects of my father;
And both against the voice of heaven and him
Have here upswarm'd them. Shakespeare.

To UPTAKE, v. a. To take into the hands.
He hearkened to his reason, and the child
Uptaking, to the palmer gave to bear. Spenser.

To UPTEAR, v. a. To tear up; to rend up.
The rest in imitation; to like arms
Betook them, and the neighbouring hills uptore. Milton.

UPTON, a township of England, county of Berks; 4½ miles north-north-east of East Ilsley.—2. A parish of England, county of Buckingham; 1 mile south-east of Slough. Population 584.—3. A township of England, county of Chester; 2 miles north of Chester.—4. A township in the same county; 1½ mile north-west of Macclesfield.—5. Another township in Chester; 8½ miles north-by-west of Great Neston.—6. A hamlet of England, county of Gloucester; 2 miles north of Tutbury. Population 378.—7. A parish of England, county of Huntingdon; 6 miles north-west of Huntingdon.—8. A hamlet of England, in the parish of Buxley, county of Kent.—9. A hamlet of England, county of Leicester; 3½ miles south-west of Market Bosworth.—10. A township of England, in Lincolnshire; 5 miles south-east-by-east of Gainsborough.—11. A parish of England, county of Norfolk; 1½ mile north of Acle.—12. A hamlet of England, in Northamptonshire; 2 miles east-north-east of Wandsworth.—13. A parish in the same county; 2½ miles west of Northampton.—14. A parish of England, county of Nottingham; 2½ miles east of Southwell.—15. A hamlet in the same county; 3½ miles north-by-east of Tuxford.—16. A hamlet of England, county of Oxford; about a mile west of Burford.—17. A parish of England, county of Somerset; 4 miles east-by-north of Dulverton.—18. A township of England, in Warwickshire; 5 miles south-east-by-south of Kineton.—19. A township of England, West Riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles south-by-east of Pontefract.

UPTON, BISHOP'S, a parish of England, county of Hereford; 5 miles north-east-by-east of Ross. Population 586.

UPTON, CRESSETT, a parish of England, in the county of Salop; 5 miles west-by-south of Bridgenorth.

UPTON, GREY, a parish of England, in the county of Southampton; 3½ miles west-south-west of Odiham.

UPTON, HELION, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 3 miles north-north-east of Crediton.

UPTON, ST. LEONARD, a parish of England, in the county of Gloucester; 2½ miles south-east-by-south of Gloucester.

UPTON, LOVELL, a parish of England, in Wiltshire; 5½ miles east-south-east of Warminster.

UPTON, MAGNA, a parish of England, in the county of Salop; 4 miles east of Shrewsbury. Population 510.

UPTON, NOBLE, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 3½ miles north-north-east of Bruton.

UPTON, OLD, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Blockley, county of Gloucester.

UPTON, PRODHOME, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Hembury, Devonshire.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1652.

UPTON, PYNE, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 4 miles north-by-east of Exeter. Population 363.

UPTON, SCUDAMORE, a parish of England, in Wiltshire; 2 miles north of Warminster. Population 314.

UPTON UPON SEVERN, a market town of England, in the county of Worcester. It is situated on the north bank of the Severn, over which there is a stone bridge of six arches. Upton is believed to have been a Roman station. Population 2023. Market on Thursday, and four annual fairs; 10 miles south of Worcester, and 111 west-north-west of London.

UPTON, SNOBSBURY, a parish of England, in the county of Worcester, situated on the river Piddle; 6 miles east-by-south of Worcester.

UPTON, WARREN, a parish of England, in the county of Worcester; 3 miles north-north-east of Droitwich.

UPTON WATERS, a parish of England, in the county of Salop; 5½ miles north-by-west of Wellington.

UPTON, a township of the United States, in Worcester county, Massachusetts; 14 miles south-east of Worcester, and 38 south-west of Boston. Population 995.

To UPTRAIN, v. a. To bring up; to educate. Not used.

King Lear in happy peace long reign'd,
But had no issue male him to succeed,
But three fair daughters, which were well uptrain'd
In all that seem'd fit for kingly seed. Spenser.

To UPTURN, v. a. To throw up; to furrow.
So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air. Milton.

UPUDRANG, a town of Northern Hindostan, province of Nepaul. Lat. 27. 37. N. long. 84. 23. E.

UPUPA, in Ornithology, a genus of birds belonging to the order of Picæ, the characters of which are, that the bill is bent, long, slender, convex, subcompressed, and somewhat obtuse: the nostrils are small at the base of the bill; the tongue obtuse, entire, triquetrous, and very short; and the feet formed for walking. In the Linnæan system by Gmelin there are eight species, which are as follow:

1. Upupa epops.—Crested and variegated, or the ferruginous hoopoe, with the wings barred black and white, the tail black, with a lunated white bar, and the crest tipped with black and white. It is an elegant bird, generally inhabiting the warmer and temperate parts of the old continent, and migrating occasionally, at different seasons, in different directions. In our island it is much more rarely seen than in other northern climates. It is about the size of a common thrush. The colour of the head, neck, and body, is pale ferruginous or cinnamon-brown; the wings and tail are black, the former crossed by five white bars, the latter by a white crescent; the rump and lower part of the abdomen are white, and the sides generally marked by a few longitudinal dusky streaks; on the head is an elegant crest, which it can either erect or expand, or depress and close at pleasure, composed of feathers which are cinnamon-coloured, with black tips, a white bar separating the tip from the rest of the feathers; the legs are short and blackish. The hoopoe migrates during the spring from Africa into various parts of Europe, and returns in winter. In various parts of Egypt, however, it is nearly domesticated, building even among the houses. The flesh of these domestic hoopoes is rank and unfit for eating, but that of the migrating birds is considered in many parts of Europe as an agreeable food, particularly in Italy, the south of France, and in the Grecian islands. Its nest is to be sometimes found in a wall or tree, and is generally said to have a peculiarly fetid smell, supposed to be chiefly owing to the remains of various kinds of insects. The number of eggs is from five to seven. In Egypt the migrating hoopoe never associates with those of the towns, but frequents remote and solitary places. These birds are generally seen on the surface of the ground, being very rarely observed to perch on trees. Dr. Shaw mentions as a variety the blue-crested hoopoe, observed at Florence and on the Alps, near the town of Rota, and differing from the common hoopoe in having the crest-feathers tipped with sky-blue instead of black. The upupa minor, smaller hoopoe, ferruginous, with the wings varied with white, and the crest tipped with black, the la huppe d'Afrique of Buffon, may probably be another variety of the common hoopoe, which inhabits the southern parts of Africa, and is found in the kingdom of Congo, and at the Cape of Good Hope, frequenting low grounds in the neighbourhood of thickets, and not migratory.

5 M common

2. Upupa Capensis.—Crested brown, beneath white, with a white spot on the wings. This is the Madagascar hoopoe, white, with cinnamon-brown wings and tail, and loose-webbed crest. The tail-feathers of this species are twelve in number; the colour of the crest, throat, and all the under parts of the bird, is white, without any variegation; that of the upper parts, from the back of the head to the end of the tail, dusky or greyish brown, deepest on the wings and tail; on the edge of the wing is a white spot, the tips of two or three of the larger coverts being of that colour: the legs and feet are yellowish.—It is a native of the island of Madagascar, as well as of some of the African isles, and is said to feed on seeds and berries. From the structure of the tongue, which is rather broad, and divided at the extremity into several fibres, Dr. Shaw infers, that it is nearly related to the genus merops, or bee-eater.

3. Upupa promerops.—The hoopoe with six tail-feathers, the intermediate being the longest. The size of this bird is that of a lark; its colour is rufous brown, somewhat deeper on the wings and tail; throat white, with a narrow, longitudinal, dusky streak on each side; under part of the abdomen whitish, dashed with dusky streaks, vent yellow, tail very strongly cuneated, bill black, and also the legs. In some, probably the males, the breast as well as the abdomen is spotted, and the wings are crossed by a narrow grey or whitish stripe.—A native of Africa, common about the Cape of Good Hope.

4. Upupa erythrorineus.—The grey hoopoe, with a mixture of sea-green and purple. Underneath yellow, greater quill-feathers blueish, and the four intermediate tail-feathers longer than the rest. The bill is near two inches long, and blackish; the whole of the upper parts, except the quills, which are light blue, are grey, with green and purplish glosses. The under parts of the body are light yellow, and a spot of the same colour is situated above each eye.—This species is said to be a native of Mexico, frequenting mountainous regions, and feeding on various kinds of insects.

5. Upupa paradisea.—The crested chesnut-coloured hoopoe, with the two middle tail-feathers much longer than the rest. This is the chesnut promerops, grey beneath, with black-crested head, and very long tail. The avis paradisiaca cristata orientalis rarissima of Seba, the promerops of Buffon; and crested promerops of Latham. It is about the size of a starling; the bill is curved, and of a lead colour, as are also the legs; the head and neck are a fine deep black; the crown of the head being ornamented by a very conspicuous lengthened semi-pendant crest; the whole remainder of the bird on the upper parts is bright brown, on the under pale ash-colour. A native, according to Seba, of the East Indies, where, as he says, it is very rare.

6. Upupa fusca.—The brown hoopoe, underneath grey, striped with white and black, the crown of the colour of polished steel, the throat and neck black, and two intermediate tail-feathers very long. This is the brown promerops, beneath white, with black undulations, and very long tail. The promerops brun, à ventre et eye of Buffon, and New Guinea brown promerops of Latham. According to Sonnerat, who first described and figured it, the neck, back, wings, and tail of this bird are brown; the breast and remaining under parts white, undulated by numerous transverse black stripes, each feather having two white and two black bars; the tail very long, and strongly cuneated, the bill considerably curved, of a blackish colour; and the legs yellowish-brown.—A native of New Guinea, inhabiting large woods.

7. Upupa magna.—The black hoopoe; the head, hind part of the neck, breast, and exterior part of the falcated scapular feathers golden green, and very long tail. This is the superb promerops, with violet and green gloss, falcated golden-shining scapular feathers, and very long tail. Its shape is slender, the tail almost three times the length of the remainder of the bird, which is not larger than a common pigeon; the bill narrow, black, and pretty much curved; the general colour of the whole bird is black, accompanied, according to the different directions of the light, by varying reflections of blue, green, and violet; the other parts as above described. The scapular feathers, or those situated along the sides of the body, rise up into two rows of reversed falciform plumes, gradually enlarging from the shoulders to the rump, beyond which they become much longer but less curved, and are stretched to some distance on each side of the base of the tail; the colour of their inner or shallower scales is purplish-black, but along the edges and tip of the wider web it is of a brilliant golden-green: on each side of the lower part of the body, beneath the wings, is also situated a thick and moderately long group of loose-webbed, pendent, brownish feathers; the tail consists of twelve feathers; and the legs are strong and black. This bird was first described by Sonnerat and is a native of Guinea; but its history and habits are unknown.

8. Upupa aurantia.—The yellow hoopoe, with golden head and neck, and tail even at the end. This is the orange-coloured promerops, with tail of moderate length, and even at the tip; the avis paradisiaca Americana elegantissima of Seba, the promerops orange of Buffon, and the orange promerops of Latham. This bird is about the size of a starling; its bill is somewhat curved, sharp-pointed, and yellow, as are the legs; the head and neck are of a deep yellow or gold colour, with a few red feathers round the base of the bill; the remainder of the bird is orange-yellow; the larger quill-feathers of a redder cast than the rest.—A native of Guiana, frequenting the small islands in the mouth of the river Berbice

UPWALTHAM, a village of England, in the county of Sussex, near Chichester.

UPWARD, adj. [up and peap, Saxon.] Directed to a higher part.

Spread upon a lake, with upward eye,
A plump of fowl behold their foe on high. Dryden.

UPWARD, s. The top. Out of use.
From th' extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Shakspeare.

UPWARD, or UPWARDS, adv. [up and peap.] Towards a higher place: opposed to downward.

I thought
To smooth your passage, and to soften death:
For I would have you, when you upward move,
Speak kindly of me to our friends above. Dryden.

Towards heaven and God.—Looking inward, we are stricken dumb: looking upward we speak and prevail.
Hooker.—With respect to the higher part.

Dagon, sea-monster! upward man,
And downward fish. Milton.

More than; with tendency to a higher or greater number.
I have been your wife in this obedience
Upward of twenty years; and have been blest
With many children by you. Shakspeare.
Towards the source.

Be Homer's works your study;
Thence form your judgement, thence your notions bring,
And trace the muses upward to their spring. Pope.

UPWAY, a parish of England, in Dorsetshire, situated at the foot of Ridgway hill; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west-by-south of Dorchester. The parish church is an old building, with an embattled tower.

UPWELL, a parish of England, in the isle of Ely, county of Cambridge; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Wisbeach, Population 933.

UPWELL,

UPUPA, YUNX.

1. U. Promerops. 2. U. Epops. 3. U. Erythrorhynchos. 4. Y. Torquilla.

URANOSCOPUS AND ZEUS.

J. Euss sc.

1. U. Scaber. 2. U. Ciliaris. 3. U. Gallus. 4. U. Insidiator.

UPWELL, a parish of England, in the county of Norfolk; 5 miles from Downham. Population 1429.

To UPWHIRL, v. a. To raise upwards with quick rotation.

All these, upwhirl'd aloft,
Fly o'er the backside of the world far off
Into a Limbo large and broad.

Milton.

To UPWIND, v. a. pret. and pass. upwound. To convolve.

As she lay upon the dirty ground,
Her huge long tail her den all overspread!
Yet was in knots and many boughs upwound.

Spenser.

UPWOOD, a parish of England, county of Huntingdon; 2½ miles south-west-by-west of Ramsay.

UPWOOD, POINT, a cape on the south-east coast of the island of Fávda, in the gulf of Georgia. Lat. 49. 28. N. long. 236. 24. E.

UQUAIGUARA, a river of Brazil, in the province of Seara, which enters the sea, between the Upanema and the point of Val.

UQUETA, a lake of the province and government of Cumana, formed by the waste waters of the Orinoco, in the part where the arms of this river are divided into various channels, to enter the sea.

VRACENE, a town of the Netherlands, in East Flanders, district of Dendermonde; 9 miles west of Antwerp. Population 5000.

VRAIN, ST., a town of France, department of the Nièvre.

VRANA, or UJVARINA, a small town of European Turkey, in Romania; 78 miles west-south west of Sophia.

VRANTSCHIA, a district of European Turkey, in Moldavia, containing 12 villages.

VREDEN, a town of Prussian Westphalia, on the small river Brehkels, and the confines of Zutphen; 30 miles west-south-west of Munster.

VRIEZEN VEEN, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Overyssel, with 1800 inhabitants; 22 miles east-by-south of Zwolle.

VRINES LOCH, a small lake of Scotland, in Ross-shire, about three miles long and one broad, which discharges its waters by a rivulet of the same name, into the head of Loch Broom.

URABA, a small island of the Pacific Ocean, in the bay of Panama.

URAC, the most northerly of the Ladrone islands, in the Eastern seas, about nine miles in circumference. Lat. 20. 45. N.

URACAPU, a river of Guiana, which enters the Orinoco by the east side.

URACH, a small town of the west of Germany, in Wirtemberg, situated in a long, narrow valley, on the Erms. It contains 2700 inhabitants. In the neighbourhood is the castle of Hohenurach, now in ruins; 21 miles south-south-east of Stuttgart.

URAMARCA, a settlement of Peru, in the province of Andahuailas.

URANA, a settlement of South America, in Guiana, on the shore of the Orinoco.

URANA, a river of South America, which runs into the Caribbean sea; 9 miles west of Cumana bay. It only admits small boats and canoes.

URBANE, adj. [urbanus, Lat.] Civil; courteous; elegant. Cockeram—Dr. Warton thinks this epistle superior to any of Voiture's. The latter part of it is certainly urbane, elegant, and unaffected. Bowles.

URANIA [the name of one of the Muses], in Botany, a genus of the class hexandria, order monogynia, natural order of musæ, (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx; spathes common alternate, ovate-lanceolate, concave, many-flowered. Partial two-valved, lanceolate-linear, long, channelled, coloured, acuminate, erect, permanent. Perianth none. Corolla: petals three, oblong, channelled, erect, acute, equal. Nectary two leaved, one of them bifid. Stamina: filaments six, filiform. Anthers linear, long, erect, inclined at the tip. Pistil: germ inferior, oblong. Style a little longer than the stamens. Stigma six-cleft, converging. Pericarp: capsule oblong, truncate, three-sided, three-celled, three-valved at the tip. Seeds numerous, oblong, in two rows, covered with succulent lacinate arils.—Essential Character. Calyx none. Corolla three-petalled. Nectary two-leaved, with one of the leaves bifid. Capsule inferior three-celled, many seeded. Seeds in two rows, covered with an aril.

Urania speciosa.—This is a very lofty tree with the appearance of Musa or Heliconia. Trunk undivided. Leaves distich, like those of Heliconia on petioles two feet in length. Spadix axillary, erect, shorter than the leaves. Spathes distich, ovate, concave as in the Heliconias many-flowered.—Native of Madagascar in marshy places.

URANIENBURG, a castle in the island of Ween, in the Sound, now in ruins. It contained the observatory of Tycho Brahe. Lat. 55. 54. 38. N. long. 12. 42. 59. E.

URANOSCOPUS, in Ichthyology, the name of a fish, called in English the star-gazer. The uranoscopus, in the Linnæan system, is a genus of the order of Jugulares; its characters are, that the head is depressed, rough, and large; the mouth has the upper jaw shorter than the lower; the branchiostege membrane has five rays, and is covered with small eminences like teeth; the opercula are membranous and ciliated; the anus is in the middle of the body.

1. Uranoscopus Scaber, or star-gazer, with bearded lips and smooth back.—It is usually caught about seven or eight inches in length, but sometimes it grows to a foot; its head is very large, of a sort of square figure, covered by a strong bony case, roughened by an infinite number of small crests or protuberances; each side of this case is terminated above by two spines, the under part has five spines smaller than those above. Its mouth is large, and opens perpendicularly downward, being placed in the same direction with the eyes in the upper part of the head; the tongue is thick, short, and roughened with a number of small teeth; under its chin is a beard or long cirrus extending to some distance beyond the lips; its eyes are small and prominent, and are so placed near each other in the upper part of its head, as naturally to look up to the heavens, whence it has its name; and though many of the flat fish have their eyes placed like those of this fish, yet the pupils in these are directed sideways; whereas in this only they are turned straight upward; the body is of a squarish form as far as the vent, and then it becomes cylindrical: it is covered with small scales, and marked near the back by a lateral line, composed of small pores or points bending from the neck to the pectoral fins on each side, and from thence in a straight line to the tail; on the back are two fins, the first being much shorter than the latter, and furnished with stronger spines; the pectoral fins are large, with soft rays; the ventral fins are small; the tail is of moderate size, and rounded at the end; the colour of the body is brown, with a whitish or silvery cast towards the abdomen; the head, pectoral fins, and tail having a strong ferruginous cast, and the first dorsal fin being marked towards its hind part by a large black spot.

The star-gazer is an inhabitant of the Mediterranean and Northern seas, frequenting chiefly the shallow parts near the shores, and concealing itself in the mud, with the top of its head only exposed: in this situation it waves the beards of the lips, and particularly the long cirrus of the mouth, in various directions, thus alluring the smaller fishes and marine insects that are near, who, mistaking these organs for worms, are instantly seized by their concealed enemy. As an article of food it is coarse, and of an ill flavour: the gall was anciently considered as peculiarly efficacious in external disorders of the eyes.

The reason of the situation of the eyes of the uranoscopus, is the providence of nature for a fish, which, always keeping at the bottom, has no where to look for prey but in the water above it. Other fish, whose custom it is to keep at the bottom, have eyes thus situated.

2. Uranoscopus Japonicus.—With the back roughened by a semi-range of spinous scales. Found in the sea encompassing passing Japan. This is above yellow, and underneath white.

URAVE, a river of the province and government of Honduras, which rises near the coast, runs north, and enters the sea between Cape Camaron and the bay of Cartago.

URBANA, a post township of the United States, and capital of Champaign county, Ohio; 2 miles east of Madriver.

URBANIA, a small town of Middle Italy, in the States of the Church, formerly the see of a bishop. It stands on the banks of the Metauro; 6 miles east of St. Angelo, and 9 south-west of Urbixo.

URBANITY, s. [urbanitas, Latin.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness.—In jest, what urbanity he uses! B. Jonson.—Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

To URBANIZE, v. a. To render civil: to polish. Not in use.—Refined nations, whom learning and knowledge did first urbanize and polish. Howell.

URBANNA, a post township of the United States, in Middlesex county, Virginia, on the south-west side of the Rappahannock; 60 miles east-north-east of Richmond.

URBINO, a delegation or province of Italy, in the States of the Church, containing a population of 200,000. Also a town in the central part of Italy; 40 miles north-by-west of Ancona, and 50 south-by-east of Ravenna. Lat. 43. 43. 36. N. long. 12. 37. 5. E.

URCAS, rocks near the coast of Brazil. Lat. 4. 50. S. long. 35. 44. W.

URCEO, (Antonio) CODRUS URCEUS, Lat., an eminent scholar, was born in 1446, at Rubiera, in the territory of Reggio, in Lombardy; and having been educated at Bologna, and under the famous Guarini at Ferrara, he became, in his 23d year, a teacher of the classics at Forli. He, after a residence of 13 years, removed to Bologna, where he taught grammar and eloquence, with great applause. His disregard of religion, however, and the freedom with which he expressed his doubts concerning a future state, rendered it necessary for him to engage the protection of the most reputable citizens. He died in the year 1500, much regretted by his disciples, who carried his remains to the place of interment. His distinguished reputation; as one of the most learned Greek and Latin scholars in his time, has been testified by his contemporaries, and particularly by Angelo Poliziano and Aldo Manuzio. His works, consisting of Latin letters, orations, and poems, and of a supplement to the "Aulularia" of Plautus, were published at Bologna in 1502, and have been often reprinted.

URCHANY, a hill of Scotland, in Nairnshire, near the town of Nairn.

URCHAY, or URQUHAY, a river of Scotland, which rises on the borders of Perthshire, near the source of the Tay, and after a course of 10 or 12 miles through the beautiful vale of Glenorchay, falls into Loch Aw.

URCHFORT, a parish of England, in Wiltshire; 2½ miles north-east of East Lavington. Population 940.

URCHIN, s. [heureuchin, Armorick; erinaceus, Lat.] A hedge-hog.

Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee. Shakespeare.

A name of slight anger to a child.

Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride:
And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cry'd.
'Tis Clot's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast:
Friend Howard's genius fancy'd all the rest. Prior.

URCOS, a town of Peru, in the province of Quispicanchi; 12 miles south of Cuzco.

URCUQUI, a settlement of Quito, in the province of Otavalo.

URDINGEN, or ORDINGEN, a small fortified town of the Prussian province of Cleves and Berg, on the Rhine; 10 miles north-north-east of Dusseldorf.

URE, s. Practice; use; habit. Obsolete.—He would keep his hand in ure with somewhat of greater value, till he was brought to justice. L'Estrange.

URE, or YOURCE, a river of England, in Yorkshire; which rises in the Colter mountain, in the north-west extremity of the county, and passes by the towns of Askrig, Middleham, Massham, Rippon, and Boroughbridge; below which last, being joined by the Swale, both these rivers form what is called the Ouse. On this river is the magnificent cataract called Aysgard-Force, the water falling nearly half a mile upon a surface of stone, worn into infinite irregular cavities, and inclosed by bold and shrubby cliffs.

UREN, a small town in the south-east of European Russia, in the government of Simbirsk; 58 miles west of Simbirsk.

URENA [from uren, the vernacular name in Malabar], in Botany, a genus of the class monadelphia, order polyandria, natural order of columniferæ, malvaceæ, (Juss).—Generic character. Calyx: perianth double; outer one-leaved, five cleft; segments wider; inner five-leaved; leaflets narrow, angular, permanent. Corolla; petals five, oblong, wider at the tip, blunt with a point, narrower at the base, growing to the tube of stamens. Stamina: filaments numerous, united at bottom into a tube, at top free. Anthers roundish. Pistil: germ roundish, five-cornered. Style simple, length of the stamens, ten-cleft. Stigmas headed, hairy, reflexed. Pericarp: capsule roundish, echinate, five-cornered, five-celled, or soluble into five close cells. Seeds solitary, on one side roundish, on the other angular compressed.—Essential Character. Calyx double; outer five-cleft. Capsule five-cleft, divisible into five parts, with the cells closed and one seed in each.

1. Urena lobata, or angular-leaved urena.—Leaves roundish-cordate angular, three-glanded underneath. This rises with an upright stalk upwards of two feet high, which becomes woody towards the autumn.—Native of China and Cochinchina.

2. Urena reticulata, or netted-leaved urena.—Leaves one-glanded underneath, lower ones three-lobed, upper ones panduriform.—Native of South America.

3. Urena tricuspis, or three-pointed urena.—Leaves glanded underneath, three-lobed, acuminate; stem rough-haired.—Native of the islands of Mauritius and Bourbon.

4. Urena Americana, or American urena.—Leaves trifid, entire at the base.—Found in Surinam and Barbadoes.

5. Urena sinuata, or cut-leaved urena.—Leaves three-glanded underneath, sinuate five-lobed; lobes angular, tooth-letted, obtuse.—Native of the East Indies.

6. Urena multifida.—Leaves one-glanded underneath, hirsute five-lobed; lobes oblong, acuminate, gash-toothed.—Native of the island of Mauritius.

7. Urena procumbens, or trailing urena.—Leaves oblong, sinuate, serrate; stem procumbent.—Native of Cochinchina as well as China.

8. Urena viminea.—Leaves one-glanded, somewhat rhombed, toothed.—Native of Brazil.

Propagation and Culture.—These plants are propagated by seeds, which should be sown on a hot-bed early in the spring; and when the plants are fit to remove, they should be transplanted into pots, and plunged into a fresh hot-bed to bring them forward, and afterward they must be treated in the same manner as has been directed for the tender sorts of hibiscus.

URETER, s. [ουρητρος; uretere, Fr.] Ureters are two long and small canals from the basin of the kidneys, one on each side. Their use is to carry the urine from the kidneys to the bladder. Quincy.—The kidneys and ureters serve for expurgation. Wiseman.

URETHRA, s. [ουρηθρα; uretre, Fr.] The passage of the urine.—Caruncles are loose flesh, arising in the urethra. Wiseman.

To URGE, v. a. [urgco, Latin.] To incite; to push; to press by motives.

You do mistake your business: my brother
Did urge me in his act. Shakespeare.

To provoke; to exasperate.

Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
But think upon my grief.

Shakspeare.

To follow close, so as to impel.

Man? and for ever? wretch! what wouldst thou have?
Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave.

Pope.

To labour vehemently; to do with eagerness, or violence.
He, seiz'd with horror, in the shades of night,
Through the thick desarts headlong urg'd his flight.

Pope.

To press; to enforce.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers;
Your haste is now urg'd on you.

Shakspeare.

To press as an argument.

He pleaded still not guilty;
The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions,
Of divers witnesses.

Shakspeare.

To importune; to solicit.

He urged sore,
With piercing words and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise.

Spenser.

To press in opposition, by way of objection.—Though every man have a right in dispute to urge a false religion, with all its absurd consequences; yet it is barbarous incivility scurrilously to sport with that which others account religion.

Tillotson.

To URGE, v. n. To press forward.

A palace, when 'tis that which it should be,
Stands such, or else decays:
But he which dwells there is not so; for he Strives to urge upward, and his fortune raise.

Donne.

URGEL, a strong town in the north-east of Spain, in Catalonia, on the river Segre. It is a bishop's see, and has 3200 inhabitants; 78 miles north-north-west of Barcelona, and 296 east-north-east of Madrid.

URGENCY, s. Pressure of difficulty or necessity.—Being for some hours extremely pressed by the necessities of nature, I was under great difficulties between urgency and shame. Swift.—Entreaty; solicitation.—Neither would he have done it at all but at my urgency. Swift.

URGENT, adj. [urgens, Lat.] Cogent; pressing; violent.

Not alone

The death of Fulvia, but more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak to us.

Shakspeare.

Importunate; vehement in solicitation.—The Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out in haste. Exod.

URGENTLY, adv. Cogently; violently; vehemently; importunately.—Acrimony in their blood, and afflux of humours to their lungs, urgently indicate phlebotomy. Harvey.

URGER, s. One who presses; importuner.—I wish Pope were as great an urger as I. Swift.

URGEWONDER, s. A sort of grain.—This barley is called by some urgewonder. Mortimer.

URGUNGE, or URGHENZ, the name given to an extensive track of territory situated on the Lower Oxus, near its junction with the Aral, and between that lake and the Caspian.

URI, a canton in the central part of Switzerland, bounded on the north by the canton of Unterwalden, on the east by the country of the Grisons. Its superficial extent is 640 square miles; but its population does not exceed 14,000, being thinly scattered amidst bleak and barren mountains, some of which attain an elevation of 8000, or 10,000 feet. The road from Germany to Italy passes through this canton, and gives the benefit of some transit trade to its inhabitants. They are a simple, but independent race, mindful of the share which their ancestors, along with their countrymen of the adjacent canton of Schweitz and Unterwalden, had in the assertion of Swiss liberty.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1653.

URIDGE, a hamlet of England, in Wiltshire, near Chippenham.

URIE, or URY, a considerable river of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, which rises in the district of Strathbogie, and, after a course of 24 miles, mostly through Garioch, being joined in its course by the Gady, the Shevock, and the Lochter, it falls into the Don at the royal burgh of Inverary.

URIES, CAPE, a cape on the north coast of Staten island. Lat. 46. N. long. 149. 20. E.

URIM, s. Urim and thummim were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what critics and commentators are by no means agreed. The word urim signifies light, and thummim perfection. It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradistinction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the heathen oracles. Newton.

He in celestial panoply, all arm'd
Of radiant urim, work divinely wrought.

Milton.

URINAL, s. [urinal, Fr.] A bottle, in which water is kept for inspection.—These follies shine through you, like the water in an urinal. Shakspeare.

URINARIUM, a name sometimes applied to a sort of reservoir, or place constructed in the ground for the reception of urine, and the liquid matters discharged from the stables, cattle-sheds, pig-sties, and other places situated about the farm-yard.

URINARY, adj. Relating to the urine.—Diuretics that relax the urinary passages, should be tried before such a stimulant. Arbuthnot.

URINATIVE, adj. Working by urine; provoking urine.—Medicines urivative do not work by rejection and indigestion as solutives do. Bacon.

URINATOR, s. [urinator, Lat.] A diver; one who searches under water.—Those relations of urinators belong only to those places where they have dived, which are always rocky. Ray.

URINE, s. [urina, Latin.] Animal water.—Drink, Sir, is a great provoker of nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Shakspeare.—The chyle cannot pass by urine nor sweat. Arbuthnot.

To URINE, v. n. [uriner, Fr.] To make water.—No oviparous animal, which spawn or lay eggs, doth urine, except the tortoise. Brown.

URINOUS, adj. Partaking of urine.—The putrid matter being distilled, affords a water impregnated with an urinous spirit, like that obtainable from animal substances. Arbuthnot.

URK, a small island in the Zuyder Zee, with one village, and nearly 600 inhabitants. It belongs to the province of North Holland.

URKUP, or OURCOUP, a small town in the northern part of Caramania, in Asiatic Turkey, on the Kizil Irmak; 50 miles west-north-west of Kaisarieh.

URLINGFORD, a village of Ireland, in the county of Kilkenny, situated at the verge of the county.

URLOFFEN, a large village of the west of Germany, in Baden; 9 miles east of Strasburg. Population 1500.

URMENY, a petty town in the north-west of Hungary; 8 miles south of Neutra, remarkable chiefly as the residence of count Hunyadi, one of the greatest land proprietors in Hungary. Lat. 48. 12. 31. N., long. 18. 3. 27. E.

URMSTONE, a township of England, county of Lancaster; 6 miles south-west-by-west of Manchester. Population 595.

URMUK, a small island in the Red sea, near the coast of Arabia; 3 miles south-south-west of Loheia.

URN, s. [urne, Fr.] Any vessel, of which the mouth is narrower than the body.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives, and crimes, with his assessors, hears;
Round, in his urn, the blended balls he rolls;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.

Dryden.

5 N

A water-

A water-pot; particularly that in the sign of Aquarius.

The fish oppose the maid, the wat'ry urn,
With adverse fires sees raging Leo burn.

Creech.

The vessel in which the remains of burnt bodies were put
To URN, v. a. To enclose in an urn.

From my hand Cornelia shall take
And urn thy reliques.

May.

URNASCH, a large village and commune of Switzerland, in the canton of Appenzel. It contains 2600 inhabitants; 5 miles south-west of Appenzel.

URNEN, UPPER and LOWER, two villages of the south of Switzerland, in the canton of the Valais. The latter is situated on the Linth, where it issues from the lake of Wallenstadt, has a harbour, and several mineral springs. The former is an insignificant place.

URON, a river of South America, in the province of Darien, which runs south, and then turns east to enter the Pacific ocean. Its banks are inhabited by Indians.

UROSCOPY, s. [ουρον and σκεπτω.] Inspection of urine.

URPETH, a township of England, in the county of Durham; 9½ miles north-by-west of Durham.

URQUHART, a parish of Scotland, in the county of Elgin, about 9 miles long, and 6 broad, lying on the coast of the Murray frith, between the rivers Spey and Lossie. Population 936.

URQUHART AND GLENMORISTON, a parish of Scotland, in Inverness-shire, about 30 miles long, and from 8 to 12 broad. Population 2446.

URQUHART AND LOGIE WESTER, a united parish of Scotland, partly in Ross-shire, and partly in the shire of Nairn, 9 or 10 miles long, and from 3 to 4 broad, lying along the head of the frith of Cromarty. Population 4174.

URR, or ORR, a parish of Scotland, in the stewardry of Kirkeudbright, about 19 miles long and 6 broad, containing about 12,000 acres. Population 2329.

URR, or ORR, LOCH, a small lake of Scotland, in Kirkeudbrightshire, about 3 miles in circuit.

URR, or ORR, a river of Scotland, in Kirkeudbrightshire, which issues from a lake of the same name, and, after a course of nearly 30 miles, falls into the Solway frith, at the small isle of Heston.

URRAY, a parish of Scotland, composed of the united parishes of Urray and Kilchrist, lying for the most part in the county of Ross, though a small part is in Inverness-shire. It extends about 7 miles in length from the Beauly to the Conon, and its breadth varies from 3 to 6 miles. Population 2649.

URRIN, a river of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, which runs into the Slaney, near Enniscorthy.

URRISBEG, a mountain of Ireland, in the county of Galway, near the sea coast; 38 miles west of Galway.

URRISHEAD, a cape of Ireland, on the north coast of the county of Mayo, at the entrance of Broad Haven. Lat. 54. 19. N. long. 9. 48. W.

URRY, s. A mineral.—In the coal-mines they dig a blue or black clay, that lies near the coal, commonly called urry, which is an unripe coal, and is very proper for hot lands, especially pasture ground. Mortimer.

URSA, CAPE, a promontory of Sicily, on the north coast. Lat. 38. 18. N. long. 13. 11. E.

URSANA, a town of Hindostan, province of Agra, district of Alvar. Lat. 27. 22. N. long. 76. 25. E.

URSANE, ST., a petty town of the north-west of Switzerland, in the canton of Berne, in the Salzgow. Population 700; 27 miles west-south-west of Bale.

URSEL, a small inland town of the Netherlands, in the province of East Flanders. Population 2100.

URSEL, UPPER, a small town of the west of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau; 18 miles north-north-east of Mentz. Population 800. Near it stands the town of Lower Ursel.

URSEREN, a valley in the central part of Switzerland, in the canton of Uri. It is about 8 miles long, and scarcely 2 broad, surrounded on all sides by lofty mountains, and watered by the Reuss. No part of the valley is less than 4500 feet above the level of the sea. It contains four villages.

URSETSCH, a small town of Russian Lithuania, in the government of Minsk. Population 1400.

URSINS (Jean-Jouvenal des), a prelate and historian of the 15th century, was advanced to several posts, civil and ecclesiastical, and in 1449 became archbishop of Rheims, under which character he consecrated Lewis XI. In consequence of his revision, in concert with other prelates, of the sentence pronounced against the maid of Orleans, it was revoked. His learning and episcopal virtues established a respectable character; and he closed his life at the age of 85, in the year 1473. His "History of the Reign of Charles VI., from 1380 to 1422," is said to be written with correctness and integrity. It was first published by Theodore Godefroi, in 1614, 4to.; and an improved edition by his son appeared in 1653, fol. Moreri.

URSINUS (Benjamin), originally Behr, a German mathematician, was born at Sprottau, in Silesia, in 1587; and resided for a long time as tutor to two young noblemen, along with Kepler, whom he assisted in the construction of the Rudolphine tables, first at Prague, and then at Linz, in Bohemia. In the latter place, he was teacher of mathematics; and from thence he removed to Frankfort on the Oder, to undertake a similar charge; and here he died in 1633. In 1628, or 1629, he published, at Cologne, his "Cursus Mathematicus," containing Napier's logarithms, and some additional tables of proportional parts; and in 1624, he printed, at the same place, his "Trigonometria," with a table of natural sines and their logarithms, in Napier's form, to every ten seconds in the quadrant, the computation of which was a work of great labour. Haller.

URSPERG, or AUERSPERG, a small town of Germany, in Bavaria, on the Mindel, with 800 inhabitants; 20 miles west-south-west of Augsburg.

URSULINE, adj. Denoting an order of nuns. Mason.

URSULINES, an order of nuns, who observe the rule of St. Augustine; and are chiefly noted for taking on them the education and instruction of young maids.

URSUS, BEAR, a genus of the class of mammalia and order of feræ, the characters of which are, that the front teeth are six both above and below, excavated within alternately; the two lateral ones of the lower jaw longer than the rest and lobated, with smaller or secondary teeth at their internal bases; the canine teeth are solitary; the grinders are five or six on each side, the first approximated to the canine teeth; the tongue is smooth; the snout prominent; eyes furnished with a nictitating membrane. Gmelin enumerates eight species, besides several varieties: viz.—

1. Ursus arctos, or blackish-brown bear, with abrupt tail.—This is the ursus of Gesner, Aldrovandus, Ray, &c., the ours of Buffon, and brown bear of Pennant. The varieties mentioned by Gmelin are the black bear with a smaller black body, the brown bear with a brown and ferruginous body, the white bear with black body and white hairs intermixed, and the variegated bear with a body of various colours.—The common bear, with some variations as to size and colour, is a native of almost all the northern parts of Europe and Asia, and is said to be found in some of the Indian islands, as Ceylon, &c.; and the brown bear is also found in some of the northern parts of America, where it destroys cattle; but this is a different species from the American black bear, which is not carnivorous. The common bear inhabits woods and unfrequented places, and feeds chiefly on roots, fruits, and other vegetables, occasionally preying on animals. In the Alpine regions, the bear is brown; in some other parts of Europe, black; and in some parts of Norway of a grey colour, and even perfectly white. The brown, the black, the grey, and the white land bears, are all of the same species: though it is observed, that the brown and the black varieties differ in their mode of life; the black confining itself almost wholly to vegetable food; whereas the brown bear frequently attacks and preys upon other animals, and destroys lambs, kids, and even sometimes cattle, sucking the blood like the cat and weasel tribes. Linnæus adds, that the bear bear has a mode of blowing up his prey, and of hiding or burying a part of it. Bears are said to be fond of honey, and to climb trees in search of it among the nests of wild bees. They sometimes take up their residence in the hollows of very large trees. They will also catch and devour fish, occasionally frequenting the banks of rivers for that purpose.

The bear passes a considerable part of the winter in a state of repose and abstinence, emerging from his den occasionally at distant intervals, and then concealing himself in his retreat till the approach of the vernal season. The females continue in this state longer than the males, and during this period bring forth their young, which are commonly two in number. The young, though not shapeless animals, as some have erroneously conceived, differ in their aspect from the grown animal, the snout being much sharper, and their colour yellowish; and they are said to be blind for nearly a month.

2. Ursus Americanus, or the black bear, with ferruginous cheeks and throat; the black bear of Pennant.—This, says Dr. Shaw, is a species distinct from the black bear of Europe, and has a long pointed nose, and narrow forehead; the hair of a glossy black colour, smoother and shorter than that of the European kind, and is generally smaller than the European bear.—This animal inhabits all the northern parts of America, and occasionally migrates to the more southerly parts in search of food, which is said to be entirely vegetable; and it is affirmed, that when urged by extreme hunger, they will disregard all animal food whenever they can obtain a supply of roots and grain. They, however, sometimes destroy fish, and particularly herrings, when they come up into the creeks in shoals. They are said to continue in their winter retreats, either in dens beneath the snow under ground, or in the hollows of old trees, for the space of five or six weeks without food. The yellow bear from Carolina is supposed to be a variety of the former: it is rather smaller than the European bears, with a more agreeable countenance, and is perfectly tame and sociable; the colour being of a lively bright orange, inclining to reddish; the hair is thick, long, and silky.

3. Ursus maritimus, or white bear, with elongated neck and head, and abrupt tail: the ursus maritimus albus major arcticus of Martens Spitzbergen, the ours blanc of Buffon, and the Polar bear of Pennant.—These bears, when on land, feed on deer and other animals, as hares, birds, &c., and various kinds of berries. They are said to be frequently seen in Greenland in large droves, allured by the scent of the flesh of seals, and will sometimes surround the habitations of the natives, and attempt to break in; and it is added, that the most successful method of repelling them is by the smell of burnt feathers. They grow extremely fat, a hundred pounds of fat having been taken from a single beast. The flesh is coarse, but the skin is valued for coverings of various kinds, and the Greenlanders often wear it for clothing. These skins were formerly offered by the hunters in the arctic regions to the high altars of cathedrals and other churches, for the priest to stand on during the celebration of mass in winter. The split tendons are said to form an excellent thread. Pennant and Shaw.

4. Ursus meles, or the Badger, with unmarked tail; body cinereous or grey above, black below, and a longitudinal black band through the eyes and ears.—The common badger is the meles of Gesner, the taxus of Aldrovandus, and the blaireau of Buffon.—This animal is an inhabitant of all the temperate parts of Europe and Asia: its form is clumsy, being thick-necked and thick-bodied, with very short legs. It commonly lodges in a hole under ground, whence it emerges in the night in quest of food, which consists chiefly of roots and fruits, and occasionally of frogs, worms, &c. Its eyes are small, and its ears short and round; and the claws of its fore-feet are very long and straight, which latter circumstance has induced Pennant to rank it under a genus distinct from that of ursus or bear. Some have, without just reason, distinguished between the sow-badger and the dog-badger, the difference being merely sexual. The hair is thick; the teeth, legs, and claws, are very strong; so that it defends itself vigorously when attacked. The young badger may be easily tamed, and it generally prefers raw flesh to every other food in a state of captivity. It is a cleanly animal, and keeps its habitation very neat. The female produces about three or four young. Like the bear, this animal is fond of honey, and will attack hives in order to obtain it. Pennant will not admit the badger to be a carnivorous animal, though Buffon asserts, that it drags young rabbits out of their burrows, and seizes birds, eggs, snakes, and many other animals for feeding her young. The badger sleeps much, especially in winter, confining himself to his den in a state of semi-torpority. Ridinger has figured a singular variety of badger, of a white colour, with brown and reddish patches. Gmelin mentions two varieties, one white above and below yellowish; and the other spotted, white with reddish and brown spots.—The former is found in New York; the latter is very rarely met with in forests, in the fissures of rocks and stones.

5. Ursus Labradorius, or the badger with the tip of the tail villous, and of a brownish-yellow colour; the throat, breast, and abdomen white, and the feet four-toed: it is the pale yellowish-grey badger, with the throat and belly white, and the head striped with black.—This is the American badger of Pennant and carcajou of Buffon: and so much resembles the common, that it may be taken for a variety of it. This species is rather scarce in America.—It is found in the neighbourhood of Hudson's bay, and in Terra di Labrador, and, according to Pennant, as low as Pennsylvania, where it is called the ground hog. A variety of this occurs in some parts of America, with the under parts slightly tinged with yellow: it is the first variety of common badger mentioned by Gmelin.

6. Ursus lotor, or the bear with annulated tail, and black transverse band across the eyes.—This is the bear with a long tail of the Stockholm acts 1747, the bear with annulated variegated tail of Brisson, the mapach of Fernand and Nieremb., the raton of Buffon, the coat of Ray, &c., and the raccoon of Kalm, Pennant, &c.

7. Ursus fuscus, or the bear with a long tail, ferruginous body, dusky snout, the forehead and lateral part of the body whitish.—This is the quick-hatch or wolverene of Edwards, and the wolverene of Pennant. Dr. Shaw suggests, that it is merely a variety of the next species. It is about twice the size of the common fox, and the description given of it by Edwards is as follows:—All the snout, upper and under jaw, as far as the eyes, is of a black colour; the forehead above becomes gradually of a whitish colour; the eyes are of a dark colour; the throat and lower side of the neck white, the first spotted with black, having some transverse bars of black on the under side of the neck; the ears are small and round, appearing but little longer than the hair that grows on the head; they are covered with short brown hair; the hind part of the head and neck, the whole body both above and beneath, the legs and tail, are all of a brown or chesnut-colour, clouded lighter and darker, viz., the upper side of the neck and beginning of the back is dusky, or very dark brown, which gradually changes to a lighter or more pleasant brown in the middle of the back; this colour again grows by degrees darker, till it becomes almost black in the hind part of the back; the tail towards the tip becomes of a dusky-colour; it hath a broad bar of very light ash-coloured brown passing round the body, beginning at each shoulder, proceeding on the sides backwards, and meeting on the rump, just above the tail, where it is broadest. The fur on the whole body is pretty long, and seems not to lie so flat to the skin as in some animals. All the feet, as far as the heel or first joint, are covered with short black hair, which gradually becomes brown above the knees; the claws are of a light horn-colour; it hath on each foot forwards four toes; the hind feet have five toes each.

8. Ursus gulo, or the bear with tail of the same colour, rufous-brown body, and middle of the back black. The gulo of Gesn. and Aldrov., and the glutton of Buffon.—It is considerably larger than a badger, but varying in size: the the muzzle, as far as beyond the eyes, is blackish-brown, and covered with hard shining hair; over the forehead, down the sides of the head between the eyes and ears, runs a whitish or ash-coloured band or fillet; the top of the head and whole length of the back are black-brown, the colour widening somewhat over the sides as it passes on, and again lessening or contracting towards the tail; or the description might be given in other words, by saying, that the colour of the body is a fine glossy black-brown, with a ferruginous tinge along the sides, so as to form a broad lateral zone; but it is to be observed, that the animal varies considerably in colour; sometimes appearing black, with a subferruginous lateral band; and at other times of a chesnut-colour; the feet are black. Agreeably to its name, it has the character of being very voracious, preying indiscriminately both on fresh food and carrion. One of these animals would eat thirteen pounds of flesh in a day, without being satisfied. It attacks deer, birds, field-mice, &c., and even sometimes the larger cattle; and is said to sit on the branches of trees, and suddenly to spring down on such animals as happen to pass beneath; tearing them, and sucking the blood, till they fall down through faintness, when it begins to devour the spoil. In winter, it seeks out and catches ptarmigans under the snow. What it cannot devour at once it is said to hide under ground, or in the cavity of some tree. It is said to be an animal of uncommon fierceness and strength; and will sometimes dispute the prey both with the wolf and bear. It is also extremely fetid. It breeds once a year, and brings from two to four young at a litter. The fur is much used for muffs, linings, &c. Those skins are said to be preferred which have least of the ferruginous tinge; and for this reason the Siberian variety, which is blacker than the rest, is most esteemed.—The glutton is a native of the most northern parts of Europe and Asia, and is found in Sweden, Norway, Lapland, and Siberia, as well as in some of the Alpine regions, and in the forests of Poland and Courland, and in the northern parts of America.

9. Ursus Indicus.—The badger white above and black beneath, first described by Pennant from a specimen brought from India, and in the possession of the late Mr. John Hunter. It had five toes on each foot, with long, straight claws; the head small, the nose pointed, with scarcely any appearance of external ears; the colour of the nose, and face a little beyond the eyes, black; the crown, upper part of the neck, back, and upper part of the tail, white, inclining to greyish; the legs, thighs, breast, belly, sides, and under part of the tail, black. Its food is flesh, and its disposition lively and playful. Dr. Shaw observes, that this animal seems to be nearly allied to the genus viverra; and particularly to the species viverra mellivora and viverra capensis.

URSWICH, GREAT, a township of England, in the county of Lancaster; 3 miles south-west-by-south of Ulverston. Population 590.

URSWICH, LITTLE, a hamlet of the above county, half a mile distant from the foregoing.

URTICA [of Pliny, ab urendo, from its stinging when touched], in Botany, a genus of the class monoclea, order tetrandria, natural order of scabridæ, urticæ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Male flowers.—Calyx: perianth four-leaved; leaflets roundish, concave, obtuse. Corolla: petals none; nectary in the centre of the flower, cup-shaped, entire, narrow below, very small. Stamina: filaments four, awl-shaped, length of the calyx, spreading, each within each calyx leaf. Anthers two-celled. Female flowers either on the same or a distinct plant.—Calyx: perianth two-valved, ovate, concave, erect, permanent. Corolla: none. Pistil: germ ovate. Style none. Stigma villose. Pericarp none. Calyx converging. Seed one, ovate, blunt, compressed, shining.—Essential Character. Male: calyx four-leaved. Corolla none. Nectary (rudiment of a germ) central, cup-shaped. Female: calyx two-leaved. Corolla none. Seed one, superior, shining.

I.—Opposite leaved.

1. Urtica pilulifera, or roman nettle.—Leaves opposite, ovate, serrate; female flowers in round balls or heads.

Stem from eighteen inches to two feet in height.—Native of the South of Europe, the east coast of England, and about Tunis in Barbary.

2. Urtica balearica.—Leaves opposite, cordate, serrate; female flowers in round heads.—It was discovered in the Balearic Islands (Majorca and Minorca).

3. Urtica dodartii, or pellitory-leaved nettle.—Leaves opposite, ovate, almost quite entire; female flowers in round heads. Root annual.—Native of the South of Europe.

4. Urtica pumila, or dwarf nettle.—Leaves opposite, ovate; racemes two-parted very short. Root fibrous.—Native of Canada, in watery places.

5. Urtica grandifolia, or great-leaved nettle.—Leaves opposite, ovate; stipules cordate, undivided; racemes paniced length of the leaves.—Native of the West Indies, in shady moist places.

6. Urtica verticillata, or whorled nettle.—Leaves opposite, ovate, serrate; flowers numerous, axillary, sessile.

7. Urtica reticulata, or netted-leaved nettle.—Leaves opposite, oblong, acute, netted underneath; stipules ovate, entire; racemes paniced; leaves shorter.—Native of Jamaica.

8. Urtica urens, or small nettle.—Leaves opposite, elliptic, three or five-nerved, racemes almost simple.—Native of Europe, Siberia and Barbary.

9. Urtica laxa, or loose-stalked nettle.—Leaves opposite, ovate, acuminate, serrate; flowers dioecious; males peduncled, crowded; females in racemes; stem lax.—Native of Hispaniola.

10. Urtica betulæfolia, or birch-leaved nettle.—Leaves opposite, cordate-roundish, serrate; stipules entire; flowers in racemes; stem prostrate ascending.—Native of Hispaniola.

11. Urtica diffusa, or diffused nettle.—Leaves opposite, ovate, acutely serrate, hispid; stipules rolled back; racemes paniced longer than the leaf; stems procumbent.—Native of Jamaica.

12. Urtica rufa.—Entirely hirsute; leaves opposite, oblong, serrate; stipules roundish, permanent; racemes terminating; stem suffrutescent branched.—Native of Jamaica.

13. Urtica dioica, or great nettle.—Leaves opposite, cordate; racemes very much branching in pairs, mostly dioecious. Root perennial, creeping, tough, yellowish, sending down from the joints some pretty large fibres.—The great common stinging-nettle grows all over Europe, in Barbary, Siberia and Japan, in hedges, neglected fields, gardens and pastures, flowering from June to September. There are also in this genus—

Urtica caudata. Urtica membranacea. Urtica rugosa. Urtica repens. Urtica cannabina, or hemp-leaved nettle. Urtica gracilis, or slender-stalked nettle. Urtica alienata. Urtica nudicaulis, or naked-stalked nettle. Urtica stolonifera. Urtica parietaria. Urtica ciliata. Urtica radicans. Urtica ciliaris. Urtica nummularifolia. Urtica depressa. Urtica herniarioides. Urtica serrulata. Urtica lucida. Urtica microphylla. Urtica trianthemoides. Urtica cuneifolia. Urtica spicata. Urtica macrophylla. Urtica rhombea. Urtica virgata. Urtica ferox. Urtica lappulacea. Urtica sessiliflora. Urtica elata. Urtica æstuans. Urtica argentea. Urtica ruderalis. Urtica heterophylla. Urtica capitata. Urtica divaricata. Urtica Canadensis, or Canada nettle. Urtica hirsuta. Urtica interrupta. Urtica nivea, or Chinese or white-leaved nettle. Urtica baccifera. Urtica Capensis. Urtica frutescens. Urtica stimulans. Urtica Japonica. Urtica muralis. Urtica villosa.

Propagation and Culture.—These may all be propagated by seeds, or parting the roots.

URU, a river of the Caraccas, which enters the Apure.

URUANI, a small river of the Caraccas, in the province of Cumana, which runs south, and enters the Cuyuni by the north side.

URUBAMBA, a town of Peru, in a district of the same name, situated on the shore of the river Quillabamba or Urubamba, to the north of Cuzco, in lat. 13. 16. S. long. 71. 31. W.

URUBAMBA, a river of Peru, in the province of Abancay, sometimes called the Vilcamamayo or Quillabamba.

URUBAQUARA,

URUBAQUARA, a river which has its rise in the vast plains bordering the Amazons, and falls into that river between the Curupatuba and Puru.

URUBU, a village of Brazil, in the province of Todos Santos, on the shore of the great river the Rio Francisco.

URUBU, a settlement of Brazil, in the province of Sergippa del Rey, on the shore of the Rio Francisco.

URUBU, a river of South America, in the country bordering the Amazons, which runs south-south-east, and loses itself in the lake formed by the waters of that river.

URUCANGUA, a river of Brazil, in the province of Rey, which runs east, and enters the Atlantic.

URUGUAIFOSTA, a river of Brazil in the province of San Pablo, which runs north-north-west, and enters the Uruguay.

URUGUAI-PITA, a river of Paraguay, which runs east, and enters, with a very abundant stream, into the Uruguay.

URUGUAY, a province or extent of country of South America, bounded north by the province of Guaira in the government of Paraguay, south by the mouth of the river La Plata, east by the province and captainship of Rey in Brazil, and west by the river Parana. Its length from north-east to south-west is somewhat more than 200 leagues, and its width from east to west about 130, although in some parts it is narrower. It is divided by the river of its name into east and west.

URUGUAY, a large, abundant, and navigable river of the province and government of Paraguay. It rises in lat. 26. 30. S., and collecting various other streams, traverses a vast extent of country to the south-east. It abounds in fish, and the country through which it passes is romantic, beautiful, and fertile.

URUGUAY, a small river also of Paraguay, which runs east, and enters the Parana near the grand river Curitiba.

URUMEA, an extensive lake of Aderbijan, in Persia, about 300 miles in circuit. The water is salter than that of the sea; no fish can live in it, and it emits a disagreeable sulphureous smell.

URUMEA, a very ancient city of Persia, situated on the south-western bank of the lake to which it gives name; 90 miles south-south-west of Tabreez.

URUMPE, a river of South America, in the country bordering the Amazons, which rises between those of Madra and Anilore, and enters the former.

URUPARATE, a river of South America, in the country bordering the Amazons, which falls into the Amazons between the Yume and the Curutate.

URUPI, a small river of South America, in the country bordering the Amazons, which runs east, and joins the Amazons just at its entrance into the sea.

URUPIRA, a river of Guiana, which rises near the missionary settlement of San Joseph de Otomayos, runs west, and enters the Orinoco close to the settlement of Los Angeles.

URUPTA, a small river of Guiana, which runs north-west, and enters the Caroni.

URUSSA, a small river of the country bordering on the Amazons, which enters that river.

URUTA, a small river of Guiana, which runs north, and turning afterwards its course to the east, enters the Paraguay.

URYPIN, a small town of European Russia, in the country of the Don Cossacks, with 1500 inhabitants.

URZEDOW, or URSENDOW, a small town in the south of Poland, on a lake of the same name; 95 miles south-south-east of Warsaw, and 23 south-west of Lublin. Population 1200.

URZUM, a small town in the east of European Russia, in the government of Viatka, on the river Urzumka; 88 miles south-by-east of Viatka. Population 1200.

US, [M. Goth. and Germ. uns; Su. Goth. oss.] The oblique case of we.—The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us who are all of us here alive this day. Deut.

USABLE, adj. That may be used.

USAGE, s. [usage, Fr.] Treatment.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1653.

Neptune took unkindly to be bound,
And Eurus never such hard usage found
In his Æolian prison.

Dryden.

Custom; practice long continued.—Of things once received and confirmed by use, long usage is a law sufficient. In civil affairs, when there is no other law, custom itself doth stand for law. Hooker.—Manners; behaviour. Obsolete.

A gentle nymph was found,
High Astery, excelling all the crew,
In courteous usage, and unstained hue.

Spenser.

USAGER, s. [usager, Fr.] One who has the use of any thing in trust for another.

He consum'd the common treasury;
Whereof he being the simple usager
But for the state, not in propriety,
Did alien to his minions.

Daniel.

USAN, said to be a contraction for Ulysses's haven, a village of Scotland, in Forfarshire, on the sea coast; 3 miles south-west of Montrose.

USANCE, s. [usance, Fr.] Use; proper employment.

What art thou,
That here in desert hast thine habitation,
And these rich heaps of wealth dost hide apart
From the world's eye, and from her right usance? Spenser.

Usury; interest paid for money.
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance.

Shakspeare.

[In bills of exchange.] A certain period of time, but different in different countries. Mason.—An usance is said to be regularly a month; but it varies according to the custom of particular countries. Cunningham.

USCIE, the name of four small towns of Austrian Poland, one in the circle of Czortkow, on the Dniester; one in that of Stanislawow; a third in that of Jaslo; and a fourth, called USCIE Solne, at the confluence of the small river Raba with the Vistula; 27 miles east-by-north of Cracow.

USCOCKS, a tribe of Slavonian origin, settled on the banks of the river Gurk, in Austrian Dalmatia and Carniola.

USCOKAN, a small island in the Eastern seas, near the south-west coast of Borneo. Lat. 6. 21. N. long. 116. 25. E.

USCZK, a small town of Prussian Poland, on the Netz; 45 miles north of Posen. Population 800.

USE, s. [usus, Lat.] The act of employing any thing to any purpose.—Things may, and must, differ in their use; but yet they are all to be used according to the will of God. Law.—Qualities that make a thing proper for any purpose.—Rice is of excellent use for illnesses of the stomach that proceed from cold or moist humours; a great digester and restorer of appetite. Temple.—Need of; occasion on which a thing can be employed.

This will secure a father to my child;
That done, I have no farther use for life.

Philips.

Advantage received; power of receiving advantage.—More figures in a picture than are necessary, our author calls figures to be let; because the picture has no use for them. Dryden.—Convenience; help; usefulness.

You shew us Rome was glorious, not profuse,
And pompous buildings once were things of usc.

Pope.

Usage; customary act.—That which those nations did use, having been also in use with others, the ancient Roman laws do forbid. Hooker.—Practice; habit.

Sweetness, truth, and every grace;
Which time and use are wont to teach,
The eye may in a moment reach,
And read distinctly in her face.

Waller.

Custom; common occurrence.
O Cæsar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Shakspeare.

Interest; money paid for the use of money.—Most of the learned, Heathen and Christian, assert the taking of use to be unlawful; unlawful; yet the divines of the reformed church beyond the seas, do generally affirm it to be lawful. South.

To USE, v. a. [usus, Lat.] To employ to any purpose.

You're welcome,

Most learned rev'rend Sir, into our kingdom;

Use us and it.

Shakspeare.

To accustom; to habituate.

I've hitherto been used to think

A blind officious zeal to serve my king,

The ruling principle.

Addison.

To treat.—Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not. Shakspeare.—To practise customarily.—Use hospitality one to another, without grudging. I Pet.—To behave: with the reciprocal pronoun. Out of use.—Pray forgive me, if I have us'd myself unmannerly. Shakspeare.

To USE, v. n. To be accustomed; to practise customarily.—They use to place him that shall be their captain upon a stone, always reserved for that purpose, and placed commonly upon a hill. Spenser.—To be customarily in any manner; to be wont.—Fears use to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes than open them. Bacon.—To frequent; to inhabit. Obsolete.

Ye vallies low, where the mild whispers use

Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks. Milton.

USEDOM, an island of Prussia, in Pomerania, formed by the Baltic and several inland waters, in particular the Great and Little Haff. Its area is 150 square miles; its population between 11,000 and 12,000. It contains two small towns and several villages.

USEDOM, a small town of Prussia, in the island of the same name; 40 miles north-west of Stettin, and 11 east of Anclam. Lat. 53. 47. 24. N. long. 14. 9. 40. E. Population 1000.

USEFUL, adj. Convenient; profitable to any end; conducive or helpful to any purpose; valuable for use.—Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry. More.

USEFULLY, adv. In such a manner as to help forward some end.—In this account they must constitute two at least, male and female, in every species; which chance could not have made so very nearly alike, without copying, nor so usefully differing without contrivance. Bentley.

USEFULNESS, s. Conduciveness or helpfulness to some end.—The grandeur of the commonwealth shews itself chiefly in works that were necessary or convenient. On the contrary, the magnificence of Rome, under the emperors, was rather for ostentation than any real usefulness. Addison.

USELESS, adj. Answering no purpose; having no end.

So have I seen the lost clouds pour

Into the sea an useless show'r;

And the vex'd sailors curse the rain,

For which poor shepherds pray'd in vain.

Waller.

USELESSLY, adv. Without the quality of answering any purpose.—In a sauntering humour, some, out of custom, let a good part of their lives run uselessly away, without business or recreation. Locke.

USELESSNESS, s. Unfitness to any end.—He made a learned discourse on the trouble, uselessness, and indecency of foxes wearing tails. L'Estrange.—He would convince them of the vanity and uselessness of that learning, which makes not the possessor a better man. South.

USEMAIN, a village in the north-east of France, department of the Meurthe. It has some iron manufactures.

USEN, GREAT and LITTLE, two rivers in the east of European Russia, in the government of Saratov, which falls into the lake Kamysch-Samara. Both are large, and abound in fish, particularly carp and pike.

USER, s. One who uses.—Such things, which, by imparting the delight to others, makes the user thereof welcome, as music, dancing, hunting, feasting, riding. Sidney.—That wind-like user of his feet, faire Thetis' progenie.

Chapman.—My lord received from the countess of Warwick, a lady powerful in the court, and indeed a virtuous user of her power, the best advice that was ever given. Wotton.

USHANT, or OUESSANT, a small island on the north-west coast of France, belonging to the department of Finisterre. It is well known to seafaring men, but is only 10 miles in circuit, with a surface of 16 square miles. Its population, amounting to 1700, inhabit the village of St. Michel and several hamlets. They are employed in tillage, pasturage, and fishing. Lat. 48. 28. 8. N. long. 5. 3. 6. W.

USHANT, or OUESSANT, a small island in the Pacific ocean, discovered in 1768, by M. Bougainville, near the coast of New Guinea. Lat. 11. 5. S. long. 146. 33. E.

USHENICK POINT, a cape on the east coast of Lewis. Lat. 57. 56. N. long. 6. 25. W.

USHER, s. [huissier, Fr.; usher, old Engl. "A gentle usher." Spenser. This is also the correct spelling: the word being originally from huis, Fr., a door.] One whose business is to introduce strangers, or walk before a person of high rank.

The wife of Antony

Should have an army for an usher, and

The neighs of horse to tell her approach

Long ere she did appear.

Shakspeare.

An under-teacher; one who introduces young scholars to higher learning.

Though grammar's profits less than rhetoric's are,

Yet ev'n in those his usher claims a share.

Dryden.

To USHER, v. a. To introduce as a forerunner or har-binger; to forerun.

No sun shall ever usher forth my honours,

Or gild again the noble troops that waited

Upon my smiles.

Shakspeare.

USHER (James), archbishop of Armagh, and primate of Ireland, was born at Dublin, January 4, 1580-1, he led a very active life, busily engaged in the political and religious controversies of the time.

Publications of archbishop Usher:—De Ecclesiarum Christianarum Successione et Statu, 1613; The Religion of the ancient Irish and Britons, 1622; Gotteschalei et Prædestinariæ Controversiæ ab eo Motæ Historia, 1631; Veterum Epistolarum Hibernicarum Sylloge, 1632; Immanuel, or the Mystery of the Incarnation of the Son of God, 1638; De Ecclesiarum Britannicarum Primordiis, 1639; A Discourse on the Origin of Bishops and Metropolitans, 1641; A Geographical and Historical Disquisition on the Lydian or Proconsular Asia, 1641; Polycarpi et Ignatii Epistolæ, &c., 1644; Appendix Ignatiana, 1647; Diatriba de Romanæ Ecclesiæ Symbolo Apostolico aliisque Fidei Formulis, 1647; De Macedonum et Asianorum Anno Solari, 1648; Annalium Pars prior, 1650; Epistola ad Ludov. Capellum de Textus Hebraici variantibus Lectionibus, 1652; Annalium Pars posterior, 1654; De Græca Septuaginta Interpretum Versione Syntagma, 1655.—Posthumous: Various Tracts, edited by Dr. Bernard, 1657; Chronologia Sacra, edited by Dr. Barlow, 1660; The Power of the Prince, and Obedience of the Subject, written 1641, printed after the Restoration; Historia Dogmatica Controversiæ inter Orthodoxos et Pontificios de Scripturis et Sacris Vernaculis Accessere: Dissertationes duæ, 1690.

USIACUSI, a settlement of New Granada, in the province of Carthagena, on the shore of the channel which runs from the swamp of Turbaco into the sea.

USIDSCHA, an inland town in the north of European Turkey, in Romania, sandgiacat of Semendria; 70 miles south-south-west of Belgrade.

USINGEN, a small town of the west of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, and the former residence of the duke; 26 miles north-north-east of Mentz. Population 1300.

USITZA, a small town of the south-west of European Russia, in Podolia, on the Dniester; 30 miles east-south-east of Kaminiac.

USK, a market and borough town of England, in the county county of Monmouth. It is situated on the river Usk, at its confluence with the rivulet Birdhin. It has been privileged with the elective franchise since 27th of Henry VII. In conjunction with Newport and Monmouth, it sends one member to parliament. It is governed by a bailiff or mayor, community and burgesses; 14 miles south-west of Monmouth, and 144 west-by-north of London. Population 844. Market on Friday, and three annual fairs, USK, a river which rises in Wales, on the west side of Brecknockshire, and watering the towns of Brecon, Crick-hewcl, Abergavenny, Usk, and Caerleon, enters the Bristol Channel below Newport. It is noted for its trout in season, from March till July.

USLA, a town of Hindostan, province of Bahar, district of Mongier, near which is a celebrated pass through a range of hills which intersect the district. Lat. 24. 57. N. long. 86. 40. E.

USLAR, a small town of the north of Germany, but in the south of Hanover, on the river Aale; 17 miles north-north-west of Gottingen. Population 1600.

USMAN, a small town of the interior of European Russia, in the government of Tambov, on the river Usman; 93 miles west-south-west of Tambov. Population 2500.

USPALLATA, the name of one of the largest and richest silver mines in Chili. The principal vein is nine feet in breadth, but it branches out upon both sides into several that are smaller, which extend to the neighbouring mountains, and are said to exceed 30 miles in length. This mine is found to increase in richness in proportion to its depth.

USQUEBAUGH, s. [an Irish and Erse word, which signifies the water of life.] It is a compounded distilled spirit, being drawn on aromatics; and the Irish sort is particularly distinguished for its pleasant and mild flavour. The Highland sort is somewhat hotter; and, by corruption, in Scottish they call it whiskey.

Usquebaugh to our feast in pails was brought up,
An hundred at least. Swift.

USSEL, a small town in the south-west of France, department of the Correze; 34 miles north-east of Tulle, and 40 east-by-north of Uzerche.

USSELBY, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 2½ miles north-north-west of Market Raisen.

USSOLIE, a small town of the east of European Russia, in the government of Simbirsk, on the small river Ussolka; 60 miles east-north-east of Penza.

USSON, a petty town in the interior of France; 4 miles south-east of Issoire.

USSON, a small town in the interior of France, department of the Vienne. Population 1500.

USTARITZ, a small town in the south of France; 6 miles south of Bayonne.

USTAYANTHO, a lake of the United States, in New York, from which the river Delaware takes its rise.

USTER, a town of Hindostan, province of Berar, belonging to the Nagpore Mahrattas. Lat. 21. 18. N. long. 75. 52. E.

USTER, a large village in the interior of Switzerland, in the canton of Zurich, near the lake of Greiffen.

USTERIA [so named by Willdenow, in honour of Paulus Uster], in Botany, a genus of the class monandria, order monogynia.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leaved, four-toothed, permanent; segments four, obtuse, three of them very small; the fourth much larger, lanceolate. Corolla: one-petalled, funnel-form; tube narrow, longer than the calyx; border four-toothed, acute, erect. Stamina: filament one, short, placed on the tube. Anther oblong. Pistil: germ oblong, superior. Style capillary, shorter than the corolla. Stigma bifid. Pericarp: capsule oblong, compressed, two-grooved, one-celled, two-valved. Seeds two, oblong, clothed with a thin membranaceous aril.—Essential Character. Calyx four-toothed, with one segment much larger than the rest. Corolla funnel-form, four-toothed. Capsule one-celled, two-seeded. Seeds arilled.

Ustertia Guineensis.—This is a shrub with opposite branches,

Leaves opposite, roundish-ovate, quite entire. Flowers in terminating panicles.—Native of Guinea.

USTICA (the ancient Euonimo), a small island in the Mediterranean, belonging to Sicily. It is fertile in wine, olives, and cotton; also in wheat; 34 miles north of Capo di Gallo, the nearest point of the Sicilian coast, and 42 north of Palermo.

USTION, [ustus, Lat.] The act of burning; the state of being burned.

USTIUG, VOLIKI, or THE GREAT, a city of the north of European Russia, in the government of Vologda, situated at the confluence of the Suchona and the Jug, which unite here, and form the Dwina. It is an archbishop's see, and, though placed in a very inhospitable climate, where corn seldom comes to maturity, contains nearly 12,000 inhabitants; 210 miles north-north-west of Viatka, and 440 east of St. Petersburg. Lat. 60. 56. N. long. 45. 40. E.

USTIUSCHNA, a small town of the interior of European Russia, in the government of Novgorod, on the river Mologa; 186 miles east of Novgorod. Population 2600.

USTORIOUS, adj. [ustum, Lat.] Having the quality of burning.—The power of a burning-glass is by an ustorious quality in the mirror or glass, arising from a certain unknown substantial form. Watts.

USTULATION, s. [ustulatus, Lat.] Act of burning or searing.—It seems to lie in a kind of sindging and ustulation, such as rapid affrictions do cause. Sir W. Petty.

USUAL, adj. [usuel, Fr.] Common; frequent; customary; frequently occurring.

Could I the care of providence deserve,
Heaven must destroy me, if it would preserve:
And that's my fate, or sure it would have sent
Some usual evil for my punishment. Dryden.

USUALLY, adv. Commonly; frequently; customarily.—Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.

USUALNESS, s. Commonness; frequency.—It is only usualness or unusualness that makes the difference. Clarke.

USUCAPTION, s. [usus and capio, Lat.] In the civil law, the acquisition of the property of a thing, by possession and enjoyment thereof for a certain term of years, prescribed by law. Todd.

USUFRUCT, s. [usus and fructus, Lat.] The temporary use; enjoyment of the profits, without power to alienate.—The persons receiving the same have only the usufruct thereof, and not any fee or inheritance therein. Ayliffe.

USUFRUCTUARY, s. [usufructuarius, Lat.] One that has the use and temporary profit, not the property of a thing.—The parsons of parishes are not in law accounted proprietors, but only usufructuaries, as having no right of fee-simple vested in them. Ayliffe.

USUMASINTLA, a river of Mexico, in the province of Tabasco, which enters the Atlantic ocean.

USUPAMA, a river of Guiana, which rises west of the river Caroni, runs east, and unites itself with the Cuyuni and Yuruaria.

To USURE, v. n. [usura, Lat.] To practise usury; to take interest for money.

Is this the balsam that the usuring senate
Pours into captains' wounds? Shakspeare.

USURER, s. [usura, Lat.] One who puts money out at interest. Commonly used for one that takes exorbitant interest.

Fie; thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
Which, like an usurer, abounds in all,
And usest none in that true use indeed,
Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit. Shakspeare.

USURIOUS, adj. [usuaire, Fr.] Given to the practice of usury; exorbitantly greedy of profit.

For every hour that thou wilt spare me now,
I will allow,
Usurious god of love, twenty to thee,
When with my brown my grey hairs equal be. Donne.

To USURP, v. a. [usurpo, Lat.] To possess by force or intrusion; to seize, or possess without right.

Victorious prince of York!
Before I see thee seated in that throne,
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
These eyes shall never close.

Shakspeare.

USURPA'TION, s. [usurpation, Fr.] Forcible, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.

The Piercies,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne.

Shakspeare.

Use; usage.—There can be no kind of certainty in any such observations of the articles, because the Greeks promiscuously often use them or omit them, without any reason of their usurpation or omission. Pearson.

USURPER, s. One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.

Richard, duke of York,
Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
And that your majesty was an usurper.

Shakspeare.

USURPINGLY, adv. Without just claim.

Lay aside the sword,
Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
Thy right royal sovereign.

Shakspeare.

U'SURY, s. [usura, Lat.] Money paid for the use of money; interest.—What he borrows from the ancients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable. Dryden.—The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.—Usury bringeth the treasure of arealm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end, most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.

USWORTH, GREAT and LITTLE, adjoining hamlets of England, forming one township, in the county of Durham; 4 miles south-east of Gateshead. Population 1277.

UTAWAS RIVER, a river in North America, which forms the boundary between the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. It makes part of that succession of lakes and rivers by which the fur traders of Canada penetrate into the interior of the continent; and though its course is considerably interrupted by cascades and rapids, these adventurers contrive to transport their loaded canoes over all the obstacles by which its navigation is obstructed. It has its source in the mountains of the interior, and, after a course of more than 400 miles, falls into the St. Lawrence in the vicinity of Montreal. It receives in its course the waters of the lake Timmiskamain. It is sometimes called Montreal river.

UTCHIVAO, a river of Guiana, which runs north, and enters the Paraguay, near the entrance of this latter into the Caroni.

UTELLE, a small town in the north-west of Italy, in the Piedmontese province of Nice; 15 miles east-by-north of Nice.

UTEN, or CAUTEN, a river of Chili, which rises in the Andes, runs west, and enters the Pacific ocean. Lat. 38. 44. S.

UTENSIL, s. [utensile, Low Lat.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.

Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.

Shakspeare.

U'TERINE, adj. [uterin, Fr.; uterinus, Lat.] Belonging to the womb.—In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceptive constitution. Brown.—Born of the same mother, but having a different father.—He was nephew to him by his brother uterine, Edmond Tudor. Sir G. Buck.

UTEROW, a village of Austrian Poland, circle of Stanislawow.

U'TERUS, s. [Latin.] The womb.

UTICA, a post village of the United States, in Oneida county, New York, in the township of Whitestown, on the south bank of the Mehawk; 4 miles south-east of Whitesborough, and 93 west-by-north of Albany.

UTIEL, an inland town of the south of Spain, in the province of La Mancha; 58 miles south-east of Cuenca.

UTILA, an island in the gulf of Honduras, about 30 miles from the coast; about 15 miles long and 5 broad. Lat. 16. 4. N. long. 87. 45. W.—It is also the name of a small river which falls into the sea.

UTILITY, s. [utilité, Fr.; utilitas, Lat.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantageousness: applied to things only: as, this book is of great utility; not, this book was written for the utility of scholars.—Those things which have long gone together, are confederate; whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconformity. Bacon.

UTIS, s. A word which probably is corrupted, at least, is not now understood. Utis was the octave of a saint's day, and may perhaps be taken for any festivity. Dr. Johnson.—Utas is the word in our old lexicography. [cahta, Sax., octavæ festi alicujus. Skinner. Fr. huit; octo.] Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem. Shakspeare.

UTKINSK, the name of two very large villages in the east of European Russia, in the government of Perm, on the borders of Asia. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in iron works in the vicinity; 48 miles west-by-north of Ekaterineburg.

UTKINTON, a township of England, in the county of Chester, one mile north-west-by-west of Tarporley. Population 497.

UTMOST, adj. [utmoert, Saxon, from uttepi.] Extreme; placed at the extremity.

I went, by your command,
To view the utmost limits of the land.

Dryden.

Being in the highest degree.

I'll undertake to bring him,
Where he shall answer by a lawful form,
In peace to his utmost peril.

Shakspeare.

UTMOST, s. The most that can be; the greatest power; the highest degree; the greatest effort.

What miscarries,
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To the utmost of a man.

Shakspeare.

UTOPIAN, or UTO'PICAL, adj. [from Sir Thomas More's Utopia, or imaginary commonwealth; Gr. ev, benè, and τοπος, locus.] Ideal; not real. Bullokar has utopian, which he terms imaginary, feigned, fabulous.—Let no idle Donatist of Amsterdam dream hence of an utopian perfection. Bp. Hall.

UTQVU, a small river of Guiana, in Surinam, which enters the Camarin.

UTRECHT, one of the Dutch provinces, bounded on the west by Holland, on the north by the Zuyder Zee, and on the east by Gelderland. Its surface is level, with the exception of the south quarter, where the monotonous aspect of the Dutch scenery begins to be exchanged for a slight variety of vale and eminence. The soil in some parts is sandy, and fit for little but raising wood; in general, however, it affords good pasture. The extent of the province is about 490 square miles; its population about 110,000. It is traversed by branches of the Rhine, and has a better supply of springs and streams than the maritime provinces, as well as a purer atmosphere. It sends eight deputies to the representative body of the Netherlands, and is divided into nine cantons.

UTRECHT, a well known city of the Netherlands, and capital of the preceding province, is situated on a branch of the Rhine called the Old Rhine, by which it is divided into two parts. The position of Utrecht is healthy, and exempt from the disadvantages of damp, so common in Dutch towns, towns, the soil being dry, and having a slight degree of elevation. Its population is about 35,000; 18 miles south-south-east of Amsterdam. Lat. 52. 5. 31. N. long. 5. 7. 16. E.

UTRECHT, New, a township of the United States, in King's county, New York. Population 907.

UTRERA, a considerable town of the south-west of Spain, in Andalusia; 14 miles east-south-east of Seville. Lat. 37. 9. 53. N. long. 5. 7. 44. W.

UTRICULARIA [utriculus, a little bottle, so called from the small appendages to the root], in Botany, a genus of the class diandria, order monogynia, natural order corydales, lysimachiaë (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth two-leaved; leaflets ovate, concave, very small, equal, deciduous. Corolla one-petalled, ringent; upper lip flat, obtuse, erect; lower bigger, flat, entire; palate heart-shaped, prominent between the lips. Nectary horned, produced from the base of the petal. Stamina: filaments two, very short, curved in. Anthers small, cohering. Pistil: germ globular, large, one-celled. Style filiform, length of the calyx. Stigma conical. Pericarp: capsule globular, large, one-celled. Seeds numerous.—Essential Character. Corolla ringent spurred. Calyx two leaved, equal. Capsule one-celled.

1. Utricularia Alpina.—Nectary awl-shaped; leaves ovate, quite entire. Roots fibrous, ash coloured, with small round tubercles as in the potato.—Native of Martinico, on the highest mountains, on a wet open meadow: flowering in February.

2. Utricularia foliosa.—Nectary conical; fruits drooping; radicles destitute of appendages. This resembles our common sort very much, but the root is creeping.—Native of South America.

3. Utricularia vulgaris, or common bladder-wort or hooded milfoil.—Nectary conical; scape few-flowered. The fibrous floating roots, slightly attached to the mud, are perennial. The stem likewise floats horizontally under water alternately divided into capillary branches, with bristly leaves bearing little compressed curved bladders, open, and bearded at the tip, containing a bubble of air, and a drop of watery fluid, in which, when highly magnified, appears a quantity of extremely minute solid particles. Aquatic insects frequently take up their lodging in these bladders.—Native of Europe, in ditches and stagnant waters: flowering after Midsummer.

4. Utricularia minor, or small bladderwort or hooded milfoil.—Nectary keeled, very short, obtuse. Roots capillaceous, very tender, floating, loaded with very small membranaceous bladders. Scape length of the finger, simple, very slender, dividing towards the top into three peduncles, having a bracte under each. Leaves radical, pinnate, capillaceous, with very few equal pinnae.—Native of Europe: flowering at the same time with the other. This and utricularia vulgaris are not uncommon in England.

5. Utricularia obtusa, or blunt-horned bladder-wort.—Nectary bent in, obtuse, submarginate.—Native of Jamaica, in marshy rivulets: flowering the whole summer.

6. Utricularia subulata, or awl-shaped bladder-wort.—Nectary awl-shaped.—Native of Virginia.

7. Utricularia gibba, or gibbous bladder-wort.—Nectary gibbous.—Native of Virginia.

8. Utricularia bifida, or cloven bladder-wort.—Scape naked, bifid.—Native of China.

9. Utricularia capillacea, or hair-like bladder-wort.—Scape naked capillary, three-flowered; flowers nodding; capsule awl-shaped.—Native of the East Indies.

10. Utricularia cœrulea, or blue bladder-wort.—Scape naked; scales alternate, wandering, awl-shaped.—Native of Ceylon and Malabar.

11. Utricularia stellaris, or starry bladder-wort.—bladdery whorl of the bractes ciliary.—Native of the East Indies, in rice fields, where the water is deepest.

12. Utricularia recurva, or recurved bladder-wort.—Leafless; nectary recurved; spike simple.—In Hon-mo river, near the capital of Cochinchina.

13. Utricularia aurea, or golden bladder-wort.—Leafless; nectary conical-compressed; flowers in racemes.—Native of Cochinchina, in slow-flowing rivers.

UTTENWEILER, a small town of the south-west of Germany, in Wirtemberg, near Riedlingen, containing 1000 inhabitants.

UTTER, adj. [utter, Saxon.] Situate on the outside, or remote from the centre.

In my flight
Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
I sung of chaos, and eternal night. Milton.

Placed beyond any compass; out of any place.
Pursue these sons of darkness; drive them out
From all heaven's bounds, into the utter deep. Milton.

Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here; though the former sense may serve.
Such place eternal justice had prepar'd
For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd
In utter darkness; and their portion set
As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton.

Complete; total.—The parliament thought the utter taking it away necessary for the preservation of the kingdom. Clarendon.—Peremptory.—There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther. Clarendon.—Perfect; mere.—They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious thoughts which disquiet mankind. Atterbury.

To UTTER, v. a. [from the adjective; to make public, or let out; palam facere.] To speak; to pronounce; to express.—These very words I've heard him utter. Shakspeare.—To disclose; to discover; to publish.—I meant my words should not reach your ears; but what I uttered was most true. Dryden.—To sell; to vend.

Such mortal drugs I have, but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakspeare.

To disperse; to emit at large.—To preserve us from ruin, the whole kingdom should continue in a firm resolution never to receive or utter this fatal coin. Swift.—To put forth.

Seest thou thilk same hawthorn stud,
How bragly it begins to bud,
And utter his tender head? Spenser.

UTTERABLE, adj. Expressible; such as may be uttered.

UTTERANCE, s. Pronunciation; manner of speaking. He, with uttrance grave, and countenance sad,
From point to point discours'd his voyage. Spenser.

[Outrance, French.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility. Out of usc.

Come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance. Shakspeare.

Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.
Till Adam, though no less than Eve abash'd,
At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd. Milton.

Sale.—It will draw out of the inhabited country of Ireland provisions and victuals, and many necessaries, because they shall be sure of utterance. Bacon.

UTTERBY, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 5 miles north-by-west of Louth.—A hamlet of the same county, in the parish of Clew.

UTTERER, s. One who pronounces. A divulger; a discloser.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd;
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Spenser.

A seller; a vender.
UTTERLY, adv. Fully; completely; perfectly. For the most part, in an ill sense.

All your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost. Shakspeare.
UTTERMOST,

UTTERMOST, adj. [uttermæɹt, Saxon.] Extreme; being in the highest degree.

Bereave me not,
Whereon I live! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel in this uttermost distress.

Milton.

Most remote.—The land, from the uttermost end of the straits on Peru side, did go towards the south. Abbot.

UTTERMOST, s. The greatest.—There needed neither promise nor persuasion to make her do her uttermost for her father's service. Sidney.—The extreme part of any thing.—A city in the uttermost of thy border. Numb.

UTTOXETER, a market town of England, in the county of Stafford, is situated on a gentle eminence, close to the western bank of the river Dove, over which is a noble stone bridge that connects the two counties of Stafford and Derby. It is a place of great antiquity, and is supposed to have been a British settlement previous to the Roman invasion. Population 2779; 13 miles north-east of Stafford, and 136 north-west of London.

UVA, a lake of Asiatic Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, about 28 miles in circumference; 68 miles south-east of Tobolsk.

UVA URSI, in Botany, the name of a species of arbutus, (see ARBUTUS,) with trailing stalks, and entire leaves, called in English, bear's whortleberry.

UVARIA, [from the figure of the fruit like a bunch of grapes], in Botany, a genus of the class polyandria, order polygynia, natural order of coadunatae, anonae (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth three-leaved, flat; leaflets ovate, acute, permanent. Corolla: petals six, lanceolate, sessile, spreading, longer than the calyx. Stamina: filaments none. Anthers numerous, truncate, oblong, covering the germ on which they are placed. Pistil: germ ovate. Styles numerous, length of the anthers, terminating the head. Stigmas obtuse. Pericarp: berries numerous, distinct, globular, peduncled, fastened to an oblong receptacle. Seeds numerous.—Essential Character. Calyx, three-leaved. Petals six. Berries numerous, pendulous, four seeded.

1. Uvaria Zeylanica.—Leaves lanceolate, acuminate; peduncle one-flowered, solitary; petals roundish, obtuse, equal. This is a climbing shrub, by means of a long unarmed branching stem, but without tendrils.—Native of the East Indies.

2. Uvaria lanceolata, or lance-wood uvaria.—Leaves lanceolate, quite entire; flowers axillary, solitary; branches wand-like.—Native of Jamaica, and pretty common in the woods of Portland; reckoned one of the best timber trees in the island, especially where strength or elasticity is required; but it seldom grows to any considerable size. It is imported under the name of lance-wood, and is used for the shafts of very light carriages.

3. Uvaria cerasoides, or cherry-fruited uvaria.—Leaves lanceolate, acute, pubescent, beneath; peduncles one-flowered, solitary; petals ovate, acute, equal. It is a large tree, a native of the mountainous inland parts of the circars. It does not cast its leaves, and flowers during the hot season.

4. Uvaria suberosa, or cork-barked uvaria.—Leaves oblong, acute, smooth; peduncles one-flowered, solitary, the three inner petals lanceolate. Trunk remarkably straight, with a scabrous bark, very deeply split in various directions. This is much more common than the former; seldom acquiring the size of a tree, except among the mountains. It is in flower and fruit all the year, and does not cast its leaves. The wood is more useful than that of the former; is of a chocolate colour, durable, and very elastic.

5. Uvaria tomentosa, or downy-leaved uvaria.—Leaves oblong, acute, tomentose; peduncles one-flowered, solitary, the three inner petals ovate.—It is a large tree, native of the Circar mountains, and flowers during the hot season.

6. Uvaria odorata, or sweet-smelling uvaria.—Leaves ovate-lanceolate; peduncles one-flowered, solitary; petals linear-lanceolate, very long.—Native of Java and China.

7. Uvaria monosperma, or capsuled uvaria.—Leaves elliptic, acuminate, ferruginous, beneath; peduncles one-flowered, aggregate; petals ovate, acute.—Native of Guinea, in remote woods.

8. Uvaria lutea.—Leaves oblong, acute, shining; peduncles three-flowered, solitary; petals ovate, obtuse. This is also a pretty large tree, and grows only among the mountains.

9. Uvaria ligularis.—Leaves ovate, acute; peduncles many-flowered, solitary; petals linear, acute, very long.—Native of Amboina.

10. Uvaria longifolia.—Leaves lanceolate, waved at the edge; peduncles umbelled; petals lanceolate, acute.—Native of the East Indies.

11. Uvaria Japonica.—Leaves oblong, acuminate, serrate; peduncles one-flowered, solitary; petals roundish. Stem frutescent, twining and decumbent, tubercled with scars, nodding at the top, naked, rufescent.—Native of Japan, and growing very plentifully in several places round the harbour of Nagasaki.

UVEOUS, adj. [from uva, Lat.] The uveous coat, or iris of the eye, hath a muscular power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil. Ray.

VUGT, an inland town of the Netherlands, in North Brabant, containing 1400 inhabitants; 3 miles south of Bois le Duc.

VUKOVAR, a town of the Austrian states, the capital of the county of Symium, in Sclavonia, situated on the Danube, where it is joined by the small river Vuko, which divides Vukovar into two parts, called the Old and New towns; 21 miles south-east of Eszek. Lat. 45. 21. 9. N. long. 19. 1. 25. E.

VULCANO, s. [Italian.] A burning mountain: it is commonly written after the Italian volcano.—Earth calcined, flies off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in vulcanos, will be carried to great distances. Arbutnot.

VULGAR, adj. [vulgaris, Latin.] Plebeian; suiting to the common people.—Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men. Addison.—Vernacular; national.—It might be more useful to the English reader, who was to be his immediate care, to write in our vulgar language. Fell.—Mean; low; being of the common rate.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bow'd me to the ground:
Yet by the stubble you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man.

Broome.

Public; commonly bruited.

Do you hear aught of a battle toward?—

—Most sure, and vulgar; every one hears that.

Shakspeare.

VULGAR, s. [vulgaire, Fr.] The common people.

I'll about;

Drive away the vulgar from the streets.

Shakspeare.

VULGARISM, s. Grossness; meanness; vulgarity.—The great events of Greek and Roman fable and history, which early education, and the usual course of reading have made familiar and interesting to all Europe, without being degraded by the vulgarism of ordinary life in any country. Reynolds.

To VULGARIZE, v. a. To render mean or vulgar.—Sometimes a single word will vulgarize a poetical idea. Arbutnot and Pope.

VULGARITY, s. Meanness; state of the lowest people.—True it is, and I hope I shall not offend their vulgarities, if I say they are daily mocked into error by devisers. Brown.—Mean or gross mode.—Is the grandesophos of Persius, and the sublimity of Juvenal to be circumscribed with the meanness of words, and *vulgar*ity of expression? Dryden.

VULGARLY, adv. Commonly; in the ordinary manner; among the common people.

He

He was, which people must respect
In princes, and which pleases vulgarly,
Of goodly personage and of sweet aspect.

Daniel.

VULGATE, adj. [vulgatus, Latin.] Belonging to a noted Latin version of the Old and New Testament.—The Latin vulgata Bible was declared authentic, and canonized by the Council of Trent, A.D. 1546. Pope Sixtus Quintus corrected it with his own hand. Blackwall.

VULGATE, s. An ancient Latin translation of the Bible; the only one which the Church of Rome acknowledges to be authentic. Chambers.

VULNERABLE, adj. [vulnerabilis, Lat.] Susceptive of wounds; liable to external injuries.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests:
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Shakspeare.

VULNERARY, adj. [vulnerarius, Lat.] Useful in the cure of wounds.—I kept the orifice open, and prescribed him vulneraries. Wiseman.

To VULNERATE, v. a. [vulnero, Lat.] To wound; to hurt.—There is an intercourse between the magnetic unguent and the vulnerated body. Glanville.

VULNERATION, s. Act of wounding; infliction of wounds. Cockeram.—When God foretels by the prophet Zachary what he should suffer from the sons of men, he says expressly, "they shall look upon me whom they have pierced;" and therefore shews that he speaks of the Son of God, which was to be the Son of man, and by our nature liable to vulneration; and withal foretels the piercing of his body. Pearson.

VULPINE, adj. [vulpinus, Lat.; vulpine, old French.] Belonging to a fox; like a fox.—The slyness of a vulpine craft. Feltham.

VULTURE, s. [vultur, Lat.] A large bird of prey, remarkable for voracity.

We've willing dames enough, there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves.

Shakspeare.

VULTUR, or VULTURE, in Ornithology, a genus of birds belonging to the order of Accipitres, or hawks. The characters are, that the bill is straight, and hooked only at the apex, and covered at the base by a cere or skin; that the head has no feathers, and covered in front with a naked skin; that the tongue is fleshy, and generally bifid, the neck retractile, and the feet strong, with moderately crooked claws.

1. Vultur gryphus, or vulture condor, or largest vulture, or black vulture, with the shorter wing-feathers white; the head furnished with an upright, compressed, fleshy crest or comb; the throat naked and red; and the neck carunculated on each side. These birds, which are more frequently seen in Peru than in any other parts of South America, were brought from the straits of Magellan. They were supposed to be male and female. The male bird has "a kind of gular pouch, or large dilated skin, of a blueish colour, proceeding from the base of the lower mandible, and reaching to some distance down the neck. On each side of the neck is also situated a row or series of flat, carneous, semicircular, or ear-shaped flaps or appendages, to the number of seven on each side, and which gradually decrease in size as they descend; being so disposed as to lap slightly over each other. The whole neck and breast are of a red colour, and perfectly bare of feathers; being only coated here and there with a few straggling filaments of blackish hair or coarse down. The colour of the lateral wattles or carunculæ inclines to blueish. The crest or comb on the head is large, upright, thick at the base, sharpened on its edge, and not entirely even in its outline, but somewhat sinuated, sinking slightly in the middle, and rising higher on the back part: it is smooth, and irregularly convex on the sides, and in its texture or substance not greatly dissimilar to that of the vultur papa of Linnæus, or king vulture. At a slight distance behind this, on each side, is situated a much smaller, semi-oval nuchal crest, of a similar substance, and beset with coarse down. The colour of the crest is blackish, slightly inclining to red and blue in some parts. Towards the lower part of the neck is a pendant pear-shaped tubercle: the lower part of the neck is surrounded by a collar of milk-white down or fine plumes, representing exactly a tippet of white fur. The extent of the bird, from wing's end to wing's end, was said to be more than twelve feet when measured immediately after it was shot."

The back of the bird has been erroneously described as white, whereas it is coal-black; an error evidently owing to the bird's having been seen with the wings closed over the back, so that the white secondaries covered it from view. Gmelin copied this error from Molina, and thus Mr. Latham was misled. In their descriptions, the tail is said to be small, which, on the contrary, is rather large in proportion to the bird. The supposed female had not the least appearance of a comb on the head, which, with some other particulars, inclined Dr. Shaw to conclude that it was either a young bird or a female. The extent of its wings from tip to tip was not far short of ten feet. Another of these birds, mentioned in the 18th volume of the Phil. Trans. and shot in Chili, had wings which extended more than sixteen feet. The beak of the fore-mentioned female was of a dark lead colour, becoming gradually whitish towards the tip. The head and neck were destitute of feathers, but covered with a short straggling sort of hairy down; the top of the head inclined to a dark colour, but the rest of the neck was paler, and probably in the living bird of a reddish colour. Towards the lower part of the neck, where it joins to the shoulders, was a ruff or circle of white downy feathers; and beneath the breast a considerable bare space: the rest of the bird was black, except the shorter or secondary wing-feathers, which were white with black tips: the legs and feet were blackish, very strong, but the claws not much incurvated: the tail even at the end, and very slightly rounded at the sides. On comparing the remiges or wing-feathers of this bird with some of those which were brought over by Mr. Byron as those of the real condor, Dr. Shaw found them to be exactly similar, except in size. From an examination of these specimens, Dr. S. concluded that the physiognomy of this bold and formidable vulture is not of a ferocious cast, but rather exhibiting an appearance almost bordering on mildness.—M. Humboldt makes some deduction for the alleged size of this bird, as he had seen none which exceeded 3 feet 3 inches in length, and 8 feet 9 inches in extent from the end of one wing to that of the other. He admits, however, that the condor may sometimes be supposed to arrive at a much greater magnitude, and to measure in extent of wings 11 or 12 feet. Its usual residence, as he informs us, is among lofty rocks in the region of the Andes, just below the boundaries of perpetual snow, and it may be considered as a co-inhabitant with the guanaco.

Nothing can exceed the sagacity with which the condor perceives the scent of its prey at a distance, or the boldness with which it flies down to seize it. It preys both on dead and living animals, and two birds will seize on a heifer, and begin their work of destruction by picking the eyes and tearing the tongue out.

2. Vultur Bengalensis, or the brown vulture.—With the head and neck naked before, and faintly chesnut-colour; the bill lead colour, with black tip; or brown vulture, paler beneath, with the head and neck covered by fuscous down; the lower part encircled by a brown ruff. This is the Bengal vulture of Latham, two feet six inches in length; bill and legs dusky black, and crop hanging over the breast, as is the case in many others of the vulture tribe.

3. Vultur papa.—With carunculated nostrils, and naked crown and neck; or whitish-rufescent vulture, with naked variegated head and neck; nostrils furnished with a loose orange-coloured caruncle, and neck with a grey ruff. This is the king of the vultures of Edwards, and exceeds every other species in the elegance of its appearance, about the size of a hen turkey, and of a light-reddish brown or buff colour, with black wings and tail, accompanied with a gloss of green, the edges of the wing-feathers being of a whitish cast; the under parts of the body are white, with a slight cast cast of yellow; the legs and feet pale flesh-colour; but what constitutes the peculiar ornament of the bird is the vivid colouring of the head and neck, which are bare of feathers. This beautiful species is a native of many parts of South America, and the West Indies.

4. Vultur monachus, or monk vulture.—With gibbous crown, and black body; or brown vulture, with lengthened ruff, and downy occipital crest. This is the crested black vulture of Edwards; the cinereous or Arabian vulture of Latham; and vautour, or grand vautour of Buffon. This bird is an inhabitant of the deserts of Arabia, and is said to be not uncommon in the Pyrenean mountains.

5. Vultur aura, or the brown-greyish vulture.—With black wing-feathers, and white bill; or blackish vulture, with purple and green reflexions, and red, naked, papillated and wrinkled head and neck. The vautour de Brasil of Buffon.

This species, with some variations, appears to be generally diffused over the whole continent of South America, but mostly in the warmer regions. In some parts of British America it is popularly called the turkey-buzzard, and in other parts carrion-crow. It is somewhat smaller than a turkey; it feeds on every kind of animal matter, and is highly esteemed in the West Indies on account of its activity in clearing away substances that might otherwise render the air noxious in those warm climates. In consequence of this mode of life, the birds themselves have always a very offensive odour. According to Mr. Pennant, these birds are common from Nova Scotia to Terra del Fuego, and though they are mischievous in attacking and destroying cattle in a weak or diseased state, they are beneficial in lessening the number of alligators, which would otherwise become intolerable by their multitudes.

6. Vultur cinereus, or the brown-blackish vulture.—With wing and tail-feathers verging towards cinereous, and legs covered with brown feathers. This is referred by Shaw to the vulture monachus. It is the vulture cinereus of Ray; the cinereous or ash-coloured vulture of Willughby and Latham.—It inhabits high mountains of Europe. Gmelin suggests it to be a variety of percnopterus.

7. Vultur fuscus, or the brown vulture.—With wing-feathers brown or blackish, the primary white at the apex spotted with brown, and tail-feathers grey-brown, and naked legs.—This is the vautour de Malta of Buffon, and found in Europe, chiefly in the island of Malta. Gmelin questions whether it be different from the percnopterus.

8. Vultur niger, or black vulture.—With wing and tail-feathers brown, and legs covered with black feathers. This is described as larger than the golden vulture, of a black colour, and is said to be common in Egypt and Sardinia. Gmelin suggests that it is a variety of percnopterus, and Dr. Shaw also inclines to think that it is a variety.

9. Vultur leucocephalus.—With snowy feathers, wing and tail black, with a white ruff. This is the white or cinereous vulture of Willughby, and the vautour de Norvege of Buffon; found in Sardinia and Norway; and suggested to be a variety.

10. Vultur fulvus.—From grey to reddish above, head, neck, and ruff white, wing and tail-feathers black; or fulvous-chesnut vulture, with black wing and tail-feathers, downy whitish head and neck, and white ruff. This is the vulture fulvus of Brisson, the fulvous vulture and golden vulture of Willughby, and the griffon of Buffon. This is one of the largest of the genus, exceeding the size of the golden eagle. The general colour of the plumage, when the bird is in its best state, is a full rufous or tawny chesnut; the legs and feet are ash-coloured.—This bird, often confounded with others, is found in the mountains of Persia.

11. Vultur percnopterus.—With black wing-feathers, the exterior margin, that of the outmost excepted, greyish or hoary; white vulture (the female brownish) with lengthened narrow beak, naked face, and black wing-feathers with grey edges. This is the vulture (percnopterus) with naked head and plump throat, or Egyptian mountain-falcon of Hasselquist; the aquiline vulture of Albin.; the vulture eagle of Aldrovand.; and the rachamah of Bruce's Travels. Its size, according to Gesner, is that of a stork. Shaw thinks it probable, that the rachamah of Bruce, the Angola vulture of Pennant, the ash-coloured vulture of Latham, and the petit vautour or vautour de Norvege of Buffon, are in reality the same species, and constitute the male vulture percnopterus of Linnæus. He also inclines to believe that the Maltese vulture of Latham, or vautour de Norvege of Buffon, is merely the female of this species. If this be the case, the vulture percnopterus seems to be a pretty general inhabitant of the old continent, being found not only in many of the temperate and warmer parts of Europe, but in various parts of Asia and Africa. It is plentiful in Egypt, where it is esteemed for its beneficial services in destroying various putrid substances in the vicinity of towns and cities. Its general size is that of a female turkey, but in this respect it varies in different countries. The male also varies in the cast of its colour, which is sometimes nearly white, and sometimes a dirty pale rufous-white; the quills are black, but the secondaries are externally of the same colour with the rest of the plumage. The female is said to exceed the male in size.

12. Vultur cristatus, or the crested vulture.—From reddish to blackish, the breast more inclining to red, the legs naked. This is the brown vulture of Willughby and Latham.—It is found in thick and desert forests.

13. Vultur Barbarus, or barbatus.—The vulture brown to black, underneath white inclining to brown, woolly legs, lead-coloured toes, and brown nails; or blackish-brown vulture, subfulvous beneath, with the head and neck covered by lanceolate whitish plumes, and the bill bearded beneath. This vulture is said to build in the inaccessible cavities of lofty rocks, and they sometimes assemble in small flocks about the mountainous regions of the countries which they inhabit.

14. Vultur californianus, or black vulture.—With whitish beak; head and neck unfeathered, and of a pale colour; the plumes of the collar and breast lanceolate. This bird is one of the largest of the genus, and approaches to the size of the condor.

15. Vultur auriculatus, or brown vulture.—With naked neck, skin of the ears lengthened, and pale ruff. This is the oricou of Levaillant, and it is a very large bird, measuring ten feet from one wing's end to the other: its general colour is brown, the throat being black, and covered with coarse hairs.—These birds inhabit the southern parts of Africa, and are of a gregarious nature, assembling in large flocks about the caverns of the rocky mountains, where they breed. This bird is very voracious, and when attacked or wounded defends itself with surprising strength and resolution; but it is naturally of an indolent and sluggish character.

16. Vultur Ponticerianus, or black vulture.—With nearly naked flesh-coloured head and neck, and a fleshy red caruncle down each side of the neck. It is the vautour royal de Pondicherry of Sonnerat, whence its name.—Its size is that of a very large goose, with black bill and yellow legs; and is a native of India.

17. Vultur Indicus, or brown vulture.—With naked, rufous head and neck, and black wing and tail-feathers.—It is the Indian vulture of Latham.

18. Vultur castaneus, or chesnut vulture.—With whitish downy head and neck, brownish ruff, and black wing and tail-feathers. This is the percnoptere of Buffon, and differs little from the fulvous vulture, so that it might be thought to be a mere variety of that species. This bird is remarkable for a brown spot shaped like a heart, and edged with a straight white line, situated on the breast under the ruff. It is deformed in figure, and disgusting in appearance, from a continual flux of rheum from its nostrils, and of saliva from two other holes in the bill.—According to Buffon, it is of the size of an eagle, and an inhabitant of the Alps and Pyrenees, and of the mountains of Greece.

19. Vultur Ginginianus, or white vulture.—With black wing-feathers, and grey beak and legs. The vautour gingi of Sonnerat, who says it is of the size of a turkey, and is found about the coasts of Coromandel. Its flight is strong and VULTUR.

1. V. cristatus. 2. V. papa. 3. V. gryphus.

and rapid, and its voracity insatiable: it lives on carrion and reptiles; is generally seen single and in marshy places.

20. Vultur plancus, or whitish vulture.—With transverse blackish lines, brown wings, and slightly crested black crown. This is the vultur plancus of Latham, the falco plancus of Linnæus and Gmelin, the plaintive eagle and plaintive vulture of Latham.—It is a native of Terra del Fuego.

21. Vultur cheriway.—With rose-coloured cere, yellow legs, ferruginous body, and whitish head with ferruginous crest. This is a kind of doubtful species, which may be considered either as a vulture or an eagle. Jacquin first described it, after having observed it in the island of Aruba, near the coast of Venezuela in South America.

VULTURARA, an inland town of Italy, in Naples, in the Principato Ultra; 65 miles north-east of Naples. Population 3800.

VULTURINE, adj. [vulturinus, Lat.] Belonging to a vulture.

VULTUROUS, adj. Like a vulture; voracious.—His vulturous stomach lets loose upon himself, and within few minutes more, one-half of him devours the other. Hammond.

UVULA, s. [uvula, Latin.] In anatomy, a round soft spongy body, suspended from the palate near the foramina of the nostrils over the glottis. Todd.—By an instrument bended up at one end, I got up behind the uvula. Wiseman.

UVULARIA [from the form of the uvula in the inflorescence], in Botany, a genus of the class hexandria, order monogynia, natural order of samentaceæ, lilia (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx none. Corolla: petals six, oblong-lanceolate, acute, erect, very long. Nectary an oblong hollow in the base of each petal. Stamina: filaments six, very short, widish. Anthers long, erect, shorter by half than the corolla. Pistil: germ roundish. Style three-cleft half way, longer than the stamens. Stigmas simple, reflex. Pericarp: capsule ovate-oblong, triangular, three-celled, acute. Seeds many, roundish, compressed.—Essential Character. Corolla six-petalled, erect. Nectary a hollow at the base of each petal. Filament very short.

1. Uvularia amplexifolia, or heart-leaved uvularia.—Leaves embracing, they and the stem smooth. Root perennial. Stalk annual, rising about two feet high, and sending out one or two branches from the lower part. The flowers come out singly from the bosoms of the leaves upon long slender foot-stalks; they are yellow, hang downwards, and appear at the latter end of April.—Native of Bohemia, Silesia, Saxony, Switzerland, Dauphiné and Piedmont.

2. Uvularia hirta, or hairy uvularia.—Leaves embracing, rough-haired; stem villous.—Native of Japan, near Jedo.

3. Uvularia lanceolata, or spear-leaved uvularia.—Leaves perfoliate, ovate-lanceolate, acuminate.—Native of North America.

4. Uvularia perfoliata, or perfoliate uvularia.—Leaves perfoliate ovate.—Native of North America.

5. Uvularia sessilifolia, or sessile-leaved uvularia.—Leaves sessile.—Native of Canada.

6. Uvularia cirrhosa, or tendril-leaved uvularia.—Leaves sessile, cirrhose. Stem round, jointed, striated, smooth, simple, erect.—Native of Japan.

Propagation and Culture.—These are very hardy plants, and will live in the full ground, but as the flowers have not much beauty, they are only cultivated for the sake of variety. They are increased by parting their roots, the best season for which is about Michaelmas. They may be removed every third year; but if they are removed oftener, the plants will not flower so strong. They delight in hazel loam.

UWCHLAND, a township of the United States, in Chester county, Pennsylvania. Population 1178.

UXBRIDGE, a township and chapelry of England, in the parish of Hillingdon, Middlesex. The town consists of one street, nearly a mile in length. The river Coln runs in two streams at the west end, having a new brick bridge over the main branch. That part of the town called Hillingdon-end, and which is not in the liberties of the township, still remains unpaved, but the rest is paved and lighted by virtue of an act of parliament. Near the canal is an ancient building, called the treaty-house, from its being the place where the commissioners of Charles I. and the parliament met in 1644. It is now the crown inn. In the vicinity anciently called Heiling Down, from whence the parish derived the name of Hillingdon, are the remains of a camp, supposed to have been thrown up by the Britons, against their invaders, the Romans. The town is governed by two bailiffs, two constables, and four headboroughs. Market on Thursday. Fairs 25th March, 31st July, 29th September, and 11th October, for cattle, provision, &c.; and the two latter are statute fairs; 15 miles from London.

UXBRIDGE, a post township of the United States, in Worcester county, Massachusetts; 18 miles south-south-east of Worcester, and 40 south-west of Boston. Population 1404.

UXIXAR, or UXIJAR, a small inland town in the south of Spain, in Granada, among the mountains of Alpujarras; 14 miles east-south-east of Granada.

UXMORE, a hamlet of England, in Oxfordshire, north-west of Henly-upon-Thames.

UXO, a town of the east of Spain, Valencia, with 2800 inhabitants; 32 miles north-by-east of Valencia.

UXORIOUS, adj. [uxorius, Latin.] Submissively fond of a wife; infected with connubial dotage.

That uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
Beguil'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul.

Milton.

UXORIOUSLY, adv. With fond submission to a wife.

If thou art thus uxoriously inclin'd
To bear thy bondage with a willing mind,
Prepare thy neck.

Dryden.

UXORIOUSNESS, s. Connubial dotage; fond submission to a wife.

Courage may be chang'd
To brutal force, and tender nuptial love
To mean uxoriousness.

Downman.

UYA, a small pasture island in Shetland, which covers a safe harbour of the same name on the north coast of the Mainland.

UYA, a small island in Shetland, about a square mile in extent, lying on the south coast of the island of Unst, between which is the safe and commodious harbour called Uya sound. It is uninhabited, but affords good pasture for sheep and black cattle.

UYTEGRA, a town of European Russia, in the government of Olonetz, on the river Vytegra. It has nearly 2000 inhabitants.

UZEL, a small town in the north-west of France, in Brittany, department of the Cotes du Nord; 9 miles north-west of Loudeac, and 18 south-east of St. Brieux.

UZERCHE, a small town in the interior of France, department of the Correze; 15 miles north-west of Tulle, and 20 north of Brives.

UZES, a town in the south-east of France, the capital of an arrondissement in the department of the Gard; 12 miles north of Nismes, and 20 west of Avignon.

UZESTE, a small town in the south-west of France, department of the Gironde, with 1000 inhabitants.

UZLIEKS, a numerous race of Tartars, who have now conquered and occupied the greater part of Independent Tartary.

UZNACH, a small town in the north-east of Switzerland, the chief place of a district in the canton of St. Gall, not far from the eastern extremity of the lake of Zurich; 23 miles south-east of Zurich.

UZWEIL UPPER, a large village in the north-east of Switzerland, in the Canton of St. Gall and the Lower Toggenburg; 13 miles west of St. Gall, on the road to Zurich.

W A C

W is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Eolic f. Both the form and sound are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin.—W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel, for u, view; strew: the sound of w consonant, if it be a consonant, is uniform.

WAABE, a river of Germany, in the duchy of Brunswick, which falls into the Ocker.

WAACKHAUSEN, a village of Hanover, in the duchy of Bremen, near the river Hamme.

WAAG, a large river of the west of Hungary, which rises at the foot of the lofty mountain of Krivan, in the palatinate of Lyptau, flows through the palatinates of Thurotz, Trentschin, and Neutra, and falls into the Danube six miles below Comorn.

WAAG, the bay on the west coast of Norway, on which is the town of Bergen.

WAAGOE, one of the Faroe islands, to the west of Stromoe, belonging to Denmark.

WAALIA, a collection of villages on the top of a hill in Abyssinia, between Gondar and Tcherkin.

WAALWYK, a town of the Netherlands, in North Brabant, with 1400 inhabitants; 10 miles west of Bois le Duc.

WAARSCHOOT, an inland town of the Netherlands, in East Flanders; 9 miles north-west of Ghent. Population 5300.

WAATSCH, or VAZHE, a small town of Austrian Illyria, in Carniola, situated on a lofty hill; 10 miles east-north-east of Laybach.

WABASH, a river of the United States, in Indiana, which waters the middle and western parts of the state, and flows into the Ohio, 30 miles above Cumberland river.

WABASH, LITTLE, a river of the United States, in Indiana, which runs south-east into the Wabash, a few miles above the Ohio.

WABBERTHWAITE, a parish of England, in Cumberland, near Ravenglass.

To WA'BBLE, v. n. [A low barbarous word.] To move from side to side; to change direction.—If in your work you find it wabble; that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up. Moxon.

WABISAPENGUN, a river of the United States, in Louisiana, which runs into the Mississippi. Lat. 41. 40. N.

WABISINEKAN, a river of the United States, in the Missouri territory, which runs into the Mississippi above the Missouri, on the eastern branch.

WABUSKAGAMA, a river of Canada, which runs into the Saguenay. Lat. 48. 20. N. long. 70. 18. W.

WACAATCHA, a river of Louisiana, in the district of Opelousas, which falls into the Sabine.

WACHAS, a lake of the United States, in Louisiana, which lies to the west of the Mississippi; and 22 miles from New Orleans.

WACHENDEN, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Biddenden, county of Kent.

WACHENDORFIA [so named by Burman in honour of Everh. Joh. Van Wachendorf, professor of Botany at Utrecht], in Botany, a genus of the class triandria, order monogynia, natural order of ensatæ, irides (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: spathes two-valved. Corolla: six-petalled, unequal; petals oblong; the three upper ones more erect, three lower spreading. Nectary of two bristles at the inner sides of the upper petal. Stamina: filaments three, filiform, declined, shorter than the corolla. Anthers incumbent. Pistil: germ superior, roundish, three-cornered. Style filiform, declined. Stigma simple. Pericarp: capsule subovate, three-sided, obtuse, three-celled, three-valved. Seeds solitary, rough-haired.—Essential Character. Corolla six-petalled, unequal, inferior. Capsule three-celled, superior.

W.

W A C

1. Wachendorfia thyrsiflora, or simple-stalked Wachendorfia.—Scape almost simple, panicle contracted, leaves ensiform, five-nerved, plaited smooth. Root thick, tuberous, reed-like, of a deep-red colour, sending out many perpendicular fibres of the same colour, and spreading into several offsets.

2. Wachendorfia paniculata, or panicled Wachendorfia.—Scape many-clustered, panicle spreading, leaves ensiform, three-nerved, plaited smooth. Plant when in flower a foot high. Root perennial, a little creeping; furnished with oblong cylindrical and nearly perpendicular tubercles.

3. Wachendorfia hirsuta, or hairy Wachendorfia.—Scape many-clustered, panicle spreading, leaves ensiform, three-nerved, plaited villose. This seems chiefly to differ from the preceding in having hairy leaves.

4. Wachendorfia tenella, or delicate Wachendorfia.—Scape many-clustered, panicle spreading, leaves linear, three-nerved, smooth.

5. Wachendorfia graminea, or grass-leaved Wachendorfia.—Scape many-clustered, panicle spreading, leaves ensiform, channelled, smooth.—All these are natives of the Cape of Good Hope.

Propagation and Culture.—These plants may be increased by offsets, which are sent out from the main head, after the same manner as some of the flag-leaved Irises. Take them off at the end of August or the beginning of September, and plant them in pots filled with soft loamy earth mixed with a little sea sand; and if the season prove hot and dry, place the pots where they may have only the morning sun, until the offsets have put out new roots; then they may be placed in a sheltered situation, where they may enjoy the full sun. Here they may remain until there is danger of frosty mornings: then they should be placed in a frame with Ixias, &c., and treated in the manner directed for them.

WACHENHEIM, a small but pleasant town of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, at the foot of the Hartz mountain; 12 miles west of Manheim.

WACHOVIA, or DOBBS' PARISH, a tract of land in the United States, in North Carolina. It contains the villages of Salem, Bethany, and Bethabara.

WACHSHURST, or WAGSHURST, a village of Germany, in Baden; 10 miles east-by-north of Strasburg.

WACHTENDONK, a walled town of Prussian Westphalia, on the river Niers; 20 miles north-west of Dusseldorf. Population 1400.

WACHTERSBACH, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, on the Kinzig; 20 miles east-by-north of Hanau. Population 1100.

WACHUSETT, a mountain of the United States, in Princeton, Massachusetts, about 2000 feet above the level of the sea.

WACKE, or WACKEN, a name given to a rock nearly allied to basalt, and which may properly be regarded as a more soft and earthy variety of the latter rock: it passes both into basalt and green-stone.—See MINERALOGY.

WACKE, GREY, or Grey Wacke, or Waccé, a name given by later geologists to a very extensive series of rocks, the members of which differ greatly from each other in composition, position, structure, and appearance; indeed the name has been applied so indefinitely, that it has occasioned much confusion. See MINERALOGY.

WACKEN, WAKKEN, an inland town of West Flanders, near the river Lys, with 2200 inhabitants; 16 miles south-west of Ghent.

WACKERFIELD, a township of England, county of Durham, north-east of Staindrop.

WACTON, a parish of England, county of Hereford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west-by-west of Bromyard.

WACTON, a parish of England, in the county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-west-by-south of St. Mary Stratton.

WAD, s. [peob, hay, Saxon.] A bundle of straw or other loose matter thrust close together.—Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value. Woodward. [Sax. pad, sandya, nigrica fabrilis. Ray.]—Any thing crammed or stuffed in; as tow into a gun or cannon. [Icel. vad, vod, pannus propriè rudis, ad togas suffarciendas. Lye.]—The carved work [of the ship] is as rotten as touchwood, and will take fire even with a wad. Maydman.—Old English for woad; which see. Barret.

WADBOROUGH, a hamlet of England, county of Worcester; 3 miles from Pershore.

WADDESDON, a parish of England, in Buckinghamshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west-by-west of Aylesbury. Population 1020.

WADDING, s. [from vad, Icel.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.

WADDINGHAM, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 8 miles south-by-west of Glanford Bridge.

WADDINGSVEEN, NORTH and SOUTH, two adjoining villages of the Netherlands, in South Holland; 10 miles south-east of Leyden.

WADDINGTON, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 4 miles south of Lincoln. Population 727.

WADDINGTON, a township of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situated on the river Ribble, near Bowland Forest; 19 miles west-south-west of Skipton. Population 1088.

WADDINGWORTH, a parish of England, county of Lincoln; 5 miles west-by-north of Horncastle.

To WADDLE, v. n. [wagghelen, Dutch, to waggle; wedeln, Germ., or caudam motitare, to shake the tail as a beast.] To shake in walking from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.—She could have run and waddled all about. Shakspeare.

WADDON, EAST and WEST, two small hamlets of England, in the parish of Abbotsbury, Dorsetshire.

To WADE, v. n. [from vadam, Latin, pronounced vadam.]—To walk through the waters; to pass water without swimming.—We'll wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood. Shakspeare.—To pass difficultly and laboriously.

The wrathful God then plunges from above,
And where in thickest waves the sparkles drove,
There lights, and wades through fumes, and gropes his way,
Half sing'd, half stiff'd. Dryden.

WADE'S POINT, a cape of the United States, on the coast of North Carolina. Lat. 36. 7. N. long. 76. 20. W.

WADEIJ, a town of Yemen, in Arabia; 80 miles south-south-west of Saade.

WADELS, a river of England and Wales, which rises in Radnorshire; but falls into the Lug, near Combe, in Herefordshire; about three miles east of Presteign.

WADENHOE, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; on the river Nen; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-by-east of Thrapston.

WADENSCHWEIL, a town of Switzerland, on the south side of the lake of Zurich. It is well built, and contains 3500 inhabitants; 9 miles south of Zurich.

WADERN, a town of the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine; 18 miles east-south-east of Treves.

WADERO, a small island on the west coast of Sweden, in the North sea. Lat. 56. 24. N. long. 12. 30. E.

WADESBOROUGH, a post township of the United States, and capital of Anson county, North Carolina; 70 miles south-south-east of Salisbury, and 76 west of Fayetteville.

WADEY, a country of Central Africa, situated to the west of Fezzan, and east of Fitre and Begarmee.

WADEY ABASSI, a small river of Arabia, which falls into the Red sea; 10 miles south-south-east of Hodeida.

WADEY EL ARKIK, a small river of Arabia, which waters the city of Medina.

WADEY ELMAHAN, a small river of Arabia, which loses itself in the sands, unless in the west season, when it reaches the Red sea; 25 miles south-south-east of Hodeida.

WADEY FARAN, a small river of Arabia, which falls into the Red sea; 25 miles north-west of Tor.

WADEY FATIMA, a small river of Upper Egypt, which runs to the north-west of Mecca.

WADEY GAMUS, or VALLEY OF BUFFALOES, a valley of Egypt, on the eastern side of the Nile.

WADEY EL KEBIR, a small river of Arabia, which, in rainy seasons, reaches the Red sea, near Mocha.

WADEY EL LATORN, a watering place on the borders of the Lybian desert, on the caravan route between Cairo and Mourzouk.

WADEY ZEBID, a river of Arabia, which, in a particular season overflows and fertilizes its banks. It passes by Zebid, and finally loses itself in the sands.

WADHAM ISLANDS, a cluster of small islands near the north-east of Newfoundland. Lat. 49. 57. N. long. 53. 37. W.

WADHURST, a parish of England, in the county of Sussex; 5 miles from Tunbridge Wells. Population 1815.

WADING (Luke), an Irish ecclesiastic, more distinguished for probity and piety than for discrimination of judgment, resided at Rome, where he died in the year 1655. His works, in which he has occasionally intermixed fabulous relations, are "Annals of his Order," which was that of St. Francis, in 8 vols. folio, continued by other authors till they amounted to 17 vols. folio; and a "Bibliotheca of Writers of the Franciscan Order," 1630, folio, held in considerable estimation. Moreri.

WADING RIVER, a village of the United States, in Riverhead, New York.

WADJO, or WAJU, a state of confederacy in the island of Celebes, situated to the north of the Buggess territories, named Boni.

WADMELAW, a river of the United States, in South Carolina, which separates the island of St. John from the continent.

WADMELAW, a small island of the United States, on the coast of South Carolina, which communicates with St. John's island by means of a bridge.

WADON, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Croydon, county of Surrey.

WADOWICE, a small town of Austrian Poland, in the circle of Myslenice, on the river Skawa.

WADREAG, a district of Sahara, to the south of Algiers, on which it depends. It contains neither fountains nor rivulets: but water is uniformly obtained, by digging to the depth of from 100 to 200 fathoms. This is called by the natives the Sea under ground.

WADSETT, a term applied to an ancient sort of tenure or lease of land, in the Highland parts of Scotland. Wadsetts were, at a former period, frequent and numerous there; but they have now been mostly resumed, the price being paid up so soon as the term of redemption arrived. These wadsetts were commonly, it is said, granted to the younger sons and near relations of the great barons, and for these reasons:—1st, Being more attached to the head of the tribe than any other description of men, they were appointed the officers of the clan, when an expedition was undertaken; 2d, The scarcity of money made it more convenient for the needy nobility or chieftains to borrow or raise money in this way than in any other, or to give their children a patrimony, when about to settle in life; and 3d, When every man's occupation cupation was war, or farming and grazing, before the spirit of adventure in going abroad to acquire wealth was known, the youth remained at home, on wadsetts or leases of ground at a moderate rent. In this manner, it is said, a clan, during the patriarchal no less than the feudal system or state, were in fact a battalion of armed men, living closely together, and united by the most powerful ties of consanguinity and interest. Accordingly, it is said, we find the Highland tribes settled in clusters, in the same valley or strath, unmixed with any other people; nor was it at one period, it is thought, very safe for a stranger to attempt settling amongst them.

WADSTENA, or WADSTEIN, a town of Sweden, in East Gothland, situated on the lake of Wetter; 20 miles west of Linköping. Lat. 58. 28. 5. N. long. 14. 52. 45. E.

WADSWORTH, a township of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Halifax. Population 3473.

WADWORTH, a parish of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Doncaster. Population 467.

WA'FER, s. [wafel, Dutch.] A thin cake.

Wife, make us a dinner; spare flesh, neither corn;
Make wafers and cakes, for our sheepe must be shorne.

Tusser.

The bread given in the eucharist by the Romanists.—That the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once; that the whole body should lie hid in a little thin wafers; yet so, that the members thereof should not one run into another, but continue distinct, and have an order agreeable to a man's body, it doth exceed reason. Bp. Hall.—Paste made to close letters.

Wafers are made by mixing fine flour with glair of eggs, isinglass, and a little yeast, and beating the mass into a paste; then spreading it when thinned with gum-water, on even tin plates, and drying it in a stove, and cutting it for use. The different colours may be given by tinging the paste with brazil or vermillion for red; indigo, or verditer, &c., for blue; saffron, turmeric, or gamboge, &c., for yellow, &c.

To WAFT, v. a. preter. wafted, or perhaps waft; particip. passive wafted, or waft. [probably from wave. Johnson.—Serenius refers the word to veifa, Icel., wefla, Sueth. vibrare.]—To carry through the air, or on the water.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakspeare.

To buoy; to make float; to hinder from sinking.—Whether cripples, who have lost their thighs, will not sink but float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment. Brown.—To beckon; to inform by a sign of any thing moving.—But soft! who wafts us yonder? Shakspeare.—To turn.

Even now I met him
With customary compliment; when he Wafting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me. Shakspeare.

To WAFT, v. n. To float.

It wafted nearer yet, and then she knew,
That what before she but surmis'd, was true. Dryden.

WAFT, s. A floating body.

From the bellowing east oft the whirlwind's wing
Sweeps up the burthen of whole wintry plains,
In one wide waft. Thomson.

Motion of a streamer. Used as a token or mean of information at sea.

WAFTAGE, s. Carriage by water or air. Not in use.

What ship of Epidamnum stays for me? —
—A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage. Shakspeare.

WA'FTER, s. A passage boat.—One who wafts or conveys.

O Charon, Charon,
Thè wafter of the souls to bliss or bane. Beaum. and Fl.

WAF'IB, a small low island in the Eastern seas, on the west coast of the island of Waygiou, covered with trees to the water's edge.

WAFTURE, s. The act of waving.

You answer'd not;
But with an angry wafture of your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you. Shakspeare.

WAFWA, a small low island in the Eastern seas, on the west coast of the island of Waygiou, covered with trees.

To WAG, v. a. [pagian, Saxon; waggen, Dutch.] To move lightly; to shake slightly.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven. Shakspeare.

To WAG, v. n. To be in quick or ludicrous motion.

Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews, both short and tall;
'Tis merry in hall, where beards wag all. Shakspeare.

To go; to pack off.—I will provoke him fo't, or let him wag. Shakspeare.—To be moved.

Her charms she mutter'd o'er;
And yet the resty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more:
I wept for woe. Dryden.

WAG, s. [paegan, Saxon, to cheat.] Any one ludicrously mischievous; a merry droll.—Was not my lord the verier wag o' th' two. Shakspeare.

WAGE, s. The plural wages is now only used. [wegen, or wagen, German. Johnson.—A corruption of the Su. Goth. wad, a pledge; whence the old Engl. word wad, in the same sense.—Pay given for service.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakspeare.

Gage; pledge.
But th' elfin knight, which ought that warlike wage,
Disdain'd to loose the meed he wonne in fray. Spenser.

To WAGE, v. a. [waegen, German, to attempt any thing dangerous.] To attempt; to venture.

We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shakspeare.

To make; to carry on. Applied to war.
Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd!
No; rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air,
To be a comrade with the wolf. Shakspeare.

[From wage, wages.] To set to hire. Not in use.

Thou must wage
Thy works for wealth, and life for gold engage. Spenser.

To take to hire; to hire for pay; for hold in pay; to employ for wages. Obsolete.

I seem'd his follower, not partner; and
He wag'd me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary. Shakspeare.

[In law.] When an action of debt is brought against one as for money or chattles, left or lent, the defendant may wage his law; that is, swear, and certain persons with him, that he owes nothing to the plaintiff in manner as he hath declared. The offer to make the oath is called wager of law; and when it is accomplished, it is called the making or doing of law. Blount.

WAGENAAR (John), a Dutch writer, distinguished by his moral qualities as well as literary acquirements, was born born in 1709, at Amsterdam, of which he was appointed historiographer in 1758. He died in 1773. His principal work, which is reckoned one of the chief ornaments of Dutch literature for depth of research and purity of style, is a "History of Holland from the earliest Period till 1751," in 21 vols. 8vo.; of which a second edition with engravings, both maps and portraits, was printed at Amsterdam in 1752.—1759. Among his other performances are enumerated, "An Historical Description of the City of Amsterdam," Amst. 1760, 3 vols. folio; "The Character of John De Witt placed in its true Light;" and "Historical and Political Miscellanies," Amst. 8vo. 1776. Gen. Biog.

WAGENDRUSSEL, a village of Hungary, on the Golnitz; 5 miles south of Kapsdorf.

WAGENINGEN, an inland town of the Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, situated in a marshy district on the north side of the Leck, a branch of the Rhine; 10 miles west of Arnheim. Lat. 51. 57. N. long. 5. 46. E.

WAGENSEIL (John Christopher), was born at Nuremberg, in 1633, and having studied at several universities, he became tutor to the son of a nobleman at Altdorf, and accompanied him in his travels through a great part of Europe. At Turin he discovered in the cabinet of the duke of Savoy the famous Isiac Table, which had been lost ever since the pillage of the duke of Mantua's cabinet. In the progress of his life he acquired a high degree of reputation, and was distinguished among other foreign literary persons by the munificence of Lewis XIV. Having been honoured with the degree of LL.D. at Orleans, he became professor of law and history in the university of Altdorf, in 1667, and afterwards was advanced to the chair of Oriental languages, and the station of public librarian. He was also a member of the academies at Turin and Padua; and died at Altdorf, at the age of 72, in the year 1705. The most distinguished of his writings are, "A Dissertation on a supposed Fragment of Petronius;" "Fasciculus Opusculorum variorum Historico-rum et Philologicorum;" "Tela ignea Satanæ," 2 vols. 4to., being a collection, with a refutation, of some of the principal Jewish works against Christianity; "Dissertatio de Monetali veterum Romanorum;" "Commentatio de Civitate Norimburgensi;" and "Dissertatio de Academiis." He had a daughter, named Helen-Sibilla, celebrated for her knowledge of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages. Moreri.

W'AGER, s. A bett; any thing pleaded upon a chance or performance.

Full fast she fled, ne ever look'd behind;
As if her life upon the wager lay.

Spenser.

Subject on which betts are laid.—The sea strove with the winds which should be louder; and the shrouds of the ship with a ghastful noise to them that were in it, witnessed that their ruin was the wager of the other's contention. Sidney.—[In law.] An offer to make oath.—The next species of trial is still in force, if the parties choose to abide by it. I mean the trial by wager of battle. Blackstone.—Multiplication of actions upon the case were rare formerly, and there by wager of law outsted, which discouraged many suits. Hale.

To WA'GER, v. a. To lay; to pledge as a bett; to pledge upon some casualty or performance.—Worthy to wager heart with mine, accept it. Beaum. and Fl.

To WA'GER, v. n. To offer a wager.—'Twas merry when you wager'd on your angling. Shakspeare.

WAGER'S STRAITS or RIVER, a river of North America, which empties itself into Hudson's bay. Lat. 65. 8. N. long. 87. W.

WA'GERER, s. One who bets; one who wagers.—Desire your wagerer from me to be more cautious in determining on such matters, and not to venture the loss of his money and credit with so much odds against him. Swift.

WA'GES, s. See WAGE.

WAGGERY, s. Mischievous merriment; roguish trick; sarcastical gaiety.—'Tis not the waggeries or cheats practised among school-boys, that make an able man; but the principles of justice, generosity, and sobriety. Locke.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1654.

WA'GGISH, adj. Knavishly merry; merrily mischievous; frolicsome.

Change fear and niceness,
The handmaids of all women, or, more truly,
Woman its pretty self, to waggish courage. Shakspeare.

WA'GGISHLY, adv. In a waggish manner.—Now we are in private, let's wanton it a little, and talk waggishly. B. Jonson.

WA'GGISHNESS, s. Merry mischief.—A Christian boy in Constantinople had like to have been stoned for gaggling, in a waggishness, a long-billed fowl. Bacon.

To WA'GGLE, v. n. [wagghelen, Dutch.] To waddle; to move from side to side.—Why do you go nodding and wagging so, as if hip shot? says the goose to her gosse-ling. L'Estrange.

WAGHEN, or WAWN, a parish of England, in the East Riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-east-by-east of Beverley.

WAGNAGUR, a town of Hindostan, province of Gujerat, situated on the sea coast of the peninsula, belonging to an independent chief. Lat. 21. 3. N. long. 71. 58. E.

WA'GON, or WAGGON, s. [pægen, Sax. waeghens, Dutch; wagn, Icelandic. Wagon is strictly conformable to the etymology; but waggon is the prevailing form.] A heavy carriage for burthens.—The Hungarian tents were enclosed round with *waggon*s, one chained to another. Knowles.—A chariot. Not in use.

Then to her waggon she betakes,
And with her bears the witch.

Spenser.

WA'GGON-WAY, s. [A provincial term.] A road, more usually termed a rail-road.

Since the article RAIL-ROAD was written, the following communication has been sent to us; and since it comprehends the account of a very important improvement in rail-road-making, we think proper to insert it here under the old and original, though not most elegant and generally adopted title.

Aug. 7th, 1826.—A trial was made at Bedlington Iron Works, of the strength of the Malleable Iron Patent Railway Bars, which produced the following results:—

A rail 9 feet long, weighing 16lbs. per single yard, supported at each end of the centre yard, and the steel-yard attached to the swell or middle of that yard, sprung $\frac{1}{4}$ of an inch, when 3.56 lbs. weights were put on equal to 42cwt.; and when they were removed, returned to the straight line. A weight of 1cwt. 3qrs. 11lbs. was then suspended, equal to 51 $\frac{3}{4}$ cwt., with which the rail sprung $\frac{2}{8}$ of an inch, and on their being removed again, resumed the straight line. A weight of 2cwt., was next suspended, equal to 56cwt., and the rail sprung $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch, and on its being removed, the rail became permanently bent $\frac{1}{4}$ of an inch.

If the load was divided upon 4 wheels, the rails would require 11 ton 4 cwt. to bend them permanently, or would bear as per No. 2 Trial, 10 ton 7 cwt. without bending. But if the weight of a 4-wheel coal-waggon in motion, is borne by the two opposite rails, and upon one fore and one hind wheel, then these rails will bear 5 ton 3cwt. 2 qrs.: and even allowing one-half of this for the additional momentum, arising from the velocity with which the waggon travel, the rails appear strong enough to carry a waggon of 12cwt. containing 40 cwt. coals. The 16 lbs. rails have been in use at the colliery attached to the works, four years, and have not at all bent by the waggon passing over them; the waggon weighing 21 cwt., and containing 45 cwt. of coals, making a gross weight of 66 cwt.

Bedlington Iron Works,
6th Dec. 1824.

Trial of Malleable Iron Rails.

Present:

Messrs. Wood, Langridge, Buhmshaw, Biddulph, jun., and Adamson.

1st Rail.—9 feet long, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ inch broad at the top, depth in the middle, 3 $\frac{1}{8}$ inches, and thickness $\frac{3}{4}$ inch, depth at the bearings 2 $\frac{1}{8}$ inches, and thickness $\frac{5}{8}$ inch, weight 28 lbs. per yard:

5 R

Supported

Supported at 3 feet distance, upon chairs
 $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches broad.

1st. Two 56 weights upon a steel- yard, 4lbs. equal to 1 cwt. }
	Ton.	Cwt.	Qrs.
	Equal to 1	8	0	deflexion .06 in.
2d. Four 56 weights =	2	16	0	ditto .11 in.
3d. Six 56 ditto =	4	4	0	ditto .2 in.
4th. Eight 56 ditto =	5	12	0	ditto .35 in.
5th. Nine 56 ditto =	6	6	0	ditto .47 in.
6th. Nine 56 ditto } and 21lbs. }	=	6	11	1 ditto .57 in.

After these weights were removed from the end of the steel-yard, the rail returned to its original straight line.

7th. Ten 56 weights =	Ton.	Cwt.	Qrs.
	7	0	0	deflexion .93 in.

When these weights were removed, the rail returned nearly to a straight line, but not entirely so; the bend was however so small, that it could not be measured accurately.

8th. Eleven 56 ditto =	Ton.	Cwt.	Qrs.
	7	14	0	deflexion .22 ins.

When these were removed, the rail remained bent .24 inches.

2d Rail.—3 feet long—dimensions same as the 9 feet rail.

	Ton.	Cwt.	Qrs.
1st. Eight 56 weights =	5	12	0	} bent and re- turned again to straight lines.
2d. Nine 56 ditto } and 7lbs. }	=	6	7
3d. Ten 56 ditto =	7	0	0	} bent and re- mained bent about $\frac{1}{8}$ inch.

In testimonium veritatis,
 (Signed) "Michael Langridge,
 John Buhmshaw,
 John Biddulph, jun."

WAGONAGE, s. Money paid for carriage in a waggon.
 WAGONER, s. One who drives a waggon..

By this, the northern wagoner had set
 His sevenfold team behind the steadfast star,
 That was in ocean waves yet never wet.

Spenser.

WAGRAM, a village of Germany, in Lower Austria, on the river Rusbach, celebrated for the great battle which here took place between the Austrians and the French, in July 1809; 16 miles north-east of Vienna.

WAGSTADT, or BLOWES, a small town of Austrian Silesia; 17 miles south-by-east of Troppau.

WAGTAIL, s. [motacilla, Latin.] A bird.—Spare my grey beard, you wagtail! Shakspeare.

WAGUR, a district of Hindostan, province of Cutch, of which it forms the eastern boundary. The exterior is elevated and woody, and intersected by a number of small streams, which fall into the Runn. The inhabitants are Mahometans, and noted for their predatory habits.

WAHABEES, or WAHABIES, appellations that distinguish a formidable body of warlike sectaries, who sprung up in Arabia about a century ago, commenced their career as reformers of the Mahometan religion, and made extensive migrations and conquests. According to Niebuhr, the founder of this sect, was one Abd ul Wehhab, (Abdoul-wehhab, or Ubdool Wahab,) a native of Aijæne (Ujuna), a town in El Ared (Ool Urud), one of the two districts of Nedsjed, in Arabia. This man, in his youth, is said to have studied at home (or at Medina) those sciences which are chiefly cultivated in Arabia; he afterwards spent some time at Bosra, and made several journeys to Bagdad, and through Persia. After his return to his native place, says Niebuhr, he began to propagate his opinions among his countrymen, and succeeded in converting several independent schiecks, whose subjects became followers of this new prophet. Those schiecks, who had before been in a state of hostility against one another, were reconciled by the mediation of Abd ul Wehhab, and agreed for the future to undertake no enterprise without the advice of their apostle. In process of time, Abd ul Wehhab reduced great part of El Ared; and being afterwards joined by schieck Mecrami, of Nedsjeran, who was also the head of a particular sect, he, or rather his son Mahomet, as he succeeded his father, was enabled to reduce the Sunnite schiecks, and as they acted, in concert, to subdue many of their neighbours. After the death of Abd ul Wehhab, his son retained the same authority, prosecuted his father's views, and sustained the supreme ecclesiastical character in El Ared.

As to the religious doctrine taught by Abd ul Wehhab, and adopted by his followers, Niebuhr states, that he believed God to be the only object of worship and invocation, and the creator and governor of this world. He forbade the invocation of saints, and so much as the mention of Mahomet, or any other prophet, in prayer, as practices savouring of idolatry. He considered Mahomet, Jesus Christ, Moses, and many others, respected by the Sunnites under the character of prophets, as merely great men, whose history might be perused with improvement; at the same time denying that any book had ever been written by divine inspiration, or brought down from heaven by the angel Gabriel. He also forbade, as a crime against Providence, the making of vows, in the manner of the Sunnites with a view of obtaining deliverance from danger. This new religion of Abd ul Wehhab, according to the account given of it by the schiecks, which, however, in some respects, differs from the statement of the Sunnites, may be regarded as a reformation of Mahometanism, proposing to reduce it to great purity. Experience must decide whether a religion, so stripped of every thing that might serve to strike the senses, can long maintain its ground among a people so rude and ignorant as the Arabs. Abd ul Wehhab, however, thought it necessary to impose some religious observances on his followers; and interdicted the use of tobacco, opium, and coffee; and he enacted a variety of civil regulations, with regard to the collection and distribution of the revenues.

Wehhab's first proselyte of any importance is said to have been Ibn Saaoud, a prince of certain tribes inhabiting the country to the east of Medina; and this prince took occasion, in the dissemination of his new doctrine, to attack and subjugate the neighbouring tribes. His successor, or, as some say, coadjutor, was Abdelaaziz (Ubdool Uzeez), who, prosecuting his system, carried in one hand his creed of reform, and his sword in the other; and having made himself master of the interior of Arabia, extended his military excursions as far as the vicinity of Bagdad; and in the year 1801, totally destroyed by fire the town of Imam Hossein, near this capital. The men and male children were all put to the sword; while a Wehhabite doctor, from the top of a tower, excited the massacre, by calling on the soldiers to kill "all the infidels who gave companions to God." In 1802, Mecca was taken after a trifling opposition by Saaoud, the son of Abdelaaziz, who razed to the ground all the mosques and chapels consecrated to the prophet or his family. This young warrior succeeded to the command of the Wehhabis the following year, on the assassination of his father; and, in 1804, made himself master of Medina, which had before resisted his arms. The conquest of Arabia was now nearly completed; and the sultan Saaoud became a formidable neighbour to the surrounding pachas of Bagdad, Damascus, and Egypt.

The constitution of this new sovereignty was singular in its kind. The town of Draa'ya, among the deserts, 390 miles to the east of Medina, formed a sort of capital, or centre, of the governments of the Wahhabees. The various tribes of Arabs, scattered widely in tents and barracks over this vast extent of country, yielded obedience, both civil and military, to the sultan Saaoud. The tenth of their flocks and fruits was paid in tribute; an order from the sultan rapidly assembled a multitude of armed men, subsisting themselves at their own expense, totally unorganized as soldiers, but deriving force from their numbers—from their active spirit as sectaries—and from

from the large plunder they obtained in their military expeditions. Descending frequently from their desert recesses upon the coast of the Red sea, they arrested the caravans, and levied contributions upon the pilgrims journeying to Mecca and Medina. In the year 1807, when Ali Bey visited Mecca, the Wehhabis were in their greatest power. Their army, which he saw encamped in the vicinity of the sacred mount of Ararat, he estimates at 45,000 men, a large proportion of the number mounted on camels and dromedaries, and with a train of a thousand camels attached to the different chiefs of the army. He describes with some spirit the appearance of another body of Wehhabis, whom he saw entering Mecca, to take possession of the city, and fulfil the duties of their own pilgrimage: a multitude of copper-coloured men, who rushed impetuously into the place, their only covering a narrow girdle round their waist, to which was hung a khanjeer, or large knife, each one carrying besides a firelock on his shoulder. Their devotions were of the most tumultuous kind; the lamps surrounding the sacred kaaba were broken by their guns; and the ropes and buckets of the well of Zemzem destroyed in their eagerness to reach the holy water. All the other pilgrims quitted their more decorous ceremonies, till the Wahhabees, having satisfied their zeal, and paid their alms to the well in gunpowder and coffee, befook themselves to the streets, where, in conformity with the law of Abd ul Wehhab, their heads were all closely shaved by the barbers of Mecca. The sultan Saoud, whom Ali Bey saw at Arafat, was almost as naked as his subjects, distinguished chiefly by the green standard carried before him, with the characters, "La illahâ illa Allah,"—"there is no other God but God," embroidered upon it.

With respect to their religious tenets, the Wehhabis may be described, generally, as Deists of the Mohammedan church. Abd ul Wehhab, while acknowledging fully the authority of the koran, professed obedience only to the literal text of this book; rejecting all the additions of the imams and doctors of law, and condemning various superstitions which had sullied the purity of the faith. He forbade all devotion to the person of the prophet, and pilgrimage to his tomb at Medina; regarding him simply as a man charged with a divine mission; which being completed, he became again an ordinary mortal. The story of Mahomet's ascent to Paradise on El Borak, and the horse of the angel Gabriel, he wholly denied; together with a host of other miraculous events, with which history has celebrated the life of the prophet. The Wahhabees simply say "Mohammed," instead of "Our Lord Mohammed," according to the usage of other Mussulmen. They have equally rejected the indirect worship of certain saints, who had been gradually insinuated into the Mussulman calendar, destroying the chapels and tombs which had been consecrated to them. The grand doctrine of the sect, and what they regard as the basis of true Islamism, is the unity of God. This forms their cry when they go to war, and justifies to themselves the violences they commit upon the corrupters of the faith. The Mussulmen who deviate from this simple principle of belief they call Mouschrikins, or schismatics; making a distinction between this term and that of Cossar, or idolaters.

As it was the general custom of Mussulmen to shave the head, with the exception of one tuft of hair, the law of the Wehhabis forbade the tuft, and enjoined the shaving of the whole head. Their founder also prohibited not only the use of tobacco, but that of silk and the precious metals. Their religious services are performed underneath the open sky, and not below the roofing of a mosque. Notwithstanding these changes, however, and the general spirit of their doctrine, they still retain certain superstitions, common to other Mussulmen. While forbidden to make some pilgrimages, others are permitted to them. They kiss the stone of the Kaaba, drink of the water of Zemzem, and throw stones against the pillar said to have been built by the devil at Mina.

The pacha of Egypt, with a view of employing his troops, amounting, at this time, to 15,000 men, and in order to gain favour with the Porte, and reputation among true Mussulmen, determined to liberate the holy city and shrine from the power of these heretics, and declared war against them. In the vigorous prosecution of it, his army was transported to the Arabian coasts; and the men and horses composing it, were supplied with provisions, carried up the Nile as far as Kenneah, thence transported across the desert on camels to Cosseir, and shipped for Jambo, or some other port on the eastern coast of the Red sea. Several armed vessels also were built at Alexandria, taken to pieces, and conveyed on the backs of camels to Suez, where they found a small fleet, which greatly aided his military operations on the Arabian coast. The pacha, it is said, received some arms from the English; but permission was refused, as we are told by Mr. Legh, to his request that his vessels might go round the Cape of Good Hope, to enter into the Red sea. The Wahhabees, on the other hand, are reported to have received assistance from the French government, conveyed through the Isle of France, and with the policy of creating a French interest in Arabia, which might be subservient to their pretensions in the East.

The campaign of the pacha of Egypt against the Wehhabis, in 1812, had been unsuccessful; and his army suffered very greatly in an engagement at Jedda, the port of Mecca on the adjoining coast. He redoubled, however, his exertions; organized new troops; and, early in the spring of 1813, brought the war to a triumphant termination. The Wehhabis were driven with loss from the coast; Mecca, Medina, and Jedda, were all retaken, and restored again to the authority of the Porte, and to the worship of the true believers. Mohammed Ali sent his youngest son, Ismael-Pacha, to Constantinople, to lay the keys of Mecca at the feet of the grand signior.

WAHAL, or WAAL, a great river of the Netherlands, or rather branch of the Rhine, which leaves that river at Schenkenschans, and joins the Maese at the small island of Voorn. Separating afterwards from the Maese, the Wahal washes the north side of the island of Bommelwaert, and joins the Maese again at Worcum, after which they form one great river, or rather arm of the sea, called the Merwe or Maese.

WAHLAPGIS-SQUEGAMOOK, a lake of the United States, in Maine, between Appahmoojeene-Gamook and Bungah-Quohem lakes.

WAHI, a town of Hindostan, province of Bejapoor, long the residence of an illustrious Mahratia family named Rastia, notwithstanding which the Mahometan inhabitants had the extraordinary privilege in a Hindoo country, of killing kine, and exposing the beef for sale in the market. It is situated about 50 miles south of Poonah.

WAHLSTADT, a large village of Prussian Silesia; 5 miles east-south-east of Liegnitz.

WAHNAACHA, a river of North America, which runs south-east into Columbia, below Clark's river.

WAHOWPUNS, Indians of North America, on the west side of the Columbia.

WAHREN, a small inland town of the north of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg Schwerin; 20 miles west-north-west of Strelitz.

WAHRING, or WAERING, a town of Lower Austria, near Closter Neuburg. Population, including the parish, 2500.

WAIBLINGEN, a town in the west of Germany, in Wirtemberg, on the Rems; 17 miles east-north-east of Stutgard. Population 2300.

WAIBSTADT, a small town of Germany, in Baden; 23 miles east of Spire, with 1500 inhabitants.

WAID, [etymology unknown.] Crushed.—His horse waid in the back, and shoulder shotten. Shakspeare.

WAIDERSFELDEN, a small town of Germany, in Upper Austria; 12 miles east of Freystadt.

WAIDHOFEN, a small town of Germany, in Lower Austria, on the river Ips; 72 miles west-by-south of Vienna, with 3400 inhabitants.

WAIDHOFEN, a town of Lower Austria, on the river Theya;

Theya; 65 miles west-north-west of Vienna. Population 5000.

WAIF, or WAIFT, s. [wavium, wāivium, law Lat.] Goods found, but claim'd by nobody; that of which every one waves the claim. Sometimes written weif, or weft. Johnson.—It formerly was used for a person deserted as well as thing lost; and, according to Cowel and Blackstone, waifs, in the legal sense, are goods stolen, and waived, or thrown away by the thief in his flight.

For that a waift, the which by fortune came Upon your seas, he claym'd as propertie;
And yet nor his, nor his in equitie,
But your's the waift by high prerogative. Spenser.

To WAIL, v. a. [Icel. væla, ejulare, plangere; Goth. wail planctus, waila, vociferari.] To moan; to lament; to bewail.

Wise men ne'er wail their present woes,
But presently prevent the ways to wail. Shakspeare.

To WAIL, v. n. To grieve audibly; to express sorrow.—Tom shall make him weep and wail. Shakspeare.

WAIL, s. Audible sorrow; lamentation.

Around the woods
She sighs her song, which with her wail resound. Thomson.

WAILFUL, adj. Sorrowful mournful.

Lay lime to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows. Shakspeare.

WAILBY, or WALDERBY, a parish of England, in the county of Westmoreland; 2 miles west of Kirkby Stephen.

WAILSBY, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 1½ mile from Market-Raisen.

WAILING, s. Lamentation; moan; audible sorrow.—Other cries amongst the Irish, savour of the Scythian barbarism; as the lamentations of their burials, with despairful outcries, and immoderate wailings. Spenser.

WAIN, s. A carriage.

Your's be the harvest; 'tis the beggar's gain,
To glean the fallings of the loaded wain. Dryden.

WAINAGE, s. A finding of carriages. Ainsworth.

WAINFLEET, a market town of England, in the county of Lincoln, situated on a creek near the sea, at the eastern part of the county. The creek is navigable for vessels of small burden. The town is neat and well built. It had formerly two churches, only one of which now remains. The free grammar school was founded here in the year 1459, by William of Wainfleet, bishop of Winchester, who was a native of the town. Market on Saturday, and four annual fairs; 14 miles north-north-east of Boston and 130 north of London.

WAINCOPE, s. A large cord, with which the load is tied on the waggon; cart-rope.—Oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. Shakspeare.

WAINSCOT, s. [wagschot, Dutch.] The inner wooden covering of a wall.—Some have the veins more varied and chambletted; as oak, whereof wainscot is made. Bacon.

To WAINSCOT, v. a. [waegenschotten, Dutch.] To line walls with boards.—Musick soundeth better in chambers wainscotted, than hanged. Bacon.—To line buildings with different materials.—One side commands a view of the garden, and the other is wainscotted with looking-glass. Addison.

WAIR, s. A piece of timber two yards long, and a foot broad. Bailey.

WAIST, s. [gwase, Welsh; from the verb gwasen, to press or bind. M. Goth. wahsus, statura.—The smallest part of the body; the part below the ribs.

The one seem'd woman to the waist, and fair,
But ended foul in many a scaly fold,
Voluminous and vast. Milton.

The middle deck, or floor of a ship.

Sheets of water from the clouds are sent,
Which, hissing through the planks, the flames prevent,
And stop the fiery pest: four ships alone
Burn to the waist, and for the fleet atone. Dryden.

WAISTBAND, s. That part of the breeches which encircles the waist.—I beg of you to button your waistcoat from your collar to your waistband. Tatler.

WAISTCOAT, s. An inner coat; a coat close to the body.—Selby lean'd out of the coach to shew his lac'd waistcoat. Richardson.

To WAIT, v. a. [wachten, Dutch.] To expect; to stay for.

Bid them prepare within;
I am to blame to be thus waited for. Shakspeare.

To attend; to accompany with submission or respect. To attend as a consequence of something.

Such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless care of gain. Philips.

To watch as an enemy.—He is waited for of the sword. Job.

To WAIT, v. n. To expect; to stay in expectation.

I know, if I am deprived of you, I die:
But oh! I die, if I wait longer for you. A. Philips.

To pay servile or submissive attendance; with on before the subject.

Though Syrinx your Pan's mistress were,
Yet Syrinx well might wait on her. Milton.

To attend: with on. A phrase of ceremony.—The dinner is on the table; my father desires your worship's company.—I will wait on him. Shakspeare.—To stay; not to depart from.—How shall we know when to wait for, when to decline persecution. South.

With Vulcan's rage the rising winds conspire,
And near our palace rolls the flood of fire:
Haste, my dear father, 'tis no time to wait,
And load my shoulders with a willing freight. Dryden.

To stay by reason of some hindrance. To look watchfully. To lie in ambush as an enemy.—Such ambush waited to intercept thy way. Milton.—To follow as a consequence.—It will import those men who dwell careless, to enter into serious consultation how they may avert that ruin, which waits on such a supine temper. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

WAIT, s. Ambush; insidious and secret attempts. It is commonly used in these phrases, to lay wait, and to lie in wait.—Why sat'st thou like an enemy in wait? Milton.

WAIT'S RIVER, a river of the United States, in Vermont, which runs into the Connecticut; 12 miles below Well's river.

WAITER, s. An attendant; one who attends for the accommodation of others.

The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry,
Make room, as if a duke were passing by. Swift.

WAITHE, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 7 miles south-south-east of Great Grimsby.

WAITING-GENTLEWOMAN, WA'ITING-MAID, or WAITING-WOMAN, s. An upper servant who attends on a lady in her chamber.

He made me mad,
To talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman,
Of guns, and drums, and wounds. Shakspeare.

WAITS, s. [waits, Goth., vigilia, excubæ. Hence, in our old language, wait is a watchman, "speculator, vigil." So, in old French, waite, "garde, sentinelle,") Nocturnal itinerant musicians. This is the only use of waits at present.

Let's have the waits of Southwark,
They're as rare fellows as any are in England. Beaum. and Fl.

Waits were originally attendant musicians on great personages, mayors, and bodies corporate, generally furnished with super superb dresses, or splendid cloaks. We have an account in Rymer's Fœdera, (tom. ix. "De Minstrielles propter Solatium Regis providendis,") and in the "Liber niger Domus Regis," of the establishment of the minstrels and waits, in the service of the court during the reign of Edward IV. The account of the allowances to the waits at this early period is curious.

"A wayte, that nightelye from Mychelmas to Shreve Thorsdaye pipethe the watche withen this courte fower tymes ; in the somere nyghtes iij tymes, and makethe bon gayte at every chambere-doare and offyce, as well for feare of pyckeres and pillers. He eateth in the halle with mynstrielles, and takethe lyverey at nighte a loffe, a galone of alle, and for somere nightes ij candles pich, a bushel of coles ; and for wintere nightes half a loafe of bread, a galone of ale, iij candles piche, a bushel of coles ; daylye whilste he is presente in courte for his wages in cheque roale allowed iij d. ob. or else iij d. by the discesshon of the steuarde and tressorere, and that, atere his cominge and diseruinge ; also cloathing with the houshold yeomen or mynstrielles lyke to the wages that he takethe ; and he be syke he taketh twee loves, ij messe of great meate, one gallon of ale. Also he partethe with the housholde of general gyfts, and hathe his beddinge carried by the comptrollers assygmt ; and under this yeoman to be a groome watere. Yf he can excuse the yeoman in bis absence, then he takethe rewarde, clotheinge, meat, and all other things lyke to other grooms of houshold. Also this yeoman-waighthe, at the makinge of knightes of the bathe, for his attendance upon them by nighte-tyme, in watchinge in the chappelle, hathe to his fee all the watchinge-clothing that the knight shall wear upon him."

WAITSFIELD, a township of the United States, in Washington county, Vermont ; 18 miles south-west of Montpelier.

WAITZEN, or VACS, a town of Hungary, beautifully situated on a bend of the Danube ; 19 miles north of Pest, and 95 east of Presburg. Population 5200.

WAITZENKIRCHEN, a small town of Germany, in Upper Austria ; 19 miles west of Linz.

WAIVE, in Law, a woman that is put out of the protection of the Law. See OUTLAWRY.

WAIWODE, or WAYWODE, the appellation that distinguishes, in the Ottoman empire, the governor of a small province, or of a town.

WAKATOMIKA, a river of the United States, in Ohio, which runs south-east, and joins the Muskingum ; 13 miles above Zanesville.

WAKAYA, a river of North America, which falls into Lake Michigan from the west.

WAKAYGAGH, or FORT, a river of the United States, in the North-west Territory, which runs into Lake Michigan. Lat. 42. 58. N. long. 87. 9. W.

WAKE, a county of the United States, in the central part of North Carolina. Chief town, Raleigh.

To WAKE, v. n. [wakan, Goth. ; pacian, Sax. ; waccken, Dutch.] To watch ; not to sleep.

All night she watch'd, ne-once a-down would lay
Her dainty limbs in her sad dreriment,
But praying still did wake, and waking did lament.

Spenser.

To be roused from sleep.—Each tree stirr'd appetite, whereat I wak'd. Milton.—To cease to sleep.

Come, thou powerful god,
And thy leaden charming rod,
Dipt in the Lethean lake,
O'er his watchful temples shake,
Lest he should sleep and never wake.

Denham.

To be quick ; to be alive.
In the valley of Jehoshaphat,
The judging god shall close the book of fate ;
And there the last assizes keep,
For those who wake, and those who sleep.

Dryden.

To be put in action ; to be excited.—Gentle airs to fan the earth now wak'd. Milton.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1654.

To WAKE, v. a. [peccian, Sax. ; weccken, Dutch.] To rouse from sleep.—They wak'd each other, and I stood and heard them. Shakspeare.—To excite ; to put in motion, or action.—Prepare war, wake up the mighty men ; let them come up. Joel.

Thine, like Amphion's hand, had wak'd the stone,
And from destruction called the rising town ;
Nor could he burn so fast as thou could'st build.

Prior.

To bring to life again, as if from the sleep of death.

To second life,

Wak'd in the renovation of the just. Milton.

[Wakna, Goth., to watch.] To watch or attend a corpse.—The waiting a dead body before interment, is called in Sued. "washtuga." Hence our phrase, to wake a corpse, and leik-wake ; compounded of the two Goth. words leik, a dead body, and wakna, to watch. Callander.

WAKE, s. The feast of the dedication of the church, formerly kept by watching all night. [from wak, Sax. drinking.] A country fair.

Fill oven ful of flawnes, Ginnie passe not for sleepe,
To-morrow thy father his wake-daie will keepe.

Tusser.

Vigils ; state of forbearing sleep.

By dimpled brook, and fountain brim,
The wood-nymphs, deckt with daisies trim,
Their merry wakes and pastimes keep :
What hath night to do with sleep ?

Milton.

Act of waking from sleep.—T'wixt sleep and wake. Old Song.—The track formed on the water by the course of a ship.

The learned Mr. Whitaker, in his History of Manchester, hath given a particular account of the origin of wakes and fairs. He observes, that every church at its consecration received the name of some particular saint : this custom was practised among the Roman Britons, and continued among the Saxons ; and in the council of Cealchythe, in 816, the name of the denominating saint was expressly required to be inscribed on the altars, and also on the walls of the church, or a tablet within it. The feast of this saint became of course the festival of the church. These Christian festivals, in the room of the primitive ayanas, or love-feasts, were substituted for the idolatrous anniversaries of heathenism : accordingly at the first introduction of Christianity among the Jutes of Kent, pope Gregory the Great advised what had been previously done among the Britons, viz. Christian festivals, to be instituted in the room of the idolatrous, and the suffering-day of the martyr whose relics were deposited in the church, or the day on which the building was actually dedicated, to be the established feast of the parish. Both were appointed and observed ; and they were clearly distinguished at first among the Saxons, as appears from the laws of the Confessor, where the dies dedicationis, or dedicatio, is repeatedly discriminated from the propria festivitas sancti, or celebratio sancti. They remained equally distinct till the Reformation ; the dedication-day in 1536 being ordered for the future to be kept on the first Sunday in October, and the festival of the patron saint to be celebrated no longer. The latter was, by way of pre-eminence, denominated the church's holiday, or its peculiar festival ; and while this remains in many parishes at present, the other is so utterly annihilated in all, that bishop Kennet, says Mr. Whitaker, knew nothing of its distinct existence, and has attributed to the day of dedication what is true only concerning the saint's day. Thus instituted at first, the day of the tutelar saint was observed, most probably by the Britons, and certainly by the Saxons, with great devotion. And the evening before every saint's day, in the Saxon-Jewish method of reckoning the hours, being an actual part of the day, and therefore like that appropriated to the duties of public religion, as they reckoned Sunday from the first to commence at the sun-set of Saturday ; the evening preceding the church's holiday would be observed with all the devotion of the festival. The people actually repaired to the church, and joined in the services of it; and they thus spent the evening of their greater festivities in the monasteries of the North, as early as the conclusion of the seventh century.

These services were naturally denominated from their late hours waccan or wakes, and vigils or eves. That of the anniversary at Rippon, as early as the commencement of the eighth century, is expressly denominated the vigil. But that of the church's holiday was named cyric waccan, or church-wake, the church-vigil, or church-eve. And it was this commencement of both with a wake, which has now caused the days to be generally preceded with vigils, and the church-holiday particularly to be denominated the church-wake. So religiously were the eve and festival of the patron saint observed for many ages by the Saxons, even as late as the reign of Edgar, the former being spent in the church, and employed in prayer. And the wakes, and all the other holidays in the year, were put upon the same footing with the octaves of Christmas, Easter, and of Pentecost. When Gregory recommended the festival of the patron saint, he advised the people to erect booths of branches about the church on the day of the festival, and to feast and be merry in them with innocence. Accordingly, in every parish, on the returning anniversary of the saint, little pavilions were constructed of boughs, and the people indulged in them to hospitality and mirth. The feasting of the saint's day, however, was soon abused; and even in the body of the church, when the people were assembled for devotion, they began to mind diversions, and to introduce drinking. The growing intemperance gradually stained the service of the vigil, till the festivity of it was converted, as it now is, into the rigour of a fast. At length they too justly scandalized the Puritans of the seventeenth century, and numbers of the wakes were disused entirely, especially in the east and some western parts of England; though the order for abolishing them was reversed by the influence of Laud: but they are commonly observed in the north, and in the midland counties.

This custom of celebrity in the neighbourhood of the church, on the days of particular saints, was introduced into England from the continent, and must have been familiar equally to the Britons and Saxons; being observed among the churches of Asia in the sixth century, and by those of the west of Europe in the seventh.

WAKEFIELD (Gilbert), an eminent classical scholar, was the son of the Rev. George Wakefield, rector of St. Nicholas, Nottingham, and born in that town in the year 1756. After a previous grammatical education, he was admitted, in 1772, into Jesus College, in the university of Cambridge. Here he pursued his studies with an assiduity which established his reputation; and having taken his degree of B. A. in 1776, he was soon afterwards elected a fellow of his college. At this early period, he published a small collection of Latin poems, and a few critical notes on Homer. Having directed his particular attention to theological inquiries, he began betimes to entertain doubts concerning the articles of the church, and though he took deacon's orders in 1778, he reproached himself for complying with the previous forms. He commenced his ministerial labours as a curate at Stockport, and thence he removed to Liverpool, discharging the duties of his office with a suitable sense of their importance. Dissatisfied, however, with the doctrines and liturgy of the church, he determined to surrender his connection with it; and having married in 1779, he accepted an invitation to be classical tutor at the dissenting academy of Warrington, without avowing himself as a dissenter.

Having in 1781 published his plan of a new version of the New Testament, with a specimen of the proposed work, he presented to the public, in 1782, "A New Translation of the Gospel of St. Matthew, with Notes critical, philological, and explanatory," 4to., which was well received. Upon the dissolution of the academy at Warrington, he removed to Bramcote in Nottinghamshire, where he received private pupils; and here he published in 1784 the first volume of an "Enquiry into the Opinions of the Christian Writers of the first Three Centuries concerning the Person of Jesus Christ," 8vo., which was received in a manner that discouraged him from pursuing his plan. Being disabled by the attack of disorder in one arm to undertake any literary performance that required any considerable exertion, he intermitted his constant occupations; till at length in 1789 he commenced his "Silva Critica, sive in Auctores sacros prophanosque Commentarius Philologicus;" of which three parts appeared successively to the year 1795; the three first being issued from the Cambridge press. Mr. Wakefield, in 1790, removed from Nottingham to Hackney, in order to assume the office of classical tutor in the dissenting college of that place, where his services were highly acceptable, till the publication of his "Enquiry into the Expediency and Propriety of public or social Worship," in 1791; which, being intended to justify the disuse of the public exercises of devotion, occasioned a termination of his connection with that institution. From this time he employed himself in attention to the instruction of his own family, and to several literary works; the principal of which were his "Translation of the New Testament, with Notes critical and explanatory," 3 vols. 8vo. 1792, of which a second edition appeared in 1795, 2 vols. 8vo.; and "Memoirs of his own Life," published in the same year. His other productions were "Evidences of Christianity," and "Replies to the Two Parts of Thomas Paine's Age of Reason;" a volume of Pope's Works, a volume of "Notes on Pope," and an edition of his version of the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer. His "Silva Critica" was also enlarged to the 5th volume; and he presented to the public editions of select "Greek Tragedies," of "Homer," "Bion and Moschus," "Virgil," and "Lucretius," in 3 vols. 4to., a work highly esteemed.

Avowing himself an enemy to war in general, and to the war against France in particular, he published a pamphlet in 1798, entitled "A Reply to some parts of the Bishop of Llandaff's Address to the People of Great Britain," which subjected him to a prosecution: this terminated in a trial and conviction in February, 1799. His sentence was imprisonment for two years in the county gaol of Dorchester. His course of study was thus unfortunately interrupted, so that he could only prepare for the press "Select Essays of Dio Chrysostom, translated into English from the Greek, with notes," 1800, 8vo., and "Noctes Carcerariæ, sive de Legibus Metricis Poetarum Græcorum, qui Versibus Hexametris scripturæ, Disputatio," 1801, 12mo.; and make collections for his proposed Lexicon, Greek and English. In May, 1801, he was liberated from his confinement; but on September the 9th of the same year, a typhus fever terminated his life, in his 46th year, to the grief of his family and the regret of numerous friends, by whom he was highly esteemed.

The assiduity of his literary application, and the singular temperance of his habits, though they occasioned a seclusion from much of that social intercourse which was interesting to his family, and a degree of reserve in his own temper, enabled him, however, to acquire great reputation as a philological writer and critic during, comparatively, a short life. Under this character, he resembled Bentley and Markland, being, like them, in his conjectural criticism, "always learned, sometimes bold, and frequently happy." Possessing a very retentive memory, his extensive reading furnished him with an ample store of passages for illustration or parallel, of which he could avail himself as occasions occurred. With regard to his moral disposition and character, they were marked, as a biographer who knew him well has delineated them, "by an openness, a simplicity, a good faith, an affectionate ardour, a noble elevation of mind, which made way to the hearts of all who nearly approached him, and rendered him the object of their warmest attachment." The second edition of his "Memoirs," published after his death, contains a catalogue of all his works, several of which have been omitted in this concise account of his life and labours. A collection of letters between him and Mr. Fox, by whom he was highly esteemed, chiefly on subjects of Greek literature, has also been published. Memoirs Gen. Biog.

WAKEFIELD, a large and well built town of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, pleasantly situated on the side side of a hill, sloping gently southward to the Calder. The town is exceedingly well-built. Most of the streets are regular, handsome, and spacious; and many of the houses, which are in general constructed of brick, are large, lofty, and elegant. The market-place is somewhat confined, but has been rendered much more convenient by the removal of the corn-market into Westgate, an adjacent street, which is very broad, and of a considerable length. The market-cross is an elegant structure, being an open colonnade of the Doric order, supporting a dome, with an ascent of an open circular pair of stairs, leading to a large room, which receives its light from a lantern at the top, and in which most of the business of the town is transacted. The parish church is a spacious and lofty Gothic structure, and the spire is considered the highest in Yorkshire. In this town is a free grammar school, founded and endowed by queen Elizabeth, but much improved by private benefactions. The school-house is a noble and spacious building, erected by the Savilles, ancestors of the earl of Mexborough. Here is also a charity school, founded for the instruction and clothing of poor boys and girls in Wakefield. The charitable donations to this town, indeed, are very considerable, amounting, it is said, to not less than 2000*l.* per annum, and are under the direction of fourteen trustees, called governors. At the bottom of Westgate, the principal street in the town, is the house of correction for the whole Riding. This prison is a large and noble structure of stone, surrounded by an outer wall, and contains above 150 cells. It has undergone lately considerable enlargement, for the purpose of separating the women from the men, and to class the prisoners according to their ages and crimes. The prisoners manufacture great part of their own clothing, and also clothing for the pauper-lunatic asylum. At the south-east entrance into Wakefield is a handsome stone bridge over the Calder.

The trade of this town is greatly promoted by the Calder navigation. This river was rendered navigable to Wakefield in the year 1698; and in 1763 its navigation was extended to Ealand, or Elland, near Halifax. Great quantities of coals are carried by water from Wakefield, as well as from Leeds, into the Ouse, and then up that river to York, or down the Humber to Hull, by which means extensive tracks of country are supplied with great quantities of that valuable fuel. The market is held on Friday; and a great deal of business is done, particularly in the sale of wool and grain. Wakefield being one of the greatest corn markets in England, contains immense corn warehouses, erected on the banks of the Calder, chiefly since 1800. Here are two annual fairs, each of which continues two days, viz., July 4th and 5th, and November 11th and 12th, for horses, horned cattle, pedlary ware, &c. The fortnight fairs, held every other Wednesday, are very much noted, and contribute to supply an extensive track to the westward, with butcher's meat, being well attended by graziers and jobbers from Lincolnshire, the East Riding of Yorkshire, and Craven, and by butchers from Halifax, Huddersfield, Sheffield, and Manchester; 9 miles south of Leeds, and 186 north of London. Population in 1811, 8593; in 1821, 10,764; the increase in ten years being 2171.

WAKEFIELD, a post township of the United States, in Strafford county, New Hampshire; 42 miles north-north-west of Portsmouth. Population 1166.

WAKEFIELD, LOWER, a township of the United States, in Bucks county, Pennsylvania. Population 1089.

WAKEFIELD, UPPER, a township of the United States, in Bucks county, Pennsylvania. Population 1271.

WAKEFUL, adj. Not sleeping; vigilant.

Dissembling sleep, but wakeful with the fright.
The day takes off the pleasure of the night. Dryden.

WAKEFULNESS, s. Want of sleep.—Other perfumes are fit to be used in burning agues, consumptions, and too much wakefulness. Bacon.—Forbearance of sleep.

Broad open sight, eternal wakefulness, Withouten labour, or consuming pain. More.

WAKELY, a hamlet of England, in Hertfordshire; 2 miles south-west of Buntingford.

To WAKEN, v. n. To watch; not to sleep.

The eyes of heaven that nightly waken
To view the wonders of the glorious Maker.

Beaum. and Fl.

To cease from sleep; to be roused from sleep:

Early Turnus wakening with the light,
All clad in armour, calls his troops to fight. Dryden.

To WAKEN, v. a. To rouse from sleep.—We make no longer stay; go, waken Eve. Milton.—To excite to action.

When Homer's and Tyrtæus' martial muse
Waken'd the world, and sounded loud alarms. Roscommon.

To produce; to excite.

They introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milton.

WAKENER, s. An exciter.—The Egyptians held salt as the wakener of carnality. Feltham.

WAKENITZ, a river of Denmark, in the duchy of Lauenburg, which flows out of the lake of Ratzeburg, and joins the Trave.

WAKER, s. One who watches. One who rouses from sleep.—Late watchers are no early wakers. B. Jonson.

WAKERING, GREAT and LITTLE, adjoining parishes of England, in the county of Essex; about 4 miles east-north-east of Southend. Population 849.

WAKERLEY, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire, near the river Welland.

WAKEROBIN, s. [arum, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

WAKING, s. Watch. Obsolete.—About the fourth waking of the night. Wickliffe.—The period of continuing awake.—His sleeps and his wakings are so much the same, that he knows not how to distinguish them. Butler.

WALACHIA, or WALLACHIA, an extensive province in the north of Turkey in Europe, situated between 44. 0. and 45. 58. of north latitude. It is bordered on the north by a range of mountains, separating it from Transylvania and Moldavia; on the south by a boundary equally majestic, the Danube flowing from west to east, and dividing it from the interior of Turkey. Its form is oblong; its length, from west to east, about 250 miles; its medium breadth about 160. Its area, not yet ascertained with accuracy, is computed at between 25,000 and 28,000 square miles, equal to the half of England and Wales, though the population is to ours in the ratio of only one-eighth. The chief towns are Bucharest, Tergovista, Braclow, and Giorgiev.

The face of the country is considerably diversified. In the north it is mountainous, the Carpathian chain, that forms its frontier, sending forth a number of branches. The central and southern parts of the province are less uneven, consisting partly of valleys fertile and romantic, and partly of plains extensive and pleasant. Few countries are more indebted to nature, or might carry cultivation to a greater length. At present, however, the unsettled state of its inhabitants, and its physical defects render its capabilities nugatory.

The principal rivers are, first, the Danube, which being here in the lowest part of its course, rolls a great volume of water, and receives a number of tributary streams, both from the north and south. The former are in general the larger, viz., the Alt or Aluta, the Dumbowitz, the Jalomitza, and the Sereth. The climate of Walachia partakes much more of extremes than that of Britain, the cold of winter, though not of long duration, being severe, in consequence partly of the bleak regions to the east and north, partly of the neglected state of the surface of the country; while the summer heats are much greater than in Britain. The soil in the northern part of the province corresponds to the mountainous character of the country; but in the plains and valleys of the south, it is in general rich and fertile. Yet, even in these these favoured tracks, the country appears deserted, and hardly ever discovers a trace of European culture.

The agricultural products of Walachia consist chiefly of wheat, millet, maize, beans, and pease. Vines and fruits of various kinds are abundant here; but the chief wealth of this, as of other countries rich by nature, and little improved by industry, consists in its pasture, which feeds numerous herds of cattle and sheep. The horses are, in general, of a good breed: in some of the forests in the most uncultivated parts of the province, they are found in a wild state, as in America. Game of all kinds is found in prodigious quantities. Poultry and the domestic animals are similar to those of Britain; bees are much more numerous. Of mineral products, the principal are salt and saltpetre. A little gold is occasionally found in the sands of the rivers.

Of manufactures, Walachia is almost entirely destitute. The principal exports are horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, wool, leather, tallow, butter, wax, honey, flax, hemp, salt, and saltpetre. In return, it imports various manufactures, in particular woollens and hardware; also groceries.

In religion, the Walachians are followers of the Greek church; but the population of the province is very mixed, comprising not only gypsies, but a number of descendants of Bulgarians and Rascians. The Walachians of the higher class have a predilection for the Italian language; and a few of them send their sons for education to Padua; but the majority are satisfied with the seminary at Bucharest, where they acquire some knowledge of religion, or rather of its outward ceremonies; also an acquaintance with Italian. French is little studied, and German is known only to mercantile men, who find it necessary to keep up a correspondence with that country. Of the liberal arts, surgery alone is followed with success, but the knowledge of it is usually acquired at Vienna, or in Italy. The sciences in general are so little known, that the Walachian language contains hardly a word expressive of a scientific idea. On the other hand, the moral character of the Walachians is by no means unfavourable, presenting the hospitality, the frankness, and the other virtues of an agricultural people. The regiments raised in this country, if irregular in look and discipline, are by no means deficient in courage; and, in general, the qualities in the national character that are unpleasant or repulsive, are to be ascribed to no other cause than their miserable government. Emigration from this country has long been expedient, in consequence of the insecurity of property; and no small part of the population of Transylvania and Moldavia are of Walachian origin.

This province was unknown in authentic history, until its invasion and conquest by the Romans, in the reign of Trajan. That prince sent hither several colonies, who cultivated tracks of land, and built, in prescribed situations, towns and villages. On the decline of the empire, Walachia shared the fate of other frontier provinces, being alternately in possession of the Greek emperors and barbarians. The 9th century is said to have been the era of their embracing the doctrines of the Greek church; while the early part of the 12th is given as the date of the foundation of Bucharest, the capital, and of some smaller towns. In the 13th and 14th centuries, Walachia was in some degree subject to Hungary. In the beginning of the 15th, the Turks penetrating in this direction, long before they accomplished the conquest of Constantinople, laid waste the country, and subjected it to a tribute. Since then, Walachia has been in a state of half subjection to the Porte, Austria, and subsequently Russia, having interfered, to assure to the inhabitants the enjoyment of a share of independence. They are governed, not directly by the Porte, like the interior provinces of Turkey, but by a hospodar or prince, who is always of the Greek religion, and in general of a Greek family of rank. He obtains his appointment by purchase, and generally keeps it by paying to the Turkish government an annual tribute of about 80,000*l.* sterling. He holds his sovereignty by a firm of the grand seignor, and is liable to be deposed (which in Turkey, in general, implies the loss of life) at the will of the Ottoman court. The precarious tenure of his power, and the almost total want of law in this country, is the cause of heavy exactions. With these, however, as far as regards the mode of levy, the Turks are not chargeable, Walachia being, like Moldavia, independent as to internal regulation. The Boyards or landholders are exempted from direct taxes. These fall on the peasants, mechanics, and lower classes generally.

The interior government of Walachia is regulated by a council, composed of the principal Boyards, who assemble once or twice a week, and to whom appeals lie from all inferior and local tribunals. Their powers, however, are not conclusive, being controuled by the Hospodar, whose prerogative being undefined, admits occasionally of a great latitude. He has not, however, any military establishment of consequence, except an Albanian guard. It is since the beginning of the present century, and since the late additions to the power of Russia, that the interference of the Czar has become direct in regard to Walachian and Moldavian politics. The ostensible ground is community of religion and faith: the real motive, a desire to cultivate popularity with those of the subjects of the Porte, whose aid may now be so instrumental in driving the Turks out of Europe.

WALACHIA, LITTLE, a district of Slavonia, extending from the town of Pogeck to the borders of Croatia. It takes its name from a colony of Walachians, long since settled in it, and is in general level, and highly fertile. Its pastures contain numerous herds of cattle, but a large proportion of it is in forest land, containing bears and other animals, which, in the west of Europe, are known only in wild and mountainous districts, such as the recesses of the Pyrenees.

WALÆUS (John), a celebrated anatomist, was born in 1604, near Middleburg, in Zealand, and studied physic at Leyden, where he graduated in 1631. In 1632 he was nominated a medical professor extraordinary, and in 1648 he obtained a chair in ordinary. His practice was extensive, and his academical duties numerous; and yet he employed himself much in the dissection of living animals, and was enabled to illustrate the functions of digestion, the distribution of the chyle, and the action of the heart. He first taught publicly the Harveian doctrine of the circulation of the blood; though from jealousy of the honour of the inventor, he was disposed to announce vestiges of the fact which he discovered in the writings of the ancients. He died at Leyden in 1649. His Anatomical Observations, which are reckoned excellent, are contained in "Epistolæ duæ de Motu Chyli et Sanguinis ad T. Bartholinum," Lugd. B. 1641. Haller. Elog.

WALAFRÏDUS, surnamed Strabo, or Strabus, from a squint in his eyes, was born in Swabia in 807, and educated in the monastery of Reichenau, whence he proceeded to Fulda, to receive further instruction from Rabanus. After his return to his monastery he became director of its school, and very much contributed to its reputation. Being sent on an embassy by king Louis to his brother Charles the Bald, he died in the year 849. Of his works, which are numerous, those most worthy of notice are his "Glossæ ordinariæ," or short observations on the whole text of the Bible, chiefly derived from the exposition of Rabanus, and annexed to many editions of the Vulgate, printed in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; "De Exordiis et Incrementis Rerum Ecclesiasticarum;" "De Vita beati Galli Confessoris, lib. ii.;" "Vita Otmarî Abbatis S. Galli;" "Poemata," among which are, "Hortulus," or a description of the garden which he cultivated, with its herbs and flowers, and their medical use. Gen. Biog.

WALAJA, or ABADNAGUR, a town of the south of India, province of the Carnatic, situated on the northern side of the Palar river: Lat. 12. 40. N. long. 78. 5. E.

WALAKA, a province of Abyssinia, situated immediately to the north of Upper Shoa, which it separates from Central Abyssinia. It consists of a low, unwholesome, though fertile track, between the two rivers Geshen and Samba.

WALBECK, or WALPKE, a town of Prussian Saxony, on the Aller; 28 miles north of Halberstadt.

WALBERSWICK, or WALDESWICK, a parish of England, about 2 miles west-by-south of Southwold.

WALBERTON, a parish of England, in the county of Sussex; 3 miles west-south-west of Arundel. Population 612.

WALBOTTLE, a township of England, in Northumberland; 5 miles from Newcastle. Population 591.

WALBURN, a township of England, in the North Riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-by-west of Richmond.

WALBY, a hamlet of England, in Cumberland; 4 miles north-east-by-east of Carlisle.

WALCHENSEE, or WALLERSEE, a small lake of the Austrian states; 4 miles north of Salzburg.

WALCHEREN, or WALCHERN, an island of the Netherlands, in the province of Zealand, situated in the German ocean, at the mouth of the Scheldt, and separated from the islands of Beveland by a narrow channel called the Sloe. If not the largest, it is the most populous and best cultivated of the different islands composing the province of Zealand. It is of an oblong form; its length from north-west to south-east is about 12 miles; its breadth from north-east to south-west, 8 miles. It lies low, and would be subject to inundations from the sea, were it not protected by strong dykes. The dyke of West Cappel, in particular, is of great size and strength. This island contains the three towns of Middleburg, the capital, Flushing, and Veere. The villages are numerous: the peasantry, if not affluent, are in general exempt from poverty. Unfortunately this well cultivated spot is not healthy; agues and bilious complaints prevail in spring and autumn, in consequence probably of the quantity of fresh water in the canals or water-courses with which the island is intersected. Hence the general sickness prevalent among the British troops during their occupation of it in 1809.

WALCOT, a hamlet of England, Leicestershire; 2 miles east-by-south of Lutterworth.—2. A parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 2 miles north-west of Folkingham.—3. A parish of England, in Norfolk; 5 miles east-by-north of North Walsham.—4. A hamlet of England, in the parish of Barnack, Northamptonshire.—5. A parish of England, Somersetshire, adjoining to Bath. Population 20,560.—6. A hamlet of England, in Worcestershire; 2 miles north-east of Pershore.

WALCOTE, a township of England, in Lincolnshire; 6½ miles north-east-by-north of Sleaford. Population 376.—2. A hamlet of England, in the parish of Diss, county of Norfolk.—3. A hamlet of England, in Warwickshire; 2 miles south-south-east of Dunchurch.

WALCOTT, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire; 5½ miles south-south-east of Chipping Norton.—Also, a township of England, in the county of Salop; 4 miles west-by-north of Wellington.

WALCOURT, a walled town of the Netherlands, in the province of Namur, on the river Heure; 12 miles south of Charleroi.

WALD, a village in the north of Switzerland; 19 miles south-east of Zurich.

WALD, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg; 9 miles east-south-east of Dusseldorf. It has 3100 inhabitants.

WALDAU, a village of the Prussian states, in Upper Lusatia. Population 1700.

WALDBURG, a county of Germany, in Wirtemberg, lying between the Iller and the Danube. It consists of several lordships, and contains in all 285 square miles, with 27,000 inhabitants.

WALDBY, a township of England, East Riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles east-by-south of South Cave.

WALD-DORF, a village of the west of Germany, in Baden; 8 miles south-by-west of Heidelberg. Population 1600.

WALDEBA, a village of Abyssinia; 5 miles south-west of Sire.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1654.

WALDECK, PRINCIPALITY OF, a district in the west of Germany, consisting of two counties, Waldeck and Pyrmont. The area of this little state is computed at 455 square miles; the population at nearly 50,000; the annual revenue at little more than 40,000*l.* sterling.

WALDECK, COUNTY OF, forming the chief part of the preceding principality, has an area of 424 square miles, and about 40,000 inhabitants.

WALDECK, a town of Germany, in the county of Waldeck; 20 miles west-by-south of Cassel. Population 900. Lat. 51. 12. 43. N. long. 9. 1. 31. E.

WALDEGRAVE'S ISLANDS, two small rocky islands, lying off the southern coast of New Holland. Lat. of the largest, 33. 35½. S. long. 134. 44. E.

WALDEN, a post township of the United States, in Caledonia county, Vermont; 22 miles north-east of Montpelier. Population 455.

WALDEN, a township of England, in the North Riding of Yorkshire; 10 miles west-south-west of Middleham.

WALDEN, KING'S, a parish of England, in Hertfordshire; 4 miles south-south-west of Hitchin.

WALDEN, ST. PAUL'S, another parish in the above county; 5 miles north-north-west of Hitchin.

WALDEN, STUBBS, a hamlet of England, West Riding of Yorkshire; 7½ miles south-east-by-east of Pontefract.

WALDENBACH, a village of Germany, in Bavaria, in the Upper Palatinate, on the Regen.

WALDENBUCK, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg; 10 miles south-by-west of Stutgard. Population 1500.

WALDENBURG, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg, principality of Hohenlohe; 7 miles north-west of Hall. Population 1100.

WALDENBURG, a town of Germany, in Saxony; 49 miles west-south-west of Dresden. It contains 3000 inhabitants, and is divided by the river into the New and Old town.

WALDENBURG, a town of Prussian Silesia; 10 miles west-south-west of Schweidnitz. Population 1700.

WALDENBURG, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Basle; 15 miles north-east of Soleure.

WALDENRATH, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the duchy of Juliers. Population 1600.

WALSDENBERG, a village of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, and the county of Iseburg, built by Protestant refugees from Piedmont, towards the close of the 17th century.

WALDENSES, VALLEYS OF, or the FOUR VALLEYS, a district of Piedmont, bordering on France, and now comprised in the province of Piedmont. It formerly consisted of the four valleys of Perusa, Lucerna, St. Martino, and Angrogna; but the last is no longer considered as belonging to the Waldenses. The length of the whole is about 24 miles; the breadth from 8 to 11. The population about 20,000. The inhabitants of this sequestered spot are remarkable as having been the first community in the west of Europe that separated from the church of Rome.

WALDESHARE, a parish of England, in the county of Kent; 4 miles north-by-west of Dover.

WALDESHOF, a town of Germany, in Bavaria; 62 miles north of Ratisbon. Population 1000.

WALDHAUSEN, a small town of Upper Austria; 4 miles east-south-east of Zwettl.

WALDHEIM, a town of Germany, in Saxony, on the river Zschopau; 30 miles west of Dresden. Population 1800.

WALDHUTTE, a village of Germany, in Lower Austria, near Burkersdorf. Population 1200.

WALD-HWOZD, a very mountainous district of Bohemia, in the circle of Prachin, on the confines of the Upper Palatinate.

WALDINGFIELD, GREAT, a parish of England, in the county of Suffolk; 3 miles north-east-by-east of Sudbury. Population 577.

WALDINGFIELD, LITTLE, another parish in the above county; 4½ miles north-east of Sudbury. Population 347.

WALDITCH, a parish of England, in Dorsetshire; about 2 miles east-by-south of Bridport.

WALDKIRCHEN, a town of Germany, in Baden, on the Elz, with 2100 inhabitants.

WALDKIRCHEN, a small town of Lower Bavaria; 14 miles north-north-east of Passau.

WALD-LEININGEN, a town of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, in the district of Spire, with 1800 inhabitants.

WALDMICHELBAACH, a village of the west of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; 15 miles north-north-east of Heidelbergh. Population 1100.

WALDMOHR, a small town of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, in the Duchy of Deux Ponts.

WALDMUNCHEN, a town of Bavaria, in the Upper Palatinate; 31 miles north-east of Ratisbon. Population 1300.

WALDNIEL, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the duchy of Juliers; 2 miles east of Ruremond. Population 1100.

WALDOBOROUGH, a sea-port of the United States, in Lincoln county, Maine. It is a considerable town; 22 miles east-north-east of Wiscasset, and 180 north-east of Borton.

WALDBRIDGE, a village of England, in Buckinghamshire, near Aylesbury.

WALDRIDGE, a hamlet of England, county of Durham; south-west of Lumley castle.

WALDRINGFIELD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 3½ miles south-by-east of Woodbridge.

WALDRON, a parish of England, in the county of Sussex; 5 miles east-south-east of Uckfield. Population 840.

WALDSASSEN, a town of Germany, in the Upper Palatinate; 69 miles north-by-east of Ratisbon. Population 1400.

WALDSEE, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg; 62 miles south-south-east of Stutgard. Population 1400.

WALDSHUT, a town of Germany, in Baden, on the Rhine, at the entrance into the Black Forest; 20 miles west-by-south of Schaffhausen. Population 1100.

WALDSTETTEN, a town of Germany, in Bavaria; 7 miles south-west of Burgau. Population 1000.

WALDSTETTEN, a village and parish of Germany, in Wirtemberg; 29 miles east of Stutgard. Population 1500.

WALDHURN, a small town of Germany, in Bavaria, near the borders of Bohemia: 24 miles north-east of Amberg.

WALDURBA, a track of hot and level country, extending along the northern frontier of Abyssinia, upon the banks of the Tacazze. It is about 80 miles long, and 30 in its greatest breadth. It contains a great number of Jews, while the marshy districts are occupied by bands of savage Shaggalla.

WALE, s. [pel, Sax., a wel.] A rising part in the surface of cloth.

Thou'art rougher far,
And of a coarser wale, fuller of pride. Beaum. and Fl.

WALEN, EL, a town of the Sahara, in Central Africa, in the district of Tuat or Twat; 115 miles west of Gadamis.

WALES, a principality in the west of the island of Great Britain. It forms nearly a peninsula, being washed on the north and west by the Irish sea, on the south and south-east by the Bristol channel, and limited on the east by the counties of Monmouth, Hereford, Salop, and Chester. It is situated between 51. 20. and 53. 25. of north latitude; and between 2. 41. and 4. 56. west longitude from Greenwich. The length from north to south extends from 130 to 180 miles; and the breadth from 50 to 80; comprising an area of about 8125 square miles, equal to 5,206,900 acres of land; and, according to a recent census, the number of inhabitants amounted to 544,375, or nearly 67 persons to each square mile. The principality is divided into North and South Wales, containing twelve counties. The division of North Wales, comprehending the counties of Anglesey, Caernarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery; and South Wales, the counties of Brecknock, Cardigan, Caermarthen, Glamorgan, Pembroke, and Radnor.

The general aspect of Wales is bold, romantic, and mountainous, consisting of almost continued ranges of lofty mountains and impending craggs, intersected by numerous deep ravines, with extensive valleys, and affording endless views of wild mountain scenery. The principal range of mountains in North Wales is that which is denominated the Snowdonian chain, from the circumstance of the lofty mountain Snowden occupying its centre. Commencing at Bardsey island; in the south-west extremity of Caernarvonshire; the line, varied at irregular intervals by conical peaks, extends in a north-easterly direction to the promontory of Penmaenbach, in the bay of Conway. The intermediate parts consist of the loftiest mountains in Wales. For though Snowden stands pre-eminent, yet others ascending gradually, approximate in height. The greater part of the rocks composing the Caernarvonshire mountains are schistose hornblende, schistose mica, granite, and porphyry, inclosing considerable blocks of quartz. The western side is very precipitous, consisting of hornstone, upon which are placed a number of basaltic columns, more or less regularly pentagonal, standing perpendicularly to the plane of the horizon. The columns are of different lengths, about four feet diameter, with transverse joints from six to eight feet asunder, and considerable depositions of thin laminated quartz in the joints. The Ferwen chain occupies the eastern part of Merionethshire, and branches out into Denbighshire. Its length is about sixteen miles, and the breadth varies from five to ten: Cader Ferwyn, Cader Fronwen, and the Sylattin, are the most elevated points. Another line diverges off into Montgomeryshire, and joins the Breiddin chain, extending into Shropshire. The substance of which these mountains is composed is primitive schistus, that is, such as does not contain iron pyrites, or any remains of impressions of organised bodies, the position of the strata being generally nearly perpendicular to the plane of the horizon. Another chain, or rather a continuance of the same, extends in a south-west direction from Pennant, near the vale of Tanad, in Montgomeryshire, to the sea-coast near Llangyllin in Merionethshire. In this extensive ridge are conspicuous several lofty mountains, known under the appellation of the Arrans and the Arrenigs; the most eminent of which are Arran-ben-llyn, and Arran-fowddy; and the extremity of the line is grandly marked by the triple head of the lofty Cadair Idris. Except the latter, the principal elevations of this chain consist of schistus and shale, intermixed with mica and spar, or indurated argil. Cadair Idris is composed of nearly similar substances to those of Snowden, viz., granite, granitell, porphyry, hornblende, felspar, and quartz. Over this immense assemblage of mountainous obstructions to the traveller, a communication is formed with the northern and southern sides of the ridge, by a narrow defile. The celebrated Plinlimmon proudly elevates his lofty crest above a range of table land, extending from the vicinity of Llanvair in the north-east, till they decline in the south-west, and end in the abrupt cliffs which bound part of the bay of Cardigan, near Aberystwith. Among particular elevations in this line, after the sovereign of the group, the Carno mountains stand the most pre-eminent. Plinlimmon comprises granite, granitell, or Kirwan, composed of quartz and short, siliceous and schistose porphyry, intersected with numerous and expansive veins of pure quartz. The secondary hills chiefly consist of primitive schistus, accompanied with quartz. Some of the schistus is of a fine texture, and laminates into excellent slate; but the greater part is of a coarse kind. South Wales, though not equally mountainous with the northern part of the principality, nor so distinguishable for its alpine heights, yet is far from being deficient in elevations and depressions.

An extensive chain of mountains stretches from Bleddva forest, north-east of Llandrindod wells in Radnorshire; crosses the northern part of Brecknockshire; continues in a south-westerly direction through Caermarthenshire; and terminates in the conspicuous ridge of the Prescelly, or Proscleu mountains, in the county of Pembroke. The most distinguished eminences in this line are the group called the Yellow mountains, Cwm Rhysglog, Pen y cader, Mynydd castell, Newydd Carreg Wen, and Llanvernach. The Fothoc hills on the eastern side of Brecknockshire commence another line, principally known under the general appellation of the Black mountains, from the appearance given to them by the dark vegetable covering of heath and ling. Among individual elevations remarkable for their height, are Tre beddw mountain, Pen Mallard hills, the Black mountains strictly so denominated, and the high table land, which in the south part of Caermarthenshire is closed by the isolated mountain called Penbre hill: These mountainous tracks abound with various kinds of valuable minerals, mines of which are worked in numerous places; and abounding, as they do, with multifarious, rare, and scarce vegetable productions, afford an ample field for botanical researches. In many instances also they are accompanied with the most delicious and romantic valleys, through which innumerable rivers and streams, flowing from countless lakes, in meandering courses, deliver their waters to the sea; valleys which, in point of fertility, beauty, and picturesque scenery, stand unrivalled.

Numerous lakes are scattered among these mountains, which it would be useless to enumerate. They amount, according to some accounts, to between 50 and 60, and in a manuscript description of North Wales, 62 are mentioned under their proper appellations. The most distinguished for extent, or the beauty of the surrounding scenery, in North Wales, are, Llyniau Nantle, Llyn Cywellin, Llyniau Llanberries, and Llyn Conway, in Caernarvonshire; with Pimblemeer and Tallyllyn, in Merionethshire. In South Wales, Llyn Bychlyn, in Radnorshire; and Llyn Savathan or Langors pool, in the county of Brecknock.

Wales is remarkable for the profusion of flowing streams with which it is watered. These, issuing from considerable lakes, or aided by their waters, meander through the country, and form excellent harbours at their confluence with the sea. The principal rivers are the Severn, the Wye, the Conway, the Towy, and the Dee, which have not only attained pre-eminence in fame for the utility of their navigation, but, as the theme of poets, have been celebrated in song. The former constitutes the eastern, and the latter the north-eastern boundary of the country, between the embouchures of which many others, though less distinguished in a commercial point of view, yet highly valuable for their fisheries, and other properties, fall into the sea, through an extensive line of coast.

The climate of Wales differs materially from that of the portion of England lying in the same parallel of latitude; assimilating more with the northern parts of the island. Considerable variations, however, are discoverable within the confined limits of this narrow region. In a general view the air is sharp; in the mountainous parts bleak; moderately mild in the vales, and those parts adjacent to the ocean, especially on the southern coast, and particularly in the celebrated vale of Glamorgan. From the greater degrees of cold prevalent in the Cambrian atmosphere, snow is more frequent in Wales than in England, lies much deeper, and is seen covering the tops of the highest mountains for many months in the year. It is observable, when no snow falls, so as to lie, in the track of country eastward of the Severn, the sides of the Welsh hills may be seen with a hoary covering for several days together. The numerous lakes, rivers, and streams of Wales, teem with almost every kind of fresh-water fish; while the sea, environing the coasts, affords a luxuriant addition. Of the feathered tribes, many species, not found in other parts of the island, are inhabitants of this; and some animals rarely to be met with, still frequent the wilds of this diversified country. The goat is here found in his wild state, and is far superior in size, and both in the length and fineness of his hair, to that of most other mountainous countries. The horns of a Cambrian he-goat are sometimes three feet two inches long, and three feet from tip to tip. Though this useful animal has been long domesticated, yet many of the inhabitants in North Wales, particularly in Caernarvonshire and Merionethshire, suffer the goats to run in a wild state, to browse the Alpine shrubs, and bound from crag to crag. These they are accustomed to kill during autumn, for the sake of their fat and skins, either by shooting them with bullets, or running them down with dogs, like deer. Thus goat-shooting and goat-hunting still remain among some of the favourite diversions of the people in Wales. Roe-bucks were anciently numerous, but of late they have been confined to the most intricate parts of the country, and instances of seeing any extremely rare. The pine martin, in Welsh called bela goed, inhabits some of the wooded parts of Merionethshire and Caernarvonshire. The beaver, or the broad tailed animal, is no longer to be found; but the otter is constantly to be found in the lakes. Among the land and sea birds, Wales has numbers in common with England, and some peculiar to itself. Of the latter description is the golden eagle, that breeds among the Snowdonian mountains; and the peregrine falcon, which furnished the amusement of falconry to our ancestors, breeds prolifically among the rocks in Caernarvonshire. With respect to plants, such is the profusion with which nature has displayed her powers in these Alpine regions, that to enumerate them would be to compose a botanical nomenclature.

Silver is found in Cardiganshire, though not exclusively in what may be called silver mines. One of the mines produces silver ore, lead ore, and quartz; and from the rich produce of the more precious metal formerly obtained, it received the appellation of the Welsh Potosi. Other mines in the same county contain similar substances, though they are not equally productive in silver. Llanvair is at present the richest mine worked in the principality; comprising silver, lead, quartz, spar, with a small portion of copper, and yields about one-sixth of lead ore. About 60 to 80 ounces of silver are extracted from a ton of ore, and twelve hundred and a half weight of lead. There is a mine of copper in Cardiganshire, the ore of which contains one-twentieth part of pure metal. Several trials for working this mine were made at different times, but none succeeded till the year 1773, when the vein of copper was first discovered, and about 20 tons of ore were raised; but though the ore in the year 1791 sold as high as 25*l.* per ton, yet the valuable concern has been for several years entirely neglected. In Llanymynech rock, Montgomeryshire, consisting of limestone, are shallow pits, the remains of Roman copper works, and numerous pieces of copper lie loose about the surface. Indeed, the whole mass of the hill seems more or less impregnated with this metal; for wherever it is uncovered, evident cupreous marks are clearly visible. Lead is found in a variety of places throughout Wales, but particularly in the counties of Flint, Caernarvon, Montgomery, Caermarthen, and Cardigan; indeed the latter may be considered as the most extensive and richest mining field in Britain. A mineral tract stretches from Pen yr allt or Bryn digri, in a line to the western borders of the parish of Holywell in Flintshire, and is known under the name of the Whiteford rake. The ores differ in quality; the lamellated or common kind, usually named potter's ore, yields from 1400 to 1600 $\frac{1}{4}$ of lead, from 2000 of the ore; but the last produce is rare. The veins are found either in chert or limestone rocks; and some of the best ore has been dug at the depth of 90 yards. In this track several levels have been driven, and shafts sunk, and lead continues to be obtained in very considerable quantities. Between Gwydir and Capel Cerrig, in Caernarvonshire, within an extensive dip between lofty mountains, are very extensive lead works. The principal iron-works are Merthyr Tydvil, Aberdare, and Cyfartha in Glamorgan-shire; and the Union, Llanelly, Beaufort works, and Hirvain furnace, in Brecknockshire. It has generally been remarked, that wherever iron is discoverable, coal is not far distant; either underlaying it, or lying in collateral strata. This eligible substitute for ligneous fuel is found in every county of Wales, except Cardigan, Merioneth, and Caernarvon; and perhaps time will evince, that those are not destitute of this primary article of convenience. In North Wales, the principal coal-works are in the vicinity of Caergwre, at Bagilt, near Holywell, and Bychton and Mostyn in the parish of Whiteford, Flintshire; near Chirk, Ruabon, and Wrexham, in the county of Denbigh; at several several places along the line of the canal in Montgomeryshire, and Maltraeth, Anglesea. So plentiful are coals in the four southernmost counties of the principality, that it is only to sink in certain directions, to be assured of ultimate success. The coal sometimes underlays the calcareous strata, or in the miners' phrase, has a limestone roof; but more frequently it is found on the northern or southern side of a limestone ridge; and when a track of low land is included between two such ridges, it may be inferred that coal lies beneath. Two parallel lines of calcareous strata extend through South Wales in an easterly direction, from St. George's channel across the whole country. These are accompanied by two lines of coal. Both are not uniformly visible together, but often where the coal appears near the surface, the limestone dips or inclines towards the centre of the earth, and vice versa. Upon the first or upper line coals have been found in different points, viz., at Johnston, Picton, Jeffreston, and Begkeley, Pembrokeshire. Thence keeping on the southern side of the limestone ridge, it crosses the Towy, forming the bar at the mouth of that river; and passing through the upper part of Caermarthenshire, Brecknockshire, and Monmouthshire, crosses the Severn to the collieries of Kingswood, near Bristol. The second or lower line commences near Williamston in Pembrokeshire, and parallel with the limestone, takes the water beyond the coal works at Sandersfoot in the bay of Tenby; then crossing the peninsula of Gower, it again dips, Swansea bay re-appears near Kenfig in Glamorganshire, passes Caerphilly castle, visits Newport, Monmouthshire, where numerous collieries are worked, and, crossing the Severn sea, is again discoverable in the same direction at the coal works of Paulton and Radstock, in the county of Somerset. On the same bearing these lines might be further traced, both in an easterly and westerly direction, and would serve as a clue to other lines of coal ground in the stratified tracks throughout the kingdom. Almost all the varieties of coal are produced in Wales. There is little doubt but the mines in Wales were known to the Romans, by whom they were worked. They were afterwards worked by the ancient Britons; but little progress was made by them in the art of mining. The restrictions imposed on the trade for the benefit of the king also, in later times, obstructed the progress of mining, as no person could search for ore unless he was empowered by a royal grant. Considerable progress was made during the reign of queen Elizabeth in mining; but it was not till the reign of king William, when all the restrictive statutes on this branch of industry were repealed, that the hidden treasures of the earth were laid completely open to the industry of individuals. Ever since this period the mining trade has continued to flourish.

The agriculture of Wales may be considered as very far behind that of England. The implements employed are rude and ill constructed; and the Welsh farmer has no skilful mode of managing his land, which he exhausts by a succession of crops. There are, however, many exceptions among individuals; and better notions of farming are generally spreading through the principality. Almost in every county there has been found an association of intelligent agriculturists, for the purpose of improving the country by the introduction and encouragement of a better system of husbandry. Until of late years the roads throughout Wales were indifferent in the extreme. Except the two great mail roads, forming the communication with the north and south of Ireland, by way of Milford and Holyhead, whence the packets sail to that country, scarcely a road could be found calculated for the passing of carriages. To this essential point for profit, convenience, and comfort, the great proprietors have of late years laudably directed their attention, and with the most beneficial effect. The country may now be traversed in almost every direction; and few towns are devoid of the accommodating vehicle, a post chaise. Many of the roads of the interior are narrow, and from the nature of the country, abound with frequent and long ascents and descents; but they are no longer what formerly they were, merely land-flood gullies, or narrow hollows, down the centre of which the waters flowed, to the great annoyance and frequent peril of the traveller. Under the auspices of the public spirited nobleman, the late lord Penrhyn, a grand road has been cut through the immense range of lofty mountains denominated Snowdonia, by which a fine extensive communication has been opened between the internal parts of North Wales and the coast; and the great thoroughfare from London to Dublin by way of Holyhead, diminished in length, compared with the former one by way of Shrewsbury and Conway, 25 miles. Numerous roads have been widened, shortened, and otherwise ameliorated by the addition of drains, arches, bridges, &c., to the great accommodation of travellers, and general benefit of the inhabitants. The great improvement of internal navigation had long been neglected in this country, though it was equally capable with England of such advantages. The first project of this nature which was attempted was the junction of the navigation on the rivers Severn and Dee, by opening an aquatic communication through the counties of Denbigh and Flint, with various ramifications into the mining and manufacturing districts in the adjacent counties. This plan was carried into effect by cutting a canal from the Severn near Shrewsbury, to the Dee in the vicinity of Chester. The act for this canal was obtained in 1794. It is 57 miles long, with 537 feet lockage, connecting the severn with the Mersey, and sending out various lateral branches at convenient points. This is called the Ellesmere canal. The Montgomery canal, which was begun in 1794, unites with a branch of the Ellesmere canal, very near Llanymnech, and there crosses the river Verrwy, where it joins another branch of the Ellesmere canal; and then goes by Gwern-felu, where a cut branches off to Guilsfield and Welshpool; and from thence proceeds nearly parallel with the Severn, by Berhiew; to Newtown, in Montgomeryshire. This canal is 27 miles long, besides the cuts, and the lockage is 225 feet. The Glamorgan canal, which connects Merthyr Tydvil with the port of Bardiff, was begun in 1791, and completed in 1798. It is 26 miles long, has 40 locks, and an elevation of 570 feet. The Aberdare canal was begun about the year 1794. It joins the Glamorgan canal at the fork made by the junction of the little river Cynon with the river Taffe. It is $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles long. The Neath canal is about 12 miles long. It extends from Neath in Glamorganshire, to Pont Neath Vaughan in the same county; the mountains abounding in coals, limestone, iron, ore, copper, and lead. It joins the river Neath, about a mile below the town of Neath. The Brecknock canal unites with the Monmouth canal, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Newport, and one mile from Pontypool. It crosses the river Avon, where, by a tunnel, it goes through the highlands there, about 220 yards in length, and passes the town of Abergavenny, towards the Usk, proceeding parallel with that river to Brecknock. The Swansea canal goes from the town of Swansea in Glamorganshire, by the Morristown copper-works, and thence runs parallel with the river Tawy, crosses the little river Twrch, and ends at Hen-noyadd. It is 17 miles long, and has 373 feet rise.

Manufactures, till within a few years, were not very extensively diffused, nor could they be considered of much account in the general scale of productive industry. Wales, however, for centuries, was celebrated for its flannels; and though competitors are found in Yorkshire, and other parts of the north of England, yet the country may be still considered as standing unrivalled in the manufacture of this useful article. The trade is principally confined to North Wales. The different articles of manufacture are webs, flannels, stockings, wigs, gloves, and socks. Webs are distinguished by the trade into two sorts; first, strong, or high country cloth; second, small, or low country cloth. Strong cloth is made in Merionethshire, and principally in the neighbourhood of Dolgelli and Machynlleth. Almost every little farmer makes webs, and few cottages in these parts are without a loom: all kinds of wool are used indiscriminately; and a considerable quantity of refuse from the wool-staplers and skimmers, is collected from all quarters for this purpose.

Much

Much Kentish wool used to be imported. Many farmers, however, employ wool of their own growth, and this produces by far the best kind of cloth. The standard width of this article is seven-eighths of a yard; the length of a piece, or what is emphatically styled a web, is about 200 yards: this consists of two ends, each 100 yards, thus divided for the convenience of carriage. The quality is necessarily of various degrees. The market for this cloth was Shrewsbury; but it is now little more than nominally so. A market, however, is regularly held every Thursday, in a great room belonging to the Drapers' company, into which none but the members of that corporation are admitted. Small cloth is the produce of Denbighshire. It is entirely manufactured within the parish of the Glynn, a large tract of country, including Llangollen and Corwen. There is no established factory for this article. Small cloth is about one-eighth of a yard narrower than strong cloth; its length is the same. This cloth is chiefly sold in a dyed state. Stockings, wigs, socks, gloves, and other small knit articles, are sold chiefly at Bala, being made in the town and neighbourhood; they are generally purchased by Welsh hosiers, who travel through the adjoining English counties, and supply the shops and warehouses; from the latter they are dispersed through the island. Stockings are of all colours, greys of various shades, white, blue, red, &c., which sell from six to nine shillings per dozen. Very considerable manufactures of cottons and cotton twist have been established in the counties of Flint and Denbigh, the principal of which are at Northop, Greenfield, Sceiviog, Newmarket, and Denbigh. Numerous manufactures of copper, iron, lead, tin-plates, &c., have been set up both in North and South Wales. The commerce of Wales may justly be considered at present in its infancy, being chiefly confined to the coasting trade. Except Caernarvon and Swansea, which have lately extended their views to Spain, Portugal, and the West Indies; few of the Welsh ports possess vessels of very considerable tonnage, though no part of the island contains a greater proportion of harbours and roads, some of which are safe and good, and more might soon be made such, by the building of piers and other improvements, which are obvious at the respective places. For there is no reason to doubt, but were the public attention paid to this manifest scheme for enriching the principality, that it would be found very practicable to supply the defects of nature in many instances by art, so as to render several of the Welsh havens, now barred by choaking sands, capable of receiving ships of burden.

The Welsh have many strange customs and peculiar superstitions. They have a firm belief in supernatural spirits, such as witches, fairies, and other existences of this nature; and in many houses there is some charm or defence against these venomous spirits. These superstitions are the consequence of ignorance, and by some are supposed to be connected with the wild mountain scenery of the country, which is calculated to give rise to gloomy and romantic notions. Hence the same notions are said to prevail among the inhabitants of all mountainous countries. The Welsh are also remarkably fond of poetry and music; and their language is said to be peculiarly adapted to poetical effusions. The ancient language of Wales is, however, getting fast into disuse through the principality, more especially the southern part. The gentry of the country are principally educated in England, and consequently few of them speak it, and many of them wish for its extermination. The example of the higher classes is become contagious; and ere long the language and manners of Cambria will by approximation coalesce with those of the inhabitants to the east of the Severn. Family distinction is held in great estimation in Wales. Pride of ancestry was reckoned a delicate and essential point among the ancient Britons. So deeply was this principle rooted, that even the lowest classes of the people carefully preserved the direct and collateral descents of their families, and were in general able from memory, not only to recite the names of their proximate progenitors, but to trace their various relations back through numerous generations; and this principle is still cherished in modern Wales. Wales sends twenty-four members to parliament, viz., one for each county, and one for the principal town in each county, except that of Merioneth, in the room of which, two towns in the county of Pembroke send one member each. The principality of Wales was long an independent and separate sovereignty from England; and it is strongly marked out by nature as a detached district, being an almost continued range of mountains more or less wild and lofty, and intersected by valleys more or less extensive and fertile. The language, manners, and customs are also widely different from those of England. The ancient internal dimensions of Wales have been contracted, by taking from it the whole county of Monmouth, and a part of several of the adjacent English counties. In point of population and fertility, the district of South Wales has by far the superiority over the North; and although the whole is very mountainous, its produce is fully sufficient for its abstemious inhabitants. Wales was originally peopled by the Ordovires and the Silures, who were subdued by the Romans. The ancient Britons having been driven from their homes by the Saxons, it was soon after divided into six regions, each having their own king, till the year 843, when Roderic the Great became the sole monarch of Wales. At his death it was divided among his three sons, and called North-Wales, South Wales, and Powis Land; but the latter portion was soon swallowed up and divided among the other two. Llewellyn ap Gryf-fyth was the last prince who exerted himself in the independence of Wales; he was subdued by Edward I., in 1285, and fell in the field of battle. From that time Wales has been annexed to the English crown; but the union was not complete till the reign of Henry VIII., when the government and laws were formed agreeably to those of England. It is now under the province of York; the bishoprics of St. David's, Bangor, Llandaff, and St. Asaph; and is divided into four circuits, viz., the Chester circuit, for the counties of Chester, Flint, Denbigh, and Montgomery; the northern circuit, for Anglesey, Caernarvon, and Merioneth; the south-eastern circuit, for Radnor, Brecon, and Glamorgan; and the south-western circuit, for Pembroke, Cardigan, and Caernarvon.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1655.

WALES, a parish of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles south-south-east of Rotherham.

WALES, a township of the United States, in Lincoln county, Maine. Population 471.

WALES, a township of the United States, in Niagara county, New York.

WALES, NEW SOUTH. In the article NEW HOLLAND, we have given a full account of the history of this colony from its first settlement, until the year 1818. We noticed there how rapidly it was increasing in numbers, in prosperity, and even in morality; and we find the flattering prospects then opening to view, have been to a great extent realized. We cannot present our readers, perhaps, with a better view of the recent progress and present state of New South Wales, than by laying before them, 1st. A condensed account of the report made by Professor Bigge, in 1821; and, 2d. A summary of the conclusions derived from perusing the very excellent work of Mr. Cunningham, published this year (1828).

1st. According to Mr. Bigge's report:—"The increase of inhabitants by births, owing to the great disproportion between the males and females, has been very small since the commencement of the settlement, and must continue to be so till the sexes approach nearer to an equality than they do at present. The whole number of convicts exported to New South Wales and to Van Dieman's Land, from the year 1787 to 1820, was 22,217 males and 3661 females; and the present population of all the settlements in the latter year amounted only to 29,407 persons. The inhabitants of New South Wales, amounting to 23,939, are classed in the following manner, viz., 1307 are persons who came to the colony as free settlers; 1409 are persons born in the settlement; 3255 were become free by the expiration of the terms for which they had been sentenced; 159 had received absolute pardons;

5 U

pardons; 962 had received conditional pardons; 1422 were convicts, but with tickets of leave, which enabled them to work on their own account; 220 were serving on board colonial vessels; 9451 were convicts in a state of servitude; and the remainder, 5668, consisted of children of both sexes. The whole number of females, of all classes and ages, in 1820, were 6310, viz., 3707 women, and 2603 female children. It appears that in thirty-three years, from 1787 to 1820, during which the whole numbers transported have been 25,878 persons, the number of the convicts who have died, who have lawfully returned to Great Britain, or who have made their escape, amounts together to 7080. The greater part of the inhabitants reside either in the town of Sidney (the capital), or in its immediate vicinity. The returns from that place make the inhabitants to be 12,079, of whom 4457 are convicts.

"Whilst this colony has been increasing in numbers, there is reason to hope it has been instrumental in somewhat improving the moral character of the persons transported to it; or, at least, that their progeny is placed in circumstances less exposed to temptation than it would have been under the tuition of such parents in Europe. There has been a gradual, but general improvement in the moral condition of the society, by the children of convicts arriving at maturity; thus forming, with the free settlers, a nearer proportion to the convicts than was the case, at the more early periods of the settlement. The remitted convicts, and those whose time has expired, seem, in some instances, to become useful members of society. Mr. Bigge relates, that out of 4376 remitted convicts, including those whose time has expired, 369 may be considered as respectable in conduct and character.

"The proportion of landed property acquired by those classes of inhabitants, may be considered as evidence of some improvement in their condition and character. The whole quantity of land granted was, in 1820, 389,288 acres. Of this portion, 20,317 belonged to remitted convicts, and 54,693 to convicts whose time has expired. Thus those classes seem to have a fair proportion of the landed property of the settlement; and we think it may be inferred from the Commissioner's Reports, that they possess a large share of the moveable property likewise, as they seem to be the principal persons who own vessels and carry on distant trade. Mr. Bigge remarks, that "though the free settlers have not, as a body, been the most successful improvers, either of their own condition or that of the colony, yet the best cultivated estates, and the greatest quantity of cattle, belong to them, though they have not lately engaged in mercantile operations." The large grants that have been recently made have rendered the quantity of land, held by classes of individuals, a less accurate criterion of property than it was before those grants were made. In the year 1810, the land cleared was to the land granted as $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 4; but in the year 1820, when the land granted was 389,000 acres, the portions returned as cleared were 54,898 acres, or as $1\frac{1}{10}$ to 7. Of the cleared land, in 1820, 16,706 acres were cultivated to yield wheat, 11,270 maize, 1230 barley, 379 rye and oats, 213 pease and beans, 504 potatoes, and 1094 in orchards and garden ground.

"The future progress of this colony must depend mainly on the productions raised from the soil, and hence the condition of its agriculture, including the breeding of cattle, becomes a most interesting subject. The first land settled near Sydney, though then moderately fertile, has been exhausted by over-cropping, so that a considerable expenditure in manure, or in labour for fallowing, or in both, is indispensable to renew its productive powers. It has hence become necessary to pay attention to the production and proper application of manure, as well as to the cultivation of artificial food for the cattle. Lucerne, sanfoin, and burnet, as well as rye-grass and meadow fescue, have been introduced and gradually assimilated to the climate. It has been remarked of the grass seeds imported from Europe, that their first and second-flowering is in conformity with the season in Europe, but that the next time they flower according to the season of New South Wales. The cost of reclaiming an acre of forest land, of converting it into tillage, and of sowing it with wheat, is calculated to amount to 6*l.* 10*s.* The cost of the same operation to fit it for maize would be 5*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* Mr. Cox, the surveyor, has estimated, that on a farm of 50 acres, when the government supplied subsistence for six months, the expense would exceed the produce 5*l.* 19*s.* the first year; that in the second year the produce would exceed the expenditure 49*l.* 10*s.*, and in the third year 36*l.* 10*s.*; after which, recourse must be had to the renovating power of manure. Maize and wheat are grown on the same land in one year; the former when hoed well, and twice hilled up, being found a good preparation for the latter. Wheat is sowed in March or April, and harvested in November. Maize is sowed in November, and gathered in April. The produce of wheat on the Hawkesbury settlement, from 1804 to 1814, was from 21 to 25 bushels to the acre, and since the last of those periods from 15 to 20 bushels. The land on the rising ground is inferior to that on the borders of the river, but the wheat grown on it, though yielding less in quantity, is of a superior quality. Mr. Oxley, the Surveyor-General, thinks the average produce of wheat on the colony does not exceed 10 bushels to the acre; whilst, on land of similar quality, the produce of maize is from 30 to 60 bushels. The price of wheat has been from 11*s.* to 12*s.* 6*d.*; of maize from 3*s.* to 7*s.* per bushel.

"Besides the grains, attempts have been directed to several articles whose cultivation appears suitable to the climate. Flax has been grown with success, but has not been extended from the very limited demand for it in the settlement. Tobacco has been well produced, but from want of sufficient practice in curing the leaves, the tobacco of Brazil has been so generally preferred, as to leave but little inducement to grow it in the colony; though of late, some improvements in drying offer a prospect of more success. Vines have not yet been prosperous, owing to blights, which probably have arisen from improper exposure to prevailing winds. As this is an object of great importance, Mr. J. Macarthur has paid much attention to rectify any errors, and hopes are entertained of more favourable results in future, than have hitherto been produced. The same gentleman, one of the earliest settlers, with his characteristic spirit, has been at pains to introduce the olive, and as far as can be judged from the trees, which are yet but in their infancy, with the greatest earnest of success. All the finer fruits of Europe are most profusely brought forth, and in some gardens, the choicer kinds of the tropics are successfully cultivated.

"The breeding of cattle must, however, be the most sure road to the prosperity of the colony for some years to come. The numbers of horned cattle have quintupled between the years 1810 and 1820. In the latter year they amounted to 54,103; besides those tame cattle, a race have grown up wild in the woods, derived from some stock which early strayed from the settlement, and which were supposed to have perished, till their offspring were discovered in large herds in the interior. The sheep have been tripled in ten years. In 1820, they amounted to 99,487. Mr. Macarthur has a flock of 6300, of which about 300 are pure Merinos, and yield wool of excellent fineness. As the duty on wool from New South Wales has been reduced to 3*d.* per lb. in Great Britain, eager hopes are entertained of success, which will naturally tend to increase the numbers, and to improve the quality of the wool. The average weight of the fleeces of the New South Wales Merinos is about 2 lb. 7 oz. Some few bales of that wool have been sold in England at 5*s.* 6*d.* per lb., and one at 10*s.* 4*d.*; but the far greater part have hitherto sold at about 2*s.* The importation into Great Britain has been, in 1819, 71,299 lbs.; 1820, 112,616 lbs.; 1821, 175,433 lbs. The increase of horses has been in nearly the same ratio as the sheep. In 1810, they were 1114, and in 1820, 3639. They are generally of the European breed, with a mixture of the Arabian bian brought from India. Pigs and poultry have increased in nearly the same proportion as other stock. The mineral productions of this settlement are yet but slightly ascertained. Iron has been found about eight miles from Port-Dalrymple, which is said to be equal in quality to that of Sweden. The mines have not yet been worked. There is abundance of coal at Hunter's river, about 50 miles north of Port-Jackson. The vein is three feet thick, was worked by a passage from the river, but is now by a shaft 112 feet deep, and the labour of twenty-seven men can extract twenty tons per day. In this labour, the criminals from Sydney are destined to be employed. Lime, for building, has hitherto been burnt from oyster-shells, as no limestone has been discovered near the settled ports. Common salt has been extracted from seawater, but from the bitter not being accurately separated, the culinary salt of England, notwithstanding its price, is generally preferred.

"The circumstances of the colony are not favourable to manufactories; but some hats, blankets, woollen stockings, and coarse cloths, have been made from the native wool. Pottery wares, of different kinds, have also been made, but they have not yet acquired the art of glazing them. The most advantageous operation of manufacture is tanning; but, from want of sufficient practical knowledge, it has been hitherto badly performed. The bark of the mimosa, a tree that abounds in the interior, is found to contain the requisite properties for tanning hides. With a little more experience, and with some regulations to prevent damage to the hides on flaying them, the colony might supply itself with leather from the cattle bred and slaughtered at home.

"The foreign trade of the colony consists of the importations of sugar, spirits, soap, and cotton goods, from Bengal; of tea, sugar-candy, silks, and some clothing, made of English cloth, from China; of iron and hardware, cottons, millinery, wines, porter, cheese, and salted provisions, from England; and of sugar, tobacco, and spirits, from Brazil. The exportations have hitherto been but trifling. Wool has been already noticed: seal skins and fish oil might have formed returns but for their being charged with higher duty in England, if taken by a colonial than by a British vessel. Exportations to China have been made of sandal-wood, and pearl-shells, previously collected at the Islands. Some attempts have been made to export flour to the Cape of Good Hope, and horses to Batavia; some coals have also been shipped for Bengal and for Batavia. The shipping of the colony consists of twenty-seven vessels, from 15 to 184 tons burden. This branch of industry is much retarded in its growth by the restrictions which are found necessary to prevent the escape of convicts by sea.

"The external trade has been assisted by the establishment of a bank; but the institution has been injured by having suffered its cashier to defraud it of nearly 10,000*l.*, being half the capital. The principal circulating medium is the bills of the Government, or receipts for stores received by the Commissary, which amount to about 40,000*l.* The smaller operations are performed by means of the notes of the bank, which are issued for 2*s.* 6*d.*, 5*s.*, 10*s.*, 20*s.*, and five pounds. The legal interest of money in the colony was 8, and is now raised to 10 per cent.

"By the accounts of the treasurer for seven years, ending September, 1821, it appears that the taxes collected in that period amounted to 174,310*l.* 10*s.*, and the expenditure to 163,790*l.* 8*s.* The income is derived chiefly from port dues, import duties, licences, and tolls. The chief expenditure has been on the establishments for male and female orphans, and for public schools—for public buildings and works—for salaries to officers—and for public and judicial charges.

"In all the grants, reservations of land have been made for the support of the clergy, and for the maintenance of schools. The clergy are under the inspection of one of their number, denominated senior chaplain. Some Roman Catholic chapels are building, and one for the Wesleyan Methodists. The public services of religion are reported to be attentively observed. The administration of justice is exected in a court established by special act of Parliament, in which the chief is an English barrister; and recently an attorney-general has been appointed, who is to be the general prosecutor of all offences."

2d. We proceed to Mr. Cunningham's account of the present state of New South Wales. It does not contain those accurate statistical accounts that are found in Bigge's Report; but is far more useful and entertaining. It is a work that bears the stamp of a strong and original mind, and the details are so minute and practical, that it is absolutely a necessary vade mecum to all emigrants.

"The coloured population, which is very numerous, is described by Mr. Cunningham as constituted chiefly of blacks, who are variously civilized; some having a great deal of ferocity, and continually occupied in attempts at murdering the whites, others living by begging; some by shooting wild animals for our use, and a few acting in the capacity of servants. They are all distinguished for great quickness of apprehension, consummate address, and great powers of mimicry. Like most savages, they revenge a blow or an insult by death, and they often kill their children. Those who trade with the whites have added the vices of civilization to those of the savage state, and prostitute their wives for the most trifling considerations. The rapidity with which they acquire habits of consequence and dandyism when in the towns, their cunning and their gaiety, have furnished Mr. Cunningham with some very amusing stories.

"The white population are divided into three classes, namely, the convicts, the natives, and free emigrants. The first are improved in morals to an extent we should, a priori, have expected impossible. The second, though born chiefly of the former, constitute a class of sober, honest, and industrious citizens, of great value. They are not much inclined to the occupation of agriculture, because they consider it degrading, as the convicts are of course extensively employed in it: but nearly all the manufactures are in the hands of this class. The third, who are people for the most part of some property, or who hold offices under our government, may be said to be rather the worst part of respectable English society; and their notion that they are in an immoral country, seems to give them a tendency to "do at Rome as they do at Rome:" consequently they are often highly disreputable.

"There never was a more amusing picture of society than that presented by these classes. The slang language of our St. Giles's, and the fighting clubs, is transplanted here, and is heard in full display in the courts of justice. All our little affectations have emigrated: 'name-cards; at homes;' the etiquette of reciprocal morning calls, and all such follies, are duly observed. But the most laughable of all is the aristocratic spirit that animates the whole colony. The exclusives refuse to visit any but certain classes of the emigrants; the latter will not visit emancipists (the emancipated convicts). The emancipist holds in abhorrence the convict; who is also the contempt of the native. The stiffness and reserve of manner so ungraceful in the English character here, is aped and exaggerated in New South Wales, and the little squabbles and feuds it engenders form a page in the history of society instructive though ludicrous.

"The inhabited parts of the colony cultivated by free people may be divided into four. First, the old settled division, comprehending the county of Cumberland (in which Sydney lies), and the county of Camden, southerly, between Cumberland and Argyle. Secondly, the counties of Argyle and Westmoreland, and the unnamed country beyond, to the left, or southward of Sydney. Thirdly, the counties of Northumberland and Durham to the right, or northward of Sydney, situated upon Hunter's River: and, fourthly, the counties of Roxburgh and Londonderry, beyond the Blue mountains, interiorly, or westward of Sydney, known best by the name of Bathurst. The three first divisions all lie between the barrier range of mountains, stretching parallel to the coast forty miles interiorly, and the sea, consequently all their waters run into the sea easterly; while while the fourth division (Bathurst) lying beyond this barrier range, consequently its waters run westerly, and terminate in the immense interior swamps, the outlet whereof is yet a mystery. Carriage roads lead from Sydney to them all, excepting the third division spoken of (upon Hunter's River to the northward), to which there is yet but a cattle track. The main road from Sydney runs on in a line with George Street toward Paramatta; another road strikes off to the left of this, about the sixth milestone, towards Liverpool, and thence on to the southern counties of Argyle and Westmoreland. Just before reaching Paramatta, a road turns off to join that leading to Liverpool, which town it connects with Paramatta. One road turning off from the portion of the town of Paramatta situated beyond the river, runs backward along the right bank of the stream towards Sydney, to communicate with the numerous farms upon that line; while three others branch off toward the interior from near this point. The first, toward the right, runs on to the town of Windsor, situated upon the river Hawkesbury, at the foot of the Blue mountains, where, crossing that river by a punt, you join the road leading to Hunter's River. The second road, to the left of this, carries you to Richmond (twenty-one miles), situated upon the Hawkesbury, at the foot of the Blue mountains, also; and crossing the river by the punt, or at a convenient ford, you may join the Hunter's River road from this too, or proceed on to Bathurst, beyond these mountains, by the new cut now in progress. The third road, farther to the left still, passes on to Emu Ford, likewise upon the Hawkesbury, where it crosses the Blue mountains to Bathurst, this being the original route by which that fine portion of country was first discovered. By means of these roads, Sydney is therefore connected with all the colonised portions of our territory. A number of cross-roads in the county of Cumberland either connect these main ones, or open laterally other portions of the country.

"Cumberland commences at Broken Bay, the outlet of the Hawkesbury, sixteen miles beyond Sydney, and stretches along the sea-coast to the southward fifty-six miles, counting in this line in southerly succession the harbours of Broken Bay, Port Jackson, and Botany Bay, calculated for large ships, and Port Hacking, for small craft. It is about forty miles broad, backed by the Blue mountain range westerly, with the Hawkesbury sweeping round it, and forming its northern and western boundaries, as the sea does its eastern; while the Cow-pasture river, from where it joins the Hawkesbury, extending south-easterly to an origin within thirty-five miles of the sea, forms its boundary in that direction, leaving thus only these thirty-five miles on its southern line in which it is not surrounded by water. Cumberland contains the towns of Sydney, Paramatta, Windsor, and Liverpool, all fast increasing in population and rising into importance. Camden lies to the southward between Cumberland and Argyle,—the Cow-pasture from the south-east and Wingecarabee from the south-west forming by their junction with the Hawkesbury its boundaries on these lines,—lying thus in the fork formed by their meeting. It extends in length sixty miles to the south-east, Shoalhaven port and river forming its boundary in that direction, thirty-five miles to the south of Port Jackson; the sea, in a direct line of thirty-five miles, constituting its eastern boundary. Its breadth is about twenty-six miles.—Shoal-haven is its only port, and this too calculated but for small vessels, being very dangerous of entry, even for these, from the number of its shoals. This port forms the extreme point of coast population southerly, Messrs. Berry and Wolstonecroft, two of our most eminent merchants, having a flourishing and extensive establishment here, where timber is sawed for the Sydney market, and tobacco and various other valuable products cultivated, besides a large herd of cattle maintained. No towns have yet been founded in Camden, and it possesses no artificial cross-roads; but the openness and easy accessibility of nearly all the fertile portion render these in a great measure unnecessary at present. Camden is watered by the branches of the Cow-pasture and Wingecarabee rivers falling into the Hawkesbury, and by some stray branches of the Shoal-haven river; while Cumberland has, to supply its wants, the south and east creeks coming from the south-east to join the Hawkesbury at Windsor, as also the south-west arm of the latter river terminating in Broken Bay, and George's River passing Liverpool, and falling into Botany Bay. Various small streams and chains of ponds are found throughout both; but, generally speaking, these two countries are very defectively watered, and few springs are to be found.

"In Cumberland, the land immediately bordering upon the coast is of a light, barren, sandy nature, thinly besprinkled with stunted bushes; while, from ten to fifteen miles interiorly, it consists of a poor clayey or ironstone soil, thickly covered with our usual evergreen forest timber and underwood. Beyond this commences a fine timbered country, perfectly clear of brush, through which you might, generally speaking, drive a gig in all directions, without any impediment in the shape of rocks, scrubs, or close forest. This description of country commences immediately beyond Paramatta on one hand, and Liverpool on the other; stretching in length south-easterly obliquely towards the sea about forty miles, and varying in breadth near twenty. The soil upon the immediate banks of the rivers is generally rich flooded alluvial, but in the forests partakes commonly of a poor clayey or ironstone nature, yet bearing usually tolerable crops, even without manure, at the outset. In Camden, the Mittagong range runs south-easterly through its whole length, terminating close to the sea in the Illawarra mountain, fifty miles south of Sydney, down the steep side whereof passes the rugged bridle-road to the beautiful, fertile, and romantic district of Five Islands, or Illawarra. From this range occupying so much of its interior, the quantity of land in Camden capable of cultivation is not very great, though making up tolerably by its richness for deficiency of extent; but the pasture land therein is not exceeded in quality by any in the colony."

The English and foreign commerce is so mixed up with that of Van Dieman's Land, that the two colonies must, in this respect, be taken partially together; six years ago their whole intercourse did not exceed three ships annually, while, in the year preceding June, 1826, there were twenty-four ships from England, conveying numerous respectable emigrants, and importing cargoes of 200,000*l.* value; while the exports, in seventeen ships to England, consisting of wool, timber, pearl shells, &c., amounted to the value of above 100,000*l.*

In 1821, six or seven vessels from India and China were the only foreign traders: now at least twenty-six foreign vessels, laden with the produce of those countries, arrive annually, making, with those entered inland from England and other parts, above fifty sail; with cargoes of at least 400,000*l.* value. There is also a thriving trade with the South Sea islands and New Zealand. Spirits are now distilled here, at a duty of 2*s.* 6*d.* per gallon from grain, and 4*s.* 2*d.* per gallon from sugar and molasses,—while West India rum pays a duty of 6*s.* per gallon, and all other spirits a duty of 7*s.* 6*d.* These protecting duties are quite sufficient, when grain is low, to secure a preponderance in favour of colonial distillation. Tobacco can be cultivated in sufficient quantities to preclude the necessity of importation.

The cultivation of the sugar-cane deserves serious attention, as, in many parts, the soil and climate are suited to its production. It has been objected, that it cannot be raised so cheap here by convict-labour, as elsewhere by slave-labour; but of this there are considerable doubts. It is also clearly practicable to cultivate the tea-plant, as it flourishes luxuriantly in the botanic garden here.

Trepang, or beche-le-mer, is found both on the eastern and western coasts, and is highly esteemed by the Chinese; these, properly cured, might be advantageously bartered for the merchandize of the east. Coals are found in sufficient quantity to become articles of commerce. Timber was a thriving trade; but the low price obtained in the English market market has much injured it. The acacia tree exudes vast quantities of the purest gum.

Our information as to New South Wales, is chiefly valuable for the guides it furnishes as to places of emigration. Our author considers the small capitalist who can command about 1200*l.*, and who designs to lay it out in farming, cannot choose a more eligible situation. 1. Because he is under the institutions of his native country. 2. Because the lands, though not excessively fertile, are much more easily cleared than in North America. 3. Because the expense of passage inland is very little, though this is made up by the great expense that attends the voyage. 4. Because labour is extremely cheap. 5. Because great portions of land remaining unclosed, there is a vast resource for breeding and grazing cattle. 6. Because the climate is very healthy, ague, remittent, yellow, and other fevers being never seen; nor measles, hooping-cough, or small-pox. For the 4th reason, America is, however, a better place for labourers than New South Wales. Mechanics, however, obtain good pay in the latter place. Three or four persons putting their money together in a common stock, may do very well if they have only 200*l.* or 300*l.* each. The people are generally very hospitable.

WALES, New, a name given to a part of North America, situated to the south-east and south-west of Hudson's bay, and divided into North and South. The former name is lost in the more general term of Labrador. New South Wales is situated to the north-west of Canada, and extends along the south borders of Hudson's bay 450 miles, from lat. 54. to 58. N. long. 85. to 95. W.

WALES, POINT, a cape on the west coast of Observatory inlet, on the west coast of North America, so called by captain Vancouver, in memory of Mr. Wales of Christ's hospital. Lat. 54. 42. N. long. 229. 40. E.

WALESBY, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire, near Market Raisen.

WALESEY, a parish of England, in Nottinghamshire; 3 miles north-east of Ollerton.

WALET, a large city of Central Africa, capital of the kingdom of Beeroo. It was described as ten days journey from Benowm, and eleven from Tombuctoo.

WALFF, a town of France, in Alsace, with 1100 inhabitants.

WALFORD, a parish of England, in Herefordshire; 3 miles south-south-west of Ross. Population 838.—Also a hamlet in the same county; 13 miles north-west-by-north of Leominster.

WALGHERTON, a hamlet of England, in Cheshire; 3½ miles south-east-by-east of Nantwich.

WALGRAVE, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; 6½ miles north-west-by-west of Wellingborough. Population 429.

WALGRUND, an island in the gulf of Bothnia, about 10 miles long, and 3 broad. Lat. 63. 13. N. long. 20. 58. E.

WALHAM GREEN, a hamlet of England, county of Middlesex; 6 miles south-west-by-west from St. Paul's, London.

WALHAUSEN, a market town of Prussian Saxony, in Thuringia, on the river Helm.

WALHEM, an inland town of the Netherlands, with 900 inhabitants; 11 miles south-by-east of Antwerp.

WALL, or WALLA, the title of an officer of the police in various parts of the Ottoman empire; who is the deputy of the pacha, and patrols night and day, keeping a watchful eye on the seditious, apprehending robbers, and, like the pacha, judging and condemning without appeal. This officer has a multitude of spies, most of whom are thieves, and by their means knows every thing that passes.

WALILABO, a river of the island of St. Vincent, which runs into the sea; 1 mile north from Prince's bay.

To WALK, v. n. [walen, Germ.; pealcan, Sax. to roll.] To move by leisurely steps, so that one foot is set down before the other is taken up.—A man was seen walking before the door very composedly. Clarendon.—It is used in the ceremonious language of invitation, for come, or go.—Sir, walk in.—I had rather walk here, I thank you. Shakspeare.—To move for exercise or amusement.—What mean you, Cæsar? think you to walk forth? Shakspeare.—To move the slowest pace; not to trot, gallop, or amble. Applied to a horse. To appear as a spectre.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1655.

The spirits of the dead
May walk again; if such things be, thy mother
Appear'd to me last night. Shakspeare.

To act on any occasion.
Do you think, I'd walk in any plot,
Where Madame Sempronio should take place of me,
And Fulvia come i' th' rear. B. Jonson.

To be in motion; applied to a clamorous or abusive female tongue, and is still in low language retained.
As she went, her tongue did walk
In foul reproach, and terms of vile despatch;
Provoking him by her outrageous talk. Spenser.

To act in sleep.—When was it she last walk'd?—
I have seen her rise from her bed, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, read it, and return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. Shakspeare.—To range; to be stirring.

Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do at midnight, have
In them a milder nature, than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakspeare.

To move off; to depart.—When he comes forth, he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.—To act in any particular manner.

I'll love with fear the only God, and walk
As in his presence. Milton.

To travel.—The Lord hath blessed thee; he knoweth thy walk through this wilderness. Deut.

To WALK, v. a. To pass through.—I do not without danger walk these streets. Shakspeare.

No rich or noble knave
Shall walk the world in credit to his grave. Pope.

To lead out, for the sake of air or exercise: as he walked his horse in the meadow.—To conduct; to lead.—I'll walk ye out before me. Beaum. and Fl.

WALK, s. Act of walking for air or exercise.—Nor walk by moonlight without thee, is sweet. Milton.—Gait; step; manner of moving.

Morpheus, of all his numerous train, express'd
The shape of man, and imitated best;
The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,
The habit mimick, and the mien belie. Dryden.

A length of space, or circuit through which one walks.
He usually from hence to th' palace gate
Makes it his walk. Shakspeare.

An avenue set with trees.
He hath left you all his walks,
His private harbours, and new-planted orchards,
On that side the Tiber. Shakspeare.

Way; road; range; place of wandering.—If that way be your walk, you have not far. Milton.—Region; space.
—Wanting an ampler sphere to expatiate in, he opened a boundless walk for his imagination. Pope.—[turbo, Lat.]
A fish. Ainsworth.—Walk is the slowest or least raised pace, or going of a horse.

WALKENAAM, an island of Guiana, at the mouth of the river Essequibo, which is a high state of cultivation, producing abundantly coffee and sugar.

WALKENRIED, a village in the duchy of Brunswick, the chief town of a petty district of the same name; 8 miles north-west of Nordhausen.

WALKER, s. [pealcepe, Sax.] One that walks.—
May no such vicious walkers croud the street. Gay.—One who acts in any particular manner.—There is another sort of disorderly walkers who still keep amongst us. Bp. Compton.—A fuller; a walk mill; a fulling-mill. [Walcher, Dutch, fullo; walcken, Teut. pannum polire, probably from the Lat. calcare. Skinner.]

She curst the weaver, and the walker,
That clothe that had wrought.

Old Ballad.

WALKER, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Long Benton, Northumberland.

WALKER, a township of the United States, in Centre county, Pennsylvania. Population 553.

WALKER'S COVE, a harbour on the west coast of North America, in Behm's canal. It extends about two leagues into the land, and terminates in some marshy ground. Lat. 55. 42. N. long. 229. 20. E.

WALKER'S KEY, one of the small Bahama islands. Lat. 26. 50. N. long. 78. 54. W.

WALKER, POINT, a cape on the south coast of King's island in the North Pacific ocean, at the entrance into Bank's canal. Lat. 51. 57. N. long. 232. 9. E.

WALKERFIELD, or WACHERFIELD, a hamlet of England, county of Durham.

WALKERIA [so named from the Rev. Richard Walker, D.D. Vice-master of Trinity College, and founder of the Botanic Garden at Cambridge], in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order monogynia, natural order uncertain.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth five-parted inferior: segments lanceolate, acute, spreading, permanent. Corolla: petals five, lanceolate, acute, spreading, a little longer than the calyx. Stamina: filaments five, capillary, ascending, shorter by half than the petals. Anthers roundish. Pistil: germ globular, five-cleft. Style setaceous, erect, height of the stamens. Stigma simple. Pericarp: drupes five, obovate-reniform, one-celled. Seeds solitary, reniform, inclosed in a kind of bony shell.—Essential Character. Calyx five-parted, inferior. Corolla five-petalled. Drupes five, one-seeded. Nuts reniform.

1. Walkeria serrata.—This is a small tree, about twelve feet high. Leaves alternate petioled, oblong acuminate, serrate ribbed. Corymbs terminating. Flowers small, yellow, inodorous. Fruit berried drupes, distant, erect, red, finally brown and somewhat wrinkled: pulp thin, drying up with age into a leathery crust: shell of the same form with the drupe, somewhat bony, one-celled, valveless. Common receptacle small, conical, obtuse, fungous, emarginate at the edge for the insertion of the drupes. Proper receptacle, a very short thread from the base of the shell and inserted into the middle of the seed within side. Seed softish to the touch.—Native of the East Indies.

WALKERINGHAM, a parish of England, county of Nottingham. Population 453.

WALKERITH, a hamlet of England, in Lincolnshire; 1 mile south of Gainsborough.

WALKERNE, a parish of England, in Yorkshire; 4 miles east-by-north of Stevenage.

WALKERSVILLE, a post village of the United States, in Centre county, Pennsylvania.—2. A post village of Lincoln county, Georgia.

WALKERTOWN, a post township of the United States, in King and Queen county, Virginia; 45 miles north-east of Richmond.

WALKHAMPTON, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 5 miles south-east-by-east of Tavistock.

WALKINGSTAFF, s. A stick which a man holds to support him in walking.—The club which a man of an ordinary size could not lift, was but a walking-staff for Hercules. Glanville.

WALKINGTON, a parish of England, in Yorkshire, near Beverley. Population 450.

WALKINSTEAD, a parish of England, in Surrey, half a mile east-south-east of Godstone.

WALL, s. [wal, Welsh; vallum, Lat.; pall, Saxon; walle, Dutch.] A series of brick or stone, or other materials carried upwards, and cemented with mortar; the side of a building.—Poor Tom! that eats the wall-newt and the water-newt. Shakspeare.—Fortification; works built for defence. In this sense it is commonly used plurally.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold out love. Shakspeare.

To take the WALL: To take the side next the wall; not to give place.—I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's. Shakspeare.

To WALL, v. a. To inclose with walls; to surround as with a wall.

As if this flesh, that walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable. Shakspeare.

To defend by walls.

The walled towns do work my greater woe:
The forest wide is fitter to resound
The hollow echo of my careful cries. Spenser.

To fill up with a wall.—Walling up that part of the church where the tomb of the saint was placed. Lord Lyttelton.

WALL, a township of England, in Northumberland; 3 miles north of Hexham.—2. A hamlet in the county of Stafford, south of Lichfield.

WALLACE, a small island of the United States, near the coast of South Carolina. Lat. 33. 54. N. long. 78. 35. W.

WALLACETOWN, a thriving and populous village of Scotland, in Ayrshire, in the parish of St. Quivox. The village nearly joins Newton-upon-Ayr, and contains about 1500 inhabitants.

WALLASEY ISLE, in England, situated in the river Crouch, Essex, opposite Fullness Isle. It is about 5 miles long and one broad, and is secured from the sea by a mound of earth.

WALLAXHALL, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Hales Owen, county of Salop.

WALLAZEY, a township of England, in the county of Chester.

WALL-BOTTLE, a township of England, in Northumberland; 4 miles west-by-north of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

WALLCREEPER, s. [picus martius, Lat.] A bird. Ainsworth.

WALLDORF, a village of Germany, in the duchy of Saxe-Meiningen. Population 1100.

WALLDURN, a town of Germany, in Baden; 10 miles south-by-west of Wertheim, with 2500 inhabitants.

WALLENDORF, OLASZI, or WLAHI, a town of Hungary, on the river Hernuth; 20 miles west-by-south of Eperies. Population 2800.

WALLLENIA [so named by Swartz, in honour of Matthew Wallen, Esq., a native of Ireland], in Botany, a genus of the class tetrandria, order monogynia.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leafed, four-cleft, permanent: segments erect, obtuse. Corolla: one-petalled, tubular: tube cylindrical, erect, longer than the calyx: border four-cleft; segments ovate, obtuse, erect, converging, small. Stamina: filaments four, from the bottom of the corolla, wider at the base, erect, longer by half than the corolla, (above the border) diverging. Anthers ovate, erect. Pistil: germ oblong, superior. Style awl-shaped, shorter than the stamens and corolla, permanent. Stigma simple, obtuse. Pericarp: berry roundish, one-celled. Seed one, roundish, covered with a brittle crust.—Essential Character. Calyx four-cleft, inferior. Corolla tubular, four-cleft. Berry one-seeded.

1. Wallenia laurifolia.—This is a tree with a trunk from ten to twenty feet high, covered with an even unarmed bark. Branches long; branchlets round, warted by the fallen leaves. Leaves petioled, oblong acuminate, with a blunt point, somewhat striated, smooth and shining. Petioles short, round, smooth. Stipules none. Panicle terminating, spreading; branches alternate; flowers pedicelled, yellow, inodorous. Calyx embracing the corolla, permanent, pale coloured. Berry scarlet.—Native of Jamaica and Hispaniola.

WALLENSTADT,

WALLENSTADT, LAKE OF, a lake of Switzerland, nine miles long and two wide, and communicating with that of Zurich by the river Limmat; 9 miles south of Utnach.

WALLENSTADT, a small town of Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gall, situated on the lake of Wallenstadt. The trade between Zurich and Italy is carried on chiefly through this town; 40 miles east-south-east of Zurich.

WALLER (Edmund), an English poet of distinguished celebrity, was the descendant of an eminent family, and born at Coleshill, Hertfordshire, in March, 1605. His mother was the sister of the famous John Hampden. By the death of his father, when he was an infant, he came into possession of an estate of 3500*l.* a year. Having received his school education at Eton, he was admitted at King's-college, in Cambridge; and exhibiting superior talents, as well as possessing powerful interest, he became a member of parliament in his sixteenth or seventeenth year. Of his poetical talents he exhibited an interesting specimen in his eighteenth year, by his verses on the "Prince's Escape at St. Andero," which far surpass in poetical melody the productions of his predecessors. He also, at an early period, augmented his patrimony by marrying a rich city heiress. During the intermissions of parliament, which occurred after the year 1628, he lived in a retired manner at his house near Beaconsfield; pursued his classical studies under Morley, afterwards bishop of Winchester; and acquired improvement as well as celebrity from the society of polite scholars into which he was introduced. At the age of twenty-five years he lost his wife, and soon afterwards became the suitor of lady Dorothea Sydney, eldest daughter of the earl of Leicester, whom he has immortalized under the appellation of Saccharissa. But much as he admired this majestic and scornful beauty, as he denominates her, he was more delighted with the gentle Anoret, supposed to have been lady Sophia Murray; but failing to engage the attachment of either of these ladies by his poetic strains, he sought comfort under the anguish of disappointment in a second marriage. When parliament met in 1640, after a long suspension, Waller was again returned for Agmondesham, and joined the party which thought that a redress of grievances should precede a vote of supplies, urging their plea by an energetic speech. He was also a member of the long-parliament, and warmly opposed the exaction of ship-money, after the example of his justly celebrated uncle, Hampden. He farther distinguished himself by his eloquence in the impeachment of judge Crawley, with the conduct of which he was entrusted by the commons. He continued for three years to give his vote in general with the opposition, without concurring in all the measures of this party; particularly the abolition of episcopacy. In the progress of the dispute between the king and parliament, he discontinued for a time his attendance; though he manifested his inclination to the royal side by court panegyric, and when he again returned to the house, by remonstrating against its proceedings; and when the king set up his standard at Nottingham, it is said that he sent him 1000 broad pieces. As he was one of the commissioners appointed by parliament for treating with the king at Oxford, he was kindly noticed by his majesty; and he was probably thus induced to engage in a plot in his favour. Accordingly, he concerted measures with Tomkyns, clerk of the queen's council, for resisting the payment of the taxes levied for the support of the army, and promoting petitions for peace, and thus constraining parliament to adopt pacific measures. In the prosecution of this plan, they sought the concurrence of persons of influence in the city. Whilst they were thus employed, sir Nicholas Crispe, who was a zealous loyalist, was exciting the king's friends among the citizens to resist openly the authority of parliament, and with this view he had actually obtained a commission of array from his majesty. These two plots were, as Clarendon supposes, independent of each other; but however this be, the commission was known to Waller and Tomkyns. When these measures became known to persons in power, they were arrested; and the deficiency of evidence against them was amply supplied by the pusillanimity of Waller, who disclosed every secret of his party. Thus he was merely expelled the house, tried and condemned, and after a year's imprisonment, and the payment of a fine of 10,000*l.*, permitted to go into exile. Thus disgraced, he first resided at Rouen, and from thence removed to Paris, where he lived like a man of fortune, and in the exercise of hospitality, on the means which he derived from the sale of his wife's jewels. After the interval of ten years, being reduced to his rump jewel, as he called it, he solicited permission to return to his native country, and having obtained a licence to this purpose, he took possession of a house which he had built near Beaconsfield. Unrestrained by principle, he paid his visit, by the effusion of his prostituted muse, to Cromwell, to whom he also paid a tribute of adulation after his death. He lost no time, however, in congratulating Charles II. on his restoration; and when the king took notice that his panegyric on Cromwell surpassed his congratulatory poem, he replied, with a happy courtly turn, "that poets always succeed better in fiction than in truth." Waller was again received into the best company, and though he drank only water, his wit and vivacity made him an agreeable associate to those who lived more freely and intemperately. He also obtained a seat in the House of Commons, of which, though advanced in years, he was a lively and pleasant member. From the king he procured, in 1665, the appointment of provost of Eton college: but Clarendon, who was then lord-chancellor, refused to sanction it, because he was a layman. The conduct of the chancellor gave great offence to Waller, so that he joined the duke of Buckingham in his hostility against him, and both spoke and voted for his impeachment. Upon the accession of James II., Waller, in his eightieth year, was returned for Saltash, and availing himself of the privilege of age, spoke freely to the king, whilst he was treated by him with condescension and kindness. Once in conversation with the king he spoke of queen Elizabeth as the greatest woman in the world, to which James retorted, "I wonder you should think so; but it must be confessed she had a wise council." "And when, sir," replied Waller, "did you know a fool choose a wise one?" When Waller was about to marry his daughter to Dr. Birch, the king expressed his wonder, "that he should think of marrying his daughter to a fallen church." He returned a message, in which he expresses his sense of the honour done him by the king's interest in his domestic affairs; adding "I have lived long enough to observe that this church has got a trick of rising again." His death happened at Beaconsfield, in October, 1687, in the eighty-third year of his age.

WALLERIUS (Nicholas), an eminent Swedish philosopher and divine, was born in Nerika in the year 1706, and completed his education at Upsal, whither he removed in 1725. Having here distinguished himself by his proficiency in the Wolfian philosophy, he commenced, in 1737, a course of lectures on both philosophy and mathematics, which employed, in consequence of the number of attendants, a very considerable portion of his time. In 1751 he took orders; in the following year he was honoured with the degree of doctor in theology; and in 1755 he was advanced to the chair of the new theological professorship, founded by Dr. Kelsenius, bishop of Westerös, with a view of vindicating the truth, and evincing the excellence of Christianity; and in this situation he gained universal esteem. He was also a member of the Academy of Sciences at Stockholm, and of the Academy at Upsal, the transactions of which were enriched by several of his communications. His important and useful life was terminated by a fever in August, 1764. His principal works are "Systema Metaphysicum," 1750, 4 vols. 8vo.; "Compendium Logicæ," 1754, 8vo.; "Compendium Metaphysicæ," 1755, 8vo.; "Psychologia Empirica," 1755, 8vo.; "Psychologia Rationalis," 1758, 8vo.; "Prænotionum Theologicarum," six parts, from 1756 to 1765, 8vo. Gen. Biog.

WALLERN, a town of Bohemia; 85 miles south-south-west of Prague. Population 1700.

WALLER-SEE, a small lake of Upper Austria, in the circle of Salzburg.

WALLERSTEIN,

WALLERSTEIN, a town of Bavarian Franconia; 4 miles north of Nordlingen. Population 1300.

WALLERTHWAITTE, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Rippon, Yorkshire.

WALLET, s. [peallian, to travel, Saxon.] A bag, in which the necessaries of a traveller are put; a knapsack.—Having entered into a long gallery, he laid down his wallet, and spread his carpet, in order to repose himself upon it. Addison.—Any thing protuberant and swagging.

Who would believe, that there were mountaineers Dew-lapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at them Wallets of flesh? Shakspeare.

WALLEY, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Cuckney, county of Nottingham.

WALLEYE, s. [This word is written not wall but whall, in our old language: "whally eies, the signe of gelosy." Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 24. "Whaulc-eyed, glauciolus." Huloet.] A disease in the crystalline humour of the eye; the glaucoma.—A pair of wall-eyes in a face forced. B. Jonson.

WALLEYED, adj. Having white eyes.

Wall-eyed slave! whither wouldst thou convey This growing image of thy fiend-like face? Shakspeare.

WALLFLOWER, s. [parietaria, Lat.] A species of stock-gillflower.

WALLFRUIT, s. Fruit, which to be ripened must be planted against a wall.—To wallfruit and garden-plants, there cannot be a worse enemy than snails. Mortimer.

WALLHAUSEN, a town of Prussian Saxony, on the river Helm. Population 900.

WALLI, a small kingdom of Western Africa, extending along the north bank of the Gambia, having Yani on the west, and Woolli on the east.

WALLINGFORD, a borough and market town of England, in the county of Berks, situated on the river Thames, over which there is a stately stone bridge, above 300 yards long, with 19 arches, and four draw-bridges. This bridge, from its appearance, seems to be one of the oldest structures of the kind on the river, though the time of its erection is unknown. The pointed sterlings on the upper side are so well constructed, as to be capable of resisting the most violent floods. The town has of late years been much increased, both in houses and inhabitants. It consists of two principal streets. Wallingford contains three churches, St. Mary's, St. Leonard's, and St. Peter's. The latter was rebuilt about 50 years ago, and was then ornamented with a spire of a singular form. Here is a handsome market-house, and a town-hall, in which the assizes are sometimes held, and the quarter-sessions for the borough. Here are also six almshouses and a free-school. Wallingford was a borough in the reign of Edward the Confessor, and has sent two members to parliament from the 23d year of Edward I. The right of election is in the corporation, and inhabitants paying scot and lot, and not receiving alms. The number of voters is about 150. By the charter of James I. the corporation consists of a mayor, high steward, recorder, six aldermen, who act as justices within the borough, a town-clerk, a chamberlain, and 18 burgesses. Markets on Tuesday and Friday, and four annual fairs; 14 miles north-north-west of Reading, and 46 west of London. Population 1901.

WALLINGFORD, a post township of the United States, in Rutland county, Vermont; 32 miles west of Windsor.—2. A post township of New Haven county, Connecticut; 12 miles north-north-east of New Haven.

WALLINGTON, a parish of England, in Hertfordshire; 3½ miles east-by-south of Baldock.—2. A parish of England, county of Norfolk, near Market Downham.—3. A township of England, in Northumberland; 14 miles west of Morpeth.—4. A hamlet of England, in the county of Surrey; 3 miles west-south-west of Croydon. Population 804.

WALLIS (John), a well known mathematician, was born at Ashford, in Kent, in the year 1616, and after finishing his school education, was admitted, in 1632, at Emanuel college, Cambridge, with a view to the church. Having taken orders, he commenced the duties of his ministerial office in 1641, as chaplain to Sir William Darnley, in Yorkshire; and whilst he occupied the same station in the family of Lady Vere, he had an opportunity of exhibiting his extraordinary talent in the art of decyphering. In 1643 the parliament, to which he was then attached, conferred upon him the sequestrated living of St. Gabriel, in Fenchurch-street, London; and in this year he published a quarto volume, entitled "Truth tried, or Animadversions on Lord Brookes's Treatise of the Nature of Truth." At this time he became possessed of a handsome patrimony by the death of his mother; and in 1644 he was appointed one of the secretaries of the assembly of divines. In the following year he concurred with those persons who laid the foundation of the Royal Society, and communicated specimens of his skill in mathematics; and in 1647 he discovered a new method of solving cubic equations. When the independents acquired an ascendancy over the covenanters, Wallis united with other ministers, who assembled at Sion college, in subscribing a paper, entitled "A Testimony to the Truth of Jesus Christ, and to the Solemn League and Covenant, as also against the Errors, Heresies, and Blasphemies of those Times, and the Toleration of them." In 1648 he subscribed a remonstrance against putting the king to death, and another paper, denominated "A serious and faithful Representation of the Judgment of Ministers of the Gospel, within the province of London, in a Letter from them to the General and his Council of War." In the next year he was appointed by the parliamentary visitor Savilian professor of geometry, and quitting his church in London, entered himself of Exeter college, Oxford, where he became master of arts, and sedulously discharged the duties of his office, connecting himself with those who formed the Philosophical Society in that city. Towards the end of this year he became acquainted with Cavalleri's method of indivisibles, which he thought applicable to the quadrature of the circle; but after bestowing considerable attention upon it, it failed in completely answering his expectations. In 1653 he published, in octavo; his "Grammar of the English Tongue in Latin," with an "Introductory Treatise on Speech," containing a philosophical inquiry into the formation of articulate sounds. MS. copies of letters which he had decyphered were this year deposited in the Bodleian library, together with an "Account of the Origin and Progress of Cryptography, or Secret Writing." In the following year he was admitted to the degree of doctor in divinity. In 1655 he printed the proposition in his "Arithmetica Infinitorum," relating to the quadrature of the circle, which he sent to Oughtred, and he afterwards published the whole work in quarto, with an introductory treatise on the conic sections, the principal properties of which he demonstrated, independently of the cone, by his method of infinites. At this time he published his "Elenchus Geometriæ Hobbianæ," containing a confutation of Hobbes's method of quadrating the circle, which was followed by an angry controversy of some continuance. In 1656 he brought out his tract "On the Angle of Contact," in which he contradicted the opinion of Peletarius, who had maintained that this angle had no magnitude. In the following year he published his "Mathesis Universalis, &c." and carried on a controversy with M. Fermat and M. Frenicle, in letters, which appeared in the "Commercium Epistolicum," in 1658. About this time he was chosen "custos archivorum" to the university; and he solved some prize questions proposed by Pascal, that related to the cycloid. His letter to Huygens, "De Conoide et Corporibus inde genitis," and also "De Cycloide, &c." was published in 1659. His talent for decyphering recommended him to Charles II., by whom he was graciously received after his restoration; and who, besides continuing him in his offices at the university, made him one of his chaplains in ordinary. In 1660 he was concerned with those who were employed in reviewing the book of common prayer; and having complied with the requisitions of the act of uniformity, he retained his connection with the church till his death. Having suggested that it was possible to teach a deaf man to speak, he tried his skill, in 1660, upon two deaf subjects, with a considerable degree of success. After the establishment of the Royal Society in 1663, Dr. Wallis, who was one of its first members, very much contributed to its reputation and permanence by his own communications, and by his account of mathematical papers, transmitted to it by other persons. He also published, in 1663, his tract "De Proportionibus," and his illustration of the laws of motion in the collision of bodies; and in 1668 he presented to the public his hypothesis concerning the tides, in his treatise "De Æstu Maris, Hypothesis nova." In the following year appeared the first part of his principal work, intitled "De Motu," which was followed in the two succeeding years by the other two parts; and in 1671 he completed the whole, under the title of "Mechanica, sive de Motu, Tractatus Geometricus." His other publications were "Horocii Opera Posthuma, with Flamstead's Discourse on the Equation of Time," 1673, and "Archimedes' Arenarius," and "Dimensio Circuli," "Ptolemæi Opus Harmonicum," with Latin version, and notes, 1680, and an "Appendix de Veterum Harmonica, ad hodiernam comparata;" "Porphyrii in Harmonica Ptolemæi Commentarius ex Codice Manuscripto, Græcè et Latine editus, et Manuelis Bryennii Harmonica ex Cod. Mau.:" his "Algebra," 1684, with his Arithmetic of Infinites, the Infinitesimal Method of Leibnitz; and that of Fluxions, by Sir I. Newton;"—"Three Dissertations upon Melchizedek, Job, and the Titles of the Psalms," 1658;—"Institutio Logica," 1687; "Aristarchus Samius de Magnitudine Solis et Lunæ," with "Pappi Alexandrini Libri Secundi Collectionum Mathematicarum hactenus desiderati Fragmentum," 1689; and also a Letter to Sir Samuel Moreland, in order to prove that Des Cartes borrowed his improvement in algebra from his countryman Harriot:—"The Doctrine of the Ever-blessed Trinity," 1690; and "On the Christian Sabbath," 1691. About this time the curators of the university-press at Oxford began to collect his mathematical works, with a view of publishing them in the Latin tongue. The first volume was committed to the press in 1692, and the first two volumes appeared in 1696; and the third volume, containing the Commercium Epistolicum, or Letters concerning the original Author of the Method of Fluxions, and a Letter concerning the annual Parallax of the Earth, from Mr. Flamstead, was published in 1698. Thus closed the scientific and literary labours of Dr. Wallis, who died in October, 1703, in the 88th year of his age; leaving behind him one son and two daughters. Of his general character, moral and political, it will be sufficient to say, that he was prudent and moderate, endeavouring, in the collision of parties, to promote what he conceived to be the true interest of religion and science, and of the public community. As a mathematician, he is thought to have excelled in judgment and industry more than in genius. Biog. Brit. Hutton's Math. Dict.

WALLIS'S BAY, or HARBOUR, a bay in the straits of Magellan; 12 miles north-east of Cape Forward.

WALLIS'S ISLAND, a small island near the south-east coast of New Ireland, at the entrance of Gower's Harbour, called Isle de Marteaux by M. Bougainville; 9 miles north-west of Cape St. George.

WALLIS'S ISLANDS, in the South Pacific ocean, discovered by Capt. Wallis in the year 1767, surrounded by a reef of rocks. The inhabitants, according to his observations, were robust and active, quite naked, except a kind of mat wrapped round the middle. No other animal was seen, either bird or beast, except sea-fowl. The trees were of different sorts, and many of them large. The only fruit were a few cocoa-nuts. Lat. 13. 18. S. long. 177. W.

WALKKILL, a post township of the United States, in Orange county, New York; 20 miles west of Newburgh.

WALKKILL, a river of the United States, which rises in New Jersey, and runs north-east, and flows into the Hudson, near Kingston, New York. It passes through the Drowned Lands. Length 80 miles.

WALL-LOUSE, s. [cimez, Lat.] An insect; a bug. Ainsworth.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1655.

WALLOE, or WOTO, a small sea-port on the Ivory coast of Africa. Lat. 5. 20. N. long. 4. 55. W.

To WALLOP, v. n. [pealan, to boil, Saxon.] To boil.

WALLOP, NETHER, a parish of England, in Southhamptshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-by-north of Stockbridge. Population 668.

WALLOP, OVER, another parish in the above county; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Stockbridge. Population 465.

WALLOP'S ISLAND, an island in the Atlantic, near the coast of Virginia. Lat. 37. 48. N. long. 75. 28. W.

To WALLOW, v. n. [walugan, Gothic; palpian, Saxon.] To move heavily and clumsily.

Part, huge of bulk!

Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean.

Milton.

To roll one's self in mire, or any thing filthy; to roll upon any thing.—To live in any state of filth or gross vice.—God sees a man wallowing in his native impurity, delivered over as an absolute captive to sin, polluted with its guilt, and enslaved by its power; and, in this most loathsome condition, fixes upon him as an object of his distinguishing mercy. South.

To WALLOW, v. a. To roll.—O daughter of my people, gird thee with sack-cloth, and wallow thyself in ashes. Jer.

WALLOW, s. A kind of rolling walk.

One taught the toss, and one the French new wallow;
His sword-knot this, his cravat that design'd. Dryden.

WALLOWER, s. One who rolls himself in mire.

Lust's votaries, who live and die

Eternal wallowers in Circe's sty.

Nevile.

WALLOWISH, adj. As unwelcome to any true conceit, as sluttish morsels, or wallowish potions to a nice stomach. Overbury.

WALLRUE, s. [adiantum album, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.

WALLS AND FLOTA, a parish in Orkney, comprehending a part of the island of Hoy called Walls or Ways, the island of Flota, and the small islands of Farra, Cava, and Gransey. Population 1084.

WALLS AND SANDNESS, a parish of Shetland, composed of the districts of Walls and Sandness, and the islands of Papastour and Fowla. The two former districts lie on the westernmost part of the Mainland, and are somewhat of a triangular figure; 11 miles long by 9 broad, much intersected by arms of the sea, and diversified by many small eminences.

WALLSEND, a township of England, in Northumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Population 1626.

WALLTOWN, a hamlet of England, in Northumberland, near Haltwhistle.

WALLUBGHUR, a hill fortress of Hindostan, province of Bejapoor, district of Darwar. It was long in possession of the Mahratta chief Purseram Bhow. On his death it was taken possession of by the Colapoor rajah, but is now in possession of the British. Lat. not ascertained.

WALLWORT, s. [ebulum, Lat.] A plant, the same with dwarf-elder, or danewort.

WALMER, a village and parish of England, in the county of Kent. It is separated from the coast by a narrow channel. It is reckoned one of the members of the Cinque Ports, and belongs to Sandwich. Here is an ancient castle, erected by Henry VIII., for the defence of the Downs, in which the lord warden of the Cinque Ports occasionally resides; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Deal. Population 2154.

WALMER, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Westbury, Gloucestershire.

WALMERSLEY, a township of England, county of Lancaster. Population 2619.

WALMSGATE, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Spilsby.

WALMSLEY, a hamlet of England, in Lancashire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Great Bolton.

WALNEY ISLAND, an island of England in the north part of Lancashire. It is ten miles in length, but hardly one in breadth. It serves as a kind of bulwark to the hundred of Furness, against the waves of the Irish sea. It has two or three small villages, and a chapel. It abounds with sea gulls; and is frequently almost inundated by the tides. The south end is about 16 miles west-north-west from the mouth of the Lune. Lat. 54. 3. N. long. 3. 10. W.

WALNUT, s. [palh hnuta, Saxon; nux juglans, Lat.] A tree and a fruit.

'Tis a cockle, or a walnut-shell;

A knack, a toy. Shakspeare.

WALNUT, a township of the United States, in Peckaway county, Ohio. Population 759.—2. A township of Fairfield county, Ohio. Population 694.

WALNUT, a small river of North America, which enters the Scioto from the east.

WALNUT, BIG, a river of the United States, in Ohio, which rises in Delaware county, and joins the Scioto, about 10 miles below Columbus.

WALNUT BRANCH, a post village of the United States, in Fauquier county, Virginia.

WALNUT COVE, a post village of the United States, in Campbell county, Tennessee.

WALNUT CREEK, a river of the United States, in Ohio, which runs into the Scioto; 10 miles below Chilli-cothe.

WALNUT GROVE, a post village of the United States, in St. Clair county, Illinois.—2. A post village of Mercer county, Kentucky.

WALNUT HILL, a post village of the United States, in Greenville district, South Carolina.

WALNUT HILLS, a post village and fort of the United States, in Warren county, Mississippi, on the Mississippi; 12 miles south of the mouth of the Yazoo, and 134 miles above Natchez. The name is derived from a mountainous ridge.

WALOON, or WALLOON, a kind of old French; being the language spoken by the Walloons, or the inhabitants of a considerable part of the French and Austrian Low Countries; viz. those of Artois, Hainault, Namur, Luxemburg, and part of Flanders and Brabant.

The Waloon is held to be the language of the ancient Gauls, or Celts.

The Romans, having subdued several provinces in Gaul, established prætors, or proconsuls, &c. to administer justice in the Latin tongue. On this occasion, the natives were brought to apply themselves to learn the language of their conquerors; and thus they introduced abundance of the Roman words and phrases into their own tongue.

Of this mixture of Gaulish and Latin was formed a new language, called Romans; in contradistinction to the ancient unadulterated Gaulish, which is called Waloon or Walloon. This distinction is kept up to this day; for the inhabitants of several of the Low-Country provinces say, that in France they speak Romans, whereas they speak the Walloon, which comes much nearer the simplicity of the ancient Gaulish.

WALOUGA, a small sea-port of Whidah, in Western Africa; 10 miles south of Sabi.

WALPO, a small town of Slavonia; 14 miles west-by-north of Essek.

WALPO TARO, a rock in the Spanish Main, near the Mosquito shore. Lat. 14. 13. N. long. 82. 40. W.

WALPOLE (Robert), earl of Orford, the third son of Robert Walpole, Esq., was born at Houghton in Norfolk, the seat of his father, in August, 1676, received his preparatory instruction at Eton, and completed his course of education at King's college, Cambridge; being distinguished at school for his talents for public speaking, and at the university by the ardour of his attachment to Whig principles. He died March 18th, 1745, aged 69 years. For his public character, &c. see the article ENGLAND, vol. vi.

WALPOLE (Horace), lord Orford, the youngest son of the preceding nobleman, was born in 1718, and educated first at Eton and afterwards at King's college, Cambridge, where he wrote "Verses in memory of King Henry VI." dated in 1738. Having been nominated on leaving the university to some patent sinecure places, he commenced his tour to the continent in 1739, in which he was accompanied by Gray, from whom he parted, as he candidly acknowledges, by his own fault, and to whom in 1744 he was reconciled. His most intimate friend, however, was his natural cousin, general Seymour Conway, to whom he was attached from his youth, and with whom he corresponded from 1740 to 1795, the year of the general's death. His first appearance in parliament was in 1741, as a representative for Callington. But more attached to literature and the arts than to the occupations of public life, and unambitious of obtaining any emoluments besides those which his places afforded him, or any rank and station connected with political pursuits, he rather chose to retire from the world than to take an active part in parliamentary business. On all occasions, however, he manifested his steady adherence to those Whig principles which he had imbibed from his youth, and his conduct as a member of the legislature was always pure and independent. Having, in 1748, purchased a small house at Twickenham, called Strawberry-hill, he devoted his time and attention to the improvement of it in the Gothic style of architecture; and to the furnishing of it with such a collection of books, pictures, and other specimens of the fine arts, as made it a very desirable place of resort in the vicinity of the metropolis, and he gratified the public curiosity and taste by appropriating three hours a day in the summer months for the accommodation of visitors. In this singular and interesting mansion, he amused himself with the cultivation and exercise of his literary talents by contributing some papers to a periodical publication, entitled "The World;" by his "Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors," printed by his own press; and by a collection of his "Fugitive Pieces;" by his "Anecdotes of Painting in England," published in 1761, in 2 vols. 4to., to which he afterwards added two more volumes; by a political pamphlet on general Conway's dismissal from the army for his vote in parliament on general warrants, which appeared in 1764; and tale of the "Castle of Otranto," published in 1765. During his visit at Paris in 1765, he provoked the resentment of the irritable Rousseau, by addressing to him a letter in the name of the king of Prussia, exposing his vanity and self-conceit. This letter was afterwards printed, and led Rousseau to suspect, that this was part of a concerted plan to ruin his reputation, and that Hume and the French philosophers had contrived it for this purpose. Walpole was justly censured for the part he took in this business; nor could his best friends vindicate him for the contemptuous treatment with which he treated those who were authors by profession. In 1767 Walpole withdrew from public business, and declined a return for the borough of Lynn in the ensuing parliament. Soon afterwards he published his "Historic Doubts on the Life and Reign of King Richard III." In 1768, he printed, at his own press, his tragedy of the "Mysterious Mother;" and about the same time he was concerned in the transactions that occurred between him and the unfortunate Chat-terton. In 1791, the death of his nephew elevated him to the rank and title of Earl of Orford; but this circumstance requiring some change in his fixed habits, gave him rather uneasiness than satisfaction. Towards the close of his life he was much afflicted with a constitutional gout, by which he was much debilitated; and yet he attained to his 79th year, quietly expiring in March, 1797. His printed and MS. writings, of which an edition was published in 1798, in 5 vols. 4to., were bequeathed to Robert Berry, Esq. and his two daughters. A posthumous work, viz. "Letters from the Hon. Horace Walpole, Esq., to George Montague, Esq., from the Year 1736 to 1770," royal 4to., has been published.

Although Horace Walpole, as to the habits of his life, was more inclined to personal enjoyment than to social intercourse, his disposition was affectionate, and he was occasionally generous to his friends. Although he was not profoundly learned, he encouraged literature and the arts by his own writings, and by various domestic arrangements and conveniences conveniences adapted to this purpose. Nichols's Lit. Anecd. Walpole's Works. Gen. Biog.

WALPOLE, a parish of England, county of Suffolk, near Halesworth. Population 492.

WALPOLE, St. Andrew's, a parish of England, county of Norfolk; 4 miles from Wisbeach.

WALPOLE, St. Peter's, another parish in Norfolk, adjoining to the foregoing. Population 811.

WALPOLE, a post township of the United States, in Norfolk county, Massachusetts; 20 miles south-west of Boston. Population 1098.

WALPOLE, a post township of the United States, in Cheshire county, New Hampshire, on the Connecticut, opposite Westminster, with which it is connected by a bridge. This is an excellent agricultural township; 12 miles south of Charlestown, and 90 west-north-west of Boston. Population 1894.

WALPOLE, POINT, a cape on the west coast of North America, and south-west point of entrance into Port Houghton. Lat. 57. 17. N. long. 226. 47. E.

WALRABENSTEIN, a town of Germany, duchy of Nassau; 3 miles north of Idstein.

WALRIDGE, a hamlet of England, county of Durham; 5½ miles north-west of Durham.

WALSALL, a market town and parish of England, and borough, in the county of Stafford. It is situated on a pleasant eminence, and consists chiefly of 12 large and regular streets. It is a thriving and flourishing town, and carries on various manufactures, chiefly the making of buckles, chapes, snaffles, bridle-bits, spurs, stirrups, and all sorts of hardware employed in saddlery. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, or All Saints, formerly belonged to the abbey of Hales Owen. Though a corporation, Walsall sends no members to Parliament. The government of the town is vested in a mayor, recorder, 24 aldermen or capital burgesses, a town-clerk, two sergeants at mace, and a beadle. A court of quarter sessions is regularly held at stated periods, in which the mayor and mayor-elect preside, as justices of peace for the borough. Walsall is a place of great antiquity, and is regarded as the second market town in the county. Market on Tuesday, and three annual fairs; 15 miles south of Stafford, and 116 north-west of London. Population 11,189.

WALSCHLEBEN, a village of Prussian Saxony; 6 miles north-north-west of Erfurt. Population 1100.

WALS DORF, a large village of Bavarian Franconia; 4 miles west of Bamberg.

WALSEE, Lower, a small town of Lower Austria, on the Danube; 14 miles east of Enns.

WALSH (William), was born at Abberley in Worcestershire, in 1633, and having finished his education as gentleman-commoner of Wadham college in Oxford, he travelled abroad for further improvement, and after his return attracted notice as a man of letters and of fashion. He also assumed a political character, and represented his native county in parliament, and distinguished himself by actively promoting the Revolution. He is supposed to have died in 1709. Dryden, with whom he cultivated friendship, repaid his attentions with that praise which he was disposed liberally to bestow on those whom he wished to distinguish, denominating him "the best critic of our nation," and he furnished a preface to his "Dialogue concerning Women." Pope also acknowledges early obligations to him in the following terms:

"And knowing Walsh would tell me I could write." In his "Essay on Criticism," he denominates him the "Muse's judge and friend," and with the ardour of youth, gives him the credit of having "taught his early voice to sing." It has been observed, however, that Mr. Walsh's rank in the scale of literature scarcely entitled him to the high panegyric either of Dryden or of Pope; for neither his miscellaneous poems, nor his prose pieces, of which one was his "Essay on Pastoral Poetry," justify the very distinguished honour which they conferred upon him. Biog. Brit. Johnson's Lives of the Poets. Gen. Biog.

WALSHAM, or NORTH WALSHAM, a market town of England, in the county of Norfolk, situated about five or six miles from the sea. It consists of three streets, which form an irregular triangle. At the junction of these is the parish church. In the reign of Edward III. bishop Thirlby built a market-cross here, which was afterwards repaired by bishop Redman. Here is a good free school, and an excellent market for corn, butcher's meat, and all sorts of provisions. Market on Thursday, and an annual fair on the Wednesday before Ascension day; 10 miles north of Norwich, and 122 north-north-east of London. Population 2035.

WALSHAM, SOUTH, a village of England, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles north-west-by-west of Acle. Population 536.

WALSHAM IN THE WILLOWS, a parish of England, county of Suffolk; 9 miles north-north-west of Market Stow. Population 948.

WALSHFORD, a hamlet of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles north-by-east of Wetherby.

WALSINGHAM, GREAT, a market town and parish of England, in the county of Norfolk, situated on the banks of a small river, which falls into the sea, about seven miles to the north. It is chiefly celebrated for its ancient monastery, famous for the shrine of the holy Virgin, which was as much, if not more, frequented, than the shrine of St. Thomas-a-Beckett, at Canterbury. The present remains of this once noble monastic pile, is a portal or west entrance gateway, a richly ornamented lofty arch, sixty feet high, which formed the east end of the church, supposed to have been erected in the time of Henry VII.; the refectory, a Saxon arch; part of the original chapel, part of the old cloisters, a stone bath, and two uncovered wells, called the wishing wells. The church at Walsingham is a large and interesting pile, displaying in its architecture, ornaments, monuments, and font, much to interest and gratify the antiquary. The latter is not only the finest specimen of the sort in the county, but perhaps in England. There was a house of Grey Friars in Walsingham, founded by lady Elizabeth de Burgh, countess of Clare; but its fame was eclipsed by the superior grandeur of its neighbour. What is at present used as a bridewell, was also an hospital for lazars, which was founded in the year 1486. Walsingham has a good free school. Market on Friday, and an annual fair on Whit-Monday; 25 miles north-west of Norwich, and 116 north-north-east of London. Population 1008.

WALSINGHAM, LITTLE, a parish of England, county of Norfolk, about two miles distant from Great Walsingham. Population 347.

WALSINGHAM, CAPE, OF DAVIS, a cape on the east coast of America, at the north side of the entrance into Cumberland straits. Lat. 64. 10. N. long. 66. W.

WALSINGHAM, CAPE, OF FROBISHER, a cape at the south-east extremity of Hale island, in Davis's straits at the entrance of Frobisher's straits. Lat. 62. 50. N. long. 64. 58. W.

WALSOKEN, a parish of England, county of Norfolk; 12½ miles south-west-by-west of Lynn Regis. Population 845.

WALSRODE, a town of Germany, in Hanover, on the river Bohme; 3 miles north-west of Zelle. Population 1500.

WALSTADT, GREAT and LITTLE, two villages of Bavarian Franconia, situated on the opposite banks of the Maine, and containing, along with a small district, 3900 inhabitants; 6 miles south-by-west of Aschaffenburg.

WALSTON, a parish of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, near the eastern borders of the county. Population 377.

WALSTON BLACK MOUNT, a hill of Scotland, in the parish of Walston, elevated above 1550 feet above the level of the sea.

WALTDORF, a small town of Germany, in Baden; 6 miles south-west of Heidelberg.

WALTER-NIENBURG, a small town of Prussian Saxony on the Elbe; 12 miles north-west of Zerbst.

WALTERSBERG, a small town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, and the Westerwald; 10 miles north-north-east of Limburg.

WALTERSDORF,

WALTERSDORF, a town of Germany, in Upper Lusatia, near Zittau, on the borders of Bohemia. Population 2100.

WALTERSDORF, WUSTE, a well built village of Prussian Silesia. Population 2000.

WALTERSDORF, OLD, a village of Prussian Silesia. Population 900.

WALTERSDORF, UPPER, a village of Lower Austria; 5 miles east of Zistersdorf.

WALTERSHAUSEN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Saxe-Gotha; 7 miles west-south-west of Gotha. Population 2000.

WALTERSHOF, a town of Bavaria, in the Upper Palatinate, with woollen manufactures.

WALTERSTONE, a parish of England, in Herefordshire; 15 miles south-west-by-west of Hereford.

WALTHAM, or TEMPLE WALTHAM, a parish of England, in the county of Kent; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Canterbury. Population 476.

WALTHAM, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-by-west of Great Grimsby. Population 384.

WALTHAM, BRIGHT, a parish of England, in Berkshire. Population 365.

WALTHAM, COLD, a parish of England, in Sussex; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Petworth.

WALTHAM, GREAT, a parish of England, county of Essex; 4 miles north-by-west of Chelmsford. Population 1615.

WALTHAM, LITTLE, another parish, half a mile from the foregoing. Population 593.

WALTHAM, NORTH, a parish of England, in Southamptonshire; 6 miles south-west-by-west of Basingstoke.

WALTHAM, UP, a parish of England, in Sussex; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Petworth.

WALTHAM, WEST, or WALTHAM CROSS, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Waltham Abbey, county of Hertford. Population 1152.

WALTHAM, WHITE, or ABBAS, a parish of England, in Berkshire; 4 miles south-west of Maidenhead. Population 1035.

WALTHAM, a township of the United States, in Addison county, Vermont. Population 244.

WALTHAM, a post township of the United States, in Middlesex county, Massachusetts on the north side of Charles river, which separates it from Newton; 10 miles west of Boston, and 34 east-by-north of Worcester.

WALTHAM ABBEY, a town of England in Essex, situated on low ground, near the river Lea, which here forms a number of small islands, and is skirted by fruitful meadows. The town is irregularly built. It is of great antiquity, and derives its name from its once stately abbey, erected by Harold, son to earl Godwin. Henry II. afterwards changed the foundation from a dean and 11 secular black canons, to the foundation for an abbot and 16 Augustine monks. The succeeding monarchs granted Waltham Abbey many privileges, and its abbot sat in parliament. The abbey house is said to have been a very extensive building, but has been wholly demolished for many years. A gateway into the abbey yard, a bridge which leads to it, some ruinous walls, an arched vault, and the church, are the only vestiges of the ancient magnificence of Waltham Abbey. The abbey church, which was built in the usual form of a cross, and consisted of a nave, transept, choir, ante-chapel, &c., was a very considerable structure, and covered an extensive plot of ground. Some idea may be formed of its extent from knowing the situation of Harold's tomb, which stood about 120 feet east from the termination of the present building, in what was then probably the east end of the choir, or rather some chapel beyond it. The intersection of the transept is still visible. Above this rose the ancient tower, which contained a ring of five great tuneable bells, afterwards purchased by the parish, of the king's commissioners. Part of this tower falling through mere decay, the remainder was blown up by underminers, and the whole choir, the tower, transept, and the east chapel, were demolished, so that nothing was left standing but the west end, which has since been fitted up, and made parochial, and constitutes the present church. This venerable relic, though much disfigured and mutilated, contains several interesting and curious specimens of the ornamented columns, semicircular arches, and other characteristics of the Norman style of architecture. Its length, from the western entrance to the altar, is about 90 feet; and its breadth, including the side aisles, 48. The body is divided from the latter by six arches on each side, supported by pillars; five of them are semicircular, and are decorated with rude zigzag ornaments; the sixth, or western arch, is pointed, and apparently of a later construction. The pillars are extremely massive; and two on each side, which correspond, have wavy and spiral indentations, similar to those of the nave and choir in Durham cathedral. Above this lower range of arches rise two tiers of smaller ones, formed and ornamented in the same manner. The upper row of these enlighten the roof, and at the bottom of the lower tier is the narrow passage usual in cathedral and conventual churches, called triforia. The roof itself is of timber, modern, and but little ornamented; the side aisles are surmounted by galleries, which, with the pews in the nave, have been lately erected for the accommodation of the parishioners. At the west end is a heavy square tower, having the date 1558. It was repaired about six years ago; and a new window was then introduced. It is built with stone, is embattled, and rises to the height of 86 feet. From the south side of the church projects a chapel, formerly Our Lady's, now a school-room, under which is a beautiful arched charnel-house. The exterior of the church has been entirely stripped of that character of grandeur and antiquity which it once possessed, by modern reparations. The appearance of the interior has also been injured; $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-by-east of London. Population 2287.

WALTHAM-ON-THE-WOLD, a parish of England, and formerly a market town, in the county of Leicester; 113 miles north-by-west of London. Population 512.

WALTHAMSTOW, a village and parish of England, in the county of Essex, situated on the river Lea, near Layton. Here is a free school, and alms-houses for eight poor men, and eight women. The church, which is situated on a hill, is a large and handsome building, consisting of three aisles; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east-by-north of St. Paul's, London. Population 3,777.

WALTHER (Augustine Frederic), an anatomist and physician, was appointed in 1723 professor of anatomy and surgery in the university of Leyden. Several of his dissertations on anatomical objects are upon the whole commended, and have been reprinted by Haller. The best of his larger pieces are, "De Lingua Humana Libellus," 1724, 4to. As a botanist, he published a catalogue of the plants in his own garden, and a work on the structure of plants. He died about the year 1746. Haller Elog.

WALTHER (Bernard), an eminent astronomer, was born at Nuremberg in the year 1430, and having applied principally to the study of mathematics, and more especially of astronomy, under Regiomontanus, was eminently useful by his talents and opulence in encouraging the inventions and arding the observations of his preceptor, whilst he continued at Nuremberg; and when by the invitation of pope Sixtus IV. he removed to Rome, with a view to the reformation of the calendar, he continued his observations for nearly forty years, viz. from 1475 to the time of his death in 1504. His instruments were of the most perfect kind which he could then procure, and he was skilful and persevering as well as successful in the use of them. He was the inventor of a chronometer, or clock with wheels, which indicated the time of noon with an accuracy corresponding to the result of calculation; and he is also celebrated as the first of the moderns who observed refraction. In the work entitled "Vranies Noricæ Basis Astronomicæ, sive Rationes Motus annui ex Observationibus in Solem hoc nostro et Sæculo ab hinc tertio Norinbergæ, habitis, a Johanne Philippo a Wurzelbau," Norinb. 1709, are contained observations by Walther and Wurzelbau, with inferences drawn drawn from a comparison of them, which are said by Kästner to be very valuable, as the observations were made under the same meridian, and at the interval of a century. Montucla Hist. du Mathem. Kästner Geschichte du Mathematik, cited in Gen. Biog.

WALTHER (John Godfrey), author of an excellent historical and biographical musical dictionary, published in German at Leipsic, 1782, in 8vo.

In 1790 and 1792, a new edition of this work, with additions to the time of publication, was printed at Leipsic in two vols. 8vo., by Ernst Ludwig Gerber.

WALTHER (John Ludolph), author of another very curious and useful dictionary, published at Ulm in folio, 1756, in Latin, entitled "Lexicon Diplomaticum Abbreviationes syllabarum et vocum in diplomatibus et codicibus a Seculo VIII. ad XVI. usque occurrentes exponens. Junctis Alphabetis et Scripturæ Speciminibus integris." The author was librarian and private secretary to his British Majesty Geo. II. as elector of Hanover. The book has a very learned preface by John Harry Young, regius secretary in the university of Göttingen.

The whole book is engraved on copper-plates; and in the second part, among the specimens of writing without abbreviations, we have examples of the first attempts at musical notation, from the ninth century, not only before lines were in use, but even before points of different elevation were the vocal guides of the priests in canto fermo.

WALTHERIA [so named by Linnæus, in honour of Augustin. Frider. Walther, professor of medicine at Leipsic], in Botany, a genus of the class monodelphia, order pentandria, natural order of columniferæ, tiliaceæ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth (double: outer one-sided, three-leaved, deciduous; cav. inner) one-leaved, half-five-cleft, acute, cup-shaped, permanent. Corolla: petals five, obcordate, spreading; fastened at bottom to the tube of filaments. Stamina: filaments five, united into a tube, free above, spreading, short. Anthers ovate. Pistil: germ ovate. Style filiform, longer than the stamens. Stigmas pencilled. Pericarp: capsule obovate, one-celled, two-valved. Seed one, obtuse, wider above.—Essential Character. Calyx double: outer lateral three-leaved deciduous. Petals five. Style one. Capsule one-celled, two-valved, one-seeded.

1. Waltheria Americana.—Leaves oval, plaited, sharply and unequally toothed, tomentose; heads peduncled. Stem soft, woody, about two feet high, sending out two or three side branches. Flowers collected in a close thick spike at the top of the stem, having soft hairy calyxes.—Native of South America, and the islands of the West Indies, Brazil, Bahama, Berbice, Surinam, Jamaica, Domingo, &c.

2. Waltheria Indica.—Leaves oval, plaited, bluntly toothed, tomentose; head sessile. This rises with a shrubby branching stalk to the height of eight or ten feet, and is covered with soft hairs.—Native of India.

3. Waltheria lophanthus.—Leaves roundish-cordate, serrate, silky-tomentose, petioled; heads peduncled, imbricate-bracted.—Native of the Marquesas islands in the south seas.

4. Waltheria ovata.—Leaves roundish-ovate, unequally toothed, tomentose; heads sessile.—Native of Peru.

5. Waltheria angustifolia.—Leaves oblong, obtuse, plaited, toothed hoary; heads sub-sessile.—Native of the East Indies.

6. Waltheria elliptica.—Leaves lanceolate-oblong, obtuse, plaited toothed, tomentose; heads sessile.—Native of the East Indies.

Propagation and Culture.—These plants are propagated by seeds, which must be sown on a hot-bed; and when the plants are fit to transplant, they must be each planted into a separate small pot, and plunged into a fresh hot-bed, and afterward treated in the same manner as other tender plants of the same country, for they must be kept in the bark-stove, otherwise they will not thrive in England.

WALTON, a hamlet of England, in Buckinghamshire, half a mile south-east of Aylesbury.—2d. A parish in the same county; 2 miles north-by-east of Fenny Stratford.—

3d. A township in Derbyshire; 3 miles south-west-by-west of Chesterfield. Population 720.—4th. A hamlet in the parish of Deerhurst, Gloucestershire.—5th. A hamlet in Herefordshire; 4½ miles south of Bromyard.—6th. A hamlet in Leicestershire; 4 miles north-east-by-east of Lutterworth.—7th. A hamlet in the parish of Grantham, Lincolnshire.—8th. A hamlet in Northampton; 2½ miles north-north-west of Peterborough.—9th. A parish in Somersetshire; 3½ miles south-west-by-south of Glastonbury. Population 479.—10th. A hamlet in the same county, in the parish of Kilmersdon.—11th. A township in Staffordshire; 2½ miles east-south-east of Stafford.—12th. A township in the West Riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-east-by-south of Wakefield.—13th. A parish in the county of Suffolk; 74 miles north-east of London. Population 643.

WALTON, EAST, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 7½ miles north-west of Swaffham.

WALTON, WEST, another parish in the same county; 2 miles from Wisbeach.

WALTON, EAST, a parish of Wales, in Pembrokeshire; 5 miles north of Haverford West.

WALTON, WEST, another parish in the above county; 5 miles north of Haverford West.

WALTON, CARDIFFE, a parish of England, county of Gloucester; 1 mile south-east-by-east of Tewkesbury.

WALTON LE DALE, a township of England, in the county of Lancaster; 2 miles south-east of Preston. Population 4776.

WALTON IN GORDANO, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 11½ miles west of Bristol.

WALTON, HIGH, a township of England, in Cumberland; 10½ miles north-east-by-east of Carlisle.

WALTON, HIGHER, a township of England, in the county of Chester.

WALTON ON THE HILL, a township of England, in the county of Lancaster; 3 miles north-by-east of Liverpool. Population 794.—Also a parish in the county of Surrey; 4 miles south-by-east of Epsom.

WALTON, Low, a township of England, in Cumberland; 10 miles north-east-by-east of Carlisle.

WALTON, LOWER, a township of England, in the county of Chester; 8 miles north-east of Frodsham.

WALTON-LE-SOKEN, a parish of England, in the county of Essex, one of the three Sokens, situated under Naze point, south of Harwich. It was formerly much more considerable than at present, the sea having destroyed the greater part of the village. The ancient church is entirely destroyed, and the remains of coffins and bones are observable, intermixed with the sea sand. To the north of the town, on the Naze, is a lofty tower, about 80 feet high, of brick, originally built by the Rigby family, lords of the manor, as an observatory and tea-room, but lately heightened by the Trinity-house, to form a landmark for vessels passing this way, or entering Harwich harbour. Walton has long been noted for its extensive copperas works, which were erected here on account of the number of copperas stones found on the shore.

WALTON-ON-THAMES, a parish of England, in the county of Surrey, situated on the banks of the river Thames, over which it has a handsome brick bridge of four main arches and several smaller ones, erected in the year 1780; 3 miles west of Kingston. Population 2722.

WALTON-UPON-TRENT, a township of England, in Derbyshire; 17 miles south-west of Derby.

WALTON-ON-THE-WOLDS, a parish of England, county of Leicester; 4 miles east of Loughborough.

WALTON WOOD, a parish of England, county of Huntingdon; 6 miles north-by-west of Huntingdon.

WALTON, a post township of the United States, in Delaware county, New York, on the Delaware; 85 miles south-west of Albany. Population 1311.

WALTON, a county of the United States, in Georgia.

WALTON (Brian), editor of the English Polyglott Bible, was born about the year 1600, in the district of Cleveland, Yorkshire, and in 1615 admitted into Magdalen college, Cambridge, whence he removed to Peter-house. In 1623 he took the degree of M. A., being then curate and master of a school in Suffolk. Upon his removal to London, he became, in 1626, rector of St. Martin's Orgar, and was distinguished for his talents and diligence among the London clergy. After having been instituted to other preferments in the church, he took the degree of D.D., in 1639; but in the civil war his livings were sequestered, and he was under the necessity of seeking shelter among the royalists at Oxford, where he formed the design of the Polyglott Bible, and which he actually commenced, upon his removal to London, in 1653. Indefatigable in his application, he completed this work in 6 vols. fol. in 1657; and it was the first work published in England by subscription. The protector's government also allowed him to import paper exempt from duty. It is somewhat curious in the history of literature, that in the first preface to this work, Dr. Walton acknowledged his obligations to the protector for his patronage; but that after the Restoration, several alterations were made in this preface, and the paragraph in which he acknowledges his obligations to the protector is suppressed, and another transferring his respect to Charles is introduced in its room. These alterations have occasioned a distinction among those who are curious in the editions of books between republican and royal or loyal copies of the Polyglott. The republican copy is the rarest, and therefore bears the highest price. He died on the 29th of November, 1661. His remains were interred in the cathedral of St. Paul's, and a sumptuous monument was erected to his memory. Biog. Brit.

WALTON (Isaac), was born at Stafford in 1593; and settling in London as a shopkeeper, he married, about the year 1632, the sister of Dr. Ken, afterwards bishop of Bath and Wells. Satisfied with a moderate competency, he left business, and removed from London. Upon the decease of Dr. Donne, in 1631, whose ministry he attended during his residence in the city, he undertook, at the request of Sir Henry Wotton, to collect materials for his life; but as Wotton, for whose use they were intended, died before he had an opportunity of executing his purpose, Walton, though destitute of a literary education, wrote this life, which he published in 1640, and also that of Wotton, which appeared in 1644. After his recess from business, his favourite amusement was fishing; and being expert in the practical part of this art, he wrote a book upon the subject, which he published in 1653, under the title of "Complete Angler, or Contemplative Man's Recreation," 12mo. This small tract, drawn up in the form of dialogue, was rendered interesting by the reflections that were introduced, and by the engravings of fishes that adorned it. Accordingly it became popular, and five editions of it, with successive improvements, appeared in the year 1676; and it is now a kind of standard book among those who pursue this recreation. Having lost his wife, in 1662, he associated chiefly with the clergy, and whilst he was resident with Dr. Morley, bishop of Winchester, he was induced, by the suggestion of Dr. Sheldon, to write the life of Richard Hooker, which was followed by that of George Herbert; and both were published in 1670. In 1677, he published the life of Dr. Sanderson, which closed his literary labours. His life was prolonged to the age of 90, when he was carried off at Winchester, in December, 1683, by the severity of a hard frost. In his disposition and character, he was amiable and religious; and in his style of writing simple and unaffected.

WALTRON, s. The morse, or waltron, is called the sea-horse. Woodward.

WALUF, or LOWER WALUF, a large village of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau.

WALURU, a town of the south of India, province of Mysore. It consists of 500 houses, and is defended by a citadel. It is situated a few miles distant from Bangalore.

WALWARN, a river of England, in the county of Chester, which falls into the Lee.

WALWICK CHESTERS, a hamlet of England, in the county of Northumberland, situated on the banks of the Tyne, near the Grange.

WALWICK, GRANGE, another hamlet in Northumberland, south-east of Simonburn, on the Picts wall, which is here in tolerably good preservation.

WALWORTH, a hamlet of England, in the parish of St. Mary's, Newington, county of Surrey.

WALWORTH, a township of England, county of Durham; 3½ miles north-west of Darlington.—Also a small hamlet in the parish of Hitchin, county of Hertford.

WAMAR, a small island in the Eastern seas, near the west coast of Aroo. Lat. 5. 30. S. long. 134. 57. E.

WAMBERG, or BAMBERG, a town of the east of Bohemia; 20 miles east-south-east of Koniggratz. Population 1000.

To WAMBLE, v. n. [wemmelen, Dutch. Hence the old Eng. "wamblinge of the stomach." Pr. Parv.] To roll with nausea and sickness. It is used of the stomach.

When your cold salads without salt or vinegar
Be wambling in your stomachs. Beaum. and Fl.

WAMBROOK, a parish of England, in Dorsetshire; 14 miles north-west-by-west of Beaminster.

WAMEL, a village of the Netherlands, in Gelderland, with 1100 inhabitants.

WAMERTINGHE, a small inland town of the Netherlands, with 2000 inhabitants; 3 miles west of Ypres.

WAMPFRAY, a parish of Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, about 5 miles long and 3 broad.

WAMPOOL, or WATHINPOOL, a township of England, in Cumberland; 4½ miles north-by-west of Wigton.

WAMPUL, a river of England, in Cumberland, which runs into the Eden mouth, below Kirkbride.

WAN, adj. [pann, Saxon; gwan, weakly, Welsh.] Pale as with sickness; languid of look.

All the charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty. Shakspeare.

WAN, for won; the old pret. of win.

And those with which th' Eubean young man wan
Swift Atalanta, when through craft he her outran. Spenser.

WANASQUIATUCKET, a river of the United States, in Rhode Island, which unites with the Moshasick, just above Providence, to form Providence river.

WANBOROUGH, a parish of England, county of Surrey; 4 miles west of Guildford.

WANBOROUGH, a parish of England, in Wiltshire; 3½ miles east-by-south of Swindon.

WAND, s. [vaand, Danish; wand, Su. Goth.] A small stick or twig; a long rod.—The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands. Shakspeare.—Any staff of authority, or use.—He held before his decent steps a silver wand. Milton.—A charming rod.

Nay, lady, sit; if I but wave this wand,
Your nerves are all chain'd up in alabaster. Milton.

To WANDER, v. n. [panþjnan, Saxon; wandelin, Dutch.] To rove; to ramble here and there; to go, without any certain course. It has always a sense either evil or slight, and imports either idleness, viciousness, or misery.

Then came wandering by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood, and he shriek'd out aloud. Shakspeare.

To deviate; to go astray.—O let me not wander from thy commandments. Ps.

To WANDER, v. a. To travel over, without a certain course.

Those few escap'd
Famine and anguish, will at last consume,
Wandering that wat'ry desert. Milton.

WANDERER, s. Rover; rambler.

He here to every thirsty wanderer,
By sly enticement, gives his baneful cup. Milton.

WANDERING, s. Uncertain peregrination.

He

He asks the god, what new appointed home
Should end his wanderings, and his toils relieve? Addison.

Aberration; mistaken way.—If any man's eagerness of glory has made him oversee the way to it, let him now recover his wanderings. Dec. of Chr. Piety.—Incertainty; want of being fixed.—A proper remedy for this wandering of thoughts would do great service to the studious. Locke.

WANDERINGLY, adv. In an uncertain, unsteady manner.—Were thy prayers made in fear and holiness, with passion and desire? Were they not made unwillingly, weakly, and wanderingly? Bp. Taylor.

WANDERSLEBEN, a small town of Prussian Saxony; 9 miles south-west of Erfurt.

WANDIA, a town of Hindostan, province of Cutch, district of Wagur. Lat. 23. 3. N. long. 70. 43. E.

WANDIPORE, a town and fortress of Hindostan, province of Bootan. At Wandipore, there is a celebrated bridge, constructed of mountain fir, without the use of iron. It is said to have existed for 150 years, without exhibiting any appearance of decay. The climate here is excessively cold, and subject to high winds. Lat. 27. 51. N. long. 89. 57. E.

WANDIWASH, a town and fortress of the south of India, province of the Carnatic. Lat. 12. 29. N. long. 79. 40. E.

WANDORF, a village of Hungary, on the borders of Lower Austria, with a large coal mine, from which coals are sent to Vienna.

WANDSBECK, a town of Germany; 2 miles from Ham-burgh.

WANDSDYKE, or WODEN'S DYKE, a strong earthen rampart in England, which extends from near Bath, in Somersetshire, over the Downs, to Great Bedwin, and from east to west over Salisbury plain. It was cast up by the West Saxons, against the incursions of the British. Along the south side of it runs a broad ditch.

WANDSFORTH, or WANDSFORD BRIGGS, a town of England, in Northamptonshire, situated on the river Nen, opposite to Stibbington, in Huntingdonshire. It has a fine bridge over the Nen, and a fine wharf on the banks of that river.

WANDSWORTH, a parish of England, in the county of Surrey, so called from its situation on the banks of the small river Wandle, which here falls into the Thames; 5 miles south-west-by-west of London. Population 5644.

To WANE, v. n. [panian, to grow less, Sax.] To grow less; to decrease. Applied to the moon: opposed to wax.

Waning moons their settled periods keep,
To swell the billows, and ferment the deep. Addison.

To decline; to sink.

A lady far more beautiful
Than any woman in this waning age. Shakespeare.

To WANE, v. a. To cause to wane. Not in use.

No lustful finger can profane him,
Nor any earth with black eclipses wane him. B. Jonson.

WANE, s. Decrease of the moon.

This is fair Diana's case;
For all astrologers maintain,
Each night a bit drops off her face,
When mortals say she's in her wane. Swift.

Decline; diminution; declension.—You're cast upon an age, in which the church is in its wane. South.

WANFRIED, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, on the Werra; 30 miles east-by-south of Cassel. Population 1400.

WANG, s. [panz-тoδ, Saxon.] Jaw teeth. The latchet of a shoe; a shoe-thong; a shoe-wang. [pceo-δpanz, Sax.] Ray.

WANGARA, a large country, situated in the very heart of Central Africa, and much celebrated in the early descriptions of that continent, though it has not been reached, or even any distinct particulars obtained by modern travellers. The Arabian travellers in the twelfth century represent it as the grand source of African wealth. Edrisi describes it as entirely traversed and intersected by branches of the Nile of the Negroes, or modern Niger. They form it indeed into a species of island, 300 miles in length, and 150 in breadth. During the season of the rains, which rise to their greatest height in August, the whole country was overflowed and laid under water. In September the waters began to subside, and after retiring, left the whole country impregnated with gold dust. The natives then hastened, and, by slight digging, obtained an ample portion of this precious metal, which they disposed of to merchants, who hastened thither from the remotest extremities of the continent. The principal towns of Wangara were Semegda and Reghebil, situated on the shore of extensive and beautiful lakes. The country was subject to the king of Ghana, who held extensive sway over this part of Africa. Wangara is now stated to be subject to Bornou.

WANGEN, a small town of France, in Lower Alsace; 12 miles west of Strasburg.

WANGEN, a small town of Switzerland, on the river Aar; 5 miles north-east of Soleure.

WANGEN, a small town of Germany in Wirtemberg; 11 miles north-north-east of Lindau.

WANGERIN, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania; 22 miles north-east of Stargard.

WANGER-OEG, a sandy island on the coast of the grand duchy of Oldenburg, in the north-west of Germany. It is 12 miles in circumference. Its inhabitants, amounting to 200, subsist by fishing. Lat. 53. 48. 26. N. long. 7. 52. 35. E.

WANGFORD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 3½ miles north-west-by-north of Southwold. Population 502.—Another parish in the same county; 3 miles south-west-by-west of Brandon Fary.

WANGWELL, a small island in the Pacific ocean, near the south coast of Waygiou. Lat. 0. 23. S. long. 131. 35. E.

WANHOPE, s. [from pana, Sax., to want, and hope.] Want of hope. Obsolete.—In wanhope and dyspayre. Lib. Fest.

WANKANEER, a fortified town of Hindostan, province of Gujerat. Lat. 22. 27. N. long. 70. 58. E.

WANLIP, a parish of England, in Leicester; 3½ miles south-east-by-south of Mount Sorrell.

WANLOCK, a small river of Scotland, on the borders of Dumfries and Lanark shires, which has its rise at the lead mines, and, after running a few miles, joins the Crawick at the same place as the Spango from Kirkconnel on the west.

WANLOCKHEAD, a considerable village of Scotland, in Dumfries-shire, in the parish of Sanquhar, about a mile south-west of Lead-hills, seated on the abovementioned river.

WAN-NASH-REESE, a lofty rugged mountain, generally covered with snow, situated in the southern part of the kingdom of Algiers; 45 miles south of Shershell.

WAN'NED, adj. Turned pale and faint-coloured.
Is it not monstrous that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit,
That, from her working, all his visage wann'd?
Shakespeare.

WANNE-PERVEEN, a village of the Netherlands; 14 miles north of Zwolle. Population 1400.

WANNERTON, a hamlet of England, near Kidderminster, in the county of Worcester.

WAN'NESS, s. Paleness; languor.

WAN'NISH, adj. Of a pale or wan hue. Barret.
The leaves should all be black whereon I write,
And letters where my tears have wash'd a wannish white.
Milton.

WANNOUGAH, a mountain of Algiers; 100 miles west of Constantina.

WANNY, an extensive district of the island of Ceylon, situated on the north-east quarter, in the vicinity of Trincomalee. It is a flat country, and well calculated for the cultivation of rice. The ruins of 600 reservoirs or tanks evince that that it was formerly much more populous and better cultivated than at present; but it has suffered much from the wars between the Candians and the different European conquerors of the island; but now that it is in the tranquil possession of the British, it will probably recover its former prosperity.

WANOAEETTEE, a small island in the Pacific ocean; 10 miles west-north-west of Watehoo.

WANSBECK, a river of England, in Northumberland, which falls into the sea near Seaton Delaval.

WANSEN, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Oppeln; 22 miles south-by-east of Breslau. Population 800.

WANSFORD, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Thornough, Northamptonshire; 6 miles from Peterborough.

WANSFORD, a township of England, in Yorkshire, near Driffield. Population 368.

WANSLEBEN (John-Michael), the son of a Lutheran minister at Erfurt, in Thuringia, was born in 1635; and having studied philosophy and theology at Konigsberg, he acquired a knowledge of the Ethiopic language under the instruction of Ludolf, by whom he was sent to London to publish his Ethiopic dictionary in 1661; and he was also employed by Castell in compiling his "Lexicon Heptaglotton." Upon his return to Germany, Ernest, duke of Saxe-Gotha, engaged him to visit Abyssinia, for the purpose of acquainting himself with the language and natural history of that country; but having reached Cairo in 1663, he was prevented from proceeding to Abyssinia, as it is thought, by his own misconduct, and embarking at Alexandria, in 1665, he arrived in Italy; and in the following year abandoned Lutheranism, and entered into the Dominican order. Upon his being introduced to Colbert, at Paris, in 1670, he was engaged to make a visit to Abyssinia, and to bring home all the manuscripts which he could purchase. During his residence of twenty months in Egypt, he transmitted for the Royal Library at Paris, 334 manuscripts, Arabian, Persian, and Turkish. But not being able to enter Abyssinia, he went to Constantinople, and from thence, in 1676, he was recalled to France, on account of his irregular conduct. Being at length reduced to want, he gained a mere subsistence by serving the village church of Bouron as vicar, where he died at the age of fifty-eight, in the year 1693. His principal publications are, "The Liturgy of Dioscorus, Patriarch of Alexandria," Lond. 1662; "An Account of the present State of Egypt, in Italian," 1671; "Nouvelle Relation en forme de Journal d'un Voyage fait en Egypte au 1672 et 1673;" "Histoire de l'Eglise d'Alexandria," 1677; which is said to contain a more accurate catalogue of the patriarchs of Alexandria than that of Ludolf communicated to the Jesuits of Antwerp. Moreri.

WANSTEAD, a village and parish of England, in the county of Essex, and in the neighbourhood of the metropolis. Many of the houses in the parish are handsome buildings, the residence of opulent merchants and tradesmen of London. The present church was finished in the year 1790; the foundation having been laid by the late Sir James Tilney Long, Bart.

WANSTEAD, a hamlet of England, in Southamptonshire, near Titchfield.

To WANT, v. a. ["Waned, wan'd, want; the past participle of panian, decrescere, to wane, to fall away." Mr. H. Tooke.] To be without something fit or necessary.—Want no money, Sir John; you shall want none. Shakspeare.—To be defective in something.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
Obedience to the law. Milton.

To fall short of; not to contain.
Nor think, though men were none,
That Heaven would want spectators, God want praise.
Milton.

To be without; not to have.
By descending from the thrones above,

Those happy places, thou hast deign'd a while
To want and honour these. Milton.

To need; to have need of; to lack.
The sylvans to their shade retire,
Those very shades and streams new shades and streams require,
And want a cooling breeze of wind to fan the raging fire.
Dryden.

To wish; to long; to desire.
Down I come, like glistening Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shakspeare.

To WANT, v. n. To be wanted; to be improperly absent; not to be in sufficient quantity.—Nor did there want cornice of frieze. Milton.—To fail; to be deficient.

Nor shall I to the work thou enterprisest
Be wanting, but afford thee equal aid. Milton.

To be missed; to be not had.
Twelve, wanting one, he slew,
My brethren: I alone surviv'd. Dryden.

WANT, s. Need.
It infers the good
By thee communicated, and our want. Milton.

Deficiency.—This proceeded not from any want of knowledge, but of judgment. Dryden.—The state of not haying.—You shall have no reason to complain of me, for want of a generous disdain of this world. Pope.—Poverty; penury; indigence.—Nothing is so hard for those who abound in riches, as to conceive how others can be in want. Swift.—[panb, Saxon.] A mole.—A kind of hair resembling a want in his feet, and a cat in his tail. Heylin.

WANTAGE, a market town of England, in the county of Berks, situated on the skirts of the prolific vale of White Horse. A variety of concurring testimonies render it probable that this place was once a Roman station; though the numerous alterations which it has undergone, almost preclude the possibility of tracing those remains which would at once decide the question and the controversy. In this neighbourhood the footsteps of various nations may be discovered; but they are all imperfect. Roman works have been demolished to make room for Saxon, and these again have been superseded by the devices of modern times. This town is celebrated in history as the birth-place of the great Alfred, and in the time of the Saxons it was a royal residence; and after the conquest it was made a borough. About three miles south are the remains of an ancient Roman camp, called Letcombe Castle; 26 miles north-west of Reading, and 60 north-west of London. Population 2386.

WANTESDEN, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 4½ miles north-west-by-west of Orford.

WANTLESS, adj. Abundant; fruitful.
Fruitful banks, whose bounds are chiefly said,
The wantlèss counties Essex, Kent, Surrey, &c. Warner.
Nor sends a doit of needless subsidy
To cram the Kennet's wantless treasury. Sylvester.

WANTON, adj. [This word is derived by Minshéu from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion. Serrenius refers it to the Goth. faenta, puella lasciva; Lye to the Danish vaanden, delicatus, pampered.] Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lustful.

Thou art froward by nature, enemy to peace,
Lascivious, wanton; more than well beseems
A man of thy profession. Shakspeare.

Licentious; dissolute.
My plenteous joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow. Shakspeare.

Frolicsome; gay; sportive; airy.
As flies to wanton boy, we are to th' gods:
They kill us for their sport. Shakspeare.

Loose; unrestrained.—How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise! Addison.

Quick

Quick, and irregular of motion.
She as a veil down to the slender waist
Her unadorned golden tresses wore,
Dishevell'd, but in wanton ringlets wav'd,
As the vine curls her tendrils.

Milton.

Luxuriant: superfluous.
What we by day lop overgrown,
One night or two, with wanton growth derides,
Tending to wild.

Milton.

Not regular; turned fortuitously.
The quaint mazes in the wanton green,
For lack of tread are undistinguishable.

Shakspeare.

WANTON, s. A lascivious person; a strumpet; a whoremonger.

To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppose her chaste.

Shakspeare.

A trifler; an insignificant flutterer.

Shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd, silken wanton brave your fields,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check?

Shakspeare.

A word of slight endearment.
Peace, my wantons; he will do
More than you can aim unto.

B. Jonson.

To WA'NTON, v. n. To play lasciviously.
He from his guards and midnight tent,
Disguis'd o'er hills and vallies went,
To wanton with the sprightly dame,
And in his pleasure lost his fame.

Prior.

To revel; to play. In Otway it may be an adjective.
Oh! I heard him wanton in his praise;
Speak things of him might charm the ears.

Otway.

To move nimbly, and irregularly.
To WA'NTON, v. a. To make wanton.—If he does win, it wantons him with overplus, and enters him into new ways of expence. Feltham.

To WA'NTONIZE, v. n. To behave wantonly or disso-lutely.

Do not thyself betray
With wantonizing years.

Daniel.

WANTONLY, adv. Lasciviously; frolicsomenly; gayly; sportively; carelessly.

Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,
Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear:
But do not wantonly my passion move,
I pardon nothing that relates to love.

Dryden.

WANTONNESS, s. Lasciviousness; lechery.—The spirit of wantonness is scar'd out of him. Shakspeare.—Sportiveness; frolic; humour.

When I was in France,
Young Leonatus would be sad as night,
Only for wantonness.

Shakspeare.

Licentiousness; negligence of restraint.
Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace.

Milton.

WANTSUM, a river of England, forming a branch of the great river Stour, in Kent.

WANTWIT, s. A fool; an idiot.
Such a wantwit sadness makes of me,
That I have much ado to know myself.

Shakspeare.

WANTY, s. [Etymology unknown.] A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse; a surcingle.

A panel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
With line to fetch litter.

Tusser.

WANZENAU, a town of France, in Alsace, with a castle, and 1500 inhabitants; 6 miles north of Strasburg.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1656.

WANZLEBEN, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Magdeburg; 10 miles west-south-west of Magdeburg. Population 2300.

WAPAKONETTA, or WAPAGKANETTA, an Indian town of the United States, in Ohio, on the Au-Glaize; 7 miles south-east of Taway town.

WAPATTOO ISLAND, an island of North America, formed by the junction of the Multnomah with the Columbia; 20 miles long, and 10 broad. The land is high and extremely fertile, and on most parts is supplied with a heavy growth of cottonwood, ash, the large-leaved ash, and sweet willow; the black alder, common to the coast, having now disappeared. But the chief wealth of this island consists of the numerous ponds in the interior, abounding with the common arrowhead (sagittaria sagittifolia), to the root of which is attached a bulb growing beneath it in the mud.
This bulb, to which the Indians give the name of wapattoo, is the great article of food, and almost the staple article of commerce on the Columbia.

WAPED, adj. Waped is corrupted for wappen'd, by way of paraphrase.

WAPENBURY, a parish of England, in Warwickshire;
5 miles north-north-west of Southam.

WAPENTAKE, s. [wapentakium, wapentagium, low
Lat.] Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred:
as, upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance.
Cowel.—Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake, so named, of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think, that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs.
Spenser.

WAPESSAGA, a lake of Canada. Lat. 48. 10. N. long.
71. 40. W.

WAPITWAGO ISLANDS, a cluster of islands near the south coast of Labrador. Lat. 50. 4. N. long. 60. 20. W.

WAPLEY, or WAPELEY, a parish of England; 2 miles south-west-by-west of Chipping Sodbury.

WAPLEY, a parish of England, in Yorkshire; 7 miles east of Guisbrough.

WAPLINGTON, a township of England, in Yorkshire;
2½ miles south-west of Pocklington.

WAPOO CREEK, a river of North America, which flows into Lake St. Clair.

WAPPENHAM, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire. Population 396.

WAPPERED, adj. Restless; fatigued. Spoken of a sick person, in Gloucestershire. Grose. Hence in Beaumont and Fletcher unwappered, fresh.

We come towards the gods,
Young, and unwapper'd; not halting under crimes
Many and stale.

Beaum. and Fl.

WAPPING, a village and parish of England, in the county of Middlesex, on the east of the metropolis, and reckoned one of its out-parishes. It is situated on the north bank of the river Thames. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in trades connected with the shipping of the port of London, such as slop-sellers, ship-carpenters, sail-makers, chandlers, &c. The new docks formed here, have been a great improvement to the place. The one called St. George's dock, is capable of holding 200 sail of shipping; and Shadwell dock, adjoining to it, is capable of holding 50 sail.
But these will be surpassed by the Catharine docks now erecting. The entrance from the Thames is by three basons, sufficient to contain an immense quantity of small craft; and the inlets from the river into the basons are at the Old Hermitage, Old Wapping, and Old Shadwell docks. At the eastern extremity are stupendous warehouses, belonging to the custom-house, although rented of the dock company, for warehousing tobacco; and the cellars are appropriated to housing of wines. There are various ranges of warehouses for general merchandize. The church of Wapping is dedicated to St. John; is a plain building, erected in 1790; and is a rectory, under the patronage of Brazenose college, Oxford.

WAPPINGER'S CREEK, a post village of the United States, in Poughkeepsie, New York.

WAPPINGER'S CREEK, a river of the United States, in New York, which runs into the Hudson; 8 miles south of Poughkeepsie; length 33 miles.

WAPPO, a small sea-port on the Grain coast of Africa.

WAPPOCOMO, a river of the United States, in Virginia, which runs into the Potomac; 9 miles east-south-east of Fort Cumberland.

WAPUWAGAN ISLANDS, a cluster of islands near the coast of Labrador. Lat. 50. 2. N. long. 60. 14. W.

WAR, s. [werre, old Dutch; guerre, Fr.; wer, German and A. Saxon, which Wachter derives from weren, to defend.] Fighting with murderous weapons.

On, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fetch'd from fathers of war proof.

Shakspeare.

The instruments of war, in poetical language.

The god of love inhabits there,
With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care;
His complement of stores, and total war.

Prior.

Forces; army. Poetically.

On the embattled ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war.

Milton.

The profession of arms.—Thine Almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction. Wisd.—Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.

Duncan's horses

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience as they would Make war with man.

Shakspeare.

We have given a considerable portion of the science of War under the articles ARTILLERY, FORTIFICATION, CAVALRY, &c., and we have only here to consider that part of war which refers to the general management of campaigns and to engagements in the open field. To the science of war there properly belongs a very extensive branch of political knowledge, namely, how states become cowardly or valiant, and what system of discipline makes the best troops; but there is so little information published on this head, that we have no materials, in the present state of things, to compile from.

In war we observe three main principles. The first of these relates to what is commonly termed forming the plan of a campaign, and consists, either in an offensive or defensive view, in the art of embracing the lines of operations in the most advantageous manner.

The second is the art of moving the mass of forces, in the most rapid manner possible, upon a particular part of the country.

The third is the art of combining the simultaneous application of the mass of forces on the most important point of a field of battle.

A plan of a campaign depends upon six essential considerations: 1st, The political situation of both parties; 2d, The situation of the moment; 3d, The relative force and military means; 4th, The location and distribution of the armies; 5th, The natural line of operations; 6th, The most advantageous line of operations. In forming the plan, it is not necessary to have regard solely to the exact balance of the relative means of war between the parties, but to view them only as they are important. Territorial and manœuvring lines of operations are the principal object; and though they are subject to many accessory considerations, the rules of the art must nevertheless form their basis. Originality and great boldness are not incompatible with their application: such, for instance, as the plan which Napoleon, in 1800, executed in Italy. No enterprise could be more daring, none more rich in great and decisive combinations, or more prudent and cautious; since, while it menaced the enemy with ruin, no greater misfortune could occur, in case of check, than the sacrifice of the extreme rear-guard.

Before we proceed, it may be useful to fix, by definitions, several terms, upon the comprehension of which the most important military reasoning depends.

By a base or basis of operations is meant a frontier, the course of a river, a coast, a range of mountains or fortresses, or any topographical or political extent of country, upon the imaginary line of which the corps of an army assemble, offensively,—to take their departure from thence into the enemy's country, and towards which, in case of failure, it is intended to retreat; defensively,—to counteract all the measures which an invading force may pursue.

Lines of operations are divided into territorial and manœuvring lines. By territorial lines are understood those which nature or art has traced for the defence or invasion of states. Frontiers covered by fortresses, or defended by nature, with chains of mountains, great rivers, or other obstacles, form their constituents. Manœuvring lines are the dispositions of the general to traverse them offensively, or cover them defensively. Both these lines of operations are intimately connected. In offensive war, the line is an imaginary perpendicular upon the base, along which an army operates against the enemy; in defensive war, it is often the same, but still oftener parallel to the territorial line. A line of communication is either the same as that of operations, or any other by which the army receives its supplies, and communicates with the base.

Thus far no great variety of combinations seem to perplex the view; but in the selection of the particular line, the problem becomes difficult; because a great multiplicity of circumstances, many of them not purely military, interpose. The political situation of the belligerents; their relative resources; character and situation of the fortresses; accidental strength of their forces; distance by sea; course of a considerable river; direction of a chain of mountains; nature of the country; political state of either party; jealousy of a neutral, or apprehensions of an ally; all in their turn claim consideration. In general, however, the initial application of military masses should be, when the belligerents are neighbours, upon some part of the frontier, which projects into the hostile state; such as Bohemia with regard to Prussia, or vice versa, Silesia with regard to Austria. But it is a maxim that lines of operations have their key as well as fields of battle: in the former, the great strategical points are decisive; as in the latter, the points which command the weak part of a position, constitute the key. Where there exists a vast superiority of force on one side, the key, or great strategical point, may be sought at a considerable depth in the line of operations; but where the masses are nearly balanced, it is necessarily reduced to a relative proportion with the breadth of the base. Thus, for instance, the destruction of a French army on the frontier of the Netherlands, would not immediately produce the consequence of the victors marching to the capital, unless they had sufficient superiority to mask the principal fortresses which cover her line of defence in that quarter, or some other accidental circumstance rendered such a measure practicable. As farther proofs of the relative proportion between the depth and base of a line of operations, that of Napoleon in Russia failed on both its pivots, before the summit was defeated; and those in Spain, although they were supported by intermediate fortresses, immediately contracted, when the battle of Salamanca produced consequences which endangered the western communication with the base.

Although it is absolutely necessary to move with a mass of force near the enemy, it is more advantageous to march in separate corps while still at a distance from him, if he has not a concentrated mass ready to act, and there be several roads leading concentrically towards the point intended to be occupied. It is evident, that five corps, of twenty thousand men each, will move forward more rapidly towards any point, than a hundred thousand men, marching on the same road, who

who can only advance with the tardiness inherent in large bodies, and besides are encumbered with the immense train of their subsistence. Celerity of movement, multiplying the force of an army by enabling the mass to be carried alternately upon every point of the line, is an advantage of invaluable consequence; but this is not the only reason for recommending this method. There are two others, viz. the increased facility of subsistence, and the uncertainty into which it throws the enemy.

An army of 20,000 men can find subsistence, in central Europe, on every part of their march, by merely causing the country, within some leagues, to contribute to their wants; and if they convey with them biscuit for eight or ten days, that is, during the first period while corps are in position, or manœuvring in a contracted area with other columns, they will be enabled to subsist till the magazines are formed. Thus, military operations are, in a great degree, emancipated from the necessity of pre-arranged magazines, and the regular encumbrance of field-ovens.

The army which commences offensive operations takes the lead in all the movements, and those of the enemy are necessarily subordinate to them. If, therefore, it occupies with a corps, each of the great avenues leading to the enemy, he will be in a state of uncertainty along his whole line of defence or operations, and remain in suspense as to the point upon which he ought to collect his masses to oppose them. Upon these facts, the following series of maxims are founded:

1. When an army undertakes an invasion, or acts offensively, it takes the lead (or, as the French term it, l'initiative) in the movements.

2. This advantage precludes the necessity of marching in mass, until near the point where the enemy is to be found and attacked; until then, it is preferable to move in several strong corps, in proportion to the collective strength of the army, and to direct them upon the communications which lead concentrically to the point.

3. The general direction can only be upon the centre, one of the extremities, or the rear of the hostile line. An extremity will usually be found most eligible, because, from that point, the rear is easily attained; the centre, only in the case where the enemy's line is scattered, and his corps separated by great intervals.

4. In this case, the greater number of the corps should advance upon one of the isolated parts, and endeavour to surround it, while the remainder should occupy a central point to keep the rest of the hostile army in check.

5. When the principal mass of these corps is directed into the rear of an enemy, by passing one of the extremities of his line, one corps should remain upon that extremity, in order to keep open the communication with the line of operations, while the opponent is cut off from his. This corps serves likewise to attack him in flank, and to prevent him from withdrawing out of a faulty position by a secret movement.

6. These operations are most advantageous when the enemy is at a great distance from his own base. The principle may, however, be applied to positions less distant (two or three marches); provided the different corps have no greater distance to traverse to the point of reunion, than that which separates them from those of their own advanced posts who face the enemy. But this rule should not be understood as applying to isolated divisions upon an extended front of ninety or a hundred miles, unable to unite on a day of action, and whose movements cannot be simultaneous upon the decisive point. The difference is easily perceived between such operations and those of several corps concentrated in a position, the depth of which equals the extent of front, and whose simultaneous co-operation is certain before the enemy can make an attempt upon their line.

7. By means of this system, the army occupying a greater space marches more rapidly, and is enabled to subsist on the roads. Cattle and biscuit alone will be required to follow each corps, in sufficient quantity to subsist it when in the vicinity of the enemy, where the other corps having likewise arrived, they are obliged to live within a smaller periphery. The stock of provision will be sufficient, if equal to the time required for collecting another.

8. Magazines are then formed in the rear as the army advances. They are collected by means of regular requisitions made on the neighbouring provinces, and enforced by a few troops; contracts are entered into with the local administrations, and precautionary convoys follow from the frontiers. Cattle, rice, and biscuit, are the most useful provisions; the easiest to be transported.

In this view of the theory of initial operations, such as Jomini, and other authorities, consider them, no great regard is paid to the waste of human life, by the frequent want or irregularity of the issue of provisions, or notice taken of the indiscipline which naturally arises when famine drives the soldier to marauding. A relentless conscription system may, indeed, supply recruits; but they are a very inadequate instrument when compared to formed soldiers.

It remains to examine the art of forming a plan of campaign or operations in reference to insular expeditions.

1. When an army is directed to make a descent upon an enemy's coast, with the object of penetrating into the country, a point of debarkation should be selected, where the enemy possesses no local means to arrest the progress, such as a fortified city or a defensible peninsula. If, however, circumstances compel the descent near or upon such a spot, immediate measures should be taken to mask or capture it, and secure the success of ulterior operations.

2. If the expedition is intended to be confined solely to the coast, the point of debarkation should possess the indispensable qualifications of facility of communication with the fleet; security of retreat; and reembarkation. A point possessed of these advantages is a fit spot for a temporary base of operations.

3. An expedition intended to operate ulteriorly, should be ab initio superior to the probable immediate force of the enemy, so that the success of the landing and march into the country be not problematical.

4. No combinations of invasion should be made depending on the co-operation of corps expected from distant or opposite quarters. It is important to have them collected, as much as possible, on or near one point of embarkation, to proceed from thence in mass to execute the enterprise.

5. In the plan of an expedition, no combinations should be admitted which include two or more lines of operations from separate bases. Armies transported by sea are, from that circumstance, not numerous; division renders them still weaker, and if on one point a misfortune occurs, the others must reembark.

6. In colonial and insular expeditions, it is only necessary to combine the means in proportion to the strength of the object, and with attention to the season and climate. But on all occasions where the reduction of a fortress is in contemplation, the engineer department should possess an adequate materiel as well as the artillery.

The connection between manœuvring lines and those which nature has marked out, and the views of the general-in-chief, form separate classes, each named after the nature of that connection.

1. Simple lines of operations are those when an army operates in a single direction from a frontier, without forming detached corps.

2. Double and multiplied lines, when an army acts upon the same frontier with two or three isolated corps, towards one or several objects.

3. Interior lines of operations are formed to oppose several hostile lines, and are so directed as to possess internal connection, and enabled to move and approach each other, without allowing the enemy to oppose a superior mass to them.

4. Exterior lines, on the contrary, possess the opposite qualities; they are such as an army may form, at the same time, time, upon the two extremities of one or several hostile lines.

5. Lines upon an extended front are those which are arranged upon a great contiguous development by isolated divisions; but still belonging to the same mass of forces, and operating upon the same object. Under this head are comprehended, likewise, lines formed by two separate corps upon one given extent; they are then double lines upon a great front.

6. Deep or lengthened lines are those which, commencing at their base, pass over a great extent of country before they can attain their object.

7. Concentric lines of operations are either several or a single line subdivided, moving from distant points in order to arrive at the same object, in front or in rear of their base.

8. Eccentric lines designate a single mass starting from one point, and dividing itself in order to form several diverging lines upon isolated objects.

9. Secondary lines are those in the great combinations of two armies, which designate their relative connection while operating upon the development of the same frontier.

10. Accidental lines are produced in the original plan of campaign, when unexpected events necessitate a new direction for the operations. They are of the highest importance, and rarely adopted but by generals of the first abilities.

Formerly, lines of operations were considered only as they affected the materiel of armies; it was even advanced, that armies encamped near their magazines had no lines of operations; but an example will prove the fallacy of this opinion. Supposing two French armies encamped, one on the Upper Rhine in front of Brisac, and the other on the Lower Rhine in front of Dusseldorf, with both their magazines in the safest place, that is, behind the river. These armies must have either an offensive or defensive object, and therefore have territorial, as well as manœuvring lines of operations. 1st, The territorial defensive line will extend from the point of their position to the point which they are to cover; therefore they would both be cut off if the enemy occupied that point before them. If Melas, with his army, could have subsisted near Alexandria in Lombardy, after the battle of Marengo, he was no less cut off from his line of operations as long as his victorious opponents occupied the line of the Po. 2d, Their manœuvring lines would be a double against a simple one, if the enemy concentrated his masses to crush one of the armies; it would be a double external line against a double internal, if the enemy formed also two corps, but so directed that they could be united most readily.

A comparison of the combinations and results of the most celebrated campaigns shows, that all the lines of operations that have been crowned with success, depended on general principles, of which the following are the principal heads.

1. A double line of operations is advantageous, if the enemy has, likewise, a double line; provided theirs be exterior, and at a greater distance than yours, and unable to unite without first risking a battle.

2. An army possessing interior lines, more connected than those of the enemy, can, by strategical movements, destroy them successively, by carrying the mass of forces alternately upon each point.

3. In order to effect this movement, a corps should be left before the army which it is intended to keep in check, with orders not to engage, but merely to retard the march, by taking posts behind defiles or rivers, and retreating towards the army.

4. From the above premises, it follows that a double line of operations against an enemy, whose corps are in closer connection, will always be unfortunate with equal numbers, if the enemy profits by the advantages of his situation, and manœuvres with rapidity within it.

5. A double line of operations becomes still more dangerous, when its parts are separated by several days' march.

6. Simple and interior lines, on the contrary, are always most safe; because they admit the action of the mass of forces against the isolated divisions of the enemy, if he be so imprudent as to venture an action.

7. A double line of operations, however, may be adopted with success, if the forces employed are so much greater, that superior masses can be presented to the opponent on both his parts.

8. Two interior lines, mutually sustaining each other, and facing two exterior lines at a certain distance, must avoid being compressed into a small area; for the exterior hostile lines might thereby act simultaneously.

9. Again, they should not operate at too great intervals; for the enemy might have time to crush one of these divisions, while it is weakened by detaching to the other, and thus gain a decisive advantage.

10. It being the interest of a commander to divide and isolate the opponent's forces, his manœuvring lines should never have the object of drawing the whole hostile forces upon him.

In order to complete the view of territorial and manœuvring lines, it is requisite to consider them as they are affected by the configuration of frontiers.

1. In order to operate with advantage, there should not be two different armies upon the same frontier; because,

2. Double lines will always fail, with equal chances, against a single line, as has already been shown.

3. Interior lines resist with advantage against exterior lines, either upon the same, or upon two different frontiers.

4. When the hostile fortresses are scattered upon a line of great extent, the most advantageous manœuvring line is upon their centre; but on all other occasions, the best direction is upon one of the extremities, and from thence on the rear. When central masses are moved with ability against scattered corps, all other things being equal, they must always be successful, often even without a battle.

5. The configuration of a frontier may have important influence on the direction of lines of operation. Central positions, forming salient angles towards the enemy, are the most advantageous; because they are naturally interior, and lead to the flanks and rear of the opponent's defensive line. The sides of these salient angles are therefore so important, that all the resources of art should be added to those of nature to render them impregnable.

1. To direct the masses upon the decisive points of the line of operations, that is, upon the centre, if the enemy has been so imprudent as to scatter his forces, or upon an extremity, if he is in a contiguous line.

2. To make the great effort in the latter case upon that extremity, which has its back against an insurmountable obstacle, or which leads upon the communications of the enemy without sacrificing our own.

As to battles.—In these we had laid it down a fundamental principle to effect with the greatest mass of forces, a combined attack upon the decisive point; and it is easy to understand how a general of ability, with 60,000 men, may be able to defeat 100,000, if he can bring 50,000 into action, upon a single part of his enemy's line.

I. The first measures for this purpose is evidently that of taking the lead in the movements. The general who is enabled to have this advantage, can employ his forces wherever he thinks them applicable; while, on the contrary, he who is obliged to await the enemy, is no longer master of a single combination; because his movements must be subordinate to those of his adversary.

An army taking the lead in a movement should conceal it until in full execution. And a general should banish all calculations which suppose that the hostile general will be informed of a movement, and will oppose it by the best possible manœuvre, from the instant that the movement is begun.

When two armies combine to place the enemy between two fires, from the distance of several marches, they must ground ground the disposition upon a double line of operations against a simple one, and expose themselves to be defeated separately, if the enemy takes advantage of his central position.

II. The second consists in directing the movements against a weak point of the enemy, when that point offers the greatest advantages.

An attack to the front is always to be avoided, if a concentrated effort can possibly be made upon the extremity of an enemy's line, for which simple demonstrations on the front are sufficient.

A deep column being attacked on the head, is in a similar condition as an extremity of a line; both the one and the other are engaged in succession and defeated.

An attack upon the centre is only advisable when the hostile line is very extensive, and scattered into separate divisions; then, indeed, the result must be successful because the enemy's corps will thereby be totally separated and disabled from reuniting.

III. The result of the preceding truths leads to the maxim, that as it is better to attack the extremity of a line, yet that both the extremities should not be attacked at the same time, unless there be a very great superiority on the part of the assailant. An army of 60,000 men forming two corps of 30,000 each, for the purpose of attacking an enemy equally numerous, is deprived of the power of striking a decisive blow; because it enables the adversary to take equal measures, or even, if the movement be extended and unconnected, to assemble his mass against one of the divisions, and destroy it, by his momentary superiority. Multiplied attacks by means of a greater number of columns are still more dangerous,—more repugnant to the best principles of war; particularly when they cannot commence acting at the same moment, and upon the same point. But when there is a very great superiority of force on the side of the assailant, then indeed both the extremities of the hostile line should be attacked, because thus a greater number of troops is brought into action on both his wings; whereas if this great superiority were kept in one mass upon a single point, the adversary might deploy as many as the other party could bring into action, and thus engage with equal numbers. In this case it is only requisite to collect the greatest mass upon that wing where the greatest success is expected.

IV. In the strategical movement of a great mass in a combined effort upon one point, it is advisable to keep the forces concentrated, within a space approaching to square, so as to have them perfectly disposable; or, in other words, that the depth of the disposition be nearly equal to the front, enabling the battalions to arrive with promptitude from all quarters towards the point attacked. Extensive fronts militate as much against good principles, as great detachments and isolated divisions deprived of the means of being sustained.

V. One of the most efficacious means of applying the above general principles, is to induce the enemy to take contrary measures. By means of small corps of light troops, jealousies may be created for some important points of his communications. If he can be persuaded that they are formidable, he will be tempted to detach strong divisions against them, and scattering his forces, be disabled from acting with vigour himself, and be exposed to an attack from superior forces. Operations by detachments have, nevertheless, been in fashion. To divide and subdivide, till the main army was reduced to the secondary character of mere observing, was considered as the very summit of strategical science.

VI. When the lead is taken in a decisive movement against the enemy, great importance is attached to an exact knowledge of the positions and movements which he may undertake. Spies are then of the utmost consequence; but the use of partisans, thoroughly versed in watching the enemy, is of still greater utility. For this purpose, the general should scatter small parties in all directions, and multiply them with as much care as he would show to restrain them in great operations. Some divisions of light cavalry, expressly organized for this service, and not included in the order of battle, are the most efficient. To operate without such precautions is to walk in the dark, and to be exposed to the disastrous consequences which may be produced by a secret march of the enemy. Generally speaking, these measures are too much neglected. The Espionnage is not sufficiently organized beforehand; and the officers of light troops have not always the requisite experience to conduct their detachments.

VII. It is not sufficient for a good operation of war to convey with ability the mass of forces upon the most important points; they require, moreover, to be brought into action. If they remain inactive when arrived upon those points, the principle is forgotten; for the enemy may make counter-movements to defeat the project; and it is therefore indispensable that, from the moment his communications or his flank are gained, the mass of forces must march up to him and attack. This is the moment when a simultaneous employment of the troops must take place. Masses of troops present do not decide battles, but the acting masses alone have effect; the former, indeed, produce that consequence in strategical movements, but the latter determine the success of the action.

To insure this result, a general of ability will seize the proper moment to force the decisive point of the field of battle, and combine the attack in such a manner that all his forces will be brought into action, with the exception always of the reserve. But if the efforts emanating from this principle fail of the desired success, no other combination remains than a simultaneous general onset, in which the reserve is then to be brought forward, to make a last and decisive effort.

Orders of battle, or the most appropriate disposition for leading troops into action, should possess mobility and solidity. To attain these two objects, troops which are to remain on the defensive should be partly deployed and partly in columns.

The French have been very fond of engaging in massive columns, and the phalanx has, at first sight, an imposing appearance of strength. The hinder men are, however, in this arrangement, nearly useless—a British line two deep has been found to withstand the severest shocks from columns and even from cavalry.

To WAR, v. n. To make war; to be in a state of hostility.

Was this a face,

To be expos'd against the warring winds? Shakspeare.

To WAR, v. a. To make war upon.

That small infantry

Warr'd on by cranes.

Milton.

WARA, or HARA, a city of Central Africa, capital of the kingdom of Bergoo.

WARADEIN, GREAT, or NAGY VARAD, a fortified town of Hungary, on the river Koresch; 35 miles south-south-east of Debreczin, and 132 east-by-south of Pest. Lat. 47. 2. 50. N. long. 21. 55. 5. E. Population 7000.

WARANKUL, or WARANGOL, an ancient city of Hindostan, in the province of Hyderabad, belonging to the Nizam. Lat. 17. 54. N. long. 79. 34. E.

WARASDIN, a county of the Austrian states, in Croatia, having Styria and Illyria on the west, and the county of Agram on the east. Its area is about 720 square miles; its population about 134,000. The river Drave forms the northern boundary of the province.

WARASDIN, THE GENERALATE OF, a district of Croatia, adjoining to Slavonia, and separated from Hungary only by the Drave. More extensive, but less populous, than the county of the same name, this district contains 1440 square miles, with only 108,000 inhabitants.

WARASDIN, a town of Austrian Croatia, and the capital of a palatinate or county; 38 miles north-north-east of Agram, and 132 south of Vienna. Lat. 46. 18. 18. N. long. 16. 26. 6. E.

WARBERG, a seaport of Sweden, in the province of Halland; 34 miles south of Gottenburg. Lat. 57. 6. 18. N. long. 12. 16. E.

To WA'RBLE, v. a. [werben, old Teutonic; wer-velen, German; to twirl, or turn round. Johnson.—The old French language has werbler, parler à haute voix, reciter, discourir. Roquefort.—To quaver any sound.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs warbling tune his praise. Milton.

To cause to quaver.

Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string. Milton.

To utter musically.

She can thaw the numming spell,
If she be right invok'd with warbled song. Milton.

To WA'RBLE, v. n. To be quavered.—Such strains ne'er warble in the linnet's throat. Gay.—To be uttered melodiously.

There birds resort, and in their kind, thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays. Wotton.

To sing.

Creatures that liv'd and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things smil'd. Milton.

WA'RBLE, s. A song.—Every warble of the feather'd choir. Dyer.

WA'RBLER, s. A singer; a songster.

Hark! on ev'ry bough,
In lulling strains the feather'd warblers woo. Tickell.

WARBLETON, a parish of England, in Sussex; 6½ miles north-by-east of Haylesham. Population 966.

WARBLINGTON, a parish of England, in Southampton-
shire. Population 1658.

WARBOROUGH, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire;
10½ miles south-east-by-south of Oxford. Population 600.

WARBOYS, a parish of England, in Huntingdonshire;
4 miles south-south-east of Ramsay. Population 1100.

WARBRECK, a hamlet of England, in Lancashire; 1 mile north-north-east of Blackpool.

WARBSTOW, a parish of England, county of Cornwall;
8½ miles north-east of Camelford.

WARBURG, a town of Prussian Westphalia, on the Dymel; 22 miles south-east of Paderborn. Population 2200.

WARBURTON (William), was the son of an attorney at Newark-upon-Trent, where he was born December 24, 1628, and destined by his father for his own profession. But it was soon found, that his talents and disposition were more adapted to the church than to the law; and, therefore, in 1723, he took deacon's orders. To his first work, consisting of "Miscellaneous Translations in Prose and Verse," from Roman authors, was prefixed a Latin dedication to sir George
Sutton, who, in 1726, presented him to a small vicarage.
In 1727 he evinced his ability for original writing, by "A Critical and Philosophical Inquiry into the Causes of Prodigies and Miracles, as related by Historians, with an Essay towards restoring a Method and Purity in History, in which the Characters of the most celebrated Writers of every age, and of the several Stages and Species of History, are occasionally criticised and explained." This work was dedicated in very respectful and complimentary language, to Sir Robert Sutton, his first patron; by whose interest he was placed in the list of king's masters of arts, upon his majesty's visit to Cambridge in 1728. He was also presented by the same patron to the rectory of Broad Broughton, in Lincolnshire, where he remained some years in the assiduous prosecution of his studies. In 1736 he engaged the public attention as a writer by his well-known work entitled "The Alliance between Church and State; or, the Necessity and Equity of an established Religion and a Test-law, demonstrated from the essence and end of Civil Society upon the fundamental Principles of the Law of Nature and Nations." Our author's greatest work was published in 1738, and entitled "The Divine Legation of Moses, demonstrated on the Principles of a religious Deist, from the Omission of the Doctrine of a future State of Rewards and Punishments." In the year 1738 he published a sermon, entitled "Faith working by Charity to Christian Edification," and became chaplain to the prince of Wales. He published, in the "Works of the Learned," a defence of Pope's "Essay on Man," against the remarks of M. de Crousaz. Mr. Pope acknowledged his obligations; and an intimacy commenced between them, which very much contributed to the subsequent advancement of Warburton.

In the year 1746 he became preacher to the Society of Lincoln's Inn; and in the following year he appeared as an editor of Shakspeare. Bold and original in his criticisms and conjectures, the absurdity of several of which has been exposed by Edwards, Johnson, and others, he has nevertheless thrown light on some obscure passages, and drawn forth into view latent beauties, so that many of his notes will find a place in the approved editions of this admirable dramatist. Warburton's "Julian, or a Discourse concerning the Earthquake and fiery Eruption which defeated that Emperor's Attempt to rebuild the Temple at Jerusalem," published in 1750, on occasion of Dr. Middleton's "Inquiry concerning the miraculous Powers," is commended for its candour, a quality for which the writer was not remarkably distinguished. The notes annexed to his complete edition of Pope's works, in 9 vols. 8vo., are said by the most competent judges to have disguised and perverted the author, and to have aggravated the satirical asperities of the poet by the malignities of the annotator. He was now rapidly advancing from one stage of preferment to another; from that of prebend of Gloucester, obtained in 1753, to that of king's chaplain in ordinary in 1754; and in 1755 to that of prebend of Durham, in exchange for that of Gloucester, to the honour of a Lambeth degree of D.D. conferred upon him by archbishop Herring, to the deanery of Bristol in 1757, and in 1759 to the see of Gloucester. His life terminated at Gloucester, June 7th, 1779, in the 81st year of his age. His works were collected and printed by Dr. Hurd, bishop of Worcester, in 1788, comprehended in 7 vols. 4to.

WARBURTON, a township of England, county of Chester; 9½ miles north-north-west from Nether Knutsford.
Population 470.

WARCOP, a parish of England, in Westmoreland; 3 miles west-by-north of Brough. Population 673.

WARD, a small fishing village of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, near the Bulls of Buchan.

WARD, a township of the United States, in Worcester county, Massachusetts; 45 miles west-south-west of Boston.

WARD. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from weard, Saxon; it notes tendency to or from.
—Before she could come to the harbour, she saw walking from her ward, a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.—Me-ward is also found among our old writers.

To WARD, v. a. [weardian, Saxon; waren, Dutch; garder, Fr.] To guard; to watch.

He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut, ne living wight
To ward the same, nor answer com'er's call. Spenser.

To defend; to protect.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shakspeare.

To fence off; to obstruct, or turn aside any thing mischievous. It is now used with off, less elegantly.

Toxews amaz'd, and with amazement slow,
Or to revenge, or ward the coming blow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

To WARD, v. n. To be vigilant; to keep guard.—To act upon the defensive with a weapon.

Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
And on their warding arms light bucklers bear. Dryden.

WARD, s. Watch; act of guarding.
Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward:
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.

The assieged castles ward
Their stedfast stonds did mightily maintain. Spenser, Guard

Guard made by a weapon in fencing.

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shakspeare.

Fortress; strong hold.—She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakspeare.—[warda, law Lat.] District of a town.

Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.

Custody; confinement.—That wretched creature being deprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.—The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.

In the key-hole turns
The intricate wards, and every bolt and bar. Milton.

One in the hands of a guardian.
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed, before she was my ward. Dryden.

The state of a child under a guardian.—I must attend his Majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection. Shakspeare.—Guardianship; right over orphans.—It is also inconvenient in Ireland, that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.

WARD'S CREEK, a river of the United States, in Virginia, which runs into James river. Lat. 37. 10. N. long. 77. 11. W.

WARD'S CREEK, a river of the United States, in Maryland, which runs into the Chesapeake. Lat. 38. 8. N. long. 76. 52. W.

WARDE, a small town of Denmark, near the west coast of Jutland, on a river also called Warde; 20 miles north-west of Ribe.

WARDE, POINT, a cape on the west coast of North America, at the upper end of Prince Ernest's sound, and entrance of Bradfield canal. Lat. 56. 9. N. long. 228. 10½. E.

WA'RDEN, s. [waerden, Dutch.] A keeper; a guardian; a head officer.—The warden of apothecaries' hall. Garth.—Warden of the cinque ports.—A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of those havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowel.—A large pear.—Ox-cheek when hot, and wardens bak'd some cry. King.

WARDEN, a parish of England, in Kent; 6 miles east of Queenborough.

WARDEN, CHIPPING, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; 11 miles south-west-by-south of Daventry.

WARDEN, OLD, a parish of England, in Bedfordshire; 3½ miles west-by-south of Biggleswade. Population 492.

WARDENSHIP, s. Office of a warden or guardian.—Had this castle actually existed as a strong western garrison under the wardenship of our hero Ella, &c. Warton.

WARDER, s. A keeper; a guard.
Were be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates. Shakspeare.

A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.
Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warder down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw. Shakspeare.

WARDHURST, or WARDS, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Ivinghoe, county of Buckingham.

WARDINGTON, or WARDENTON, a hamlet of England, in Oxfordshire; 4½ miles north-east-by-north of Banbury. Population 757.

WARDLAW, a hill of Scotland, in Selkirkshire, in the parish of Etterick, elevated 1986 feet above the level of the sea.

WARDLE, a township of England, in Lancashire; 3 miles north-north-east of Rochdale. Population 4189.

WARDLE, a township of England, county of Chester; 5 miles north-west of Nantwich.

WARDLEWORTH, a township of England, in the parish of Rochdale, Lancashire. Population 4345.

WARDLEY, a parish of England, in Rutlandshire; 3 miles west-south-west of Uppingham.

WARDLOW, a township of England, in Derbyshire; 2 miles east-by-south of Tideswell.

WARDMOTE, s. [peapō and mot, or zemoz, Sax.; wardemotus, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London for the direction of their affairs.

WARDO, one of the Aland isles, in the gulf of Finland, belonging to Russia.

WARDOE, an island on the west coast of Norway, in the bishopric of Drontheim, belonging to East Finmark.

WARDOEHUUS, the chief town of a district of the same name, situated on an island in Norwegian Finmark, in the bishopric of Drontheim. Lat. 70. 22. 36. N. long. 31. 7. 30. E.

WARDON, or WARDREW, a watering village of England, in the county of Northumberland, situated on the river Irthing.

WARDROBE, s. [garderobe, Fr.; garderoba, low Lat.] A room where clothes are kept.

I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece
Until I meet the king. Shakspeare.

WARDSBOROUGH, a post township of the United States, in Windham county, Vermont; 20 miles north-east of Bennington.

WARDSBRIDGE, a post village of the United States, in Orange county, New York.

WARDSHIP, s. Guardianship.—By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage be increased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.—Pupillage; state of being under ward.—The houses sued out their livery, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults. King Charles.

WARDWELL, a post village of the United States, in Jefferson county, New York.

WARE (Sir James), a descendant of an ancient English family in Yorkshire, was born at Dublin in 1594, and finished his education at Trinity College, Dublin. During the embroiled state of the country, sir James Ware employed his time in the elucidation of historical antiquities, and published, at different periods, a variety of biographical and other works; and particularly his treatise "De Scriptoribus Hiberniæ," lib. ii. commencing with the introduction of Christianity into Ireland, and continued to the close of the sixteenth century; and also his principal work, entitled "De Hiberniæ et Antiquitatibus ejus," and first published in London in 1654, of which an enlarged edition appeared in 1658, with an appendix; "Rerum Hibernicarum regnante Henrico VII. Annales." His next publication was "A Collection of the Works ascribed to St. Patrick," 1656; and this was followed by "Two Epistles of the Venerable Bede," and some other ecclesiastical pieces. In 1662 appeared at Dublin, fol. "Rerum Hibernicarum Annales, regnantibus Henrico VII., Henrico VIII., Edwardo VI., et Maria." His last work, in 1665, was his "Complete History of Irish Bishops," comprehending his former narratives of them, under the title of "De Præsulibus Hiberniæ Commentarius, a prima Gentis Hibernicæ ad Fidem Christianam conversione ad nostra usque Tempora," Dub. fol. He died in 1666.

WARE, the preterite of wear, more frequently wore.—A certain man—ware no clothes. St. Luke.

WARE,

WARE, adj. [For this we commonly say aware.] Being in expectation of; being provided against.—The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. St. Matth.—Cautious; wary.—Bid her well be ware and still erect. Milton.

To WARE, v. n. To take heed of; to beware.

A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.

WARE, s. [papp, Sax.; waere, Dutch; wara, Swed.] Commonly something to be sold.

Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakspeare.

WARE, a market town of England, in the county of Hertford, situated on the west side of the river Lea. It consists of one principal street, nearly a mile in length, with several smaller ones intersecting it. The houses are in general well built. There were anciently two religious establishments in this town, one of them a priory of Benedictines, some remains of the buildings of which are yet standing, adjoining the church, near the banks of the river. They chiefly consist of ancient walls, fitted up, and accommodated to the purposes of a modern dwelling. The town has a considerable traffic in corn and malt, sent to the London market by barges, which load back with coals and other articles. In the time of William the Conqueror, this place was only a small village, and did not attain any consequence till the reign of king John, when the high road to the north, which before went through Hertford, was turned through this town. Some springs near the town, augmented by a cut from the river Lea, constitute the source of the New River, which supplies a great part of the metropolis with water. Population 3369; 20 miles north of London, and 3 from Hertford, the county town. Here is a weekly market on Tuesdays, and two fairs annually. The "great bed of Ware" has often been referred to as an object of popular curiosity. It was 12 feet square, and kept an inn in the town, in order to attract the curiosity and custom of visitors.

WARE, or WEAR GIFFORD, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 2 miles north-north-west of Great Torrington. Population 438.

WARE, a post township of the United States, in Hampshire county, Massachusetts; 70 miles west of Boston. Population 996.

WARE, a river of the United States, in Worcester county, Massachusetts, which runs south-west, and unites with the Chicapee, west of Palmer.

WARE, a river of the United States, in Virginia, which runs into the Chesapeake. Lat. 37. 25. N. long. 76. 26. W.

WAREBRIDGE, WAADBRIDGE, or WADEBRIDGE, a market town of England, in the county of Cornwall. It is situated partly in the parish of Egloshayle, and partly in that of St. Breock. It is chiefly noted for its stone bridge, consisting of 17 arches, which crosses the channel, and connects those two parishes. Market on Saturday, and three annual fairs; 23 miles north-east of Truro, and 238 west-south-west of London.

WAREE, a country of Western Africa, situated to the south-east of Benin, and near the river Formosa, which falls into the gulf of Benin.

WAREFUL, adj. Cautious; timorously prudent.

WAREFULNESS, s. Cautiousness. Obsolete.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full; but full of warefulness. Sidney.

WAREHAM, a market town and borough of England, in the county of Dorset, situated near the mouth of the river Frome, where it falls into Pool harbour. It stands agreeably on a rising ground, declining gently to the south, where it is washed by the Frome. The Piddle passes it on the north; and both meeting together, form a bay on the east. The town is regularly built, and consists chiefly of four large open streets, intersecting each other at right angles, and which take their names from the cardinal points. Over the Frome on the south is a bridge of six arches, near which is a commodious quay. There is another bridge of three arches on the north, without the wall, over the Piddle. Wareham had formerly 17 churches, though the number is now reduced to three. The charter under which it is governed at present, was granted by queen Anne; the corporation consisting of a mayor, recorder, 6 capital burgesses, and 12 assistants; the mayor, recorder, and preceding mayor, are justices of the peace. The two first being of the quorum, are empowered to hold their own sessions. The mayor is also coroner of the isles of Purbeck and Brownsey, as well as of his own town. Wareham is particularly celebrated for being the place where Edward the Martyr was interred. Market on Saturday, and three annual fairs; 9 miles west-south-west of Pool, and 140 west-by-south of London. Population 1709.

WAREHAM, a post township of the United States, in Plymouth county, Massachusetts, at the head of Buzzard's bay; 17 miles south of Plymouth, and 54 south of Boston.

WAREHORNE, a parish of England, in Kent; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-by-west of Ashford. Population 435.

WAREHOUSE, s. A storehouse of merchandise.

She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson.

WARELESS, adj. Uncautious; unwary.
So was he justly damned by the doome
Of his owne mouth, that spake so warelesse word,
To be her thrall, and service her afford. Spenser.

Suffered unawares, or contrary to expectation.
That when he wak'd out of his warelesse paine,
He found himselfe unwise so ill bestad
That him he could not wag. Spenser.

WARELY, adv. Warily; cautiously; timorously.
They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warely keep. Spenser.

WAREMME, an inland town of the Netherlands, on the Jaar; 13 miles west-by-north of Liege. Population 1200.

WARENDORF, a town of Prussian Westphalia, on the Ems; 15 miles east of Munster. Population 3300.

WARENFORD, a township of England, in Northumberland; 4 miles south-east-by-south of Belford.

WARESLEY, a parish of England, Huntingdonshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of St. Neot's.

WAR'FARE, s. Military service; military life; state of contest and solicitude.

In the wilderness
He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death. Milton.

To WAR'FARE, v. n. To lead a military life.—That was the only amulet in that credulous warfaring age to escape dangers in battles. Camden.

WARFIELD, a parish of England, in Berkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Workingham. Population 1016.

WARFIELD, a parish of England, in Salop; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Bridgenorth. Population 1339.

WARFORD, GREAT, a township of England, county of Chester; 5 miles east-by-south of Nether Knutsford.

WARFORD, LITTLE, a township in the above county, adjoining the foregoing.

WARFUM, a village of the Netherlands; 12 miles north of Groningen. Population 900.

WAR'GENTIN (Peter William), an eminent Swedish astronomer, was born in Yamtland in 1717. He calculated new tables of Jupiter's satellites, which were inserted in the transactions of the society of Upsal for 1741, and was chosen a member of that body. M. de la Lande also inserted them in 1759, in a new edition of Halley's tables published at Paris. In 1769 he sent a copy of them, further improved, to Dr. Maskelyne, who published them in the Nautical Almanack for 1771. They were again published, with improvements provements by De la Lande, together with his own astronomical tables; and another edition of them, with some variations from the last edition of Paris, appeared at Berlin in 1776. The result of Wargentin's assiduity in this department of astronomy was communicated to the public in the "Connaissance du Mouvements Celestes" for 1766, the "Nautical Almanack" for 1771 and 1779, and the "Astronomisches Jahr-buch" for 1777, 1779, 1781, and 1782: and the fruits of his last labour in these tables appeared in the fourth volume of the "Nova Acta Societatis Literariæ Upsaliensis," which contained 1250 observations of the third satellite, with appropriate remarks. This indefatigable astronomer contributed to the transactions of the Royal Academy of sciences papers on different subjects, amounting to the number of sixty. The phenomena of the magnet and of the northern lights were objects of his attention; and he suggested that some connection subsisted between them, and that the variations of the magnetic needle are violent in proportion to the intensity of the lights. His merit induced king Adolphus Frederick to create him, in 1759, a knight of the Polar Star; and he was a fellow of the Royal Society of London, and member of the Academies of Petersburg, Paris, Gottingen, Copenhagen, and other learned institutions. In 1783 a diabetes carried him off. His papers on a variety of subjects occur in the following volumes of the Philosophical Transactions, viz. xlvii. lii. liii. lvi. lviii. lix. lxxv. and lxxvii. Coxes's Travels in Sweden, vol. iv. Gen. Biog.

WARGO and ULF, two islands on the east coast of Sweden, belonging to the government of Hernosand. They are separated from each other by a small strait, about 2 miles wide, which forms the best harbour in the gulf of Bothnia.

WARGRAVE, a parish of England, in Berkshire; 6½ miles north-east-by-east of Reading, containing 1198 inhabitants.

WA'RHABLE, adj. [war and habile; from habilis, Lat.] Military; fit for war.

The weary Britons, whose warhable youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woeful ruith,
Were to those pagans made an open prey.

Spenser.

WARHAM, ALL-SAINTS, ST. MARYS, and ST. MARY MAGDALEN, three united parishes of England, in the county of Norfolk.

WARIBA, a river of Guiana, which runs into the Atlantic. Lat. 6. 54. N. long. 59. 8. W.

WARIGARI BAY, a bay in the island of St. Vincent, south of Hungary Point.

WA'RILY, adv. Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise forethought.

The charge thereof unto a courteous sprite
Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fiends it to defend.

Spenser.

WARIN, a river of Brazil, which runs into the Atlantic. Lat. 4. 55. S. long. 36. 58. W.

WA'RINESS, s. Caution; prudent forethought; timorous scrupulousness.

For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness.

Donne.

WARING (Edward, M. D.), descended from an ancient family at Milton, in the county of Salop, was born in 1734, and finished his education at Magdalen college, Cambridge, where he was considered, when he took his first degree in 1757, as a prodigy in those sciences which form the subject of the bachelors' examination. At the age of 25 years, in 1759, he was elected Lucasian professor of mathematics, not without giving offence to some of the senior members of the university, who disapproved the appointment of so young a man to occupy a chair which had been dignified by a Newton, a Saunderson, and a Barrow; and the first chapter of his "Miscellanea Analytica," which was circulated in vindication of his scientific character, was the occasion of a controversy of some continuance. The attack was commenced by Dr. Powell, master of St. John's, and the young professor was ably defended by Mr. Wilson, afterwards judge Wilson, a gentleman held in high estimation. In 1760, Waring received the degree of master of arts by royal mandate; and in 1762, his "Miscellanea Analytica" was published, with a dedication to the duke of Newcastle. This work amply vindicated his early elevation to the professorship, and extended his scientific fame through Europe; so that he was elected member of the societies of Bologna and Gottingen, and honoured by expressions of high regard by the most celebrated mathematicians, both at home and abroad. Medicine also engaged our author's attention, and in 1767 he took his degree of doctor; but though he took pains by attending lectures and hospitals in London to perfect himself in the medical art, it does not appear that he ever gained much practice. He died in August, 1798, in the 64th year of his age.

It is not without reason that he intimates the neglect which his writings were treated; the fact is certain, and it was owing partly to the abstruseness of the subjects, but principally to the perplexed style and manner in which they are discussed. His principal works, besides those that have been mentioned, are "Meditationes Algebraicæ," 1770; "Proprietates Algebraicarum Curvarum," 1772; and "Meditationes Analyticæ," 1773, 1774, 1775, 1776. His papers in the Philosophical Transactions may be found in vols. liii. liv. lv. lxix. lxxvi. lxxvii. lxxviii. lxxix. lxxxii. lxxxiv.

WARING, a large village of Austria, near Vienna, with a number of villas.

WARK, s. [anciently used for work; whence butwark.] Building.

Thou findest fault where any's to be found,
And buildest strong wark upon a weak ground. Spenser.

WARK, a township of England, in the county of Northumberland, situated on the North Tyne.

WARKA, a town of Poland; 30 miles south of Warsaw, with 1100 inhabitants.

WARKLEIGH, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 5½ miles west-south-west of South Molton.

WARKSBURN, a township of England, in Northumberland; 13 miles north-west of Hexham.

WARKTHWAITE, a hamlet of England, in Cumberland; 10½ miles west-south-west of Penrith.

WARKTON, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; 2 miles east-north-east of Kettering.

WARKWORTH, a parish of England, and formerly a market town, in the county of Northumberland, situated on the river Coquet; 5 miles south-east of Alnwick, and 305 north of London. Population 568.

WARKWORTH, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; 7 miles west-north-west of Brackley.

WARLABY, a hamlet of England, in Yorkshire; 1½ mile south-south-west of Northallerton.

WARLEGGON, a parish of England, in Cumberland; 5½ miles east-north-east of Bodmin.

WARLEY, a township of England, West Riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles west of Halifax. Population 3958.

WARLEY, GREAT and LITTLE, adjoining parishes of England, in Essex; 3½ miles south of Brentwood. Population 669.

WARLEY-WIGORN, a township of England, county of Worcester. Population 755.

WA'RLIKE, adj. Fit for war; disposed to war.

O imprudent Gauls,

Relying on false hopes, thus to incense

The warlike English!

Philips.

Military; relating to war.

The great arch-angel from his warlike toil
Surceas'd.

Milton.

WA'RLIKENESS, s. Warlike disposition or character.—Braveness of mind, and warlikeness. Sir E. Sandys.

WA'RRLING, s. This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean, one often quarrelled with. Dr. Johnson.—It is from wear or weary, as Butler in his Engl. Grammar of 1633 has pointed out, and as Mr. Malone also has observed; wearling, by the sound being more upon the a than e, becoming warling, like as dearling, darling: Hence Butler adds the proverb given by Camden, and Mr. Malone accordingly defines warling, or wearling, one of whom a young man is weary. Todd.—Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warling. Camden.

WARLINGHAM, a parish of England, in Surrey; 5 miles south-south-east of Croydon.

WARLOCK, or WA'RLUCK, s. [wardlookr, Icel., a charm; peplog, Saxon, an evil spirit.] A male witch; a wizard.—Warlock in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be conversant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invulnerable quality which Dryden mentions, who did not understand the word.—He was no warluck, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron free or lead free. Dryden.

WARM, adj. [warm, Gothic; peapm, Saxon; warm, Dutch.] Not cold, though not hot; heated to a small degree.—He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm. 2 Kings.—Zealous; ardent.—I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause, as to deserve their money. Pope.—Habitually passionate; ardent; keen. Violent; furious; vehement.

Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't:
The Moor will 'gage

His utmost forces on his next assault,
To win a queen and kingdom.

Dryden.

Busy in action; heated with action.

I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
Death all at once would be a nobler end;
Fate is unkind: methinks a general
Should warm, and at the head of armies fall.

Dryden.

Fanciful; enthusiastic.—If there be a sober and a wise man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively. Locke.—Vigorous; sprightly.

Now warm in youth, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom.

Pope.

To WARM, v. a. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.—It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself. Isa.

The mounted sun
Shot down direct his fervid rays to warm
Earth's inmost womb.

Milton.

To heat mentally; to make vehement.—The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader: one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Druden.

To WARM, v. n. To grow less cold.—There shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it. Isa.

WARMBRUNN, a town of Prussian Silesia, among the Riesengebirge mountains; 60 miles west-south-west of Breslau. Population 1900.

WARMELAND, a province of Sweden, in West Gothland, bounded on the south by the lake of Wener, and on the west by the mountains of Norway. It is about 230 miles in length from north to south, and 130 in breadth from east to west; and has an area of 6666 square miles, and a population of about 140,000. Carlstadt is the capital of the province.

WARMSFIELD, a township of England, West Riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles east of Wakefield. Population 639.

WARMINGHAM, or WARMICHAM, a parish of England, county of Chester; 3½ miles west of Sandbach. Population 1041.

WARMINGHURST, a parish of England, in Sussex; 5½ miles north-west of Steyning.

WARMPAN, s. A covered brass pan for warming a bed by means of hot coals.—The idle story of the Pretender's having been introduced in a warming-pan into the Queen's bed, has been much more prejudicial to the cause of Jacobitism, than all that Mr. Locke and others have written. Id. Chesterfield.

WARMPINGSTONE, s. To stones add the warming-stone, dugged in Cornwall, which being well heated at the fire retains warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids. Ray.

WARMINGTON, a parish of England, in Warwickshire; 5½ miles east south-east of Kineton. Population 375.

WARMINGTON, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire, on the river Nen; 3 miles north-east of Oundle.

WARMINSTER, a market-town of England, of great antiquity, in the county of Wilts. It consists principally of one well paved, very long street, stretching along the sides of the turnpike road. The parish church, situated at the west end of the town, is a spacious and handsome building, with a square tower. On the downs near it is a fine Belgic fortification, called Battlesbury; and a Roman villa, with a fine tessellated pavement, was found a few years since, about 2 miles from the town. Market on Saturday, well supplied with corn. Fairs, 22d April, 10th August, and 26th October, for sheep, cattle, cheese, and pedlary; 22 miles north-north-west of Salisbury, and 97 west-by-south of London. Population 5612.

WARMINSTER, a township of the United States, in Bucks county, Pennsylvania. Population 564.—2. A post township of Amherst county, Virginia, on James river, 90 miles above Richmond.

WARMLY, adv. With gentle heat.

There the warming sun first warmly smote
The open field.

Milton.

Eagerly; ardently.

Now I have two right honest wives
One to Atrides I will send,
And t'other to my Trojan friend;
Each prince shall thus with honour have
What both so warmly seem to crave.

Prior.

WARMPNESS, or WARMTH, s. Gentle heat.—Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me. Shakspeare.—Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.—What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come? Shakspeare.—Fancifulness; enthusiasm.—The same warmth of head disposes men to both. Temple.

WARMOND, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland; 4 miles north of Leyden. Population 800.

WARM SPRINGS, a post village of the United States, in York county, Pennsylvania.—2. A post village of Buncombe county, North Carolina.

WARM SPRING MOUNTAINS, or JACKSON'S MOUNTAINS, a ridge of the Alleghany mountains, in Bath and Pendleton counties, Virginia, remarkable for warm springs.

WARMSWORTH, a parish of England, West Riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-west of Doncaster.

WARMSWELL, a parish of England, in Dorsetshire; 5½ miles south-east-by-south of Dorchester.

To WARN, v. a. [peapman, Saxon; waermen, Dutch; warna, Swedish; varna, Icel.] To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.

What, do'st thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?

And sooth the devil that I warn thee from? Shakspeare.

When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critics' law,

And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw. Pope.

To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.—Cornelius was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee. Acts.—To inform previously of good or bad.

He wonders to what end you have assembled

Such

Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof. Shakspeare.

Milton put no preposition before the thing.
Our first parents had been warn'd
The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd
His mortal snare. Milton.

To keep off; to ward off.—Yet can they not warne death from wretched wight. Spenser.

WARNBOROUGH, NORTH, a township of England, in Southamptonshire; 1 mile north-west of Odiham. Population 455.

WARNBOROUGH, SOUTH, a parish of England, in Southamptonshire, about 3 miles south-west-by-south of Odiham.

WARNDON, or WARMEDON, a parish of England, county of Worcester; 3 miles north-east-by-east of Worcester.

WARNE, a river of England, in Northumberland, which falls into the German ocean, about 4 miles south of Holy Island.

WARNE, a river of Germany, in Mecklenburg, which falls into the sea near Warnemunde.

WARNEMUNDE, a town and strong fort of Germany, in the grand duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. Population 1200.

WARNER, s. An admonisher. Huloet.

WARNER, a post township of the United States, in Hillsborough county, New Hampshire; 17 miles west-northwest of Concord. Population 1836.

WARNER, a river of the United States, in New Hampshire, which runs into the Contoocook, in Hopkinton.

WARNETON, an inland town of the Netherlands, in the province of West Flanders, on the river Lys, with 5300 inhabitants; 10 miles south-east of Ypres.

WARNFORD, a parish of England, in Southamptonshire; 6 miles north-east of Bishop's Waltham.—2. A hamlet of England, in the parish of Bamborough, Northumberland.

WARNHAM, a parish of England, in Sussex; 3 miles north-north-west of Horsham. Population 774.

WARNING, s. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.

He groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words exprest. Dryden.

Previous notice: in a sense indifferent.—I saw with some disdain, more nonsense than either I or as bad a poet could have crammed into it at a month's warning; in which time it was wholly written. Dryden.

WARNING-CAMP, a hamlet of England, in Sussex; 1½ mile east of Arundel.

WARNSDORF, OLD, a village of the north of Bohemia, in the circle of Leutmeritz, on the borders of Lusatia. Population 1400.

WARNSFELD, an inland town of the Netherlands;
2 miles east of Zutphen. Population 1900.

WARTON, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Bam-borough, Northumberland.

WARP, s. [peapp, Saxon; werpen, Dutch.] That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.—The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward.
Bacon.

To WARP, v. n. [peoppan, Saxon; werpen, Dutch, to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.] To change from the true situation by intestine motion; to change the position of one part to another.—This fellow will but join you together as they join wainscot, then one of you will prove a shrunk-pannel, and like green timber warp. Shakspeare.—To lose its proper course or direction,

There's our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. Shakspeare.

To work itself forward. A sea term. Hume.

The potent rod
Of Amram's son in Egypt's evil day

Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
Like night. Milton.

To WARP, v. a. To contract; to shrivel. To turn aside from the true direction.

This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the frail texture of the female kind
Betray'd my virtue. Dryden.

It is used by Shakspeare to express the effect of frost.

WAR'PING, s. Act of turning aside from the true direction.—The heart upright without any sinful warpings.
Bp. Taylor.—This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible. Norris.

WARPROOF, s. Valour known by proof. Mason.

On, on, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of warproof. Shakspeare.

WARPSGROVE, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire, near Wallingford.

To WA'RRANT, v. n. [garantir, Fr.; from the Sax.
pajan, to defend. Lye.] To support or maintain; to attest.—She needed not disdain any service, though never so mean, which was warranted by the sacred name of father.
Sidney.—To give authority.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel. Shakspeare.

To justify.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants and that wisdom guides;
All else is tow'ring frenzy and distraction. Addison.

To exempt; to privilege; to secure.—I'll warrant him from drowning. Shakspeare.—To declare upon surety.—
What a galled neck have we here! Look ye, mine's as smooth as silk, I warrant ye. L'Estrange.

The Moors' king
Is safe enough, I warrant him for one. Dryden.

WA'RRANT, s. A writ conferring some right or authority.

Are you now going to dispatch this deed?
—We are, my lord, and come to have the warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is. Shakspeare.

A writ giving the officer of justice the power of caption.
There's a damn'd design, cries one, no doubt;
For warrants are already issued out. Dryden.

A secure inviolable grant.—His promise is our plain warrant, that in his name what we ask we shall receive. Hooker.
—A justificatory commission.—When at any time they either wilfully break any commandment, or ignorantly mistake it, that is no warrant for us to do so likewise. Kettlewell.—Attestation.—The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore, that this might so enter as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of Omnipotence. South.—Right; legality. Obsolete.

I attach thee
For an abuser of the world, a practitioner
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant. Shakspeare.

WA'RRANTABLE, adj. Justifiable; defensible.—To purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown.

WA'RRANTABLENESS, s. Justifiableness.—The warrantableness of this practice may be inferred from a parity of reason. Barrow.

WA'RRANTABLY, adv. Justifiably.—The faith which God requires is only this, that he will certainly reward all those that believe in him, and obey his commandments; but for the particular application of this faith to ourselves, that deserves no more of our assent, nor can indeed warrantably have it, than what is founded upon the serious consideration of our own performances. Wake.

WARRANTER,

WA'RRANTER, s. One who gives authority.—One who gives security.

WA'RRANTISE, s. [warrantiso, law Latin.] Authority; security.

There's none protector of the realm but I:

Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize. Shakspeare.

WA'RRANTY, s. [warrantia, law Latin; garantie, garant, French.]—[In the common law.] A promise made in a deed by one man unto another for himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the enjoying of any thing agreed of between them. Cowel.—Authority; justificatory mandate.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarg'd

As we have warranty: her death was doubtful;

And but that great command o'ersways the order,

She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd

Till the last trump.

Shakspeare.

Security.—Every one cannot distinguish between fine and mixed silver: those who have had the care and government of politic societies, introduced coinage as a remedy; the stamp was a warranty of the public, that under such a denomination they should receive a piece of such a weight and fineness. Locke.

To WA'RRAY, v. a. [from guerroyer, old Fr.] To make war upon. A word very elegant and expressive, though obsolete.

Of these a mighty people shortly grew,

And puissant kings, which all the world warraid,

And to themselves all nations did subdue.

Spenser.

WARRE, adj. [pærr, Saxon.] Worse. Still a provincial term: war-and-war, worse and worse. Grose.

They say the world is warre than it wont,

All for her shepherds is beastly and blount:

Others saine, but how truly I note,

All for they holden shame of their cote.

Spenser.

WARREE, or SAWUNT WARREE, an extensive district of Hindostan, province of Bejapoor, and district of the Concan.

WA'RREN, s. [waerande, Dutch; guerrenne, Fr.] A kind of park for rabbits.—I found him here, as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shakspeare.

WARREN, two small hamlets of England, in Somersetshire.

WARREN, a river of England, in Salop, which joins the Onney, near Hardwick.—2. A parish of Wales, in Pembrokehire; 4 miles from Pembroke.—3. A post town of the United States, and capital of Trumbull county, Ohio, on the Mahoning; 77 miles north-west of Pittsburg.—4. A county of the United States, in the north-west part of Pennsylvania, bounded east and north by Cattaraugus and Chataaugu counties, New York, west by Crawford, and south by Venango; is large enough, when settled, for three or four counties of the usual size; and is watered by the Allegany and Connewango rivers, Broken Straw, Great and Little Oil creeks, besides numerous other large streams, running into the Allegany from the south. There are at present very few settlements, except along the banks of the above named streams; and these depend on the lumber business, rather than the cultivation of the soil. The pines of the hills are uncommonly large, tall and straight, suitable for shingles and masts.—5. The seat of justice for the above county, is situated on the right bank of the Allegany river, at the entrance of the Connewango.—6. A county of the United States, in the south-west part of Ohio, situated south of Montgomery and a part of Green, north of parts of Hamilton and Clermont, west of Clinton, and east of Butler. It is traversed by the Little Miami from north-west to south-east; together with the numerous tributary creeks and rivers; the largest of which are Todd's and Caesar's creeks, running into the Little Miami from the east, Turtle creek from the west, and Dick's and Clear creeks, flowing into the Great Miami. The chief town is Lebanon.—7. A county of the United States, in Kentucky, south of Green river. Population 11,937. The chief town is Bowling Green.—8. A county of the United States, in the state of the Mississippi.—9. A post township of the United States, in Lincoln county, Maine, on St. George's river, on the west side of Thomas town; 30 miles east-by-north of Wiscasset, and 145 north-east of Boston.—10. A township of the United States, in Addison county, Vermont; 20 miles south-west of Montpelier. Population 229.—11. A township of the United States, in Grafton county, New Hampshire; 11 miles south-east of Haverhill. Population 506.—12. A post town of the United States, in Bristol county, Rhode Island, on the north-east part of Narraganset bay; 10 miles south of Providence, and 52 south-south-west of Boston. Population 1775.—13. A post township of the United States, in Litchfield county, Connecticut; 9 miles west of Litchfield.—14. A post township of Herkimer county, New York; 10 miles south of Herkimer, and 70 west of Albany.—15. A township of the United States, in Somerset county, New Jersey. Population 1354.—16. A township of Franklin county, Pennsylvania.—17. A post township of Albemarle county, Virginia, on the river James; 10 miles north-east of Warminster.—18. A township of Belmont county, Ohio.—19. A township of Jefferson county, Ohio, on the Ohio.—20. A township of Washington county, Ohio.—21. A county of the United States, in the north part of North Carolina.—22. A county of the United States, in the central part of Georgia.—23. A county of the United States, in West Tennessee.

WARREN'S ISLAND, a high island in the North Pacific ocean, which lies about the middle of the entrance into the Duke of Clarence's straits. Each shore is bounded by innumerable rocky islands and islets. It was so named by Vancouver, in honour of Sir John Borlase Warren. To the southward of this island are three clusters of very dangerous rocks. Lat. 55. 56. N. long. 226. 22. E.

WARRENBURG, a post township of the United States, in Warren county, New York, on Scroon river; 7 miles north-west of Caldwell.—2. A post township of Green county, Tennessee.

WA'RRENER, s. The keeper of a warren.—He hath fought with a warrener. Shakspeare.

WARRENTON, a post town of the United States, and capital of Fauquier county, Virginia; 40 miles north-north-west of Fredericksburg.—2. A post town of the United States, and capital of Warren county, North Carolina; 16 miles east-by-north of Hillsborough, 56 north-north-east of Raleigh, and 84 south of Petersburg.—3. A post town of the United States, in Warren county, Mississippi, on the east bank of the Mississippi, about 18 miles below Walnut hills.—4. A post township of the United States, in Warren county, Georgia, about 55 miles north-north-east of Milledgeville.

WARRENTOWN, a post township of the United States, in Jefferson county, Ohio, on the Ohio; 13 miles below Steubenville.

WA'RRiangle, or Wariangle, s. [lanio, Lat.] A hawk. Ainsworth. See To WRANGLE.

WARRINGSTOWN, a small neat town of Ireland, in the county of Down, where there is an extensive manufacture of linen; 66½ miles north of Dublin castle.

WARRINGTON, a large, populous, and thriving market town of England, in the county of Lancaster, situated on the northern bank of the river Mersey, about midway between Manchester and Liverpool. The town consists of four principal streets, some of which are open, and contain handsome modern buildings, while others are long and narrow, containing mean houses, especially at the entrance of the town. The church contains many ancient and handsome monuments; and it has a neat chapel of ease, consecrated in 1760; and another chapel of the establishment in the suburb over the bridge, belonging to the parish of Groppenhall. Some authors have contended that a Roman station was formerly established at this place, as a guard to the ford; but no particular remains or discoveries have been made to justify this opinion. It is not incorporated, but is governed by the justices of the peace, assisted by four constables.

stables. Market on Wednesday, noted for fish, provisions, and all kinds of cattle, not inferior to the Leicestershire breed. Fairs, 18th July and 30th November, which last a week each. Population 11,738; 18 miles east of Liverpool, and 183 north-north-west of London.—2. A hamlet of England, in Buckinghamshire; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-by-east of Olney.—3. A township of the United States, in Bucks county, Pennsylvania. Population 429.—4. A township of York county, Pennsylvania. Population 1105.

WARRIOR, s. A soldier; a military man.

I came from Corinth,
Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,
Duke Menaphon. Shakespeare.
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
In ranks and squadrons and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol. Shakespeare.

WARRIORESS, s. A female warrior. Cotgrave.

—Eftsoones that wariouresse with haughty crest
Did forth issue, all ready for the fight. Spenser.

WARRIOR POLLAM, a town and small district of the south of India, province of the Carnatic, district of Trichinopoly. Lat. 11. 15. N. long. 79. 25. E.

WARRIOR'S MARK, a township of the United States, in Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania. Population 672.

WARRUNA, a town of Hindostan, province of Berar. Lat. 19. 37. N. long. 78. 8. E.

WARSAW, a large city, the capital of Poland, situated on the left bank of the Vistula. Its situation is pleasant; its position, without being very elevated, is sufficiently so to be secure against the overflowings of the Vistula. The course of that river is from south to north; its depth is less than that of the Thames at London; its width somewhat greater. Warsaw is an open town, having neither gates nor walls. It covers a great extent of ground, the length of the town and suburbs being between three and four miles, its breadth between two and three; but in this are included large spaces occupied by gardens. The population is about 100,000.

The city, originally little better than an accumulation of cottages, received considerable improvements from its Saxon sovereigns, of the last century. Still, it is an irregular and unpleasant place, exhibiting a singular contrast of ostentation and poverty, having, in a few quarters, mansions of such splendour, as to be entitled to the name of palaces; in others, a succession of miserable hovels. The upper ranks in Poland having long been accustomed to get on horseback on leaving their doors, the paving of the streets was totally neglected, and Warsaw long exhibited, in rainy weather, a depth of wet and filth equal to any of the wood built towns of Russia. At present, however, the government expends considerable sums on paving, and several of the streets are clean and well lighted.

The town is divided into the Old and New, exclusive of four suburbs, of which one, Praga, lies on the right bank of the river. The Old town consists of one main street, with some smaller streets joining it on either side. It is miserably built, with the exception of a few public edifices. The New town is better built, and extends along the banks of the Vistula, in a winding form, to the extent of nearly 3 miles, including, however, a number of gardens. The castle of Warsaw stands near the river, and is a large quadrangle, with halls where the two houses of parliament, (the diet and senate) hold their sittings. It contains several public halls, and has lately received great improvements.

The situation of Warsaw is, for an inland town, favourable to trade; and the improvements now adopting in river navigation, bid fair to give it a considerable share of commercial activity. The Vistula, here near the middle of its course, is navigable to a great extent upwards, as well as downwards. At some seasons, however, great inconvenience has been experienced from the extent of its inundations; at others from the shifting of sand-banks; in winter the navigation is not reckoned safe. The middle of summer is the most favourable season; and during the interval that the channel is full, without overflow, it is computed that nearly 100 boats or barges, laden with the produce of the country, namely, corn, spirits, and wine, are daily sent down its stream. It abounds in fish, particularly the shad, which are frequently of a very large size.

Warsaw is a town of very old date, but was a place of insignificance till the annexation of Lithuania to Poland; after which the territory of the republic being extended to the west, Cracow was no longer sufficiently central to be the capital. It was in 1566, that the diet was transferred from the old to the new capital. In the war with the Swedes in the middle of the 17th century, Warsaw was occupied by these adventurous invaders, who made it (in 1655) the depot of the spoils collected in their progress through the country. When Charles XII. advanced, at a subsequent date (1703), to Warsaw, it surrendered to him without opposition. The chief part of last century passed without alarm; but in 1793, the Russian garrison that occupied it were expelled by the Poles, on receiving intelligence of the success of Kosciusko near Cracow. That leader, when obliged next year to change the scene of contest, retreated on Warsaw, and defended it with success against the Prussians, during the summer of 1794, obliging them eventually to raise the siege. A different fate awaited Warsaw on the arrival of Suwarow and the Russians. Praga being taken by assault, and delivered to pillage, the capital submitted without opposition, after this terrific example. On the final partition of Poland in 1795, this part of the country fell to the share of Prussia, and Warsaw had no other rank than that of capital of a province, until the end of 1806, when the overthrow of the power of Prussia led to the formation, by Buonaparte, of the independent state called the duchy of Warsaw. Of this state it continued the capital, until the evacuation of Poland by the French in January, 1813. Since 1815, it has in a manner, retained its character of a capital, being the residence of a viceroy representing the emperor of Russia; also the place of meeting of the Polish parliament; 320 miles east of Berlin, and 240 south-south-east of Dantzic. Lat. 52. 14. 8. N. long. 20. 2. 45. E.

WARSAW, a post township of the United States, in Genesee county, New York; 260 miles west of Albany. Population 1317.

WARSAW, a small kingdom in the interior of the Gold coast of Africa, abounding in gold.

WARSLOW, a township of England, in Staffordshire; 6 miles east-north-east of Leeke.

WARSOP CHURCH, a parish of England, in Nottinghamshire; 5 miles north-north-east of Mansfield. Population 1047.

WARSOP MARKET, a hamlet in the foregoing parish.

WARSTEN, a town of the Prussian states, in Westphalia. Population 1200.

WART, s. [peart, Saxon; werte, Dutch.] A corneous excrescence; a small protuberance on the flesh.

If thou prate of mountains, let them throw
Millions of acres on us, till our ground,
Singeing his pate against the burning sun,
Make Ossa like a wart. Shakespeare.

A protuberance on trees.—Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, doth demonstrate that all such warts, tumours, and excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited or raised up by some venenose liquors, which with their eggs such insects shed; or boring with their terebræ, instil into the very pulp of such buds. Ray.

WARTA, a considerable river of Poland, which rises in the palatinate of Cracow, flows north through that of Kalisch; then taking a direction west, traverses the grand duchy of Posen, and part of Brandenburg, till it joins the Oder at Custrin.

WARTA, a town of Poland on the Warta; $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-by-south of Warsaw. Population 1300.

WARTAU, a small town of Switzerland, canton of St. Gall; 20 miles north of Sargans.

WARTBERG,

WARTBERG, or SZENCZ, a town of Hungary; 13 miles east-north-east of Presburg. Population 1600

WARTENBERG, a town of Prussian Silesia; 32 miles east-north-east of Breslau. Population 1600.

WARTENBURG, a town of East Prussia; 60 miles south of Königsberg. Old Wartenburg is a village in the neighbourhood. Population 1900.

WARTER, a parish of England, in Yorkshire; 5 miles east-by-north of Pocklington.

WARTH, or WARDHILL, a hill in Orkney, on the south side of Pomona island.

WARTHAL, or WARDHALL, a township of England, in Cumberland; 5 miles north of Cockermouth.

WARTHMASK, a township of England, in Yorkshire; 7½ miles south-west-by-south of Bedale.

WARTH-HILL, a hill of Scotland, in Caithness, in the parish of Canisbay.

WARTHILL, a parish of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles north-east-by-east of York.

WARTHOLM, a small island in Orkney, near South Ronaldshay.

WARTLING, a parish of England, in Sussex; 4½ miles east-by-south of Haylsbam. Population 874.

WARTNABY, a hamlet of England, county of Leicester; 4½ miles north-west of Melton Mowbray.

WARTON, a township of England, in Lancashire; 8 miles north-by-east of Lancaster.—2. Another township in the above county; 3 miles from Kirkham.—3. A hamlet of England, in Northumberland; 14 miles south-west-by-west of Alnwick.

WARTON (Joseph, D.D.), was born in 1722, and entered at the age of fourteen years on the foundation at Winchester-school, and in 1740 at Oriel college, Oxford. After having taken the degree of B.D. he became curate to his father, and in 1744 exercised the same office at Chelsea. In this year he published a small volume of "Odes," and in 1748 he was presented by the duke of Bolton to the rectory of Winslade, and soon after married. In 1751 he accompanied his patron on a tour to the south of France, and in 1753 completed his edition of Virgil in Latin and English; the Æneid being in Pitt's translation, and the Eclogues and Georgics in his own; adding notes. To the "Adventurer" he became a contributor. In 1756, he published without his name, an "Essay on the Writings and Genius of Pope," in which he intermixes praise with reflections that tend to degrade this poet to the class of those who have been votaries of reason rather than of imagination. Failing to convince the public that his estimate of Pope's talents was just, he deferred the publication of his second volume for twenty-six years. In 1766 he was advanced to the station of head-master of Winchester school. His subsequent preferments were numerous, but small, and he obtained them late in life: in 1782, the friendship of bishop Lowth procured for him a prebend of St. Paul's and the living of Thorley in Hertfordshire; and in 1788 he was advanced to a prebend of Winchester and the rectory of Easton. He was engaged to superintend an edition of Pope's Works, which appeared in 9 vols. 8vo., in 1797, with notes critical and biographical, partly selected from his former essay, and a life of the poet. When this work was finished, he undertook an edition of Dryden, and had prepared two volumes at the time of his death, which happened in February, 1800, in his 78th year. His "Ode to Fancy," first printed in Dodsley's Collection, is thought to have been most admired, and to afford the fairest specimen of his talents.

WARTON (Thomas), brother of the preceding, was born at Basingstoke in 1728, and manifested, by his translation of an epigram of Martial in his ninth year, an early taste for versification. In 1743 he was admitted a commoner of Trinity college, Oxford, where he distinguished himself, in his twenty-first year, by his "Triumph of Isis," in vindication of the university against the reflections of Mason's elegy of "Isis." This poem, however, he afterwards excluded from his volume of collected pieces. His "Progress of Discontent," said to have been written as a college-exercise in 1746, gained him reputation. Having taken his degree of M.A. in 1750, he became in the following year a fellow of his college; and devoted himself to poetry and elegant literature. Besides his "Newmarket," a spirited satire against the ruinous passion for the turf; his ode for Music; Verses on the death of the prince of Wales; and his editorship, in 1753, of a collection of poems, entitled the "Union," and containing several of his own pieces, severally contributed to his reputation; his observations on Spenser's Fairy Queen, published in 1754, first in one volume and afterwards in two volumes, were of essential service in making him known as a critic, and as one conversant with poetical antiquities; and they prepared the way for his election, in 1757, to the office of professor of poetry to the university, which he occupied for ten years, with an erudition and taste that rendered his lectures instructive and amusing. Our limits will not allow us to enumerate his various publications, but we shall proceed to other details of greater importance. Having taken the degree of B.D. in 1761, he was instituted to the small living of Kiddington, in Oxfordshire, in 1771. His edition of Theocritus, in 2 vols. 4to. was published in 1770, and very much contributed to his literary celebrity both at home and on the continent. It was probably about this time that he formed a design of writing a "History of Poetry," which had been contemplated by Pope, Gray, and Mason. The first volume in quarto was published in 1774, the second appeared in 1778, and a third was presented to the public in 1781. His plan was much more extensive, and intended to terminate only with the commencement of the eighteenth century; but he became tired of the task, and wished for relaxation, so that he prepared only a few sheets of a fourth volume. This Opus Magnum, as it may be well denominated, exhibits an extent of research and reading, and a correctness of taste and critical judgment, which do him great honour. In such a comprehensive and multifarious work, some inaccuracies are unavoidable; but the most fastidious critic must acknowledge, that it abounds with curious and interesting information. In 1781 he projected a county history of Oxfordshire, and in 1782 he published a specimen of his undertaking in a topographical account of his parish of Kiddington; but he was probably discouraged by the magnitude and labour of such a work. In this year he took part in the controversy concerning Rowley's poems which he decidedly pronounced to be the fabrication of their pretended editor. His views with regard to promotion were restricted; however, his income was at this time increased by a donative in Somersetshire, and in 1785 by the office of Camden-professor of history at Oxford, and soon after by the post of poet-laureat. An edition of Milton's juvenile poems, with notes for illustrating their beauties and explaining their obsolete and peculiar phraseology, appeared in 1785. In his 62d year he was attacked with a paroxysm of the gout, and this was succeeded in May 1790 by a paralytic seizure, which terminated his life at his lodgings in Oxford.

WARTWORT, s. [verrucaria, Lat.] Spurge. Ainsworth.

WARTY, adj. Grown over with warts.

WARU, a river of Brazil, in the province of Seara, which rises near the coast, and enters the sea.

WARWICKSHIRE, an inland county of England, situated in the centre of the country, in a north-west direction from the metropolis. It is bounded on the north-east by Leicestershire, on the east by Northamptonshire, on the south-east by Oxfordshire, on the south-west by Gloucestershire, on the west by Worcestershire, and on the north-west by Staffordshire, being in length about 50 miles, and in breadth 35. It contains 984 square statute miles, equal to 639,760 square acres, of which about 154,530 acres are in a constant course of tillage; having 190,000 acres arable, and 300,000 pasturage.

The general aspect of this county is an agreeable alternation of hill and dale, eminently beautiful to behold, and remarkably conducive to the purposes of agriculture. In the vicinity of its streams, on the sides of its gentle hills, and in the breaks

WARWICKSHIRE.

Engraved for the Encyclopædia Londinensis 1828.

breaks of its frequent spots of woodland, scenes are to be met with by the traveller, well calculated by their beauty to soothe the imagination; while the labours of the farmer are never entirely interrupted by precipitous elevations, or deteriorated by expanses so flat as to be unwholesome. The highest points of land are at Corley, in Hemlingford hundred, and in the neighbourhood of Packington. From this elevated ridge the water runs on one side into the Avon, and thence to the Bristol channel; on the other it descends to the Blythe, Tame, Trent, and Humber at Hull. A ridge on the south-east, including the Brailes and Edgehills, is also much elevated, and commands a variety of pleasing prospects. The insulated situation of the county, and its freedom from any great inequalities of surface, render the climate mild, and vegetation early.

The soil, as is usual with the midland district, possesses great variety. Indeed, nearly every species is to be seen, except that incorporated with chalk and flint; and often many varieties occur within one field or enclosure. The greater part of the soil is of a description highly amenable to the purposes of agriculture; and it may safely be asserted, that few counties possess less bad or sterile land, in proportion to that which rewards readily and abundantly the husbandman's toil. The hundred of Knightlow (a district chiefly in tillage), consists principally of a red clay loam and sand, in some places upon freestone and limestone, and in others on a good sharp gravelly bottom; a strong clay loam on limestone rock; a light sandy land, in several places mixed with sharp gravel, well adapted to turnip husbandry; and a rich clay loam on limestone and marl. The portion of this hundred which is in grass, has for its soil a clay of desirable strength. The city of Coventry is surrounded by a red and deep sandy loam, of great richness, chiefly in grass. The same character of soil pervades nearly the whole of the tract denominated the county of Coventry; but in some instances an admixture of clay is to be perceived; and a few parishes consist of what is emphatically termed strong land. Towards the north-east also is seen a strong clay loam on marl. This stretch of land (particularly the part that borders on Leicestershire), is in grass, and used in grazing.

The principal woodlands of this county are still to be found in the neighbourhood of its former great forest, in the middle, western, and northern districts; but nearly every division is interspersed with valuable and ornamental timber. Oak, matured and grand, conveying the story of former ages, yet likely to flourish in the days of succeeding generations, is attached to almost every residence of hereditary consequence. Elm, in the most flourishing condition, is abundant. There are also many coppices, consisting of oak, ash, hazel, alders, birch, and beech. Warwickshire is watered by numerous streams, which impart richness to the pastoral tracts, and add greatly to the beauty of the county; though, with the exception of the Avon, they are of a character too trivial to bestow important facilities on commercial interchange. Of these, the principal are the Avon, the Tame, the Leam, the Rea, the Stour, the Alne, the Arrow, the Anchor, the Blythe, the Swift, the Cole, and the Dove. This county is conspicuous for commercial enterprise, and for the spirit with which manufactures are cultivated. It will necessarily be supposed, that a people so industrious and intelligent have been active in profiting by the great medium of canal conveyance. No county, indeed, can boast of more numerous facilities of this description; and some diversions from original channels are yet projected, which a more propitious era may lead to perfection. The Grand Junction canal, which commences in the river Thames, near the extremity of the Tideway at Brentford creek, and terminates in the Oxford canal at Braunston, has for its chief object a communication between the metropolis and the various canals of the midland district.

Manufactures of various descriptions are cultivated to a considerable extent. The manufactory of hardware goods at Birmingham has obtained for that town the appellation of "the Toyshop of Europe," and is assuredly a just subject of national pride. Not less than 16,000 people, in the city of Coventry, and neighbouring towns and villages, are believed to be employed in the manufacture of ribbons. The manufacture of watches is likewise cultivated at Coventry with such eminent success, that perhaps this city now takes the lead in that trade, even when the metropolis is admitted to the scale of comparison. Many horn-combs of all descriptions are made at Kenilworth. At Warwick are manufactories of worsted for the hosiery trade; of calicoes, and other cotton goods, from yarn spun at Manchester and the neighbourhood; and 3 mills for the spinning of cotton yarn. At Alcester about 900 persons are employed in the making of needles; and in other parts of Warwickshire there are considerable flax manufactures, and much linen yarn spun. It is divided into four hundreds, viz., Barlichway, Hemlingford, Kineton, and Knightlow, besides the liberties of Coventry; containing one city, Coventry; one borough, Warwick; and 11 other market towns, viz., Atherstone, Alcester, Birmingham, Coleshill, Henley, Kineton, Nuneaton, Rugby, Southam, Stratford-on-Avon, and Sutton Coldfield. The county is diversified by many pleasant and fertile country seats. It was anciently inhabited by the Cornavii, and was afterwards part of the kingdom of Mercia. The Roman roads called the Watling-street and Fosseway, passed through this county.

WARWICK, a town near the centre of the above county, to which it gives name, and on the banks of the Avon. It is of great antiquity, and justly celebrated for the grandeur of its castle, and its other public buildings. The town stands on a rocky hill, the acclivity of which, though somewhat abrupt, is not considerable. In 1694 Warwick was nearly destroyed by fire; and to this accident it is indebted for the regularity with which it is built. The streets meet near the centre of the town, on an eminence. The principal street of the town is conspicuous for neatness. It is of a fair width, and of considerable length, and is intersected by another street, which runs nearly north and south. At the eastern extremity of the first street is an ancient gate, the perspective effect of which has been injured by modern embellishments. At the western extremity is another gateway, surmounted by a venerable chapel, of a plain but impressive appearance. But there are several other streets, independent of extensive suburbs. In the vicinity of the market-place, and in some other divisions of the town, are houses occupied by traders; so large and well built, as satisfactorily to prove the commercial respectability of the place; but the majority of domestic buildings unconnected with that part of the city which the fire destroyed, are on a contracted scale. It is only necessary to look at them, to be convinced how much the town is indebted for its improved appearance to the great fire.

The wall by which this town was formerly surrounded had disappeared, and had been an object of antiquarian research, so early as the reign of Henry VIII. Of the dyke which was formed in the time of William I., and on the margin of which the wall was afterwards raised, considerable traces are to be perceived; and it may be observed, that one of the present streets gains its appellation from this fortified ditch.

Over the Avon is an elegant stone bridge of one arch. On the northern bank of the river stands the castle, on the solid rock, nearly 100 feet higher than the level of the Avon, but on the north side it is even with the town, and has a charming prospect from the terrace. Across the river, communicating with the castle, there was a stone bridge of 12 arches, which is gone to decay; and by a stone-work dam, the water forms a cascade under the castle walls. It is supposed to have been originally built by Ethelfleda, queen of Mercia, in the 10th century. William the Conqueror considered this castle of great importance, when he enlarged it, and put it in complete repair, giving it to the custody of Henry de Newbury, on whom he bestowed the earldom of Warwick. During the barons' wars, it was nearly demolished by Gifford, governor of Kenilworth castle, but it was soon afterwards rebuilt. In the reign of Richard II. Thomas Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, erected a tower at the north-east corner, called Guy's tower, the walls of which were 10 feet thick. By James I. this castle was granted to Sir Fulke Greville, who expended 20,000*l.* in its reparation. During the civil wars it was garrisoned by the parliament, and besieged by Lord Northampton. In the reign of Charles II. Robert, Earl of Brooke, embellished the whole building, and particularly fitted up the state apartments. It is at present one of the noblest castles remaining in England; the whole of the apartments are elegantly furnished, and adorned with many original paintings.

The approach to Warwick castle is calculated to produce the most striking effect. A broad and winding path, cut through the solid rock, confines the eye, and exercises the fancy, till a hundred yards are trodden over with increasing expectation. In drawing towards the termination of the rocky path, the lofty and massive towers rise progressively to the gaze; and on proceeding a few steps farther, they stand ranged in an embattled line, unspeakably august and commanding. On the left is a tower termed Cæsar's, an elevation, concerning the date of which no trace remains in published or private record. The mode of construction is somewhat rude, and possesses many singularities. Jutting from one side of this tower, is an embattled turret of stone. To the right is the tower named after the fanciful champion of the castle, the redoubted Guy. The disused moat is crossed by a stone bridge, and the entrance is by double towers, through a series of passages once big with multiplied dangers for the intruder. In the great court to which the visitor passes, the display is truly magnificent. The area is now fertile in soft and well cultivated green sward; but spread around are viewed the mighty remains of fortifications raised in turbulent ages now long past away. The outlines of these relics is perfect, and none of the battlements have been ruined by time.

The habitable part of this immense structure lies to the left of the great court; and in the progressive ameliorations effected in latter ages, every attention has been given to preserve the antique character of the edifice. A grand face of the building is displayed towards the river; and here the rock, which affords a foundation to the pile, rises perpendicularly to a considerable height, before the stone-work of the superstructure commences. This front has all the irregularity usual in buildings constructed with a view to security as well as grandeur. The grand suite of apartments extend in a right line 333 feet, and are finished in the most correct and magnificent taste, and adorned with many original paintings. At Guy's Cliff house is recorded to have stood a hermitage, to which the renowned Guy, earl of Warwick, retired, after the many valorous exploits recorded of him in this part of the country. In the suburbs was a chantry, erected to his memory by Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, in the reign of Henry VI. with a statue to his memory. This Guy is supposed to have flourished in the reign of Athelstan; and besides his many victories over dragons, wild boars, &c. is said to have decided the fate of the kingdom, in single combat, with an enormous giant that stood the champion of the Danes, at Mem-hill, near the walls of Winchester, when king Athelstan was besieged. Many curiosities are still shewn in the castle, as belonging to the hero; as his spear, buckler, spurs, bow, and also the slippers of the beautiful Phillis, for whom he performed all these wondrous achievements.

Warwick returns two representatives to parliament, who are chosen by the inhabitants paying scot and lot. The mayor is the returning officer. The corporation consists of a mayor, recorder, twelve brethren or aldermen, a town-clerk, &c.; 90½ miles north-west of London. Population 6497.—2. A parish of England, in Cumberland; 4½ miles east-by-north of Carlisle.—3. An inland town of the Netherlands, in West Flanders, on the river Lys; 9 miles south-west of Courtray. Population 4200.—4. A post township of the United States, in Franklin county, Massachusetts;

80 miles west-north-west of Boston. Population 1227.—5. A township of the United States, in Kent county, Rhode Island, on the west side of Providence river; 10 miles south of Providence. Population 3973.—6. A post township of the United States, in Orange county, New York; 10 miles south of Goshen, and 54 north-west of New York. Population 3978.—7. A county of the United States, in Indiana, situated east of the county of Posey, bounded on the east by the county of Perry, on the south by the Ohio river, on the west by the county of Posey, and on the north by the counties of Orange and Knox. Population 3000.—8. A township of the United States, in Bucks county, Pennsylvania. Population 1287.—9. A township of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. Population 4339.—10. A county of the United States, in the east part of Virginia, bounded north by York county, east by Elizabeth City county, south-south-west by James river, and west by James City county. Population 1835.—11. A township of the United States, in Chesterfield county, Virginia, on the south-west side of James river; 5 miles below Richmond, and 17 north of Petersburg.—12. A post township of Cecil county, Maryland; 9 miles north-east of Georgetown.

WARWICK BRIDGE, a township of England, in Cumberland, near Carlisle.

WARWORN, adj. Worn with war.

Their gesture sad,

Invest in lank lean cheeks and warworn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon

So many horrid ghosts.

Shakspeare.

WAR'RY, adj. [wær, Saxon.] Cautious; scrupulous; timorously prudent.—Others grow wary in their praises of one, who sets too great a value on them, lest they should raise him too high in his own imagination. Addison.

WARYE, a town of Hindostan, province of Gujerat, district of Werrear. Lat. 23. 33. N. long. 71. 22. E.

WAS. The preterite of To BE.—Enoch walked with God, and was not; for God took him. Gen.

WASA, a town of European Russia, in Finland; 180 miles north of Abo. Population 2600. Lat. 63. 5. N. long. 21. 29. E.

WASAGY, a small low island in the Eastern seas, on the west coast of the island of Waygiou, covered with trees to the water's edge.

WASCHENBEUREN, a village of Germany, in Wirtemberg. Population 1000.

WASDALE, or NETHER WASTE DALE, a township of England, in Cumberland; 7 miles north-north-east of Ravenglass.

WASDALE, or UPPER WASTE DALE, another township in the above county.

To WASH, v. a. [wæſan, Saxon; wasschen, Dutch; watska, Icel. from vos, vaesa, veisa, humor, mador, humectatio. Serenius.] To cleanse by ablution.

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands

Of this most grievous guilty murder done! Shakspeare.

To moisten; to wet: as, the rain washes the flowers; the sea washes many islands.—To affect by ablution.—Be baptized, and wash away thy sins. Acts.—To colour by washing.

Shall poesy, like law, turn wrong to right,

And dedications wash an Æthiop white. Young.

To WASH, v. n. To perform the act of ablution.

I will go wash;

And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush or no. Shakspeare.

To cleanse clothes.

She can wash and scour.

—A special virtue; for then she need not be washed and scoured. Shakspeare.

WASH, s. Alluvion; any thing collected by water.—The wash of pastures, fields, commons, and roads, where rain-water

GENERAL WASHINGTON.

Engraved for the Encyclopædia Londinensis 1828.

rain-water hath a long time settled, is of great advantage to all land. Mortimer.—A bog; a marsh; a fen; a quagmire.

Full thirty times hath Phœbus' car gone round Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' orb'd ground. Shakspeare.

A medical or cosmetic lotion.—Try whether children may not have some wash to make their teeth better and stronger. Bacon.—A superficial stain or colour.—Imagination stamps signification upon his face, and tells the people he is to go for so much, who oftentimes, being deceived by the wash, never examine the metal, but take him upon content. Collier.—The feed of hogs gathered from washed dishes.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoiled your summer fields and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
In your embowell'd bosoms. Shakspeare.

The act of washing the clothes of a family; the linen washed at once.

WASH, adj. Washy; weak.

He looks lean;

'Tis a wash knave, he will not keep his flesh well.

Beaum. and Fl.

WASH, a river of England, in the county of Rutland, which joins the Welland.

WASHAWAY, a hamlet of England, in Cornwall; 3 miles north-west of Bodmin.

WASHBALL, s. Ball made of soap.—I asked a poor man how he did; he said he was like a washball, always in decay. Swift.

WASHBOURNE, GREAT, a parish of England, in Gloucestershire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Winchcombe.

WASHBOURNE, LITTLE, a township of England, in Worcestershire; 7 miles from Evesham.

WASHBROOK, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 4 miles west-by-south of Ipswich.—2. A hamlet of England, in Gloucestershire; 6 miles from Cirencester.—3. A river of England, in Yorkshire, which joins the Wharf, near Otley.

WASHER, s. One that washes.—Quickly is his laundress, his washer, and his wringer. Shakspeare.

WASHES, a large and noted estuary in England, in the counties of Lincoln and Norfolk. When the tide is full, the whole is under water; but when the tide is out, it is passable by travellers, though not without danger from the quicksands. Particular parts of this inlet, which runs into the land, have particular names, such as Fossdyke Wash, below Spalding; Cross-Keys Wash, below Wisbeach, at the mouth of the Nen, &c.

WASHFIELD, a parish of England, in Devonshire, near Tiverton. Population 431.

WASHFORD, a hamlet of England, in Devonshire, on a brook that joins the Taw.

WASHFORD, PYNE, a parish of England, in Devonshire, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-by-west of Crediton.

WASHINGBOROUGH, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Lincoln.

WASHINGLEY, a parish of England, in Huntingdonshire; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of Stilton.

WASHINGTON (George), first president of the United States, the descendant of a respectable family in the north of England, was born in February, 1732, on an estate in Westmoreland county, Virginia, on which his great-grandfather, John Washington, settled, after his emigration from England, about the year 1657. Having lost his father when he was about 10 years of age, his advantages of education were inconsiderable; but he acquired a sufficient knowledge of mathematics to qualify him for a land-surveyor. In his youth he was grave and thoughtful, regular and diligent in the management of the business assigned him, dignified in his deportment, and exemplary and honourable in his whole conduct. Ardent in his temper, he manifested, at the age of fifteen, an inclination to enter into the British navy, and the place of a midshipman was procured for him; but his mother diverted him from his purpose. In his nineteenth year he was nominated one of the adjutants-general of Virginia, with the rank of major; and in 1753 he was entrusted with a commission which required prudence and resolution. At this time the French were projecting a communication between Canada and Louisiana by a chain of forts, which would have confined the English to the east side of the Alleghany mountains. Washington was the bearer of a letter of remonstrance to the French from Mr. Dinwiddie, the governor of Virginia. He executed the business committed to him, and returned in seventy-eight days. As the French persisted in their plans, the assembly of Virginia raised a body of three hundred men for the protection of their frontiers, and appointed Washington lieutenant-colonel. Hostilities commenced, though war was not declared between Great Britain and France; and Washington, with a detachment of his regiment, falling in with a party of French, surprised and made them all prisoners, after their commander was killed. With an augmentation of force, he proceeded for the purpose of dislodging the French from fort Duquesne; but receiving intelligence that a large force was approaching, he fell back into a stockaded fort, which he had previously erected at a place called Great Meadows, where he was attacked by the enemy. However, he defended his post, incompletely fortified, for a whole day, and capitulated with the French commander upon honourable terms.

In 1755, war actually took place, and general Braddock was sent to command in America. Washington, now a colonel, offered to accompany him as a volunteer; and notwithstanding a severe illness, made haste to join the army. The carnage of the day was dreadful, and proved fatal to the general and many of his officers and men; but Washington maintained the most perfect self-possession, notwithstanding the personal danger to which he was exposed. He brought back the shattered remnant of the army; and his countrymen generally thought, that if he had had the command, instead of a man who was unacquainted with the Indian mode of fighting, the disaster would have been prevented. The assembly of Virginia determined, after the withdrawal of all the regular troops, to raise sixteen companies for the defence of their frontiers, and they entrusted the command with Washington; such was the degree of reputation which he had acquired at this early age! His situation was trying and perilous, an extensive frontier being open to the incursions of a savage enemy; he recommended more vigorous measures, and at length, when fort Duquesne was evacuated by the French, in 1758, in consequence of the successes of the British troops in the northern colonies, the back-settlements of the southern were secured. When this service was accomplished, Washington retired from the military service with the cordial esteem of his countrymen, and with tokens of respect from the officers of the British army. Soon afterwards he married Mrs. Custis, an amiable and opulent widow; and by the death of an elder brother he obtained an estate on the Potomac, called Mount Vernon, whither he removed, and commenced the life of a country gentleman, sedulously improving his property by his agricultural skill, exercising the office of judge of the court in the county where he resided, and attending as a representative in the house of burgesses of Virginia. This was the honourable and useful life he led for fifteen years. But after the peace of 1763, contests commenced between the American colonies and the British legislature; and Washington determined in the assembly of Virginia to oppose the claim of the parent-state to a right of taxing its colonies. Accordingly he was elected a member of the first congress, which assembled at Philadelphia in 1774. He was a member of all the committees appointed for arranging measures of defence; and when it was determined to raise a general army, the arduous office of commander-in-chief was unanimously conferred upon him by the deputies of the twelve united colonies, to which Georgia afterwards acceded. He, with becoming modesty and diffidence, accepted the office, but declined all pecuniary compensation, desiring only the payment of his expenses.

On his first assuming the command, the American army consisted of about 14,500 men, entrenched at different posts near Boston, and opposed to the British army on Bunker's-hill. An army like that of the Americans, consisting of raw recruits, enlisted for a limited time, furnished by different colonial governments, and very indifferently provided with arms, ammunition, and stores, afforded a discouraging prospect to its commander, and required the exercise of singular talents. Washington seemed to possess such talents. Accordingly, notwithstanding all disadvantages, he was enabled, in March, 1776, to commence active operations against the British army at Boston, by fortifying the heights of Dorchester, which commanded both the lines and harbour. The British were soon reduced to the necessity of quitting Boston and removing to Halifax; and the American general was welcomed at the former place as a deliverer. When general Howe, with a strong force, took possession of Staten island, the Americans were posted on Long island, under general Sullivan; but in August they were attacked and defeated with great slaughter. Washington was in the city of New York, endeavouring to preserve and rally the troops that had escaped in a dispirited state from this conflict. But being unequal to a successful resistance to the victorious army, he withdrew from New York to the interior of the country, and having retreated through the Jerseys, found himself at the head of no more than 7000 men. However, he maintained his self-possession and firmness, and determined to retaliate. The first object of his attack was a body of Hessians, stationed at Trenton. Crossing the Delaware, and hastening towards the town, he took them by surprise, and about nine hundred of them laid down their arms, besides others that were killed and wounded. This success was peculiarly fortunate, as the Americans dreaded the ferocity of the Hessians, and their spirits were thus roused to new exertions. Washington gained also an advantage over the British at Prince-town, and by these bold movements they were obliged to abandon all their posts except two, which they retained to the southward of New York. Sir William Howe commenced the campaign of 1777 with attempts to bring the American army to action; but Washington, apprized of his design, evaded it by his manœuvres. Philadelphia was the next object to which the views of the British were directed. The American commander posted himself on Brandy-wine creek, in order to dispute their passage; and finding it necessary to risk a battle, he suffered a defeat, and was under the necessity of leaving the passage to Philadelphia open to the enemy. Having been reinforced, he made an attack upon the British troops at German-town, but was repulsed with loss, and took up his winter-quarters at Valley-forge, about 25 miles from Philadelphia. The events of this year had proved disastrous, and Washington experienced many difficulties in providing food and clothing for his army; and the people became discontented, alleging, in a tone of loud complaint, the success of general Gates, and the surrender of Burgoyne, as a contrast against his want of success. His patience and forbearance were invincible; he justified his conduct, and evinced his patriotism, by not yielding to a faction at such a critical period. The public voice, however, was in his favour, and thus supported, he determined to persevere.

With the commencement of the year 1778, Washington concerted measures with Congress for ameliorating the whole military system. Washington has been called the American Fabius; but enterprising as his own spirit was, he was obliged by circumstances to assume this character. The alliance with France very much improved the situation of the Americans; this obliged the British army to evacuate Philadelphia, and their retreat was harassed, as much as possible, by the vigilance and activity of Washington. By a partial action at Monmouth court-house they lost some men, and then pursued their march to Sandy-Hook. Washington retired to New Jersey; and by his conciliatory manners and address compromised the differences that subsisted between the Americans and their French auxiliaries.

During the campaigns of 1779 and 1780, no great occasion presented itself for the display of Washington's military talents. The Americans had derived confidence in their expectation of ultimate success from the alliance and co-operation of France. The year 1781 commenced with a mutiny in the Pennsylvania line of the army, which was occasioned by the inattention of Congress to the redress of their grievances. Washington on this occasion acted with great wisdom, and left the matter in litigation to be settled by the civil authorities, which granted their principal demands. But when the same mutinous spirit was extended to the Jersey brigade, he thought it right to interpose; and by a punishment of the ringleaders, the others were restored to their duty. He took this occasion of urging the different states to make exertions for removing the causes of discontent among the troops. This was a year that called for extraordinary activity. The British were pushing forward their successes with uncommon ardour in the southern provinces, and Virginia was experiencing the calamities of war. Washington was urged to defend his native province; but he knew no private interest in this general contest; and regarding America, rather than any particular district, as his country, he would not be induced to abandon his central post. It was now determined to combine the operations of the American and French forces, and the first object in contemplation was the siege of New York. But this measure was afterwards changed for that of an attempt against the army of lord Cornwallis, posted at York-town. Whilst Washington and Rochambeau kept up the deception of a design against New York, by passing Clinton's army without molestation, and marching by Philadelphia to Williamsburgh, the land and naval forces made an united attack upon the British troops at York-town. Their gallant commander was compelled to surrender his whole force on October 19, which event, in fact, terminated the war on the American continent. Its importance was such in the opinion of Washington, that he issued an order on the following day, that all under arrest should be pardoned and set at liberty, and that a thanksgiving service should be performed in the different brigades and divisions. He then returned, with the greatest part of the army, to the vicinity of New York. The British parliament, at an early period of the year 1782, declared its sense of the impolicy of the war by a vote against further offensive measures. Washington, however, with his customary precaution, urged the necessity of remaining fully prepared for another campaign; but in the course of the year the preliminaries were signed, and the independence of America fully recognized. Discontents prevailed in the army, under an apprehension that its claims for past services would be neglected; and, as an expression of such existing discontents, inflammatory addresses were circulated among the troops. Washington, on this occasion, exercised his conciliatory powers with wonderful effect. He cautioned the officers, individually, to avoid intemperate measures; and then, at a general meeting convoked by himself, he delivered to them an address, which produced an unanimous determination to trust their cause to the justice of Congress and their country. On the other side, Washington thought it his duty to urge Congress to make an adequate compensation to those who had so well served their country, and his advice was duly regarded. When the army was disbanded, in November, 1783, their commander-in-chief took his leave of them by a most affectionate and admonitory address.

On his way to Anapolis, then the seat of Congress, he delivered to the comptroller at Philadelphia, an exact account, in his own hand-writing, of all the public money he had received, the whole amount of which, in eight years, was only between 14 and 15,000*l*. Nothing was charged for personal services. He then proceeded to the Congress, which which received him as the greatest and best citizen of the United States. After a suitable address, he resigned his commission into the hands of the president, who, in energetic terms, expressed the national sense of his high merits. Such were the feelings of public gratitude towards him, that he could have asked nothing which would not readily have been granted; but making no request for himself, his family, or relations, he limited himself to an indirect recommendation to Congress of some young gentlemen without fortune, who had served him as aides-de-camp. He then hastened to mount Vernon, where he instantly laid aside the statesman and general for the country gentleman.

Here, not satisfied with attending merely to his own interest, he took pleasure in suggesting and accomplishing any scheme that tended to the improvement of the country. Accordingly, he zealously promoted a plan of inland navigation; and in gratitude for his services, the legislature of Virginia passed an act in order to vest in him 150 shares in the navigation of the rivers James and Potomac. But this grant he would not accept, as he had resolved to decline all personal recompence for his services; but he consented to the act on condition of appropriating the proceeds to the maintenance of a seminary of learning in the vicinity of each river; which appropriation he confirmed by his last will.

When a general convention was agreed upon for revising the federal system of government, this convention assembled at Philadelphia in 1787, and unanimously chose Washington as president; and when the new form of government was settled, the late commander-in-chief was unanimously elected the first President of the United States, the honour of which election was announced to him at mount Vernon on the 14th of April, 1789. He accepted the arduous office that had been so honourably assigned to him, and immediately commenced, as he faithfully continued, the discharge of its important duties. "After having steered the vessel of the state," says one of his biographers, "during an unquiet period of eight years, being now in the sixty-sixth year of his age, he thought proper to decline a new election to his high office. He announced this intention in a long and minute address to the people of the United States, replete with the most excellent advice for their future conduct, and the soundest views of their political state. It was a legacy of wisdom which set the seal to all his past services."—"It was in the beginning of 1797 that Washington resigned his authority to his successor, Mr. Adams; on which occasion, whatever might be the feelings of a few party-zealots, he received abundant proofs of the general esteem and affection. He returned with pleasure to the comforts of domestic life, and resumed his agricultural and literary pursuits. From this state of privacy, however, he was called in the following year by the aggravated injuries of the French rulers, which produced a determination in Congress to arm by sea and land for a defensive war; and in consequence Washington was once more nominated to the chief command of the armies of the United States. The countenance, however, thus assumed and the subsequent deposition of the Directory by Buonaparte brought on an accommodation, and all military preparations were at an end."

When the services of this truly "great man," unparalleled perhaps in the history of the world, terminated, his life was hastening to a close. Having exposed himself to the rain, December 13, 1799, in attending to some improvements at mount Vernon, he was seized with an inflammatory affection of the wind-pipe, attended with fever, which baffled the efforts of his physicians, and terminated his life within thirty-five hours after his first seizure, without a struggle, and in the full possession of his reason, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. "His moral and intellectual qualities," says one of his biographers, were so happily blended, that he might seem expressly formed for the part assigned to him on the theatre of the world. His firm mind, equally inaccessible to the flatteries of hope and the suggestions of despondence, was kept steady by the grand principles of love to his country, and a religious attachment to moral duty. In him even fame, glory, and reputation, were subordinate to the performance of the task imposed upon him; and no one ever passed through the ordeal of power more free from the remotest suspicion of selfish or ambitious designs. Capable of strong and decisive measures when necessary, they were tempered with the lenity which flows from true benevolence. In person he was tall and well proportioned. His form was dignified, and his port majestic. His passions were naturally strong, but he had obtained a full command over them. In the character of his intellect, judgment predominated; to fancy and vivacity he had no pretension; but good sense displayed itself in all that he said or wrote. It was a proof of strong powers of acquisition, that, scanty as his literary education had been, by a careful study of the English language in its best models, he became master of a style at once pure, elegant, and energetic; and few better specimens of public addresses can be shewn than in the products of his pen.

—Ramsey's and Marshall's Lives of Washington.

WASHINGTON, the metropolis of the United States, in the district of Columbia. The city of Washington became the seat of the national government in 1800. It is situated on the Maryland side of the Potomac, 295 miles by the course of the river and bay, from the Atlantic, on a point of land between the Eastern Branch and the Potomac; and its site, as laid out, extends two or three miles up each of these rivers. It is separated from Georgetown by Rock Creek, over which are two bridges; and there is a bridge over the Potomac, more than a mile in length, leading to Alexandria. A canal is constructed from the Potomac, passing up the Tiber, a small stream which flows through Washington, and then across the plain of the city to the Eastern Branch, forming a communication between the two rivers. The natural situation of Washington is pleasant and salubrious; and it is laid out on a plan which, when completed, will render it one of the handsomest and most commodious cities in the world. It is divided into squares by spacious streets or avenues, running north and south, intersected by others at right angles. These are crossed transversely by 15 other spacious streets or avenues, named after the different states. The rectangular streets are designated by the letters of the alphabet, and by numbers. The grand avenues, and such streets as lead immediately to public places, are from 130 to 160 feet wide; the other streets are from 90 to 110 feet wide. The buildings which contain the offices for the great departments of government, consist of four spacious brick edifices of two stories, situated at a small distance from the president's house. In these buildings are kept the papers, records, archives, and offices of the departments of state, of the treasury, of war, and of the navy. The general post-office is a large brick edifice, situated about a mile west-north-west of the capital, and contains, besides the various offices belonging to the post-office establishment, the general land office, the patent-office, where are deposited all the models of inventions for which patents have been granted, forming a very extensive and curious collection; and a temporary library room for the national library, purchased in 1815, of the honourable Thomas Jefferson, late president of the United States, and consisting of about 8000 volumes. The navy-yard is situated on the Eastern Branch, which forms a safe and commodious harbour, being sufficiently deep for large ships about four miles from its mouth. On the 24th of August, 1814, this city was taken by the British, who burnt the public edifices, not sparing even the national library. All these edifices are now rebuilt and repaired. Lat. 38. 58. N. long. 77. 2. W. Population about 12,000.

WASHINGTON, a village of England, in Durham, on the Wear. Population 1264.—2. A parish of England, in the county of Sussex; 4 miles west-by-north of Steyning. Population 619.—3. A county of the United States, on the east side of Maine; bounded east by New Brunswick, south by the Atlantic, and west by Hancock and Penobscot counties. Population 7870.—4. A county of the United States, in Vermont, in the central part of the state, formed since 1810, from a part of the counties of Caledonia, Orange

Orange, and Chittenden; and bounded north-east by Orange and Caledonia counties, east by Caledonia county, south-east by Orange county, south by Addison county, and west by Chittenden county.—5. A post township of the United States, in Cheshire county, New Hampshire; 18 miles east-south-east of Charles-town, and 35 west of Concord. Population 820.—6. A township of Berkshire county, Massachusetts; 120 miles west of Boston. Population 942.—7. A county of the United States, in Rhode Island, bounded north by Kent county, east by Narraganset bay, south by the Atlantic, and west by Connecticut. Population 14,969.—8. A post town of the United States, in Litchfield county, Connecticut; 10 miles south-west of Litchfield, and 25 north-by-east of Danbury. Population 1575.—9. A county of the United States, in New York, bounded on the north by Essex county, on the east by Vermont, on the south by Rensselaer county, and on the west by Saratoga and Warren counties. Its form is irregular; its greatest length from north to south is 59 miles; and its greatest breadth 45. Population 42,289.—10. A post township of the United States, in Dutchess county, New York; 15 miles east-north-east of Poughkeepsie. Population 2854.—11. A village of the United States, in Watervliet, New York, on the west side of the Hudson, nearly opposite Troy; 5 miles north of Albany.—12. A post township of the United States, in Morris county, New Jersey. Population 1793.—13. A township of the United States, in Burlington county, New Jersey. Population 1273.—14. A county of the United States, in the south-west part of Pennsylvania, bounded north by Beaver county, north-east by Alleghany county, east by Westmoreland and Fayette counties, south by Greene county, and west by Virginia. Population 36,289.—15. A post town and borough of the United States, and capital of Washington county, Pennsylvania, on the head branches of Chartier's Creek; 25 miles south west of Pittsburg. Population estimated at 2500.—16. A post township of the United States, in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania. Population 438.—17. A township of York county, Pennsylvania. Population 441.—18. A township of Franklin county, Pennsylvania. Population 2709.—19. A township of Indiana county, Pennsylvania. Population 755.—20. A township of Fayette county, Pennsylvania. Population 2160.—21. A township of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, on the east side of the Alleghany. Population 1695.—22. A township of Lycoming county, Pennsylvania. Population 675.—23. A village of the United States, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the east bank of the Susquehanna; 3 miles below Columbia.—24. A county of the United States, in the south-east part of Ohio.—25. A post town of the United States, in Miami. Population 787.—26. A post town of the United States, and capital of Mason county, Kentucky; 3 miles south-west of Maysville, and 60 north-east of Lexington. Population 815.—27. A county of the United States, in Indiana, bounded on the east by Clark county, on the south by the county of Harrison, on the west by the county of Orange, and on the north by the county of Jackson.—28. A county of the United States, in the central part of Kentucky. Population 13,248.—29. A post town of the United States, and capital of Fayette county Ohio; 30 miles north-west of Chillicothe, and 40 south-west of Columbus.—30. A post township of the United States, in Guernsey county, Ohio; 10 miles east of Cambridge.—31. A township of the United States, in Montgomery county, Ohio. Population 1584.—32. A township of Preble county, Ohio. Population 440.—33. A township of Clermont county, Ohio. Population 1527.—34. A township of Franklin county, Ohio. Population 280.—35. A township of Richmond county, Ohio. Population 974.—36. A county of the United States, in the district of Columbia. Population 15,471.—37. A township of the United States, in Harrison county, Indiana. Population 1257.—38. A county of the United States, in Maryland, bounded north by Pennsylvania, east by Frederick county, south by the Potomac, and west by Alleghany county. Population 18,730.—39. A county of the United States, in Illinois.—40. A county of the United States, in the south-west part of Virginia, bounded north-north-west by Russell county, east by Wythe county, south-east by Grayson county, and south by Tennessee. Population 12,136.—41. A post village of the United States, in Culpeper county, Virginia.—42. A county of the United States, in North Carolina. Population 3464.—43. A seaport of the United States, and capital of Beaufort county, North Carolina, on the Pamlico; 38 miles north of Newbern, and 61 south-south-west of Edenton. Population about 600.—44. A county of the United States, in the central part of Georgia. Population 9940.—45. A post town of the United States, and capital of Wilkes county, Georgia, on Kettle Creek, a branch of Little river; 50 miles west-north-west of Augusta, and 58 north-by-west of Louisville. Population 1500.—46. A county of the United States, in the east end of East Tennessee. Population 7740.—47. A post town of the United States, and capital of Rhea county, Tennessee, near the Tennessee, about 35 miles west of Tellico, and 75 south-west of Knoxville.—48. A post town of the United States, in Adams county, Mississippi, on St. Catherine's Creek, 20 miles from its mouth; 6 miles east of Natchez. Population 524.—49. A county of the United States, in Alabama. The chief town is St. Stephen's.

WASHINGTON ISLANDS, islands near the west coast of North America. Captain Gray, of the United States, discovered them in 1789, and called them Washington's Islands.

WASHINGTON POINT, a point of land formed by the junction of the southern and eastern branches of Elizabeth river, Virginia, one mile south of Norfolk.

WASHINGTON, SOUTH, a post town of the United States, in Duplin county, North Carolina.

WASHMINSKER ISLANDS, a cluster of islands near the south coast of Labrador. Lat. 50. N. long. 60. W.

WASHPECAUTE INDIANS, in the United States, in Louisiana, south-west of the river St. Peter's. Number 10,000.

WASHPETONG INDIANS, North America, on the river St. Peter's. Number 1060.

WASHPOT, s. A vessel in which any thing is washed. Behold sev'n comely blooming youths appear,
And in their hands sev'n golden washpots bear. Cowley.

WASHTON, a township of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles from Richmond.

WASHY, adj. Watery; damp. On the washy ooze deep channels wore, Easy, ere God had bid the ground be dry. Milton.

Weak; not solid.—A polish of clearness, evenly and smoothly spread, not over thin and washy, but of a pretty solid consistence. Wotton.

WASKEMASHIN, an island in the gulf of St. Lawrence, near the coast of Labrador. Lat. 50. 3. N. long. 59. 56. W.

WASKUACHAOUIPIOU, a river of Canada, which runs into the Saguenay. Lat. 48. 20. N. long. 70. 18. W.

WASLING, a parish of England, in Berkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Newbury.

WASLONNE, or WASSELNHEIM, a town of France, in Alsace, on the river Massick. It has manufactures, on a small scale, of printed linen and coloured paper; also of stockings, leather, soap, and candles. It has, besides, some iron-works; and the environs contain quarries of beautiful marble; 14 miles west-by-north of Strasburg. Population 3100.

WASLUI, a small town of European Turkey, in Moldavia, on the Birlad; 32 miles south of Jassy. Lat. 46. 40. N. long. 27. 45. E.

WASMES, an inland town of the Netherlands, district of Tournay. Population 3500.

WASMUNSTER, a small town of the Netherlands, in East Flanders, on the Durme; 16 miles west-by-north of Ghent.

WASP, [pearp, Sax.; vespa, Lat.; guespe, Fr.] A brisk stinging insect, in form resembling a bee.

More wasps, that buz about his nose,
Will make this sting the sooner.

Shakspeare.

WASPERTON, a parish of England, in Warwickshire; 4 miles south-south-west of Warwick.

WASPIK, a village of the Netherlands, in South Holland, with 1600 inhabitants.

WAS'PISH, adj. Peevish; malignant; irritable; irascible.

I'll use you for my laughter,
When you are waspish.

Shakspeare.

WA'SPISHLY, adv. Peevishly.

WA'SPISHNESS, s. Peevishness; irritability.—His skull is a mere nest of hornets, which sting into him their own waspishness. Cleveland.

WASS, a township of England, in Yorkshire; 6½ miles south-west of Helmsley.

WASS ISLAND, an island of the Atlantic, near the coast of America. Lat. 44. 28. N. long. 67. 30. W.

WASSAH, a town of Hindostan, province of Gujerat, district of Cambay. Lat. 22. 39. N. long. 72. 52. E.

WASSAIL, s. [from wæj hæil, your health, Sax.] A liquor made of apples, sugar, and ale, anciently much used by English goodfellows.

Some lusty sport
Or spiced wassel-bowl.

Fletcher.

A drunken bout.

The king doth wake to-night, and takes his roose,
Keeps wassail, and the swagg'ring upspring reels.

Shakspeare.

A merry song. Ainsworth.—A particular song (called wassail) is still sung by boys at Christmas from house to house in some parts of Sussex. To a custom of such kind Ben Jonson seems to allude. Mason.

This, I you tell, is our jolly wassel,
And for twelfth-night more meet too.

B. Jonson.

To WA'SSAIL, v. n. To attend at wassails; to frolic; to tope.—Pushed forward to gaming, jigging, wassailing. Milton.

WA'SSAILER, s. A toper; a drunkard.

I'm loth to meet the rudeness, and swill'd insolence
Of such late wassailers.

Milton.

WASSAW ISLAND, GREAT, an island in the Atlantic, near the coast of Georgia; 16 miles in circumference. Lat. 32. 52. N. long. 81. 8. W.

WASSAW ISLAND, LITTLE, an island in the Atlantic, near the coast of Georgia, to the south-west of Great Wassaw.

WASSAW SOUND, a bay on the coast of Georgia, between Great Wassaw island and Tybee island.

WASSEL, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Hagley, county of Worcester.

WASSELA, a mountainous country of Central Africa, situated to the east of Kong, and having to the north and west Manding and Bambarra.

WASSEN, a large village of Switzerland, in the canton of Uri, on the Reuss.

WASSENAER, a village of the Netherlands, in South Holland, with 1700 inhabitants; 5 miles west-by-south of Leyden.

WASSENBERG, a town of the Prussian province of Cleves and Berg, on the Roer; 9 miles east-south-east of Ruremond. Population 1000.

WASSERBILLICH, a small town of the Netherlands, at the conflux of the Sauer and the Moselle; 9 miles west-south-west of Treves.

WASSERBURG, a town of Germany, in Bavaria, on the Inn. It has a trade in salt; 28 miles east of Munich. Population 2000.

WASSERBURG, a town of Germany, in Bavaria, on a point of land projecting out into the lake of Constance. Population 800.

WASSER TRUDINGEN, a town of Bavarian Franconia, on the Wernitz; 15 miles south of Anspach. Population 1900.

WASSIBOO, a small town of Bambarra, in Central Africa; 75 miles east-south-east of Benowm.

WASSIGNY, a town of France, department of the Ardenes, on the small river Vaux. Population 1000.

WASSOTA, a celebrated fortress of Hindostan, province of Bejapore, district of the Concan. There are two forts about 1000 yards from each other. They are both situated on rocks nearly perpendicular, and 3000 feet high. Lat. not ascertained.

WAST. The second person of was, from To be.

To WASTE, v. a. [apercan, Sax.; woesten, Dutch; guastare, Ital.; vastare, Lat.] To diminish.

The fire that mounts the liquor 'till 't run o'er,
Seeming t' augment it, wastes it.

Shakspeare.

To destroy wantonly, and luxuriously; to squander.—The people's praying after the minister, they say, wasteth time. Hooker.—To destroy; to desolate.—Peace to corrupt, no less than war to waste. Milton.—To wear out.

Here condemn'd

To waste eternal days in woe and pain.

Milton.

To spend; to consume.

O were I able

To waste it all myself, and leave you none!

Milton.

To WASTE, v. n. To dwindle; to be in a state of consumption.

The latter watch of wasting night,
And setting stars to kindly sleep invite.

Dryden.

WASTE, adj. Destroyed; ruined.—The Sophi leaves all waste in his retreat. Milton.—Desolate; uncultivated.—He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deut.—Superfluous; exuberant; lost for want of occupiers.

Quite surcharg'd with her own weight,
And strangled with her waste fertility.

Milton.

Worthless; that of which none but vile uses can be made: as waste wood.—That of which no account is taken, or value found.—It may be published as well as printed, that so much skill in Hebrew derivations may not lie for waste paper. Dryden.

WASTE, s. Wanton or luxurious destruction; the act of squandering.

Freedom who loves, must first be wise and good;
But from that mark how far they rove we see,
For all this waste of wealth, and loss of blood.

Milton.

Consumption; loss.

But youth, the perishing good, runs on too fast,
And unenjoy'd it spends itself to waste;
Few know the use of life before 'tis past.

Dryden.

Desolate or uncultivated ground.

See the man who spacious regions gave,
A waste for beasts, himself deny'd a grave.

Popc.

Ground, place, or space unoccupied.

These gentlemen, on their watch,
In the dead waste and middle of the night,
Had been thus encountered.

Shakspeare.

Region ruined and deserted.

All the leafy nation sinks at last,
And Vulcan rides in triumph o'er the waste.

Dryden.

Mischief; destruction.—The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shakspeare.—[A law term.] Destruction of wood or other products of land.—You are but tenant for life, and shall make no waste. Shadwell.

WASTEFUL, adj. Destructive; ruinous.

The folly of man
Let in these wasteful furies.

Milton.

Wantonly or dissolutely consumptive.
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
In wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Shakspeare.

Lavish; prodigal; luxuriantly liberal.
How has kind heav'n adorn'd the happy land,
And scatter'd blessings with a wasteful hand!

Addison.

Desolate; uncultivated; unoccupied.
In wilderness and wasteful deserts stray'd,
To seek her knight.

Spenser.

Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild.

Milton.

WASTEFULLY, adv. With vain and dissolute consumption.—Never any man would think our labour mispent, or the time wastefully consumed.

Hooker.

WASTEFULNESS, s. Prodigality.
WASTEL, s. [wastellus, low Lat.; gastau, Fr.] A particular sort of bread; fine bread; a cake. Obsolete.—Wastel-bread was a better sort of bread.

Lowth.

WASTENESS, s. Desolation; solitude.

She, of nought afraid,
Through woods and wasteness wide him daily sought.

Spenser.

WASTER, s. One that consumes dissolutely and extravagantly; a squanderer; vain consumer.

Divers Roman knights,
The profuse wasters of their patrimonies,
So threaten'd with their debts, as they will now
Run any desperate fortune.

B. Jonson.

A kind of cudgel.—Thou wouldst be loth to play half a dozen of venies at wasters.

Beaum. and Fl.

WASTETHRIFT, s. A spendthrift.—Thou art a wastethrift, and art run away from thy master.

Beaum. and Fl.

WASTREL, s. Their works, both stream and load, lie in several, or in wastrell, that is, in inclosed grounds, or in commons.

Carew.

WASUNGEN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Saxe-Meinungen, on the Werra; 6 miles north of Meinungen. Population 1500.

WASZILKOW, a town of European Russia; 5 miles north of Bialystock.

WATAGUAKI, a river of Labrador, which runs into the gulf of St. Lawrence. Lat. 50. 12. N. long. 60. 5. W.

WATAGUAKI ISLES, a cluster of small islands in the gulf of St. Lawrence, near the coast of Labrador.

WATAUGA, a river which rises in North Carolina, and runs into the Holston, in Tennessee.

WATAUPAUMENE, or ST PETER, a river of North America, which runs into the Mississippi. Lat. 44. 42. N. long. 93. 38. W.

WATCH, s. [pæce, Sax.] Forbearance of sleep; attendance without sleep.

All the long night their mournful watch they keep,
And all the day stand round the tomb and weep.

Addison.

Attention; close observation.
In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow, of the self-same flight,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both.

Shakspeare.

Guard; vigilant keep.
Hie thee to thy charge;
Use careful watch, chuse trusty centinels.

Shakspeare.

Watchman; men set to guard. It is used in a collective sense.

Such stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers.

Shakspeare.

Place where a guard is set.

He upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch.

Shakspeare.

Post or office of a watchman.

As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move.

Shakspeare.

A period of the night.

Your fair daughter,
At this odd, even, and dull watch o' the night,
Is now transported with a gondolier,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor.

Shakspeare.

A pocket clock; a small clock moved by a spring.

That Cloe may be serv'd in state,
The hours must at her toilet wait;
Whilst all the reasoning fools below
Wonder their watches go so slow.

Prior.

To WATCH, v. n. [pacific, Saxon.] Not to sleep; to wake.—I have two nights watch'd with you; but can perceive no truth in your report. Shakspeare.—To keep guard.—He gave signal to the minister that watch'd. Milton.—To look with expectation.—My soul waiteth for the Lord, more than they that watch for the morning. Ps.—To be attentive; to be vigilant.—Watch thou in all things, endure afflictions. 2 Tim.—To be cautiously observant.—Watch over thyself, counsel thyself, judge thyself impartially. Bp. Taylor.—To be insidiously attentive.

He somewhere nigh at hand
Watches, no doubt, with greedy hope to find
His wish and best advantage, us asunder,
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd.

Milton.

To WATCH, v. a. To guard; to have in keep.—Flaming ministers watch and tend their charge. Milton.—To observe in ambush.—Saul sent messengers unto David's house to watch him, and to slay him. 1 Sam.

They under rocks their food
In jointed armour watch.

Milton.

To tend.—Paris watched the flocks in the groves of Ida. Broom.—To observe in order to detect or prevent.

WATCH POINT, a cape on the east coast of Rhode Island. Lat. 41. 13. N. long. 71. 50. W.

WATCHER, s. One who sits up; one who does not go to sleep.

Get on your night-gown, lest occasion call us,
And shew us to be watchers.

Shakspeare.

Diligent overlooker or observer.

Love hath chac'd sleep from my enthralled eyes,
And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow.

Shakspeare.

WATCHER, NORTH, or SEVEN ISLANDS, a cluster of small islands in the straits of Macassar, near the west coast of Celebes. Lat. 0. 27. S. long. 119. 33. E.

WATCHER, SOUTH, a small island in the straits of Macassar, near the west coast of Celebes. Lat. 0. 3. S. long. 119. 24. E.

WATCHET, adj. [pæceð, Saxon, weak. Skinner.] Blue; pale blue.—The mariners all appeared in watchet or sky-coloured cloth. Milton.

WATCHET, a market town and seaport of England, in the county of Somerset, situated on the Bristol channel. The inhabitants gather abundance of the lichen marinus, or sea liverwort, on the rocky coast and cliffs, at low water, which they send to distant parts of the country. Market on Saturday and one annual fair; 14 miles north-north west of Bridgewater, and 153 west-by-south of London. Population 1659.

WATCHFIELD, a hamlet of England, in Berkshire, near Great Farringdon.

WATCHFUL, adj. Vigilant; attentive; cautious; nicely observant. It has of before the thing to be regulated, and against before the thing to be avoided.

Call

Call home our exil'd friends,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shakspeare.

WA'TCHFULLY, adv. Vigilantly; cautiously; attentively; with cautious observation; heedfully.—If this experiment were very watchfully tried in vessels of several sizes, some such things may be discovered. Boyle.

WA'TCHFULNESS, s. Vigilance; heed; suspicious attention; cautious regard; diligent observation.—The experience of our own frailties, and the consideration of the watchfulness of the tempter, discourage us. Hammond.—Inability to sleep.—Watchfulness, sometimes called a coma or vigil, often precedes too great sleepiness. Arbutnot.

WA'TCHHOUSE, s. Place where the watch is set.
Where statues breath'd, the works of Phidias' hands,
A wooden pump or lonely watchhouse stands. Gay.

A place where watchmen lock up such as disturb the peace during the night.

WA'TCHING, s. Inability to sleep.—The bullet not having been extracted, occasioned great pain and watchings. Wiseman.

WA'TCHLIGHT, s. A candle with a rush wick to burn in the night.—Item, a dozen pound of watchlights for the servants. Addison.

WA'TCHMAKER, s. One whose trade is to make watches, or pocket-clocks.—Smithing comprehends all trades which use forge or file, from the anchormith to the watchmaker; they all using the same tools, though of several sizes. Moxon.

WA'TCHMAN, s. Guard; sentinel; one set to keep ward.
On the top of all I do espy
The watchman waiting, tydings glad to hear. Spenser.

WA'TCHTOWER, s. Tower on which a sentinel was placed for the sake of prospect.—In the day-time she sitteth in a watchtower, and flieth most by night. Bacon.

WA'TCHWORD, s. The word given to the sentinels to know their friends.—That we have, Sir John: our watchword, hem boys. Shakspeare.

WATEEHOO, an island in the South Pacific ocean, about six miles long and four broad, discovered by captain Cook in 1777. It is a beautiful spot, with the surface varied by hills and plains, and covered with verdure. The manners of these islanders, their method of treating strangers, and their general habits of life, appear to be much like those that prevail at Otaheite and its neighbouring isles. Their religious ceremonies and opinions are also nearly the same. Lat. 20. 1. S. long. 158. 15. W.

WATEPAHATOES, Indians in the United States, in Louisiana, at the sources of the Platte.

WA'TER, s. [waeter, Dutch; wæter, Saxon; from the M. Goth., wate, aqua.]

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears. Shakspeare.

A cubic foot of distilled water, according to the best experiments, weighs, at a temperature of 40°, 437102.4946 grains troy. Hence, a cubic inch of water at the same temperature weighs 252.952 grains; and at the temperature of 60°, 252.72 grains. The specific gravity of water is always supposed to be 1.000, and it is made the measure of the specific gravity of every other body. Water, at a temperature of 32°, becomes solid, and assumes the form of ice. In this state it possesses considerable hardness and elasticity, and its specific gravity is diminished to .94.

When water is raised to the temperature of 212° it boils, and is gradually converted into steam, which is an invisible and highly elastic fluid like air. The specific gravity of steam, according to the most recent observations, is .625, that of air being reckoned 1.000.

According to the most perfect experiments, water is composed of two volumes of hydrogen gas, and one volume of oxygen gas. Hence, its combining weight or atom will be 1.125, oxygen being reckoned 1; or, if we consider the specific gravity of hydrogen gas to be .6944, and of oxygen gas 1.1111, it is composed of one part by weight of hydrogen, and eight parts by weight of oxygen. The union of oxygen and hydrogen gases to form water, is attended by the extrication of much light and heat.

The sea.—Travel by land or by water. Common Prayer.
—Urine.

If thou could'st, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee. Shakspeare.

To hold WATER. To be sound; to be tight. From a vessel that will not leak.—A good Christian and an honest man must be all of a piece, and inequalities of proceeding will never hold water. L'Estrange.—It is used for the lustre of a diamond.

'Tis a good form,
And rich: here is a water, look ye. Shakspeare.

Water is much used in composition for things made with water, being in water, or growing in water.

Touch me with noble anger!
O let not wömen's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks. Shakspeare.

To WATER, v. a. To irrigate; to supply with moisture.—Could tears water the lovely plant, so as to make it grow again after once 'tis cut down, your friends would be so far from accusing your passion, that they would encourage it and share it. Temple.—To supply with water for drink.

Water him, and, drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryden.

To fertilize or accommodate with streams.—Mountains, that run from one extremity of Italy to the other, give rise to an incredible variety of rivers that water it. Addison.—To diversify as with waves.—The different ranging the superficial parts of velvet and watered silk, does the like. Locke.

To WA'TER, v. n. To shed moisture.
I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point
Made issue from the bosom of the boy;
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal. Shakspeare.

To get or take in water; to be used in supplying water.—Mahomet sent many small boats manned with harquebusiers and small ordnance, into the lake near unto the camp, to keep the Christians from watering there. Knolles.

The mouth WATERS. The man longs; there is a vehement desire. From dogs who drop their slaver when they see meat which they cannot get; or because there is a secretion of water in the mouth when a tempting morsel is before us.

WATER CRAG, a hill of England, in Yorkshire, 2186 feet in height.

WATER KEY, a small island in the bay of Honduras, near the coast of Mexico. Lat. 17. 30. N. long. 88. 40. W.

WATER KEY, a small island in the Spanish Main, near the Mosquito shore. Lat. 12. 15. N. long. 88. 55. W.

WATER KEY, SOUTH, a small island in the bay of Honduras. Lat. 16. 35. N. long. 88. 45. W.

WATER SOUND, a strait of the North sea, between South Ronaldsha and Barra, two of the Orkney islands.

WATERBEACH, a parish of England, county of Cambridge; 5½ miles north-north-east of Cambridge.

WATERBOROUGH, a post township of the United States, in York county, Maine; 25 miles north of York, and 110 north-north-east of Boston. Population 1395.

WATERBURY, a post township of the United States, in Washington county, Vermont, on Onion river; 12 miles north-west of Montpelier. Population 966. Waterbury river flows through this town into Onion river.—2d, Of Newhaven county, Connecticut; 20 miles north-north-west of Newhaven. Population 2874.

WA'TERCOLOURS, s. Painters make colours into a soft consistence with water or oil; those they call water-colours, and these they term oil-colours. Boyle.

Less should I daub it o'er with transitory praise,
And water-colours of these days:

These

These days! where e'en the extravagance of poetry
Is at a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy.

Swift.

WATERCRESSES, s. [sisymbrium, Lat.] A plant. Miller.—The nymphs of floods are made very beautiful; upon their heads are garlands of watercresses. Peacham.

WATERCROOK, a village of England, in Westmoreland, so named from a remarkable curve in the Ken, a little below Kendal.

WATERDEN, a parish of England, in Norfolk; $\frac{4}{5}$ miles west of Little Walsingham.

WATER EATON, a hamlet of England, county of Buckingham, adjoining to Penny Stratford.—2d, A hamlet in Oxfordshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Oxford.—3d, A hamlet in Staffordshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west-by-south of Penkridge.

WATEREE, a river of the United States, which rises in North Carolina, where it is called the Catabaw.

WATERER, s. One who waters.—This ill weed, rather cut off by the ground than plucked up by the root, twice or thrice grew forth again; but yet, maugre the warmers and waterers, hath been ever parched up. Carew.

WATERFALL, s. Cataract; cascade.—I have seen in the Indies far greater waterfalls than those of Nilus. Raleigh.

WATERFALL, a parish of England, in Staffordshire, south of Grindon. Population 455.

WATERFLAG, s. [iris aquatica, Latin.] A water-flower.

WATERFORD, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, bounded on the north by Kilkenny and Tipperary, on the east by Wexford, on the south by the sea, and on the west by Cork; 42 miles from east to west, and from 8 to 22 broad, from north to south. It contains 34 parishes, about 18,796 houses, and 110,000 inhabitants. The country is in general mountainous; in some parts 720 yards above the level of the sea. On the sides of this chain are some frightful rocks and precipices, and on the summits of most of the mountains are large heaps of stones of great size, supposed to have been the ruins of some buildings, but without the intervention of mortar or cement. Among the mountains are four considerable lochs or lakes, in which are found trout and char. The soil is, however, fertile, and even on the sides of the mountains there is good pasture for cattle. Four members are returned to the imperial parliament, viz. two for the county, and for the city of Waterford and the town of Dungarvan one each.

WATERFORD, a city and seaport of Ireland, and chief town of the county of Waterford. It is situated on the river Suir, which soon after joins the Barrow, and forms a bay called Waterford harbour. It is an episcopal see, and is governed by a mayor, sheriffs, and recorder. Its cathedral, adorned with an elegant steeple, is a chaste model of modern architecture. The episcopal palace is also a fine structure, built of hewn stone, and double fronted. The other public edifices are constructed in a splendid style of elegance, and essentially contribute to ornament the city. There are three parochial churches, besides the cathedral, four Roman Catholic chapels, and other different places of divine worship for various other sects. Its white glass and other manufactories are in a flourishing condition. Its exports of beef, butter, hides, tallow, pork, and corn, are very considerable, to which an extensive inland navigation by means of the rivers Suir, Nore, and Barrow, materially contributes, as also to make a brisk demand for foreign commodities in the several rich towns and flourishing counties through which these rivers flow.

This city gives the title of earl to the family of Talbot; also of viscount to the family of Lumley, and of marquis to the Earl of Tyrone. Waterford is supposed to have been built by the Danes, and was once surrounded by a wall and ditches, and was otherwise fortified. Part of the wall is visible, yet it was never a place of great strength. In the reign of Henry II., it was taken by storm. In 1649, Oliver Cromwell laid siege to Waterford; but a mortality happening among his troops, he was compelled to withdraw.

The year following it surrendered to Ireton. In 1690, James II. embarked here for France, after his defeat at the battle of the Boyne. It was twice visited by William III., who confirmed all its privileges; 53 miles east-north-east of Cork, and 75 south-south-west of Dublin. Lat. 52. 14. N. long. 7. 8. W.—2. A post township of the United States, in Oxford county, Maine; 12 miles south-west of Paris. Population 860.—3. Formerly LITTLETON, a post township of the United States, in Caledonia county, Vermont, on the Connecticut; 14 miles east of Danville, and 40 east of Montpelier.—4. A township of the United States, in New London county, Connecticut; 4 miles north-west of New London. Population 2185.—5. A post village of the United States, in Half-Moon, Saratoga county, New York; 4 miles north of Troy, and 10 north of Albany.—6. A township of the United States, in Gloucester county, New Jersey. Population 2105.—7. A post township of Mifflin county, Pennsylvania.—8. A post township of Erie county, Pennsylvania, on French Creek; 15 miles south-south-east of Erie. It is a flourishing town, contains an academy, and has considerable trade.—9. A post town of London county, Virginia.—10. A post township of Washington county, Ohio, on the Muskingum. It is 16 miles south of Erie.

WATERFOWL, s. Fowl that live, or get their food in water.—Waterfowl joy most in that air which is likest water. Bacon.

WATERGALL, s. An hazy appearance attendant on the rainbow. The word is current among the shepherds on Salisbury plain. Steevens.

These watergalls in her dim element
Foretell new storms.

Shakspeare.

A cavity made in the earth by a rapid descent of water. Bagshaw.

WATER GALL, a hamlet of England, in Warwickshire; 4 miles south of Southam.

WATER-GRAASZMEER, a village of the Netherlands, near Amsterdam, with 900 inhabitants.

WATERGRUEL, s. Food made with oatmeal boiled in water.—For breakfast milk, milk-pottage, watergruel, and flummery, are very fit to make for children. Locke.

WATERHEAD, a hamlet of England, in Cumberland; 24 miles north-east of Carlisle.

WATERHEN, s. [fulica, Lat.] A coot; a waterfowl.

WATERHOUSE ISLE, a small island lying off the south coast of Van Diemen's Land. It is about 4 miles in length, and rises abruptly to a moderate elevation.

WATERHOUSE, POINT, a cape on the north coast of Van Diemen's Land.

WATERINESS, s. Humidity; moisture.—The fore-runners of an apoplexy are dulness, night-mares, weakness, wateryness, and turgidity of the eyes. Arbutnot.

WATERING, a village of the Netherlands, in South Holland. Population 1100.

WATERING-PLACE, s. A town, village, or other place, usually on the sea-coast, noted, at certain seasons, for a numerous resort of persons to it.—He had a right to employ those hours in so innocent and so elegant a relaxation, which other gentlemen usually squander away in the noisy sports of the field, the expensive pleasures of the metropolis in the winter, or in the loitering dissipation of our public watering-places in the summer season. Graves.

WATERINGBURY, a parish of England, in Kent; 5 miles west-by-south of Maidstone. Population 852.

WATERISH, adj. Resembling water.—Where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected from the waterish matter, but an insipid manhood, and a stupid old infancy? Dryden.—Moist; boggy.—Some parts of the earth grow moorish or waterish, others dry. Hale.

WATERISHNESS, s. Thinness; resemblance of water.—A pendulous sliminess answers a pituitous state, or an acerbity, which resembles the tartar of our humours, or waterishness, which is like the serosity of our blood. Floyer.

WATERLAND, an island in the South Pacific ocean, discovered discovered by Le Maire and Schouten, in the year 1616. Lat. 14.46. S. long. 149. 30. W.

WATERLAND (Daniel), D.D. was born in 1683, at Wasely, in Lincolnshire, where his father was rector, and sent to Magdalen college, Cambridge, in 1699, for the completion of his education; of this college he was elected a fellow in 1704, took his degree of M.A. in 1706, and became a private tutor. His tract, entitled "Advice to a young Student, with a Method of Study for four Years," published at this time, was popular, and passed through several editions. In 1713 he was nominated master of his college, and presented to the rectory of Ellingham in Norfolk. On occasion of taking his degree of B.D. in 1714, he distinguished himself by defending before the regius professor of divinity the negative of his thesis, "Whether Arian subscription be lawful?" Being chosen chaplain in ordinary to king George I., he was nominated, on his majesty's visit to Cambridge, D.D., and incorporated in the same degree at Oxford. Distinguished as a champion of orthodoxy by his "Vindication of Christ's Divinity, being a Defence of some Queries relating to Dr. Clarke's Scheme of the Holy Trinity," printed in 1719, he was appointed in the following year the first preacher of lady Moyer's lecture in favour of the divinity of Christ. He also published an answer to Dr. Whitby on the same subject, and in 1721 he was presented by the dean and chapter of St. Paul's with the rectory of St. Austin and St. Faith. His "History of the Athanasian Creed," vindicating it against the objections of Dr. Clarke, was published in 1723, and his preferments to the canonry of Windsor, the vicarage of Twickenham, and the archdeaconry of Middlesex, kept pace with his publications of this nature. His remarks on Dr. Clarke's "Exposition of the Church Catechism," printed in 1730, engaged him in a controversy with Dr. Sykes on the sacrament of the Lord's supper. Against Tindal's "Christianity as old as the Creation," he published his "Scripture Vindicated," and his "Christianity Vindicated against Infidelity." On these treatises Dr. Middleton published remarks, and they were defended by Dr. Zachary Pearce. In 1734 Dr. Waterland made an attempt for refuting Dr. Clarke's opinions in a "Discourse of the Arguments à priori for proving the Existence of a First Cause;" and in this year, having declined the office of prolocutor of the lower house of convocation to which he was chosen, he published his treatise "On the Importance of the Doctrine of the Trinity," which he regarded as fundamental, avowing his high respect for the authority of the fathers in this and other articles of faith. In 1736 he commenced a series of archdiaconal charges on the subject of the eucharist, arguing against the opinion of Hoadley on the one hand, that it was a mere communicative feast, and against that of Johnson and Brett, on the other, that it was a proper propitiatory sacrifice. But a complaint under which he laboured, and which required repeated surgical operations, endured by him with exemplary patience, at length terminated his life in December, 1740, in the 58th year of his age. A collection of his sermons was published after his death. "As a controversialist," says one of his biographers, "though firm and unyielding, he is accounted fair and candid, free from bitterness, and actuated by no persecuting spirit." Gen. Biog.

WATERLANDIANS, a sect of those that were called the gross or moderate Anabaptists, consisting at first of the inhabitants of a district in North Holland, called Waterland; whence their name. They were also called Johannites, from John de Reis, who, assisted by Lubert Gerard, composed their confession of faith in 1580. This confession far surpasses, in respect both of simplicity and wisdom, all the other confessions of the Mennonites; though it has been alleged, that it is not the general confession of the Waterlandians, but that merely of the congregation, of which its author was the pastor. See MENNONITES.

WATERLEAF, s. A plant.

WATERLEBEN, a village of Germany, in the duchy of Brunswick, on the IIs. Population 1000.

WATER-LEIGH, a hamlet of England, in Gloucestershire; near Wootten-under-Edge.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1653.

WATERLILY, s. [nymphaea, Lat.] A plant.—Let them lie dry twelve months, to kill the waterweeds, as water-lilies and bulrushes. Walton.

WATERLOGGED, adj. Applied to a ship, when by leaking she has received a great deal of water into her hold, and is become so inactive upon the sea, as to yield without resistance to the effort of every wave rushing over her deck. Chambers.—The shattered, weather-beaten, leaky, waterlogged vessel. Burke.

WATERLOO, a village of the Netherlands; 10 miles south of Brussels, with 1600 inhabitants. It was the scene of battle fought on the memorable 18th of June, 1815.—For a full account of this famous battle, the reader is referred to the article PARIS.

WATERLOO, a post village of the United States, and capital of Seneca county, New York, on Seneca river; 14 miles west of Auburn.

WATERMAN, s. A ferryman; a boatman.—Having blocked up the passage to Greenwich, they ordered the watermen to let fall their oars more gently. Dryden.

WATERMARK, s. The utmost limit of the rise of the flood.

Men and beasts

Were borne above the tops of trees that grew

On th' utmost margin of the watermark.

Dryden.

WATERMELON, s. A plant. It hath trailing branches, as the cucumber or melon, and is distinguished from other cucurbitaceous plants, by its leaf deeply cut and jagged, and by its producing uneatable fruit. Miller.

WATERMILL, s. Mill turned by water.

Forth flowed fresh

A gushing river of black gory blood,

That drowned all the land whereon he stood:

The stream thereof would drive a watermill.

Spenser.

WATERMILLOCK, a township of England, in Cumberland; 7 miles south-west of Penrith.

WATERMINT, s. A plant.—Those which perfume the air most delightfully—are burnet, wild-thyme, and water-mints. Bacon.

WATER NEWTON, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire, near Peterborough.

WATER OVERTON, a hamlet of England, in Warwickshire; 2½ miles north-west of Coleshill.

WATER PERRY, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire; 5½ miles west of Tame.

WATERS POINT, a cape on the west coast of North America. Lat. 60. 5. N. long. 212. 17. E.

WATERRADISH, s. A species of water-cresses.

WATERRAT, s. A rat that makes holes in banks.—There be land-rats and water-rats. Shakspeare.

WATERROCKET, s. A species of water-cresses. A kind of firework to be discharged in water.

WATERSAPPHIRE, s. A sort of stone.—Watersapphire is the occidental sapphire, and is neither of so bright a blue, nor so hard as the oriental. Woodward.

WATERSEY, one of the Hebrides, lying to the south of the island of Barray, from which it is distant about one mile. It is about three miles long, and in some places one broad, and tolerably fertile.

WATERSIDE, a hamlet of England, in Buckinghamshire near Chesham.

WATERSTOCK, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire 5 miles west of Tame.

WATER STRATFORD, a parish of England, in Inghamshire, near Buckingham.

WATERTIGHT, adj. That will not admit water.—Cottages not high built, yet wind-tight and water-tight. Bp. Hall.

WATERTOWN, a post township of the United States, in Middlesex county, Massachusetts, on Charles river; 7 miles west-by-north of Boston. Population 1531.

WATERTOWN, a post township of the United States, in Litchfield county, Connecticut; 12 miles south-south-east of Litchfield. Population 1714.

WATERTOWN, a post town of the United States, and capital of Jefferson county, New York, at the mouth of Black river; 12 miles from Sacket's harbour, and 80 north-west of Utica. Population 1849.

WATERVILLE, a post township and village of the United States, in Kennebeck county, Maine, on the west side of the Kennebeck, opposite Winslow; 18 miles north of Augusta, and 185 north-north-east of Boston. Population 1314.

WATERVILLE, a flourishing village of the United States, in Sangerfield, New York.—2. A post village in Stamford, New York.

WATERVIOLET, s. [hottonia, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

WATERVLIET, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of East Flanders; 12 miles north-west of Ghent.—2. A post town of the United States, in Albany county, New York, on the west side of the Hudson, and on the south side of the Mohawk; 6 miles north of Albany. Population 2365.

WATERWILLOW, s. [lysimachia, Latin.] A plant. Ainsworth.

WATERWITH, s. A plant.—The waterwith of Jamaica growing on dry hills, in the woods, where no water is to be met with, its trunk, if cut into pieces two or three yards long, and held by either end to the mouth, affords so plentifully a limpid, innocent, and refreshing water, or sap, as gives new life to the droughty traveller or hunter. Derham.

WATERWORK, s. Play of fountains; artificial spouts of water; any hydraulic performance.—Engines invented for mines and waterworks often fail in the performance. Wilkins.

WATERY, adj. Thin; liquid; like water.—Quick-silver, which is a most crude and watery body, heated, and pent in, hath the like force with gunpowder. Bacon.—The bile, by its saponaceous quality, mixeth the oil and watery parts of the aliment together. Arbuthnot.—Tasteless; insipid; vapid; spiritless.—We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross, watery pumpkin. Shakspeare.—Wet; abounding with water.

When the big lip, and watery eye
Tell me, the rising storm is high:
'Tis then thou art yon angry main,
Deform'd by winds, and dash'd by rain.

Prior.

Relating to the water.

On the brims her sire, the watery god,
Roll'd from a silver urn his crystal flood.

Dryden.

Consisting of water.

The watery kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia,

Shakspeare.

WATFORD, a market town of England, in the county of Herts. It consists principally of one street, which is ranged chiefly on the sides of the high road, and extends in a north-westerly direction rather more than a mile. In the church-yard is a house for a free school for 40 boys and 20 girls, built and endowed by Mrs. Elizabeth Fuller. There are also eight alms-houses for poor women. The market-house is a long building, rough cast above, and supported on wooden pillars beneath. The quantity of corn sold here is very great; and the number of sheep, cows, calves, hogs, &c. is proportionable. The river Colne, here a small stream, which nearly surrounds the town, has several mills on its banks; but the principal manufactory of this town is the throwing of silk, a very extensive machine, being worked by water; and two by the power of horses. Market on Tuesday. Four fairs in the year; 20½ miles west-south-west of Hertford, and 14½ north-west of London.—2. A parish of England, in Northamptonshire; 5 miles north-north-east of Daventry.—3. A hamlet of England, in Dorsetshire, near Bridport.

WATH, a parish of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles north of Rotherham. Population 815.—2. A parish of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles north of Rippon.—3. A hamlet of England, in Yorkshire; 8 miles west-by-north of New Malton.

WATHOE, a small island in the Baltic, on the coast of Sweden, near Stockholm, with very good pasturage.

WATKINS, POINT, a cape of the United States, on the south-west coast of Maryland, in the Chesapeak. Lat. 37. 59. N. long. 76. W.

WATKINSVILLE, a post village of the United States, in Ann Arundell county, Maryland.—2. A post village in Centre county, Pennsylvania.—3. A post town of the United States, and capital of Clarke county, Georgia; 7 miles south of Athens, and 90 west-north-west of Augusta.

WATLAS, a hamlet of England, in the North Riding of Yorkshire.

WATLING'S ISLAND, one of the Bahama islands, about 18 miles long, and 4 broad. Lat. 23. 50. N. long. 74. 16. W.

WATLINGSTREET, one of the prætorian or consular highways, made by the Romans in England, for the march of their armies. It began at Dover, ran to St. Alban's Dunstable, Towcester, Atherston, and Shrewsbury, and ended at Cardigan, in Wales.

WATLINGTON, a market town of England, in the county of Oxford, situated on a small brook, among the Chiltern hills. Market on Saturday, and two annual fairs; 24 miles south-east of Oxford, and 46 north-north-west of London. Population 1150.—2. A parish of England, in Norfolk; 5½ miles north of Market Downham.—3. A parish of England, in Sussex; 1½ mile north of Battle.

WATOUR, a town of the Netherlands, in West Flanders; 11 miles west of Ypres. Population 2000.

WATSON (Richard, Bishop of Llandaff), celebrated as an able Theologian, and a Professor of Chemistry, was born in August, 1737, at Heversham, near Kendal, in Westmorland. His ancestors had been farmers of their own estates for several generations; and his father had for forty years been master of the free-school at Heversham, but was become infirm, and had resigned it a little before his birth. He was, however, educated at this school, and continued there till 1754, when he was sent as a sizar to Trinity College, Cambridge. He applied without intermission to his studies, and in 1757 he obtained a scholarship, with particular expressions of approbation from Dr. Smith, who was then master. He had made it a constant practice in his mathematical pursuits, to think over the demonstration of every proposition that he studied, in his solitary walks; a habit which must certainly have been very conducive to the improvement of geometrical talent, though it could scarcely be adopted without great labour by those who follow the algebraical mode of analysis in all their investigations. After this period he passed many hours daily, for a considerable portion of his life, in the occupation of instructing others, without much enlarging the scale of his own information, though certainly not without adding to the solidity and precision of his knowledge of the most important elementary truths of science; and when he graduated, in 1759, he was classed as the second wrangler, which he seems to have considered, not without reason, as the place of honour for the year, the senior wrangler, who was a Johnian, having, as it was generally believed, been unfairly preferred to him. In October, 1760, he became a fellow of Trinity, and in November, assistant tutor of the college. Having taken his degree of M. A. in 1762, he was soon afterwards made moderator of the scholastic exercises of the university, an arduous and honourable office, which he also filled in several subsequent years.

In 1764 he undertook a journey to Paris, though without being able to speak the language, in order to take charge of his young friend and pupil, Mr. Luther, who returned to England with him soon after. He was elected in the same year Professor of Chemistry, though he had never devoted any portion of his attention to that science; but he soon rendered himself sufficiently master of all that was then known, to give a very popular course of lectures on the subject about a year after his election, with the assistance of an operator whom he had brought from Paris, and to become the author of a series of essays, which served for many years as the most agreeable introduction to the elementary doctrines and the ordinary processes of chemistry. He obtained from the Government, by proper representations, a salary of 100*l.* a year for himself, and for all future professors; he paid also some attention to theoretical and practical anatomy, as having some relation to the science of chemistry. In 1767 he became one of the principal tutors of Trinity College; in 1769 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in October, 1771, he unexpectedly obtained the important and lucrative appointment of Regius Professor of Divinity, upon the premature death of Dr. Rutherford, and in that capacity he held the rectory of Somersham, in Huntingdonshire. He had been little accustomed to the study of the divinity of the schools, or even of the fathers; but his eloquence and ingenuity supplied the want of theological learning, though he gave some offence to his more orthodox colleagues, by confining his arguments more strictly to the text of the scripture than they thought perfectly consistent with the duty of a champion of the Church of England, which they considered to be the description of a professor of divinity in an English university. He attracted, however, as long as he officiated in person, audiences as numerous, to the exercises in the schools at which he presided, as had attended his chemical lectures.

He married, in December, 1773, Miss Wilson, of Dallam Tower, in Westmorland; their union continued uninterrupted for more than 40 years. In 1774 he obtained a prebend of Ely, in exchange for a rectory in Wales, which the Duke of Grafton had procured him; and he became Archdeacon of Ely in January, 1780; in the same year Bishop Keene presented him with the rectory of Northwold, in Norfolk; and, in 1782, his pupil, the Duke of Rutland, gave him the rectory of Knaptoft, in Leicestershire; the same interest obtained him also from Lord Shelburne the Bishoprick of Llandaff. Here his episcopal preferment rested; he generally joined the politics of the Opposition, and especially on the question of the unlimited regency; but he was too independent in his sentiments to become a very useful member of any administration; and he retired, before the end of the year 1789, without books, and with somewhat more of disgust than he ought in justice to have felt, to an estate which he had bought, at Calgarth, on the banks of Winandermere, and occupied himself entirely, besides the education of his family, in agricultural improvements, especially in planting, for which he received a medal from the Society of Arts in 1789. His pupil, Mr. Luther, of Ongar, in Essex, had died in 1786, and left him an estate, which he afterwards sold for something more than 20,000*l.*

He considered as one of the best practical results of his chemical studies the suggestion which he made to the Duke of Richmond, then Master of the Ordnance, respecting the preparation of charcoal for gunpowder, by burning the wood in close vessels, which, it seems, very materially improved the quality of the powder.

He had the liberality to confer, in 1804, a small living as a reward for literary merit only on Mr. Davies, the author of the "Celtic Researches." The next year, he applied with success to the Duke of York for the promotion of his son, who had then the rank of a Major, and his Royal Highness speedily complied with his solicitation, as a personal favour only, without waiting for any Ministerial influence.

His health had been seriously impaired by an illness which attacked him in 1781, and which his friends attributed, though without sufficient reason, to excessive study; in October, 1809, he had a slight paralytic affection, and another in 1811; but it was in 1813, that his last illness might be said to begin, and he sunk gradually till the 4th of July, 1816. His writings are as miscellaneous as they are numerous; but none of them are bulky. "Institutionum Chemicarum pars Metallurgica," 8vo. Cambr. 1768. Repr. Ess. vol. v.; "Experiments and Observations on the Solution of Salts." Phil. Trans. 1770, p. 325, Ess. V.; especially on the specific gravities of salts and their solutions; "Remarks on the Effects of Cold in February," 1771. Phil. Trans. 1771, p. 213, Ess. V.; with some experiments on congelation; "Experiment with a Thermometer having its bulb blackened." Phil. Trans. 1773, p. 40, Ess. V. Raised 10°; "Chemical Experiments and Observations on Lead Ore." Phil. Trans. 1778, p. 863, Ess. V.; "Observations on the Sulphur Wells at Harrowgate." Phil. Trans. 1786, p. 171, Ess. V.; "Essay on the Subjects of Chemistry, and their General Division;" "Assize Sermon, preached at Cambridge," 4to., 1769; "Letters to the Members of the House of Commons by a Christian Wig," 1772; "Two Sermons," 4to. Cambr. 1776. On the Revolution, and on the King's Accession. "A Brief State of the Principles of Church Authority," 1773, reprinted in 1813 as a Charge; "A Fast Sermon," Feb. 1780; "A Sermon addressed to the Clergy of Ely," 1780, recommending Oriental Literature; "Apology for Christianity, in a Series of Letters addressed to Edward Gibbon, Esq.," 12mo., 1776; often reprinted, and considered as very satisfactory, though the author confesses, with more of the courtier than of the orthodox divine, in a letter to Mr. Gibbon, that the Essay "derives its chief merit from the elegance and importance of the work it attempts to oppose;" "Chemical Essays," 5 vols. 12mo., 1781-7; addressed to his pupil, the Duke of Rutland. The work was intended for general information, and became extremely popular as a first introduction. "A Letter to Archbishop Cornwallis on the Church Revenues," 1782; a plan for equalising the bishoprics; "A Sermon preached the 30th January, before the Lords, 4to., 1784; "Visitation Articles, for the Diocese of Llandaff;" "Theological Tracts," 6 vols. 8vo., 1785; collected from various authors, not excluding many works of dissenters from the church;" "A Sermon on Wisdom and Goodness of God, in having made Rich and Poor," 1785, 1793; adapted to allay the discontents which were then prevalent among the lower classes; "Sermons and Tracts," 8vo., 1788; chiefly republications; "An Address to Young Persons after Confirmation," 12mo., 1789; "Considerations on the Expediency of Revising the Liturgy," 8vo., 1790; anonymous; "A Sermon preached for the Westminster Dispensary in 1785, with an Appendix," 1792; "A Charge to the Clergy of his Diocese," 4to., 1792; "Two Sermons and a Charge," 4to., 1795; the first sermon is entitled "Atheism Refuted;" the second, "The Christian Religion no Imposture." "Apology for the Bible, in a Series of Letters addressed to Thomas Paine," 12mo., 1796; an able and judicious answer.

WATSON (Robert), D.D., a Scotch historian, was born at St. Andrew's about the year 1730, commenced his course of education for the ministry at the school and university of St. Andrew's, and with singular assiduity prosecuted his studies at the university of Glasgow, and also in that of Edinburgh. He paid particular attention to grammar and eloquence, and with the advice of lord Kaimes, delivered a course of lectures on these subjects, which gained the approbation of Mr. Hume, and other men of genius and learning. Having failed in his endeavours to supply a vacancy in one of the churches of St. Andrew's, he was soon after made professor of logic, and by a patent from the crown, professor of rhetoric and belles lettres. In his lectures on logic and metaphysics, he deviated from the old plan of syllogisms, modes, and figures, and introduced substantial improvement by furnishing his pupils with an analysis of the powers of the mind, and by leading them to investigate the various kinds of evidence of knowledge or truth. His history of Philip II. advanced his reputation during the period of his life; and it was farther enhanced by his history of Philip III., which was published after his death; of which latter he only wrote the first four books, the other two being supplied by Dr. William Thomson, the editor, at the desire of the guardians of his children. He succeeded Tulideph as principal of the university. He died in 1780.

WATSON'S STRAIT, the strait which separates the island of New Guinea from the island of Salwaty.

WATSONIA [so named by Mr. Miller, in honour of his learned friend William Watson, M.D. F.R.S.], in Botany, a genus of the class triandria, order monogynia, natural order order of ensatæ, irides (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx: spathes pressed close, mortified at top, for the most part coloured. Corolla curved back; tube slender; throat cup-cylindric; border six-parted, the parts spreading-regular or subbilabiate, equal or nearly so in breadth, quite equal in length. Stamina: filaments three, growing to the tube, but distinct from the throat. Pistil: germ inferior, triangular-cylindric. Style simple, filiform, erect. Stigmas three, slender, bifid. Pericarp: capsule stiff-leathery, triangular-cylindric, drawn to a point at each end. Seeds numerous, somewhat oblong.—Essential Character. Corolla six-parted, spreading or subbilabiate, equal. Stigmas three-bifid. Capsule triangular-cylindric, attenuated at each end.

1. Watsonia aletroides, or aletris-like Watsonia.—Corollas somewhat drooping; tube nearly equal to the spathe; throat almost four times as long as the short ovate equal segments of the border.

2. Watsonia roseo-alba, or long tube Watsonia.—Corolla regular; tube twice as long as the spathe throat or border; segments equal, spread out, flat acuminate; stamens equal to the throat.

3. Watsonia iridifolia, or flag-leaved Watsonia.—Corolla refracted; tube erect, longer than the spathe, equal to the segments, which spread out very wide obliquely, indistinctly two-lipped, oval-oblong somewhat sharp equal to the throat. There are two varieties.

4. Watsonia brevifolia, or short-leaved Watsonia.—Leaves very low somewhat oblong shining; tube throat and border equal in length; segments regular-spreading, the inner ones wider; stamens resupine declined.

5. Watsonia marginata, or long-spiked Watsonia.—Leaves thick at the edge; spike elongated composed of close-pressed spikelets confluent continuous; border regular; throat short, six-toothed within; stamens erect, looking three ways.

6. Watsonia laccata, or lake-coloured Watsonia.—Leaves narrower, vertically, ensiform, strict, twisted a little; spathe tube throat and border equal; pistil nearly equal to the segments which are acute alike and regularly spreading.

The root in this elegant genus is tuberous-tunicated, hemispherical, toothed at the edge. Scape very stiff, frequently inclined to woody, simple, or little branched. Leaves ensiform, attenuated at each end, often shining. Flowers in loose terminating spikes.—All the species are natives of the Cape of Good Hope.

Propagation and Culture.—See ANTHOLYZA.

WATT (James), was born at Greenock, the 19th January, 1736. He received the rudiments of his education in the public schools of his native town; but, from the extreme delicacy of his constitution, was with difficulty enabled to attend the classes, and owed much of his acquirements to his studious habits at home. Little more is known of his early years, than that, from the first, he manifested a partiality for mechanical contrivances and operations, and frequently employed himself in that way. The desire of improvement in an art then little practised in Scotland, induced him to go to London in his eighteenth year, and there to place himself under the tuition of a mathematical instrument-maker; but he remained little more than a twelvemonth, the infirm state of his health compelling his return to the paternal roof.

In that short period, he appears to have made great proficiency, and continued, after his return to Scotland, to perfect himself in this art, both at home and on his visits to his mother's relations at Glasgow, where it was his wish to establish himself. But some opposition being made by the corporations, who considered him as an intruder upon their privileges, the Professors of the College took him under their protection, and accommodated him with an apartment and premises for carrying on his business within their precincts, with the title and office of Mathematical Instrument-maker to the University. This took place in 1757. Mr. Watt now applied sedulously to business, and in the few intervals which its concerns, and ill health allowed, cultivated those various talents which distinguished him in after-life.

He remained in the college until some time in the year

1763, when he removed into the town previous to his marriage with his cousin, Miss Miller, which took place in the summer of the following year.

The Steam-Engine had been a frequent subject of conversation between Mr. Robinson and himself, and the former had suggested the possibility of its application to the moving of wheel-carriages. About the year 1761 or 1762, Mr. Watt had tried some experiments on the force of steam in a Papin's digester, and had constructed and worked with strong steam a small model, consisting of an inverted syringe; the bottom of the rod of which was loaded with a weight, alternately admitting the steam below the piston, and letting it off to the atmosphere. Observing the imperfections of this construction, he soon abandoned it; but the attention necessary to be bestowed upon his business prevented his reconsidering it, until the winter of 1763-4, when he was employed by the Professor of Natural Philosophy to put in order a working model of a steam-engine upon Newcomen's construction. When he had repaired it and set it to work, he found that the boiler, though large in proportion to the cylinder, was barely able to supply it with steam for a few strokes per minute, and that a great quantity of injection water was required, though it was but lightly loaded by the pump attached to it. It soon occurred, that the cause lay in the little cylinder (two inches diameter, six inches stroke), exposing a greater surface to condense the steam than the cylinders of larger engines did, in proportion to their respective contents. By shortening the column of water in the pump, less steam and less injection water were required, and the model worked at a proper speed. Thus the purpose for which it was put into his hands was accomplished; and with this mode of accounting for the defect and this result, most artists would have been satisfied. Not so Mr. Watt. He had now become aware of a great consumption of steam, and his curiosity was excited to a more accurate investigation of the causes, in which he proceeded in a truly philosophical manner. The cylinder of his small model being of brass, he conceived that less steam would be condensed by substituting cylinders of some material which would transmit heat more slowly. He made a larger model with a cylinder (six inches diameter, and one foot stroke) of wood, soaked in oil, and baked to dryness. He ascertained, from experiments made with boilers of various constructions, that the evaporation of boiling water is neither in proportion to the evaporating surface, nor to the quantity of water, as had been supposed, but to the heat that enters it; and that the latter depended chiefly on the quantity of surface exposed to the action of the fire. He likewise determined the weight of coal required for the evaporation of any given quantity of water. Being convinced that there existed a great error in the statement which had been previously given of the bulk of water when converted into steam, he proceeded to examine that point by experiment; and discovered, that water, converted into steam of the heat of boiling water, was expanded to 1800 times its bulk: or, as a rule for ready calculation, that a cubic inch of water produced a cubic foot of steam. He constructed a boiler to be applied to his model, which should show, by inspection, the quantity of water evaporated, and, consequently, would enable him to calculate the quantity of steam used in every stroke of the engine. This he now proved to be several times the full of the cylinder. He also observed, that all attempts to improve the vacuum, by throwing in more injection water, caused a disproportionate waste of steam: and it occurred to him, that the cause of this was the boiling of water in vacuo at very low heats (recently determined, by Dr. Cullen, to be under 100°); consequently, at greater heats, the injection water was converted into steam in the cylinder, and resisted the descent of the piston. He now perceived clearly, that the great waste of steam proceeded from its being chilled, and condensed by the coldness of the cylinder before it was sufficiently heated to retain it in an elastic state; and that, to derive the greatest advantage, the cylinder should always be kept as hot as the steam that entered it, and that, when the steam was condensed, it should be cooled down to 100°, or lower lower, in order to make the vacuum complete. Early in 1765, the fortunate thought occurred to him of accomplishing this, by condensing the steam in a separate vessel, exhausted of air, and kept cool by injection, between which and the cylinder a communication was to be opened every time steam was to be condensed, while the cylinder itself was to be kept constantly hot. No sooner had this occurred to him, than the means of effecting it presented themselves in rapid succession. A model was constructed, and the experiments made with it placed the correctness of the theory, and the advantages of the invention, beyond the reach of doubt.

He also, at this time, made experiments upon the capacities of different bodies for heat, and upon the heats at which water boils under various pressures; from which he ascertained, that where the heats proceeded in an arithmetical, the elasticities proceeded in a geometrical ratio, the curve of which he laid down. These he repeated some years after with more accuracy.

From this period (the early part of 1765), his mind became very much engaged in contriving the machinery for executing his improvement upon a large scale; but the want of funds prevented his attempting it, until he was induced to address himself to Dr. Roebuck, who had a short time before completed his establishment of the Carron Iron-works, and who, in addition to his known qualities of ingenuity and enterprise, was considered to be possessed of ample means of introducing the invention to the public. He agreed to enter into the plan, upon having the proceeds of two-thirds of the invention assigned to him; and an engine upon a large scale was then constructed by Mr. Watt, at Kinneil, near Borrowstounness, where the Doctor then resided; the trials made with which gave satisfaction. But the introduction of the invention to the public was retarded, on the one hand, by the pecuniary difficulties in which the Doctor became involved, by the failure of several of his multifarious undertakings; and on the other day, by the employment, which the rising reputation of Mr. Watt, for knowledge and skill in the line of a civil engineer, procured him.

He was employed, in 1767, to make a survey for a canal of junction between the rivers Forth and Clyde, by what was called the Lomond passage, and attended Parliament on the part of the subscribers, where the bill was lost. An offer was then made to him of undertaking the survey and estimate of an intended canal from the Monkland collieries to Glasgow; and these proving satisfactory, the superintendence of the execution was confided to him. The last and greatest work upon which he was employed was the survey and estimate of the line of a canal between Fort-William and Inverness, since executed by Mr. Telford, upon a larger scale than was at that time proposed, under the name of the Caledonian Canal.

Whilst engaged upon this survey, in the latter part of the year 1773, Mr. Watt received the account of the death of his affectionate wife, leaving him a daughter and a son. He had secured his title to his Improvements for saving Steam and Fuel in Fire Engines, by patent, in the year 1769; but all hopes of carrying them into effect, by the assistance of Dr. Roebuck, being at an end, he had induced that gentleman to agree, for certain considerations, to transfer his share of the patent to Mr. Boulton, of Soho, near Birmingham—a gentleman equally distinguished by his knowledge of the arts, and his enterprising spirit, who had some years before established his manufactory upon a scale as unrivalled for extent and elegance, as for the variety and perfection of the processes carried on.

In conjunction with him an application was made to Parliament for an extension of the term of the patent, and an act prolonging it for twenty-five years was obtained in the year 1775, when the business of making steam-engines was commenced by the firm of Boulton and Watt.

Mr. Watt now married for his second wife Miss Macgrigor, the daughter of an old friend, at Glasgow, and devoted himself to the improvement of the details of the engine with a degree of application and exertion not to be expected from his delicate and infirm state of health; and he found in his partner a zealous and able coadjutor.

Some engines for pumping water were soon made upon a large scale, and the savings in fuel were demonstrated by repeated comparative trials to amount to three-fourths of the quantity consumed by those of the best construction before in use. A deputation from the mining interest of Cornwall was sent to ascertain the fact, and their report led to the introduction of the improved engines into that county, to which they have proved of such vast utility.

The immediate application of the powers of steam to giving a rotatory motion to mills, had formed an early object of Mr. Watt's attention, and he had deeply considered the various means of effecting this. This he accomplished by a series of improvements, the exclusive property of which he secured by successive patents in the years 1781, 1782, 1784, and 1785; including, among other inventions, the rotatory motion of the sun and planet wheels, the expansive principle, the double engine, the parallel motion, and the smokeless furnace. The application of the centrifugal regulating force of the governor gave the finishing stroke to the machine.

The invention of the separate condenser, and the contrivances necessary to give it full effect, would alone have established the fame of Mr. Watt; but when to these are added the various inventions called forth to perfect his rotative engines, we are impressed by a union of philosophical research, of physical skill, and of mechanical ingenuity, which has, we believe, no parallel in modern times.

The perfection thus given to the rotative engine soon led to its general application for imparting motion to almost every species of mill-work and machinery; and gave an impulse, unexampled in the history of inventions, to the extension of our manufactures, population, and wealth.

Nor were Mr. Watt's inventive powers confined to the steam-engine. The necessity of preserving accurate copies of his various drawings and of his letters, containing long and important calculations; and the desire of avoiding that labour himself, which he did not think it right to entrust to others, led him, in the year 1780, to contrive a copying apparatus, the exclusive property in which he secured by Letters Patent, and commenced the manufactory of them in partnership with Mr. Boulton, and his friend, Mr. Keir, under the firm of James Watt and Company;—a contrivance of great simplicity, and of which he reaped an ample benefit in the time, labour, and expence it saved to himself, to say nothing of its advantages to the public.

In the winter of 1784-5, he put up an apparatus for heating the room in which he drew and wrote by means of steam. The possibility of doing this we find suggested by Colonel Cooke, in the Philosophical Transactions for 1745; but we know not whether this was known to Mr. Watt when he made his first practical attempt, from which he deduced proportions of surface, &c., which afterwards served to guide his firm in the introduction of the process in larger buildings.

Chemical studies engaged much of his attention during his busiest time, and at the very period when he was most engaged in perfecting his rotative engines, and in managing a business become considerable, and, from its novelty, requiring close attention, he entered deeply into the investigations then in progress relative to the constitution and properties of the different gases.

Mr. Watt also has the merit of being the first person to introduce into this country, and to carry into effect, on a practical scale, in any country, the bleaching of linens and cottons by oxymuriatic acid, the invention of his friend, Mr. Berthollet. That gentleman had communicated his invention to Mr. Watt, at Paris, in the winter of 1786-7, whither he had proceeded with Mr. Boulton at the instance of the French government, to suggest improvements in the mode of raising water at Marly, and his mind was instantly alive to the extensive application of which it admitted. He advised Mr. Berthollet to secure the property by an English patent; but that he declined, and left his friend to make such use of it as he thought proper. He, in consequence, communicated it to his father-in-law, Mr. Macgrigor, and gave directions for the construction of the proper vessels and machinery; and soon after himself superintended the first trials at his bleachfield near Glasgow, which proved eminently successful.

Mr. Watt did not escape the common lot of eminent men, that of meeting with pirates of his inventions, and detractors from his merit. The latter, indeed, were but few, and their efforts transitory; but the former were numerous, and in proportion to the benefits expected to arise from an evasion of the patent dues claimed by Boulton and Watt; though these were established upon the liberal footing of receiving only one-third of the savings of fuel compared with the best steam-engines previously in use. In consequence, the attention both of Mr. Watt and of Mr. Boulton was greatly occupied, from the year 1792 to the year 1799, in defending their patent rights against numerous invaders, the principal of whom were supported by a portion of the mining interest of Cornwall, although the respectable part of it refused to concur in their measures. The admission of their respective sons into the partnership, in 1794, infused vigour into their proceedings; and, after repeated verdicts, establishing the novelty and utility of Mr. Watt's inventions, the validity of his claim was finally confirmed in the year 1799 by the unanimous decision of all the judges of the Court of King's Bench.

In 1800, upon the expiration of the act of Parliament passed in his favour, he withdrew from business, resigning his shares to his two sons; of whom the youngest, Mr. Gregory Watt, died soon after, having given splendid proofs of literary and philosophical talents, and left a durable record of the latter, in his paper "On Basalt" in the Philosophical Transactions. Mr. Watt continued to the close of life to interest himself in the pursuits of his former associates, and to maintain an uninterrupted friendship with Mr. Boulton, whom he survived several years.

On two occasions afterwards, in 1811 and 1812, he gave proofs of the undiminished powers of his mind in his former profession. In the one instance, he was induced, by his grateful recollections of his residence in Glasgow, to assist the proprietors of the water-works there with a plan for supplying the town with better water, by means of a suction pipe, with flexible joints, laid across the bottom of the Clyde, accompanied with instructions for insuring the supply of water on the opposite side; a plan which answered completely, and for which the proprietors presented him with a handsome memorial of their gratitude. In the other instance, he was prevailed upon by the earnest solicitation of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, to attend a deputation of the Navy Board, and to give with his friend Captain Huddart, and Mr. J. Jessop, an opinion upon the works then carrying on at Sheerness Dock-yard, and the farther ones projected by Messrs. Rennie and Whidby; on which occasion, he no less gratified the gentlemen associated with him, by the clearness of his general views than by his knowledge of the details, and received the thanks of the Admiralty.

Mr. Watt, also, at a still later period, in 1814, yielded to the wishes of his friends in undertaking a revision of Professor Robinson's articles on Steam and Steam-Engines in the Encyclopædia Britannica; and enriched them with valuable notes, containing his own experiments upon steam and a short history of his principal improvements upon the engine itself.

His originally infirm health had been subjected to severe trials by the great exertions of his mind, during the period of carrying into execution his improvements on the steam engine, and had with difficulty resisted the cares and anxieties attending upon business, and those created by the subtleties of the law, during the protracted proceedings of seven long years. There appears to have been an organic defect in his digestion, and its effects were intensely severe sick headaches; but, by continual temperance and good management of his constitution, which he treated with much medical skill, it improved as he advanced in years; and with faculties little impaired he reached his 84th year, when, after a short illness, rather of debility than of pain, he expired in the bosom of his family at his house at Heathfield, in the county of Stafford, on the 25th August, 1819.

Mr. Watt was elected a member of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1784; of the Royal Society of London in 1785; and a corresponding member of the Batavian Society in 1787. In 1806, the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him by the spontaneous and unanimous vote of the Senate of the University of Glasgow; and in 1803 he was elected, first, a corresponding, and afterwards a foreign member of the Institute of France.

We finish this article with copying from the Edinburgh Review the very beautiful account of Watt, which was written by his friend, Mr. Jeffreys.

"It is with pain that we find ourselves called upon, so soon after the loss of Mr. Playfair, to record the decease of another of our illustrious countrymen, and one to whom mankind has been still more largely indebted—Mr. James Watt, the great improver of the steam-engine.

"This name fortunately needs no commemoration of ours; for he that bore it survived to see it crowned with undisputed and unenvied honours; and many generations will probably pass away before it shall have 'gathered all its fame.' We have said that Mr. Watt was the great improver of the steam-engine; but, in truth, as to all that is admirable in its structure, or vast in its utility, he should rather be described as its inventor. It was by his inventions that its action was so regulated as to make it capable of being applied to the finest and most delicate manufactures, and its power so increased as to set weight and solidity at defiance. By his admirable contrivances, it has become a thing stupendous alike for its force and its flexibility,—for the prodigious power which it can exert, and the ease, and precision, and ductility, with which it can be varied, distributed, and applied. The trunk of an elephant that can pick up a pin or rend an oak, is as nothing to it. It can engrave a seal, and crush masses of obdurate metal like wax before it,—draw out, without breaking, a thread as fine as gossamer, and lift a ship of war like a bauble in the air. It can embroider muslin and forge anchors,—cut steel into ribbands, and impel loaded vessels against the fury of the winds and waves.

"It would be difficult to estimate the value of the benefits which these inventions have conferred upon the country. There is no branch of industry that has not been indebted to them; and in all the most material, they have not only widened most magnificently the field of its exertions, but multiplied a thousandfold the amount of its productions. It is our improved steam-engines that has fought the battles of Europe, and exalted and sustained, through the late tremendous contest, the political greatness of our land. It is the same great power which now enables us to pay the interest of our debt, and to maintain the arduous struggle in which we are still engaged, with the skill and capital of countries less oppressed with taxation. But these are poor and narrow views of its importance. It has increased indefinitely the mass of human comforts and enjoyments, and rendered cheap and accessible all over the world, the materials of wealth and prosperity. It has armed the feeble hand of man, in short, with a power to which no limits can be assigned,—completed the dominion of mind over the most refractory qualities of matter, and laid a sure foundation for all those future miracles of mechanic power which are to aid and reward the labours of after-generations. It is to the genius of one man, too, that all this is mainly owing; and certainly no man ever before bestowed such a gift on his kind. The blessing is not only universal, but unbounded; and the fabled inventors of the plough and the loom, who were deified by the erring gratitude of their rude contemporaries, conferred less important benefits on mankind than the inventor of our present steam-engine.

"This

J. Bass sc.

W A T T.

Engraved for the Encyclopædia Londinensis. 1829.

"This will be the fame of Watt with future generations; and it is sufficient for his race and his country. But to those to whom he more immediately belonged, who lived in his society, and enjoyed his conversation, it is not perhaps the character in which he will be most frequently recalled—most deeply lamented—or even most highly admired. Independently of his great attainments in mechanics, Mr. Watt was an extraordinary, and, in many respects, a wonderful man. Perhaps no individual in his age possessed so much and such varied and exact information,—had read so much, or remembered what he had read so accurately and well. He had infinite quickness of apprehension, a prodigious memory, and a certain rectifying and methodising power of understanding, which extracted something precious out of all that was presented to it. His stores of miscellaneous knowledge were immense,—and yet less astonishing than the command he had at all times over them. It seemed as if every subject that was casually started in conversation with him, had been that which he had been last occupied in studying and exhausting;—such was the copiousness, the precision, and the admirable clearness of the information which he poured out upon it without effort or hesitation. Nor was this promptitude and compass of knowledge confined in any degree to the studies connected with his ordinary pursuits. That he should have been minutely and extensively skilled in chemistry and the arts, and in most of the branches of physical science, might perhaps have been conjectured; but it could not have been inferred from his usual occupations, and probably is not generally known, that he was curiously learned in many branches of antiquity, metaphysics, medicine, and etymology, and perfectly at home in all the details of architecture, music, and law. He was well acquainted, too, with most of the modern languages—and familiar with their most recent literature. Nor was it at all extraordinary to hear the great mechanic and engineer detailing and expounding, for hours together, the metaphysical theories of the German logicians, or criticising the measures or the matter of the German poetry.

"His astonishing memory was aided, no doubt, in a great measure, by a still higher and rarer faculty—by his power of digesting and arranging, in its proper place, all the information he received, and of casting aside and rejecting, as it were instinctively, whatever was worthless or immaterial. Every conception that was suggested to his mind seemed instantly to take its place among its other rich furniture, and to be condensed into the smallest and most convenient form. He never appeared, therefore, to be at all encumbered or perplexed with the verbiage of the dull books he perused, or the idle talk to which he listened; but to have at once extracted, by a kind of intellectual alchemy, all that was worthy of attention, and to have reduced it for his own use, to its true value and to its simplest form. And thus it often happened that a great deal more was learned from his brief and vigorous account of the theories and arguments of tedious writers, than an ordinary student could ever have derived from the most faithful study of the originals,—and that errors and absurdities became manifest from the mere clearness and plainness of his statement of them, which might have deluded and perplexed most of his hearers without that invaluable assistance.

"It is needless to say, that, with those vast resources, his conversation was at all times rich and instructive in no ordinary degree; but it was, if possible, still more pleasing than wise, and had all the charms of familiarity, with all the substantial treasures of knowledge. No man could be more social in his spirit, less assuming or fastidious in his manners, or more kind and indulgent towards all who approached him. He rather liked to talk,—at least in his latter years; but though he took a considerable share of the conversation, he rarely suggested the topics on which it was to turn, but readily and quietly took up whatever was presented by those around him, and astonished the idle and barren propounders of an ordinary theme, by the treasures which he drew from the mine they had unconsciously opened. He generally seemed, indeed, to have no choice or predilection for one subject of discourse rather than another; but allowed his mind, like a great cyclopædia, to be opened at any letter his associates might choose to turn up, and only endeavoured to select from his inexhaustible stores what might be best adapted to the taste of his present hearers. As to their capacity, he gave himself no trouble; and, indeed, such was his singular talent for making all things plain; clear, and intelligible, that scarcely any one could be aware of such a deficiency in his presence. His talk, too, though overflowing with information, had no resemblance to lecturing or solemn discoursing, but, on the contrary, was full of colloquial spirit and pleasantry. He had a certain quiet and grave humour, which ran through most of his conversation, and a vein of temperate jocularly, which gave infinite zest and effect to the condensed and inexhaustible information which formed its main staple and characteristic. There was a little air of affected testiness, and a tone of pretended rebuke and contradiction, with which he used to address his younger friends, that was always felt by them as an endearing mark of his kindness and familiarity,—and prized accordingly, far beyond all the solemn compliments that ever proceeded from the lips of authority. His voice was deep and powerful,—though he commonly spoke in a low and somewhat monotonous tone, which harmonised admirably with the weight and brevity of his observations, and set off, to the greatest advantage, the pleasant anecdotes which he delivered, with the same grave brow and the same calm smile playing soberly on his lips. There was nothing of effort, indeed, or impatience, any more than of pride or levity, in his demeanour; and there was a finer expression of reposing strength, and mild self-possession in his manner, than we ever recollect to have met with in any other person. He had in his character the utmost abhorrence for all sorts of forwardness, parade, and pretension; and, indeed, never failed to put all such impostors out of countenance, by the manly plainness and honest intrepidity of his language and deportment.

"In his temper and dispositions he was not only kind and affectionate, but generous, and considerate of the feelings of all around him, and gave the most liberal assistance and encouragement to all young persons who showed any indications of talent, or applied to him for patronage or advice. His health, which was delicate from his youth upwards, seemed to become firmer as he advanced in years; and he preserved, up almost to the last moment of his existence, not only the full command of his extraordinary intellect, but all the alacrity of spirit, and the social gaiety which had illuminated his happiest days."

WATTAWA, a river of Bohemia, which rises near the frontier of Bavaria, and falls into the Muldau, near Prague.

WATTEAU (Anthony), one of the most agreeable painters of the French school, was born at Valenciennes in 1684. His parents were in indigent circumstances, and he was placed with an obscure artist in his native city, to cultivate a talent which manifested itself early. When he was about 16 years old, having already surpassed his preceptor, he connected himself with a scene-painter on his way to Paris, and for some time assisted his associate in decorating the opera-house in that city. When this engagement was completed, Watteau found it difficult to rescue himself from the obscurity and embarrassment into which he fell, when happily he became acquainted with Claude Gillot, a painter of grotesque and fabulous subjects, who was pleased with his works and disposition. Gillot afforded him an asylum in his own house, and then instructed him in all he knew of the art, and found an apt and agreeable scholar in his protégée. With the help he thus received from Gillot, and his own admiration and attentive study of the Luxembourg gallery, he formed a taste for colouring, which, if not as grand, is at least as agreeable, as ever was employed by any one.

He attempted to prepare himself for historical painting, and studied at the academy with that view; he even was so successful as to obtain the first prize there for an historical picture; picture; but happily he discovered a character of subject quite original and exactly suited to his taste, for which he wisely deserted history, and which has since formed plenty of aspirants, but has never been so successfully practised. The theatre, the opera, fetes-champetres, masquerades, pantomimes, puppet-shows, afforded him his figures; the gardens of the Luxembourg and of the Thuilleries, of Versailles and St. Cloud, furnished the scenes. In these nature prevails only in the colouring, and that is exquisite, rich, delicate, clear, and full; bright without gaudiness, and deep without blackness; laid on with a freedom, fulness, and delicacy of touch, which no one ever surpassed; but the airs of his figures are generally affected to the highest degree; people of rank and fashion, aping the enjoyments of rural life; and when he attempted to paint domestic or rural scenes, he carried the same taste into his practice. The true character of Watteau's pictures is French gentility, gay, cheerful, debonnaire, of which self-satisfaction is the surest basis. Watteau visited England in the reign of George I., but did not enjoy his health here, and returned to France in about a year, where he died in 1721, at the early age of 37.

WATTENWEIL, a large village and district of the Swiss canton of St. Gall, and county of Toggenburg.

WATTENWEILLER, or WATWELL, a town of France, department of the Upper Rhine, with 1250 inhabitants.

WATTENWEILLER, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of the Upper Danube. Population 900.

WATTESFIELD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 12½ miles north-east-by-east of St. Edmund's Bury. Population 521.

WATTIN, a parish of Scotland, lying nearly in the centre of the county of Caithness, about 14 miles long, and 10 or 11 broad. It is watered by the river Wick. Population 1109.

WATTIN, Loch, a beautiful lake in the above parish, about 3 miles long, and 2 broad, frequented by sea fowl, and sometimes by swans.

WATTISHAM, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 2 miles north-east of Bildeston.

WATTLE, s. [from waghelen, to shake, German. Skinmer.] The barbs, or loose red flesh that hangs below the cock's bill.—The cock's comb and wattels are an ornament becoming his martial spirit. More.—A hurdle.

To WATTLE, v. a. [patelas, Saxon, twigs.] To bind with twigs; to form, by plating twigs one within another.

Might we but hear

The folded flocks penn'd in their wattled cotes,
Or sound of pastoral reed with oaten stops.

Milton.

WATTLE BRIDGE, a smart little village of Ireland, in the county of Fermanagh, pleasantly situated on the river Fin. On the right stand the ruins of a Druidical temple, situated on the bank of the river.

WATTON, a market town and parish of England, in the county of Norfolk. Great quantities of butter are sent hence to Downham bridge, from whence factors send it to London by water. Market on Wednesday, and two annual fairs; 18 miles south-south-west of Norwich.—2. A parish of England, in Hertfordshire; 5½ miles north-north-west of Hertford.—3. A parish of England, in Yorkshire; 5½ miles south-by-west of Great Driffield.—4. A large village of the Netherlands, in West Flanders, near Ypres.

WATTS (Isaac), D.D. a nonconformist divine, eminently distinguished for talents and piety, was born at Southampton in 1674, where, under the tuition of a clergyman of the established church, he made rapid progress in the Latin and Greek languages, and acquired some knowledge even of Hebrew. At the age of sixteen he was placed under the care of the Rev. Thomas Rowe, who kept an academy in London. Twenty-two Latin dissertations on metaphysical and theological subjects, found among his papers, afford ample evidence of his zealous application during his connection with this gentleman. At the age of twenty he finished his academical studies, and resided with his father for two years with a view to farther improvement. At this time he was invited to become private tutor to the son of Sir John Har-topp, Bart., at Stoke-Newington, near London, and in this situation he continued for five years. When he had completed his twenty-fourth year, he was chosen assistant to Dr. Isaac Chauncy, whom he succeeded as pastor in the year 1702. His constitution was so delicate that he could not undertake the whole service, and the attack of a fever in 1712, disqualified him for his public duties for four years. In this state of debility he was kindly received in the house of Sir Thomas Abney, where the indulgent treatment of this gentleman and his lady contributed to restore his health and spirits. In this hospitable mansion he not only found a temporary asylum, but a permanent abode for the remaining thirty-six years of his life. Here he enjoyed every comfort which friendship and liberality could bestow, and which, by repairing his enfeebled frame, enabled him to resume his services in public, and to prosecute his private studies, no less to the improvement and satisfaction of those with whom he was immediately connected, than to the benefit of the world. His reputation attracted the notice of both the universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen; and they both conferred upon him the honour of the degree of doctor in divinity, in the year 1728. His constitution, though in some degree renovated by the attention and kindness which he experienced, was still so delicate and feeble, that he found it necessary to remit, and at length to resign his ministerial duties; but his congregation testified their respect for him by declining to accept his offer of the renunciation of his usual salary. However, he gradually declined, and calmly expired at Stoke Newington, November the 25th, 1748, in the 75th year of his age.

Dr. Watts was a man of lively fancy, warm feelings, and a comprehensive understanding, and distinguished by that versatility of talents and pursuits, which enabled him to acquire a considerable degree of reputation in various departments of literature, but which prevented his arriving at a supereminent rank in any. The characteristic quality of his mind, manifested in his numerous productions, was a devotional spirit. Of his "Horæ Lyricæ," the greatest number belongs to the devotional class, and in these his ardent feelings and imagination have sometimes transported him beyond the bounds which a correct taste and sound judgment would have prescribed. The same observation may be also applied to his "Psalms and Hymns," and more especially to the latter, which were juvenile compositions, and in which a sober reader will be disgusted with the contrast that is exhibited between the wrath of the Supreme Being and the benignity of the Son of God; as if the Deity were inclined to punish his offending creatures with everlasting punishment, and the Son were disposed to rescue and save them. Many of the psalms and hymns, however, are admirably adapted to Christian worship, and a select collection of them, which has been lately made by some ministers in London, and which they have enriched by extracts from other sources, is less exceptionable in a variety of respects than either the psalms or hymns even of Dr. Watts in their original state; and in these devotion and poetry are more happily combined for the worship of Dissenters, and even of Churchmen than in the psalmody of the establishment. Many of Watts's lyric productions possess considerable poetical merit, and display a fertility and elegance of fancy. His "Divine Songs for Children" have been widely circulated, and are well calculated to interest and impress youthful minds; and they are, generally speaking, unexceptionable, though not incapable of castigation and improvement.

The doctor's philosophical publications are numerous, and most of them are well known. Among these we may reckon his "Logic," and the supplement to it, entitled the "Improvement of the Mind;" "A Discourse on Education;" "An Elementary Treatise on Astronomy and Geography;" "Philosophical Essays on various Subjects, with Remarks on Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding;" and "A brief Scheme of Ontology." His other works are chiefly theological, theological, consisting of Sermons, Discourses, Essays, and Controversial Tracts, &c. His scheme of theology was undoubtedly that which is usually called orthodoxy, and, to say the least of it, approaching to Calvinism. His temper, however, was kind and gentle, and his moderation was increasing as he advanced in years, and the maturity of his judgment restrained and controlled the fervour of his feelings and passions. The printed Works of Dr. Watts, together with those which were left in M.S. for the revision of Dr. Jennings and Dr. Doddridge, were published collectively by Dr. Gibbons, in 6 vols. 4to. 1754. Gen. Biog.

WATT'S ISLAND, a small island in the Chesapeake. Lat. 37. 54. N. long. 76. 3. W.

WATTSBOROUGH, a post village of the United States, in Lunenburg county, Virginia.

WATTSNESS, a cape on the west coast of the Island of Sheftland. Lat. 60. 19. N. long. 2. 6. W.

WATWEILER, a town of France, department of the Upper Rhine. Population 1300.

WATZENBORN, a village of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt. Population 800.

WATZMAN, a lofty mountain of the Bavarian states, belonging to the Noric Alps, and rising to the height of 9650 feet.

WAUCHOPE, a small river of Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, in the parish of Langholm, which is augmented by the Laggan burn; and, after a course of some miles, falls into the Esk at Langholm.

WAUCHOPEDALE, a name given to the district of Dumfriesshire, in Scotland, through which the Wauchope runs.

WAUDBY, a hamlet of England, in the East Riding of Yorkshire.

WAUFGONG, a town of Hindostan, province of Aurungabad, from whence the family of the celebrated Maharratta chief, Holkar, originated; 24 miles north of Poona.

WAUGHSBURG, a post village of the United States, in Stokes county, North Carolina.

WAUGUR, an extensive district of Hindostan, province of Gujerat, tributary to the Guicowar. Its principal towns are Doongerpore, Banswara, and Gullicote. It is intersected by the Mahy river.

WAUJPORE, a town of Hindostan, province of Gujerat; 45 miles from Surat. Lat. 21. 24. N. long. 73. 47. E.

WAUSSIM, a town of Hindostan, province of Berar, and capital of a small district of the same name, which is intersected by the Payn Ganga, a small river which falls into the Wurdah. Lat. 20. 10. N. long. 77. 28. E.

WAVE, s. [pæze, Saxon; waegh, Dutch; vague, French.] Water raised above the level of the surface; billow; water driven into inequalities.

Amidst these toils succeeds the balmy night;
Now hissing waters the quench'd guns restore;
And weary waves withdrawing from the fight,
Are lull'd, and pant upon the silent shore. Dryden.

Unevenness; inequality.—Thus it happens, if the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane and well polished, without those numberless waves, or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes a little smoothed in polishing with putty. Newton.

To WAVE, v. n. [papian, Saxon.] To play loosely; to float.

Messapus' helm
He laçes on, and wears the waving crest. Dryden.

To be moved as a signal.
A bloody arm it is, that holds a pine
Lighted above the capitol, and now
It waves unto us. B. Jonson.

To be in an unsettled state; to fluctuate; to waver.—They wave in and out, no way sufficiently grounded, no way resolved, what to think, speak, or write, more than only that because they have taken it upon them, they must be opposite. Hooker.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1658.

To WAVE, v. a. To raise into inequalities of surface.

He had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea. Shakspeare.

To move loosely.

They wav'd their fiery swords, and in the air
Made horrid circles. Milton.

To waft; to remove any thing floating.—Some men never conceive how the motion of the earth below should wave one from a knock perpendicularly directed from a body in the air above. Brown.—To beckon; to direct by a waft or motion of any thing.

Look with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground:
But do not go with it. Shakspeare.

[guesver, Fr. Skinner.] To put off; to quit; to depart from.

These, waving plots, found out a better way;
Some god descended, and preserv'd the play. Dryden.

To put aside for the present.—I have wav'd the subject of your greatness, to resign myself to the contemplation of what is more peculiarly your's. Dryden.

WAVELESS, adj. Smooth; without waves.

Smoothen than this waveless spring,
And purer than the substance of the same. Peele.

WAVENDON, a parish of England, county of Buckingham; 4½ miles from Newport Pagnel. Population 685.

WAVENEY, a river of England, in Suffolk, which, for a space, separates this county from Norfolk. It runs by Scole, Bellingford, Harleston, Bungay, Beccles, and St. Olave's Marches; and meeting the Yare and Bure, near Burgh Castle, they join and flow into the ocean at Yarmouth fort. It is navigable from Bungay.

To WAVE, v. n. [papian, Sax.] To play to and fro; to move loosely.

The whitening shower descends,
At first thin wavering. Thomson.

To be unsettled; to be uncertain, or inconstant; to fluctuate; not to be determined.

Remember where we are;
In France, among a fickle, wavering nation. Shakspeare.

To totter; to be in danger of failing.—Has any disloyalty dared to feign that religion wavers? They folly mistake; as commonly they do, that are more cunning in other men's lives than in their own: 'tis not religion wavers, but their loyalty. Holyday.

WAVE, s. [a technical word with woodmen, perhaps derived from waving with every wind.] A young slender tree. Mason.—It is a very ordinary copse that will not afford [per acre] three or four firsts, fourteen seconds, twelve thirds, eight wavers. Evelyn.

WAVE, a river of England, in Cumberland, which runs into the Wampul.

WAVE, s. One unsettled and irresolute.

Come, young waverer, come, and go with me;
In one respect I'll thy assistant be. Shakspeare.

WAVE, s. State or quality of being wavering.—The waveringness of our cupidities turneth the mind into a dizziness unawares to itself. W. Mountague.

WAVE, a hamlet of England, in the county of Surrey, near the river Way. It formerly had a handsome chapel; and here are still the ruins of Waverley abbey, the first Cistercian abbey founded in England.

WAVE, a parish of England, in Cheshire; 4½ miles south-east-by-east of Chester.

WAVE, HIGH and Low, adjoining hamlets of England, in Cumberland; 3 miles west-by-south of Wigton.

WAVE, a township of England, in Lancashire; 3½ miles east-south-east of Liverpool.

WAVE, s. Act of moving or playing loosely.—I am delighted with the wavings of thy forests. Addison.

WAVRE, an inland town of the Netherlands, in South Brabant; 12 miles south of Louvain. Population 4100.

WAVVY, adj. Rising in waves.

For thee the ocean smiles, and smooths her wavy breast;
And heav'n itself with more serene and purer light is blest.
Dryden.

Playing to and fro, as in undulations.

Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn;
Let fleecy flocks her rising hills adorn.

Prior.

Winding.—The sides of this fissure are firm solid rock, perpendicular and smooth, only seeming to lie in a wavy form all down, as it were to comply with the motion of the water. Maunderell.

WAWAY, a small island in the Eastern seas, near the east coast of the island of Celebes, about 40 miles in circumference. Lat. 4. 8. S. long. 123. 30. E.

WAWES, or WAES, s. [A word used by Spenser and Wicliffe, according to the Saxon pronunciation.] Waves. Whilst they fly that gulf's devouring jaws,
They on this rock are rent, and sunk in helpless waves.

Spenser.

To WAWL, v. n. [pa, grief, Sax. Dr. Johnson.] To cry; to howl.

The first time that we smell the air,
We wawl and cry.

Shakspeare.

WAWRA, a small town of Kaarta, su rounded by high walls. It is inhabited by negroes, but tributary to Sudamar; 60 miles east-south-east of Benown.

WAWUL, a town of Hindostan, province of Gujerat. It contains about 300 houses, and is situated on the banks of the Sereswati river, a few miles south-east of Rahdunpore.

WAX, s. [pæxe, Saxon; wax, Danish; wacks, Dutch.] The thick tenacious matter gathered by the bee, and formed into cells for the reception of the honey.

While visits shall be paid on solemn days,
When num'rous wax lights in bright order blaze;
So long my honour, name, and praise shall live.

Pope.

Any tenacious mass, such as is used to fasten letters.—We soften the wax, before we set on the seal. More.—A kind of concretion in the flesh.—A fontanel in her neck was much inflamed, and many wax-kernels about it. Wiseman.

To WAX, v. a. To smear; to join with wax.

He form'd the reeds, proportion'd as they are;
Unequal in their length, and wax'd with care,
They still retain the name of his ungrateful fair.

Dryden.

To WAX, v. n. pret. wax, waxed, part. pass. waxed, wahren. [peaxan, Sax.; wachsen, Germ.] To grow; to increase; to become bigger, or more. Used of the moon, in opposition to wane, and figuratively of things which grow by turns bigger and less.

They wax and wane
'Twixt thrift and penury.

Carew.

To pass into any state; to become; to grow. It is in either sense now almost disused.—Art thou like the adder wahren deaf? Shakspeare.

WAXCHANDLER, s. A maker of wax candles.

WAXEN, adj. Made of wax.

Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone
Deliciously, and builds her waxen cells,
With honey stor'd.

Milton.

WAXHAM, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 12 miles east-south-east of North Walsham.

WAXHAM, a small village of England, on the Yorkshire coast, near Portington.

WAXHOLM, a town of Sweden, in the Baltic, situated on an island of the same name, at the entrance of a narrow passage leading to Stockholm. It has a strong castle, built in 1649, to guard the entrance to the capital; 16 miles east of Stockholm. Lat. 51. 29. N. long. 18. 16. E. Population 1000.

WAXY, adj. Soft like wax; yielding.—He is servile in imitation, waxy to persuasion. Bp. Hall.—That the softer waxy part of you may receive some impression from this discourse, let us close all with an application. Hammond.

WAXWORK, s. Figures formed of wax in imitation of the substances which they represent.—I never saw so great an assembly of spectators as were met together at the opening of this great piece of waxwork. Addison.

WAY, s. [pæx, Saxon; weigh, Dutch; vig, or wig, M. Goth. via, Lat. Vox antiquissima, pluribusque linguis communis. Srenius.] The road in which one travels. This word is applied in many relations which seem unlike one another, but have all the original of road or travel, noting either progression or the mode of progression, local or intellectual.

I am amaz'd, and lose my way,
Among the thorns and dangers of this world. Shakspeare.

Road made for passengers.

Know'st thou the way to Dover? —

—Both stile and gate, horse-way and foot-path. Shakspeare.

Birnbaumer forest extends a great way, wherein are many deer, wild-boars, foxes, wolves, and bears. Brown.—Course; direction of motion; local tendency.

I now go toward him, therefore follow me,
And mark what way I make.

Shakspeare.

Advance in life.—The boy was to know his father's circumstances, and that he was to make his way by his own industry. Spectator.—Passage; power of progression made or given.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head:

This sword of mine shall give them instant way,

Where they shall rest for ever.

Shakspeare.

Vacancy made by timorous or respectful recession.—There would be left no difference between truth and falsehood, if what we certainly know, give way to what we may possibly be mistaken in. Locke.—Course; regular progression.

But give me leave to seize my destin'd prey,

And let eternal justice take the way.

Dryden.

Course or progress considered as obstructed or hindered.—The imagination being naturally tumultuous, interposeth itself without asking leave, casting thoughts in our way, and forcing the understanding to reflect upon them. Duppa.—Tendency to any meaning, or act.—There is nothing in the words that sound that way, or points particularly at persecution. Atterbury.—Access; means of admittance.—Being once at liberty, 'twas said, having made my way with some foreign prince, I would turn pirate. Raleigh.—Sphere of observation.—The general officers, and the public ministers that fell in my way, were generally subject to the gout.

Temple.—Means; mediate instrument; intermediate step.

By noble ways we conquest will prepare;

First offer peace, and that refus'd, make war.

Dryden.

Method; scheme of management.—He durst not take open way against them, and as hard it was to take a secret, they being so continually followed by the best and every way ablest of that region. Sidney.—Private determination; particular will or humour.

If I had my way,

He had mew'd in flames at home, not i' th' senate;

I had sing'd his furs by this time.

B. Jonson.

Manner; mode.—His way of expressing and applying them, not his invention of them, is what we admire. Addison.—Method; manner of practice.

Taught

To live the easiest way, not with perplexing thoughts.

Milton.

Method or plan of life, conduct or action.

To attain

The height and depth of thy eternal ways,

All human thought comes short.

Milton.

Process

Process of things good or ill.—The affairs here began to settle in a prosperous way. Heylin.—Right method to act or know.—We are quite out of the way, when we think that things contain within themselves the qualities that appear to us in them. Locke.—General scheme of acting.—Men who go out of the way to hint free things, must be guilty of abstrudity, or rudeness. Richardson.—By the way. Without any necessary connection with the main design; en passant.—Note, by the way, that unity of continuance is easier to procure, than unity of species. Bacon.—To go or come one's way, or ways; to come along, or depart. A familiar phrase.

Nay, come your ways;

This is his majesty, say your mind to him. Shakspeare.

Way and ways, are now often used corruptly for wise.—

'Tis no way the interest even of priesthood. Pope.

WAY, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Throwley, Devonshire.

WAYBARI, a river of Guiana, which runs into the Atlantic, Lat. 6. 25. N. long. 58. 6. W.

WAYBERGTHWAITE, a township of England, in Cumberland; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east-by-south of Ravenglass.

WAYBORN HOPE, a creek and point of land, on the north coast of Norfolk.

WAYBOURNE, a parish of England, in Norfolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Holt.

WAY'BREAD, s. [plantago, Lat.] A plant. Ainsworth. Next Waybread rose, propt by her seven nerves Who th' honour of a noble house preserves. Cowley.

WAY'FARER, s. Passenger; traveller.—Howsoever, many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of this privilege; who again, especially the women, forslow not to bain them. Carew.

WAY'FARING, adj. Travelling; passing; being on a journey.—They to whom all this is revealed, if they will not be directed into a path so plained and smoothed, that the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein, must needs acknowledge themselves in the number of the blind, 'till at will not enter into God's rest. Hanmond.

WAY'FARINGTREE, s. [viburnum, Lat.] A plant. Miller.—The viburnum or wayfaringtree makes pins for the yokes of oxen. Evelyn.

WAYFORD, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 2 miles south-west of Crewkerne.

WAYGIU, an island in the Eastern seas, separated by Dampier's strait from New Guinea, to the south. Perhaps the south coast has not been surveyed. On the north-west is a good harbour, called Bony, at the mouth of which is the island Bony. Here the coast is of considerable elevation, very unequal and woody, being covered with an immense forest reaching to the water's edge. The island is throughout mountainous, even at a small distance from the coast. The trees grow to an immense height. Vegetables are in great variety, being oranges, cocoa-nuts, sugar-canes, sago, and pimento. Turtle of large size are on the shore, and numbers of wild hogs in the woods. Many rare and beautiful birds, are seen here, namely, the black cocatoo, the bird of paradise, &c. The natives are of a very suspicious disposition, probably from being trepanned as slaves. The common people go almost entirely naked: the chiefs have jackets and trowsers of Chinese stuffs, and wear a hat or turban. The colour of their skins is not black: their hair is curled, thick, and grows to a considerable length. Their arms are long lances, pointed with iron or boue, bows and arrows. Their houses are built on posts; consist of bamboo; and are elevated above the ground. The centre of the island is about 0. 12. S. lat. On the north coast of this island is a harbour, formed by the island of Rawak, on which grows the ambong tree, the heart of which is an excellent cabbage; and here sago cakes, baked hard, are to be purchased in large quantities, as are also fish and turtle. To the latter, the Malays of the eastern isles have in general an antipathy. There are no goats or fowls here. On the north-west coast of Waygiou, there is another harbour, named Piapis, situated in Lat. 0. 5.

S. long. 130. 15. E. It is formed by two capacious bays, where there is fresh water, and plenty of tall timber, fit for masts. In both bays there are good mud soundings; and on a small island, named Sisipa, is a pond of fresh water, with sago trees growing close to it; the ambong or cabbage tree also abounds. The inhabitants of Waygiou were said to be about 100,000, always at war among themselves. The north coast is about 15 leagues in length.

To WAY'LAY, v. a. To watch insidiously in the way; to beset by ambush.—I will waylay thee going home, where if it be thy chance to kill me,—thou kill'st me like a rogue and a villain. Shakspeare.

WAY'LAYER, s. One who waits in ambush for another.

WAY'LESS, adj. Pathless; untracked.

When on upon my wayless walk,

As my desires me draw,

I, like a madman fell to talk

With every thing I saw.

Drayton.

WAY'MAKER, s. One who causes way to be made for another; a precursor.—Christ never comes before his way-maker hath laid even the heart with sorrow and repentance. Bacon.

WAY'MARK, s. Mark to guide in travelling.—Set thee up waymarks, make thee high heaps. Jer.

To WAYME'NT, v. a. [pa, Saxon. Johnson.—Old French gaimenter, se plaindre, se lamenter. Roquefort.] To lament, or grieve. Obsolete.

For what boots it to weep and to wayment,

When ill is chanc'd, but doth the ill increase,

And the weak mind with double woe torment. Spenser.

WAYNE, a post township of the United States, in Kennebeck county, Maine; 20 miles west of Augusta, and 294 north-north-east of Boston. Population 819.—2. A township of Steuben county, New York; 15 miles east of Bath. Population 1025.—3. A township of Lycoming county, Pennsylvania. Population 340.—4. A towship of Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, on the Juniatta; 15 miles east-south-east of Huntingdon. Population 1501.—5. A township of Crawford county, Pennsylvania. Population 502.—6. A township of Adams county, Ohio. Population 901.—7. A township of Butler county, Ohio. Population 1135.—8. A township of Columbiana county, Ohio. Population 377.—9. A township of Jefferson county, Ohio. Population 1161.—10. A township of Knox county, Ohio. Population 478.—11. A township of Montgomery county, Ohio. Population 431.—12. A township of Pickaway county, Ohio. Population 742.—13. A township of Scioto county, Ohio. Population 393.—14. A township of Tuscarawas county, Ohio. Population 191.—15. A post township of Wayne county, Kentucky.—16. A post township of Wayne county, Tennessee.—17. A county of the United States, in the north-east corner of Pennsylvania, bounded north by New York, east by the Delaware, which separates it from New Jersey, south by Northampton county, and west by Luzerne and Susquehanna counties. Population 4125.—18. A county of the United States, on the east side of Indiana. The chief towns are Salisbury and Centreville.—19. A county of the United States, in the central part of North Carolina. Population 8687, besides 2756 slaves.—20. A county of the United States, in the interior part of Ohio, bounded south by Coshocton, east by Stark, north by Medina and part of Portage, and west by Richland. The timber on the upland is very tall, and generally composed of white and black oak, walnut, cherry, hickory, and some few chestnuts. The prevailing timber on the bottoms and low lands is ash, elm, sycamore, sugarmaple, and soft maple, together with some beech, interspersed with a variety of wild plums, crab apples, grape vines, buckeye, hazel, &c.—21. A county of the United States, on the south side of Kentucky. Population 5430.—22. A county of the United States, in Georgia. Population 676, besides 254 slaves.—23. A county of the United States, in Alabama. Population 1253.

WAYNESBOROUGH, a post town of the United States, and capital of Greene county, Pennsylvania; 22 miles south of Washington, and 51 south-south-west of Pittsburg.—2. A post township of the United States, in Augusta county, Virginia; 12 miles east-south-east of Staunton.—3. A post town of the United States, and capital of Wayne county, North Carolina, on the Neuse; 50 miles south-east of Raleigh.—4. A post town of the United States, and capital of Burke county, Georgia; 24 miles east-north-east of Louisville, 28 south-south-west of Augusta, and about 100 north-west of Savannah.

WAYNESBURG, a post township of the United States, in Franklin county, Pennsylvania.

WAYNESVILLE, a post town of the United States, in Warren county, Ohio, on the Little Miami; 40 miles north-east of Cincinnati.—2. A township of the United States, in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, on the west branch of the Susquehanna; 2 miles below Pine creek.—3. A post village of the United States, in Haywood county, North Carolina.

WAYTE, a rocky islet in the straits of Macassar, near the west coast of Celebes. Lat. 0. 40. S. long. 119. 18. E.

WAYTO, a town on the south-east coast of the isle of Timor. Lat. 8. 39. S. long. 126. 9. E.

WAYTON, a lake of North America, west of the Rocky mountains. Lat. 48. N. long. 117. W.

WAYWARD, adj. [pa, woe, and peapb, Saxon.] Forward; peevish; morose; vexatious; liking his own way.

How wayward is this foolish love,
That, like a testy babe, will scratch the nurse,
And presently all humbled, kiss the rod. Shakspeare.

WAYWARDLY, adv. Forwardly perversely.—Waywardly proud; and therefore bold: because extremely faulty. Sidney.

WAYWARDNESS; s. Frowardness; perverseness.—Such the behaviour of ladies, as builded their chastity not upon waywardness, but choice of worthiness. Sidney.—The best of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his age to receive not alone the imperfections of long engrafted condition, but the unruly waywardness, that infirm and choleric years bring. Shakspeare.—A child will have as much wit as he hath waywardness. Wotton.

WAY-WISER, [from way and weisen, Germ.] An instrument for measuring the road, or distance gone; called also perambulator, and podometer, or pedometer.

WE, pronoun. In oblique cases us. See I. [weis, Goth.] The plural of I.

Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guests to-night. Shakspeare.

I and others, indefinitely.—We first endure, then pity, then embrace. Pope.—Improperly and ungrammatically for the oblique case, us.

To poor we,
Thine enmity's most capital. Shakspeare.

WEAK; adj. [pæc, Saxon; week, Dutch; from the Su. Goth. wika, to fail, to give way. Mr. H. Tooke, in like manner, refers to the Sax. verb pican, the same.] Feeble; not strong.

Here only weak
Against the charm of beauty's powerful glance. Milton.

Infirm; not healthy.
Here I stand your brave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man. Shakspeare.

Soft; pliant; not stiff; low of sound; Feeble of mind; wanting spirit; wanting discernment.—She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.—Not much impregnated with any ingredient: as, a weak tincture, weak beer. Not powerful; not potent.

I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong. Shakspeare.

Not well supported by argument.—A case so weak and feeble hath been much persisted in. Hooker.—Unfortified.

To quell the tyrant love, and guard thy heart
On this weak side, where most our nature fails,
Would be a conquest worthy Cato's son. Addison.

To WEAK, v. a. To render weak. Obsolete.
We must toil to make our doctrine good,
Which will impair the flesh, and weak the knee. More.

To WEAKEN, v. n. To become weak. Obsolete.—Somewhat to weaken gan the pain. Chaucer.

To WEAKEN, v. a. To debilitate; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength.—The first which weakened them was their security. Hooker.—Their hands shall be weakened from the work that it be not done. Neh.

Intestine broils,
Weakening the sceptre of old night. Milton.

Every violence offered to the body weakens and impairs it, and renders it less durable. Ray.

Let us not weaken still the weaker side
By our divisions. Addison.

Solemn impressions that seem to weaken the mind, may, by proper reflection, be made to strengthen it. Richardson.

WEAKENER, s. That which makes weak; that which lessens the effects.—Fasting and mortifications, no question, rightly managed, are huge helps to piety, and great weakeners of sin, and furtherances to a man in his Christian course. South.

WEAKLING, s. A feeble creature.
Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight;
And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again,
And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject. Shakspeare.

WEAKLY, adv. Feebly; faintly; without strength.—With want of efficacy.

Was plighted faith so weakly seal'd above,
That for one error, I must lose your love. Dryden.

Indiscreetly; injudiciously; timorously; with feebleness of mind.

This high gift of strength committed to me,
Under the seal of silence, could not keep,
But weakly to a woman must reveal it. Milton.

WEAKLY, adj. Not strong; not healthy.—Being old and weakly, twenty years in prison, it was ten to one that ever I should have returned. Raleigh.

WEAKNESS, s. Want of strength; want of force; feebleness.—Troy in our weakness lives, not in her strength. Shakspeare.—Want of spriteliness.

New graces yearly like thy works display,
Soft without weakness, without glaring gay. Pope.

Want of steadiness.—By such a review we shall discern and strengthen our weaknesses with good resolution, and so order our future conversation as may render us least exposed to falling. Rogers.—Infirmity; unhealthiness.—Persons in those posts derive a weakness of constitution from the ease and luxury of their ancestors, and the delicacy of their own education. Temple.—Want of cogency.—She seems to be conscious of the weakness of those testimonies. Tillotson.—Want of judgment; want of resolution; foolishness of mind.

A woman and thence weak.—
—Weakness is thy excuse,
And I believe it; weakness to resist
Philistian gold; if weakness may excuse,
What murderer, what traitor, parricide,
Incestuous, sacrilegious, but may plead it?
All wickedness is weakness. Milton.

Defect; failing.—Many find a pleasure in contradicting the common reports of fame, and in spreading abroad the weakness of an exalted character. Addison.

WEAKSIDE, s. Foible; deficiency; infirmity.—Trade has increased their shipping, which they found to be their weakside in their last attempts. Temple.

WEAL, s. [pelan, Saxon; wealust, Dutch.] Happiness; prosperity; flourishing state.

Our weal on you depending,
Counts it your weal, that he have liberty. Shakspeare.

To WEAL, or WALE, v. a. [palan, Sax.] To mark with stripes or lashes.—Thy sacred hody was stripped of thy garments, and waled with bloody stripes. Bp. Hall.

WEAL, s. The mark of a stripe.—Like warts or weals it hangs upon her skin. Donne.

WEAL-away, interj. Alas. See WELAWAY.
WEALD, Wald, Walt. Whether singly or jointly, signify a wood or grove, from the Saxon peald. Gibson.

WEALD, a woody tract of country in England, in the south parts of the counties of Sussex and Kent, extending from Winchelsea to the top of Riverhill, towards Tunbridge.

WEALD, a township of England, in Oxfordshire; 6½ miles south-south-east of Burford.

WEALD, a hamlet of England, in Kent; 2 miles from Seven Oaks. Population 510.

WEALD, NORTH, a parish of England, in Essex; 3½ miles north-east-by-east of Epping.

WEALD, SOUTH, a hamlet of England, in Essex; 2 miles west of Brentford. Population 1010.

WEALSMAN, s. A sneering word for politician: Mason.—Meeting two such wealsmen as you are, I cannot call you Lycurgusses. Shakspeare.

WEALTH, s. [paleð, rich, Saxon; the third person singular of pelezian, loeupletare. Mr. H. Tooke.] Prosperity; external happiness.—Riches; money, or precious goods.

I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakspeare.

WEA'LTHILY, adv. Richly.
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua;
If wealthily, then happily in Padua. Shakspeare.

WEA'LTINESS, s. Richness.
WEA'LTHY, adj. Rich; opulent; abundant.
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass. Shakspeare.

To WEAN, v. a. [penan, Sax.] To put from the breast; to ab lactate.—She was weaned when it did taste the wormwood on the nipple; pretty fool, to see it fall out with the dug. Shakspeare.—To withdraw from any habit or desire.

I the rather wean me from despair,
For love of Edward's offspring in my womb. Shakspeare.

WEA'NEL, or WEA'NLING, s. An animal newly weaned.

To gorge the flesh of lambs and weanling-kids.
On hills where flocks are fed, flies tow'rd the springs
Of Ganges or Hydaspes. Milton.

A child newly weaned.
WEA'PON, s. [pæpun, Saxon.] Instrument of offence; something with which one is armed to hurt another.

Take this weapon
Which I have here recover'd from the Moor. Shakspeare.

WEA'PONED, adj. Armed for offence; furnished with arms.—In what sort, so ill weaponed, could you atchieve this enterprize? Sidney

WEA'PONLESS, adj. Having no weapon; unarmed.
I could have sent him,
With more ease, weaponless to you, and bound. Beaum. and Fl.

WEA'PONSALVE, s. A salve which was supposed to cure the wound, being applied to the weapon that made it.—That the sympathetic powder and the weaponsalve constantly perform what is promised, I leave others to believe. Boyle.

To WEAR, v. a. preterite wore, participle worn. [pepan, Sax.] To waste with use or time, or instruments; to impair or lessen by gradual diminution.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1658.

To his name inscrib'd, their tears they pay,
Till years and kisses wear his name away. Dryden.

To consume tediously.
What masks, what dances,
To wear away this long age of three hours! Shakspeare.

To carry appendant to the body.
Why art thou angry?—
That such a slave as this should wear a sword,
Who wears not honesty. Shakspeare.

To exhibit in appearance.
Such an infectious face her sorrow wears,
I can bear death, but not Cydaria's tears. Dryden.

To affect by degrees.—Trials wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

To WEAR out, To harass.—He shall wear out the saints. Dan.

To WEAR out, To waste or destroy by degrees.
This very rev'rent lecher, quite worn out
With rheumatism, and crippled with his gout. Dryden.

To WEAR ship, v. a. [wieren, Dutch.] A nautical term: to bring the ship round.

To WEAR, v. n. To be wasted with use or time. It has commonly some particle, as, out, away, off.—In those who have lost their sight when young, in whom the ideas of colours having been but slightly taken notice of, and ceasing to be repeated, do quite wear out. Locke.—To be tediously spent.

Thus wore out night, and now the herald lark
Left his ground-nest, high towering to descry
The morn's approach, and greet her with his song. Milton.

To pass away by degrees.—The difficulty will every day grow less and wear off, and obedience become easy and familiar. Rogers.

WEAR, s. The act of wearing; the thing worn.
It was th' enchantment of her riches
That made m' apply t' your cronny witches:
That in return would pay th' expence,
The wear and tear of conscience. Hudibras.

[pæp, Saxon, a fen; wär, German, a mound.] A dam to shut up and raise the water; commonly written weir or wier.

—They will force themselves through flood-gates, or over wears, hedges or stops in the water. Walton.—A net of twigs to catch fish.

WEAR, a river of England, in the county of Durham, which rises among the wild moors that divide the counties of Durham and Northumberland, from Cumberland and Westmorland, crosses the central part of the county, and falls into the sea below Sunderland. The valley called Weardale is a very wild and romantic district.

WEARD, s. Weard, whether initial or final, signifies watchfulness or care, from the Saxon peapdan, to ward or keep. Gibson.

WEARDLEY, a township of England, in Yorkshire; 6½ miles east of Otley.

WEARE, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 1½ miles south-by-west of Axbridge. Population 608.

WEARE, a hamlet of England, in Devonshire, about a mile north-by-west of Topsham.

WEARE, a post township of the United States, in Hillsborough county, New Hampshire; 15 miles north-north-west of Amherst, and 55 west of Portsmouth. Population 2634.

WEARER, s. One who has any thing appendant to his person.

Were I the wearer of Antonio's beard,
I would not shave to-day. Shakspeare.

That which wastes or diminishes.—Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.

WEARHORN, a parish of England, in Kent; 6 miles from Ashford. Population 435.

WEA'RINESS,

WEA'RINESS, s. Lassitude; state of being spent with labour.

Come, our stomachs
Will make what's homely savoury; weariness
Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth
Finds the down pillow hard.

Shakspeare.

Fatigue; cause of lassitude.—The more remained out of the weariness and fatigue of their late marches. Clarendon.
—Impatience of any thing. Tediousness.

WEA'RING, s. Clothes.

It was his bidding;
Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu. Shakspeare.

WEA'RISH, adj. [I believe from wæp, Saxon, a quagmire.] Boggy; watery. Weak; washy.—Democrates was a little wearish old man, very melancholy by nature. Burton.

WEA'RISOME. adj. Troublesome; tedious; causing weariness.

These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome.

Shakspeare.

WEA'RISOMELY, adv. Tediously; so as to cause weariness.—As of Nimrod, so are the opinions of writers different touching Assur, and the beginning of that great state of Assyria; a controversy wearisomely disputed, without any direct proof or certainty. Raleigh.

WEA'RISOMENESS, s. The quality of tiring. The state of being easily tired.—A wit, quick without lightness, sharp without brittleness, desirous of good things without newfangledness, diligent in painful things without wearisomeness. Ascham.

WEARMOUTH PANS, a township of England, county of Durham, in the parish of Bishop's Wearmouth. Population 476.

WEARMOUTH, BISHOP'S, a village of England in the county of Durham. It is a place of remote antiquity, and was formerly of considerable note. It is now so intimately united with Sunderland, by new buildings, that they may be said to form but one town. The more ancient part of the village occupies the southern slope of an eminence south of the river Wear, and about a mile and a half distant from its junction with the sea. The church is a very ancient structure, supposed to have been founded very soon after the restitution made by Athelstan. Near the church is an hospital and almshouse, erected in 1727; and also another almshouse, built and endowed by the reverend Dr. Bowes, in the year 1725. The latter building stands at the end of a square called Wearmouth Green, which, before the division of the parishes, was used as a market-place; but the market has since been removed to the High-street in Sunderland. On the bishop's Wearmouth side is the famous iron bridge, of one arch, which has been thrown over the Wear, and connects with the new road leading to Newcastle and Shields. Population, 7060.

WEARMOUTH, MONK, a village and parish of England, in the county of Durham, situated on the river Wear, and divided by it from Bishop's Wearmouth, with which it is connected by the celebrated iron bridge. It is a place of great antiquity, and derives its name from an extensive monastery which stood here, until it was removed to Durham, in the year 1083; 1 mile from Sunderland. Population 6504.

WEARNE, a hamlet of England, in Somersetshire; 1 mile north of Langport.

WEA'RY, adj. [wæry, Saxon; waeren, to be tired, Dutch.] Subdued by fatigue; tired with labour.

Fair Phœbus gan decline in haste,
His *wear*y waggon to the western vale. Spenser.

Impatient of the continuance of any thing painful or irksome.—The king was as *wear*y of Scotland as he had been impatient to go thither, finding all things proposed to him without consideration of his honour or interest. Clarendon.
—Desirous to discontinue.

See the revolution of the times,
Make mountains level, and the continent,
Weary of solid firmness, melt itself
Into the seas. Shakspeare.

Causing weariness; tiresome.
Their gates to all were open evermore
That by the *wear*y way were travelling,
And one sat waiting ever them before
To call in comers by that needy were and poor. Spenser.

To WEA'RY, v. a. To tire; to fatigue; to harass; to subdue by labour.

Better that the enemy seek us;
So shall he waste his means, *wear*y his soldiers,
Doing himself offence. Shakspeare.

To make impatient of continuance.—Should the government be *wear*ied out of its present patience, what is to be expected by such turbulent men? Addison.—To subdue or harass by any thing irksome.

Mustering all her wiles,
With blandish'd parleys, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries; she surceas'd not day nor night
To storm me over-watch'd and *wear*y'd out. Milton.

WEARY BAY, a bay on the north-east coast of New Holland, south of Endeavour river.

WEA'SAND. See WESAND.
WEA'SEL, s. [wæsel, Saxon; wesel, Dutch; mustela, Latin.] A small animal. See MUSTELA VULGARIS.

A wesel once made shift to slink
In a corn-loft, through a chink. Pope.

WEATHER, s. [wæþer, Saxon.] State of the air respecting either cold or heat, wet or dryness.—Who's there, besides foul weather?—One minded like the weather, most unquietly. Shakspeare.—The change of the state of the air.—It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle not in decay; how much more to behold an ancient family, which have stood against the waves and weathers of time! Bacon.—Tempest; storm.

What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud,
My thoughts presage. Dryden.

To WEA'THER, v. a. To expose to the air.
He perch'd on some branch thereby,
To weather him, and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.

To pass with difficulty.
He weather'd fell Charybdis; but ere long,
The skies were darken'd, and the tempests strong. Garth.

To WEATHER a point, To gain a point against the wind; to accomplish against opposition.—We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered our point; a stretch or two more will do the work. Addison.

To WEATHER out, To endure.
When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us. Addison.

WEA'THERBEATEN, adj. Harassed and seasoned by hard weather—They perceived an aged man and a young, both poorly arrayed, extremely weatherbeaten; the old man blind, the young man leading him. Sidney.

WEA'THERBOARD, or WEATHERBOW, s. In the sea language, that side of the ship that is to the windward. Diet.

WEA'THERCOCK, s. An artificial cock set on the top of a spire, which, by turning, shews the point from which the wind blows.—A kingfisher hanged by the bill, converting the breast to that point of the horizon from whence the wind doth blow, is a very strange introducing of natural weathercocks. Brown.—Any thing fickle and inconstant.—Where had you this pretty weathercock?—I cannot tell what his name is my husband had him of. Shakspeare.

WEA'THERDRIVEN, part. Forced by storms or contrary trary winds.—Philip, during his voyage towards Spain, was weatherdriven into Weymouth. Carew.

WEATHERER, one of the smaller Shetland islands. Lat. 60. 35. N. long. 1. 13. W.

To WEA'THER-FEND, v. a. To shelter.—In the lime-grove which weather-fends your cell. Shakspeare.

WEATHERGAGE, s. Any thing that shows the weather.

To vere and tack, and steer a cause,
Against the weathergauge of laws.

Hudibras.

WEA'THERGLASS, s. A barometer; a glass that shows the weight of the air.—John's temper depended very much upon the air; his spirits rose and fell with the weatherglass. Arbutnot.—A thermometer. Less used.

As in some weatherglass my love I hold,
Which falls or rises with the heat or cold,
I will be constant yet.

Dryden.

WEA'THERPROOF, adj. Proof against rough weather.—Our bark's not weather-proof. Quarles.

WEATHERSFIELD, a post township of the United States, in Windsor county, Vermont, on the west bank of Connecticut river, opposite Claremont; 9 miles south-by-west of Windsor. Population 2116.—2. A township of the United States, in Trumbull county, Ohio, on the Mahoning.

WEA'THERSPY, s. A star-gazer; an astrologer; one that foretells the weather.

And sooner may a gulling weatherspy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear.

Donne.

WEA'THERWISE, adj. Skilful in foretelling the weather.

WEA'THERWISER, s. [weather and weisen, Germ. to show.] Any thing that foreshows the weather.—Most vegetables expand their flowers and down in warm sunny weather, and again close them toward the evening, or in rain, as is in the flowers of pimpernel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weatherwiser. Derham.

WEATHLEY, a hamlet of England, in Warwickshire, near Alcester.

To WEAVE, v. a. pret. wove, waved, part. pass. woven, waved, [peyan, Saxon; weven, Dutch; gwew, Welsh; waefwa, Su. Goth. waidjan, M. Goth. Serenius.] To form by texture; to form by inserting one part of the materials within another.

There our secret thoughts unseen,
Like nets be wav'd and intertwi'd,
Wherewith we catch each other's mind.

Carew.

To unite by intermixture.—When religion was woven into the evil government, and flourished under the protection of the emperors, men's thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs; but in the three first centuries of Christianity men who embraced this religion had given up all their interests in this world, and lived in a perpetual preparation for the next. Addison.—To interpose; to insert.

The duke be here to night! the better! best!

This waves itself perforce into my business. Shakspeare.

To WEAVE, v. n. To work with a loom.

WEA'VER, s. One who makes threads into cloth.

Upon these taxations,
The clothiers all not able to maintain
The many to them 'longing, have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, wavers.

Shakspeare.

WEA'VER, [ayaneus piseis, Latin.] A fish. Ainsworth.

The waver, which although his prickles venom be,
(By fishers cut away, which buyers seldom see)
Yet for the fish he bears, 'tis not accounted bad. Drayton.

WEAVER, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Colmpton, Devonshire.—2. A hamlet of England, in Cheshire, on the banks of the Weaver; 3 miles from Middlewich.

WEAVER, a river of England, in the county of Chester. It rises from Ridley Pool, at Cholmondeley Hole, and passes Nantwich, Minshall, Weaver, Winsford, and Northwich, where it is joined by the Dane, from the northern parts of Staffordshire, and two or three other streams from the central parts of the county. Hence it proceeds to Wareham, Acton Bridge, and Frodsham, where it falls into the swelling basin of the Mersey. The Weaver receives several tributary streams in the course of its progress; and, from Winsford to Frodsham, it has been rendered navigable by means of various locks. The length of this navigation is 20 miles, in which course it has a fall of 45 feet 10 inches, divided between 10 locks.

WEAVER HILL, in the county of Stafford, England, 1154 feet in height.

WEAVERTHORPE, a township of England, in Yorkshire; 13 miles east of New Malton.

WEB, s. [pebba, Saxon; from webjan, M. Goth. to weave.] Texture; any thing woven.

Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devised a web her woovers to deceive;
In which the work that she all day did make,
The same at night she did again unreave.

Spenser.

Some part of a sword. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson.—It seems to have been the blade. Mason.

The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone; hilt, gold, approv'd by touch.

Fairfax.

A kind of dusky film that hinders the sight; suffusion.—This is the foul flibertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the harelip. Shakspeare.

WEBB (Philip-Carteret), a member of the society of antiquaries, was born in 1700, and admitted an attorney in 1724, and distinguished for his acquaintance with the records of the kingdom, and with constitutional and parliamentary law. He was returned in 1754, and again in 1761, as a member for the borough of Haslemere; and being attached to the then existing administration, he obtained the place of secretary of bankrupts in the court of chancery, and in 1756 became one of the joint solicitors of the treasury. He was employed in 1763 in conducting the prosecution against Mr. Wilkes, for writing a number of the North Briton; and printed on that occasion "A Collection of Records about General Warrants," and "Observations on discharging Mr. Wilkes from the Tower." He died at his house in Busbridge, Surrey, in June, 1770, and left a valuable library, and curious collection of coins, medals, and relics of antiquity, which were sold by auction. He had sold 30 MSS. of the rolls of parliament to the house of lords, and a number of other MSS. were sold to lord Shelburne, and afterwards to the British Museum. Among his publications we may reckon "A Letter to the Rev. Mr. Warburton, on some passages of his Divine Legation;" "Various Pieces relative to the State of the Law in this kingdom;" "Account of some Particulars concerning Domesday Book;" "A short Account of Danegeld;" "Account of a Copper Table, discovered near Heraclea." Mr. Webb was twice married, and by his first wife left a son of his own name. Nichols's Lit. Anecd. Gen. Biog.

WEBERA [so named by Schreber, in honour of George Henry Weber, author of Spicilegium Floræ Goettingensis, Gothæ], in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order monogynia.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth one-leaved, half-five-cleft, erect, acute, permanent. Corolla one-petalled, funnel-form; tube longer than the calyx; border five-cleft; segments ovate-oblong, recurved. Nectary a fleshy ring surrounding the base of the style. Stamina: filaments five, very short, placed upon the tube of the corolla. Anthers linear, incumbent, spreading. Pistil: germ roundish, inferior. Style simple, longer than the tube of the corolla. Stigma club-shaped. Pericarp: berry subglobular, two-celled, crowned with the calyx. Seeds solitary, orbicular, bicular, flattish on one side, convex on the other.—Essential Character. Contorted: berry inferior, two-celled, cells one-seeded. Style elevated. Stigma club-shaped. Calyx five-cleft.

1. Webera corymbosa.—Unarmed, leaves oblong, acute; corymb terminating. This is a shrub of the human stature. Stems and branches round, ash-coloured, knobbed; wood white, yellow towards the middle.—Native of Malabar and Ceylon.

2. Webera cymosa.—Unarmed, leaves ovate, acuminate; cymes many flowered, axillary peduncled. This is a tree with round pubescent branches.—Native of the East Indies.

3. Webera tetrandra.—Spiny, leaves roundish; few-flowered, axillary, peduncled; flowers four-stamened. This is one of the most common scraggy thorny bushes on the coast of Coromandel, every soil and situation suiting it. Flowers in the hot season, and makes excellent fences.

The ripe fruit is eaten by the natives; the leaves are eaten generally in curries: on both accounts this shrub has the additional name of Kura, which means esculent. The Telingas call it Ballusoo-Kura.

WE'BBED, adj. Joined by a film.—Such as are whole-footed, or whose toes are wedded together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Derham.

WEBBERTON, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Dunchideock, Devonshire.

WE'BFooted, adj. Palmipede; having films between the toes.—Webfooted fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor fear to enter the water. Ray.

WEBHAMET, a river of the United States, in Maine, which runs into the Atlantic in Wells.

WE'BSTER, s. [wēbʃtɚ, Sax. a woman weaver.] A weaver. Still a northern term. The old word is also webber, Pr. Parv. "a maker of cloth."—After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations; as Taylor, Webster, Wheeler. Camden.

WECHMAR, a village of Germany, in the duchy of Saxe-Gotha; 4 miles south-east of Gotha. Population 1200.

WECHNE, an inhabited mountain of Abyssinia, on which the royal family were formerly confined.

WECHSELBURG, a small town of Germany, in Saxony; 3 miles south of Rochlitz.

To WED, v. a. [wēdian, Saxon; withan, M. Goth. conjugere, marem nempē et fœminam; wetten, Germ. dyweddio, Cambr. conjugere. Affine Su. Goth. wad, sponsio, a pledge. Serenius. The Sax. wed is the same, and Junius refers to it our wed; which Dr. Jamieson supports by observing, "that it was customary to espouse by means of a wed or pledge." Thus wed for pledge, in old Engl. "And thus his truth he laith to wedde." Gower, Conf. Am. B. I.] To marry; to take for husband or wife.

If one by one you wedded all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; she you kill'd
Would be unparallel'd.

Shakspeare.

To join in marriage.

In Syracuse was I born, and wed
Unto a woman happy but for me.

Shakspeare.

To unite for ever.

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity.

Shakspeare.

To take for ever.—They positively and concernedly wedded his cause. Clarendon.—To unite by love or fondness.—Men are wedded to their lusts, and resolved upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to wish there were no God. Tillotson.

To WED, v. n. To contract matrimony.

When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakspeare.

WED, BAAL, or NAGGA, a large village in Sennaar, on the east bank of the Nile.

WED EL CASAAB, a small river of Algiers, which falls into the Mediterranean, 5 miles south of Cape Falcon.

WED EL KIBBEER, a river of Algiers, the ancient Ampsaga, which falls into the Mediterranean. Lat. 36. 57. N. long. 6. 28. E.

WED EL MAILAH, or the SALT RIVER, a river of Algiers, which falls into the Mediterranean; 10 miles south-south-east of Cape Figalo.

WED EL SHAIER, a small river of Africa, in the southern part of the territory of Tunis, which rises in the Sahara, and after a course of about thirty miles, loses itself in the great plain of the Shott.

WEDDAN, a town of Central Africa, in one of the routes from Fezzan to Bornou, 20 days journey from Bornou, and 26 from Fezzan.

WE'DDED, adj. Belonging to matrimony.—Solomon, among his gravest proverbs, countenances a kind of ravishment and erring fondness in the entertainment of wedded leisures. Milton.

WEDDICAR, a township of England, in Cumberland; 2½ miles from Whitehaven.

WE'DDING, s. [wēddɪŋ, Saxon.] Marriage; nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.

Come, away!

For you shall hence upon your wedding-day. Shakspeare.

WEDDINGTON, a parish of England, in Warwickshire; 1½ mile north of Nuneaton.

WEDEL, a town of Denmark, in Holstein, on the Elbe, with 1000 inhabitants; 13 miles north-west of Hamburg.

WEDEL (George Wolfgang), an eminent physician, was born in 1645, at Golzan, in Lusatia, and studied physic and took his doctor's degree at Jena, in 1667, where, after a temporary exercise of his profession at Gotha, he became medical professor, in which station he continued with reputation for almost fifty years. He combined with his medical skill a considerable acquaintance with mathematics and philology, as well as with the oriental and classical languages. He was an associate to the Academy Naturæ Curiosorum, and to the Royal Society of Berlin, physician to several German sovereigns, a count palatine, and an imperial counsellor. Notwithstanding these high offices and numerous engagements, he was attentive to the poor, and assiduous in his literary labours. His pathology was derived from the systems of Helmont and Sylvius; in his practice he depended much on absorbents, and the volatile salts of vegetables. Wedel was addicted to astrology; but he is chiefly celebrated for his pharmaceutical knowledge, and his elegance of prescription, so that many of his compositions have been adopted in dispensaries. Of his works, besides his academical dissertations, the principal are the following; viz. "Opiologia;" "Pharmacia in Artis formam redacta;" "De Medicamentorum Facultatibus cognoscendis et applicandis;" "De Morbis Infantum;" and "Exercitationes Medico-Philologicæ." Haller. Eloy.

WEDGE, s. [wēdʒ, Danish; wegge, Dutch.] A body, which having a sharp edge, continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.

A barbarous troop of clownish fone,
The honour of these noble bows down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan.

Spenser.

A mass of metal.

As sparkles from the anvil used to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid.

Spenser.

Any thing in the form of a wedge.
In warlike musters they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings.

Milton.

To WEDGE, v. a. To cleave with a wedge.

My heart
As wedged with a sigh would rive in twain,
Lest Hector, or my father, should perceive me.

Shakspeare.

To drive as a wedge is driven.

Where

Where have you been broiling?—

—Among the crowd i' the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more. Shakspeare.

To force as a wedge forces.

Part

In common, rang'd in figure, wedge their way;
Intelligent of seasons. Milton.

To fasten by wedges.

Wedge on the keenest scythes,
And give us steeds that snort against the foe. A. Philips.

To fix as a wedge.—Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakspeare.

WEDGE ISLAND, a small island in the North Pacific ocean, near the east coast of the Prince of Wales's Archipelago, in the Duke of Clarence's Strait. Lat. 55. 8. N. long. 228. 20. E.—2. An island on the south coast of New Holland, at the mouth of Spencer's Gulf, the largest of the group called by captain Flinders, Gambier's isles. Lat. 35. 11. S. long. 136. 29. E.

WEDGWOOD (Josias), was the younger son of a Staffordshire potter, and born in July, 1730. His education was restricted, but his mental powers were of a superior kind, so that by the fixed and persevering exercise of them he made very considerable improvement in the art of pottery, to which his attention was directed, and gave a name as well as reputation to the place of his nativity. (See POTTERY.) His patrimony was small, but by his supereminant skill and steady application he was the founder of his own fortune as well as fame. The principal seat of the potteries of Staffordshire was Burslem; and there is reason to believe that they have existed in or near this place for many centuries, and even, as some say, since the time of the Romans. But they had continued for a long time in the same rude state in which Plot found them when he surveyed this county. The merit of introducing into this country improvements in the art of pottery must be ascribed to two brothers of the name of Eders, who came hither from Holland about the year 1700, and settled in the neighbourhood of the Staffordshire potteries. They manufactured a red unglazed porcelain from a clay, which they found in the estate on which they settled, called "Bradwell;" but this was only the brown stone ware, in the composition of which no flint is used; but they made use of salt in glazing it; this salt, or muriate of soda, was thrown into the oven at a certain stage of the firing process, and the pieces of ware were so disposed as to receive the fumes of it on every part of their surfaces. The fumes, however, occasioned an alarm in the neighbourhood, which obliged them to leave the country. A similar manufactory, however, was soon after established at Shelton, in the Potteries, by one of their workmen, whose name was Astbury, and who had possessed himself of their secret; and as it was found very useful, it was tolerated by the inhabitants, though on the day of glazing, the dense offensive fumes from fifty or sixty manufactories filled the vallies, and covered the hills through an extent of several miles. The white stone ware, and the use of ground flints in pottery, were introduced at a later period, and, as it is said, in consequence of the following incident. About the year 1720, a potter, supposed to be the above-mentioned Astbury, stopped at Dunstable in his way to London, and sought a remedy for a disorder in his horse's eyes; and the ostler of the inn by burning a flint stone reduced it to a fine powder, which he blew into them. The potter, observing the beautiful white colour of the flint after calcination, instantly thought of applying the discovery to the improvement of his art, and afterwards introduced the white pipe-clays found on the south side of Devonshire, instead of the iron-clays of his own country, and thus produced the white stone ware. At first the flints were pulverized, to the great injury of the persons employed; till the famous Brindley, in the early period of his life, constructed the mills that are now used for grinding them in a moist state. It is farther said, that an ingenious mechanic, named Alsager, afterwards improved the construction of the potter's wheel, so as to give much greater precision and neatness to the work. But still the French pottery excelled in beauty that of Staffordshire; and about the year 1760, a considerable quantity of it was imported, and purchased by persons of opulence to the great detriment of the English manufacture. Mr. Wedgwood directed his attention to this article, and made several improvements with regard to the forms, colours, and composition of his manufacture; and in the year 1763 invented a kind of ware for the table, which gave a turn to the market, and under the name of the queen's ware, conferred upon it in consequence of the patronage of her majesty, came into very general use. Its materials were the whitest clays from Devonshire and Dorsetshire, mixed with ground flint, and covered with a vitreous glaze. By varying and repeating his experiments, Mr. Wedgwood discovered the mode of manufacturing other species of earthenware and porcelain, excellent and beautiful, and adapted to various purposes both of use and ornament. With a view of prosecuting his improvement in pottery, he applied to the study of chemistry, and for his farther assistance engaged the ingenious Mr. Chisholme, who had been employed in a similar department by the celebrated Dr. Lewis, author of the "Commercium Philosophico-Technicum;" for whom he not only built a comfortable habitation near the manufactory, but liberally afforded him an annuity for his support under the decays of age, which he continued till his death. Aided also by the classical taste of his partner, Mr. Bentley, potteries were furnished which served as models for various articles, formed of other materials, that were held in high estimation. We learn from Dr. Bancroft, that almost all the finely diversified colours which Mr. Wedgwood applied to his pottery were produced only by the oxyds of iron. In the manufacture of his beautiful jasper ware, which rivalled the productions of antiquity, and which found its way into the collections of the curious in all parts of Europe, he employed the native sulphate of barytes, and from this use of it he derived great profit, until, by the infidelity of a servant, the secret was disclosed and sold, so that others employed inferior workmen at a reduced salary, and thus prevented Mr. Wedgwood from employing his exquisite modellers on that branch of the manufacture.

Among other curious productions of this inventive manufacturer, we may mention his imitation of the Barberini, or Portland vase, which was discovered in the tomb of Alexander Severus, and for which the late duchess of Portland paid 1000 guineas. The subscription for Mr. Wedgwood's manufacture was at the rate of 50*l.* each for fifty vases, but such were the expences of its execution, that the partners lost money by the undertaking. Mr. Webber, it is said, received 500 guineas merely for modelling it.

We cannot forbear in this connection noticing two cameos of Mr. Wedgwood's manufacture; one of a slave in chains, of which he distributed many hundreds, with a view of exciting the humane to assist in the abolition of the slave-trade; and the other a cameo of Hope, attended by Peace and Art and Labour, which was made of argillaceous earth from Botany Bay, to which place he sent many of them, in order to shew what their materials were capable of, and to encourage the industry of the inhabitants.

The district which Mr. Wedgwood inhabited became by his means the seat of population and abundance. The vicinity was enriched, and a new canal of importance, called the Grand Trunk canal, and connecting the Trent and the Mersey, was obtained and executed by his influence. The ample fortune which he acquired was liberally enjoyed, and benevolently applied to many purposes of private charity and public utility. Chemistry and the arts in their mutual connection were objects of his attention; and he contrived an instrument for measuring high degrees of heat, called a pyrometer, of which he gave an account in the Phil. Trans. for 1782, 1784, and 1786.

The disposition and manners of Mr. Wedgwood were no less estimable than the powers of his mind; so that he was as much the object of admiration and esteem for his moral as for his intellectual qualities. So much was he respected, and so desirable was the continuance of his useful life, that he died, universally regretted, at his house in Staffordshire, to which he gave the name of Etruria, in January, 1795, in the 65th year of his age. Aikin's Chem. Dict. Gent. Mag. Parkes's Chemical Catechism. Parkes's Essays.

WE'DLOCK, s. [pɛb and lac, Sax. marriage and gift. Johnson. Others from pɛbbian, to marry, and loc, Sax. a fastening.] Marriage; matrimony.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock-hours.

Shakspeare.

WEDMORE, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-by-east of Axbridge. Population 2480.

WEDNESBURY, a market town of England, in the county of Stafford, situated at a short distance from the source of the river Tame. It is a place of great antiquity; and in the time of the Mercians, was distinguished by a noble castle, fortified by Adelfeda, who was for some time governess of this kingdom. Wednesbury is distinguished for its numerous and valuable manufactures, the principal of which are guns, coach-harness, iron axle-trees, saws, trowels, edge-tools, bridle-bits, stirrups, nails, hinges, wood-screws, and cast iron works of every description. Enamel paintings, in the finest style, are likewise executed. One of the collateral branches of the Birmingham canal entering this parish, affords to the inhabitants the most perfect facility of commercial communication. Market on Wednesday; 8 miles north-west of Birmingham. Population 5372.

WE'DNESDAY, s. [pɔbɛnɔɔ, Saxon; odensday, Swedish; woensday, Dutch; wensday, Icelandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothic nations from Woden or Odin.—Where is the honour of him that died on wednesday? Shakspeare.

WEDNESFIELD, a township of England, in the county of Stafford; 2 miles north-east-by-east of Wolverhampton. Population 1248.

WEDWAG, a small town of Middle Sweden, in the province of Nerike.

WEE, adj. [weinigh, Teut. little; wenig, Germ. Lye thinks it an abbreviation of the Sax. hpene, few.] Little; small: whence the word weasle or weasel is used for little; as a weasel face. In Scotland and the north of England, it denotes small or little; as, wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit.—Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face with a little yellow beard. Shakspeare.

WEEBOTUCK, a river of the United States, a branch of the Housatonic. It rises in the north-east part of New York, and joins the Housatonic, in Connecticut.

WEEBUCK CAPE, a cape on the east coast of Labrador. Lat. 55. 21. N. long. 58. 10. W.

WE'CHELM, s. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.—A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.

WEED, s. [pɛob, Saxon, tares] An herb noxious or useless.—If he had an immoderate ambition; which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.—[pæba, Saxon; waed, Dutch.] A garment; clothes; habit; dress. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning dress of a widow.

They meet upon the way
An aged sire in long black weeds yclad;
His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his book he hanging had.

Spenser.

It is used by Chapman for the upper garment.
The morning in her throne of gold,
Survaid the vast world, by whose orient light,
The nymph adorn'd me with attires as bright:
Her own hands putting on both shirt and weede. Chapman.

To WEED, v. a. To rid of noxious plants.—When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade. Bacon.—To take away as noxious plants.

—Oh Marcius,
Each word thou'st spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy! Shakspeare.

To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.—He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumized it from that most dangerous confederacy. Howell.—To root out vice.—Wise fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Ascham.

WE'EDER, s. One that takes away any thing noxious.
A weeder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakspeare.

WE'DERY, s. Weeds.
Hard by there was a place all cover'd o'er
With stinging nettles and such weedery. Merc.

WE'DHOOK, or WE'EDINGHOOK, s. A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.
In May get a wedhook, a crotch, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Tusser.

WE'EDLESS, adj. Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.

So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Domne.

WEEDON, a hamlet of England, in Buckinghamshire; 3 miles north of Aylesbury.—2. A village in Northamptonshire.

WEEDON BECK, sometimes called WEEDON-ON-THE-STREET, a village and parish of England, in the county of Northampton; 4 miles south-east of Daventry. Population 976.

WEEDON, LOY'S, or WEEDON PINKNEY, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; 6 miles west-by-south of Towcester.

WEEDON, UPPER, a hamlet of England, parish of Weedon Beck, Northamptonshire.

WE'EDY, adj. Consisting of weeds.
There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakspeare.

Abounding with weeds.
Hid in a weedy lake all night I lay,
Secure of safety. Dryden.

WEEFORD, a parish of England, in Staffordshire; 4 miles south-south-east of Lichfield.

WEEGSCHIED, a small town of Lower Bavaria; 12 miles east of Passau.

WEEK, s. [pɛoc, Saxon; wcke, Dutch; wecka, Swedish; from the M. Goth. wik, ordo. Serenius.] The space of seven days.—Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also. Gen.

WEEK, a hamlet of England in the parish of Binstead, Southamptonshire.—2. A parish of England, in Southamptonshire, near Winchester.—3. A hamlet of England, in the Isle of Wight, Southamptonshire.

WEEK, FITZPAINE, a hamlet of England, in Somersetshire.

WEEK, ST. LAWRENCE, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Axbridge.

WEEK, ST. MARY, a parish of England, in Cornwall. Population 612.

WE'EKDAY, s. Any day not Sunday.
One solid dish his weekday meal affords,
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.

WE'EKLY, adj. Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill. Dryden.
WE'EKLY,

WE'EKLY, adv. Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.—These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Ayliffe.

WEEKLY, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire, near Kettering.

WEEL, or WE'ELY, s. [wæl, Saxon.] A whirlpool. A Lancashire word. Ray.—A twiggen snare or trap for fish, [perhaps from willow.]—These fishes are taken generally by a little sein-net; especially the eels in weelics. Carew.

WEEL, a hamlet of England, East Riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles east of Beverley.

WEELSBY, a hamlet of England, in Lincolnshire, near Grimsby.

WEELEY, or WYLEY, a village and parish of England, in the county of Essex; 8 miles south-south-east of Manningtree. Population 1050.

WEEM, an extensive highland parish of Scotland, in Perthshire, in Breadalbane, so intermixed with the neighbouring districts, that no accurate idea can be given of its boundaries. Population 1372.

To WEEN v. n. [yenan, Sax.; waenen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.

Ah! lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,
Well may I ween your grief is wond'rous great. Spenser.

WEENAR, a town of Germany, in East Friesland, on the Ems; 16 miles south-south-east of Embden. Population 2300.

WEENDE, a village of Germany, in Hanover, on the Leine. Population 1100.

WEENINX (John Baptist), an excellent artist, was born at Amsterdam, in 1621, the son of John Weeninx, an artist of considerable celebrity. He lost his father when he was very young, and was placed by his mother with a bookseller; but his taste for painting manifesting itself decidedly, he was allowed to indulge it, and was placed as a disciple with John Micker, and afterwards with Ab. Bloemart. He made a rapid progress, and drew with superior power the principal buildings in Amsterdam and its vicinity. Animals, birds, huntings, &c. he was skilled in representing, and he soon began to paint his subjects with success. He left Bloemart, and studied a short time with Moojaert; but when he was 18, he found himself sufficiently established to trust to himself, and his pictures were favourably received.

A desire to improve led him to Rome, where his talents recommended him to many of the principal personages; among others, the cardinal Pamphili gave him a pension, and honoured him with many commissions: he would fain, indeed, have retained him at Rome, but the solicitations of his family, and his natural desire of exhibiting his power among his countrymen, induced him to return to Holland, after an absence of four years. On his return, he found abundant admiration and employment, which, indeed, he very well merited, as his extraordinary facility in painting a vast variety of subjects has rarely been equalled. He painted history, portraits, landscapes, sea-ports, animals, and dead-game; but he particularly excelled in Italian sea-ports, enriched with noble architecture, and decorated with figures. There is a very beautiful specimen of his power in the gallery of Cleveland-house, which in Britton's Catalogue is numbered 243. He unfortunately died very young, in 1660, being only 39 years old.

WEENINX (John), son of Baptist, mentioned above, was born at Amsterdam in 1644, and was instructed in painting by his father until he was 16 years of age, when he had the misfortune to lose that able instructor. His talent was not of so general a nature as that of his father: but in birds, flowers, animals and fruit, he has seldom been surpassed for the boldness, animation, and correctness of touch, or the brilliancy and clearness of colour, as well as of chiaro-scuro. The elector John William invited him to his court, and many of his most considerable productions are at the gallery of Dusseldorf. He decorated a hunting seat of the electors, the chateau of Bensberg, with a series of hunting of the boar and the stag, in which he displayed his skill and taste with brilliant effect. His smaller works are exquisitely finished, yet with great breadth, and deservedly esteemed. He died in 1719, at the age of 75.

To WEEP, v. n. preter. and part. pass. wept, weeped. [peopan, Sax.] To show sorrow by tears.

In that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping.
Shakspeare.

To shed tears from any passion.
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among. Shakspeare.

To lament; to complain.—They weep unto me, saying,
Give us flesh that we may eat. Numbers.

To WEEP, v. a. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.—If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. Shakspeare.—To shed moisture.

Thus was this place
A happy rural seat of various view,
Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balm.
Milton.

To drop.
Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

To abound with wet.—Rye-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds. Mortimer.

WE'EPER, s. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.

Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.

A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.
WE'EPINGLY, adv. With weeping; in tears.—She took her son into her arms weepingly laughing. Wotton.

WEERE, a small district of Hindostan, province of Cashmere, extending along the south side of the river Jhilum, which is here only 80 yards wide.

WE'ERISH, adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and washy; here it seems to mean sour; surly.—A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not wearish and crabbed, but fair and comely. Ascham.

WEERT, or WEERDT, an inland town of the Netherlands, on the river Brey: 10 miles west of Ruremonde. Lat. 51. 17. N. long. 5. 43. E. Population 5300.

WEES, or WEEZE, a town of the Prussian province of Cleves and Berg; 10 miles south of Cleves. Population 1400.

WEESP, a town of North Holland, on the Vechta; 8 miles south-east of Amsterdam. Population 900.

To WEET, v. n. preterite wot or wote. [witan, Saxon; weten, Dutch.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge. Obsolete.

I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet
We stand up peerless. Shakspeare.

WEETHLY, a parish of England, in Warwickshire; 3 miles south-west-by-west of Alcester.

WEETING, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 1½ mile north of Brandon Ferry, in Suffolk. Population 443.

WEETLESS, adj. Unknowing.
And now all weetlesse of the wretched stormes
In which his love was lost, he slept full fast. Spenser.

Unsuspected.

But

But the false archer, which that arrow shot
So slyly that she did not feel the wound,
Did smile full smoothly at her weelless wofull stound.

Spenser.

WEETON, a township of England, in Lancashire, near Kirkham.

WEETON, a township of England, West Riding of Yorkshire.

WEETWOOD, a hamlet of England, in Northumberland; 1 mile from Wooler.

WEEVERHAM, a township of England, in Cheshire; 3 miles west-by-north of Northwich. Population 1120.

WE'EVIL, s. [pepel, Sax.; vevel, Dutch; curculio, Lat.] A grub.—A worm called aweevil, bred under ground, feedeth upon roots; as parsnips and carrots. Bacon.

WE'EZEL, s. [See WEASEL.] I suck melancholy out of a song, as a weazel sucks eggs. Shakspeare.

WEFT. The old preterite and part. pass. of wave. Obsolete. Spenser.

WEFT, s. [gwaive, Fr.; wofa, to wander, Icel.; vagus, Lat.] That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manor.

His horse, it is the herald's weft;

No, 'tis a mare.

B. Jonson.

It is used by Bacon for waft, a gentle blast.—The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest smells are best in a weft afar off. Bacon.

WEFT, s. [pepta, Saxon; waeft, Su. Goth. from waefwa, to weave.] The woof of cloth.

WEFTAGE, s. [from weft.] Texture.—The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the wefage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew.

WEGELEBEN, a town of Prussian Saxony; 4 miles east of Halberstadt. Population 2000.

WEGG'S ISLAND, a small island in Hudson's bay. Lat. 63. 20. N. long. 90. 25. W.

WEGG'S LAKE, a lake of North America. Lat. 50. 25. N. long. 92. 25. W.

WEGGIS, a village of Switzerland, on the north side of the lake of Lucern.

WEGROW, a town of Poland; 47 miles east-by-north of Warsaw. Population 1700.

WEHEN, a small town of Germany, in Nassau; 14 miles north-north-west of Mentz.

WEHL, a town of the Prussian states, on the Rhine, in the duchy of Cleves. Population 1300.

WEHLAU, a town of East Prussia, at the junction of the Alle and the Pregel, with a bridge over the latter river; 23 miles east-by-south of Konigsberg. Population 2700.

WEHR, a river of Westphalia, which joins the Aa, at Hervorden.

WEHRAU, a village of the Prussian states, in Upper Lusatia, on the Queiss. Population 2200.

WEHRER, a town of Hanover; 20 miles east of Embden. Population 1900.

WEICHSELBURG, a town of Austrian Illyria, in Carniola; 9 miles east-south-east of Laybach. It contains 4000 inhabitants.

WEICHSELMUNDE, a small but strong fortress of West Prussia, near the mouth of the Vistula.

WEIDA, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Saxe-Weimar, on the river Weida; 34 miles east-south-east of Weimar. Population 1300.

WEIDA, a small river of Saxony, in the Vogtland, which joins the Elster, near Veitsberg.

WEIDA, a river of Prussian Silesia, which rises on the confines of Poland, and falls into the Oder; 9 miles below Breslau.

WEIDEN, a town of Bavaria; 42 miles north of Ratisbon. Population 2200.

WEIDEN, a small town of Bavarian Franconia; 4 miles east of Weiss Mayn.

WEIDENAU, a town of Austrian Silesia; 11 miles south-west of Neisse. Population 1600.

WEIDENBACH, a neat market town of Germany, in Bavarian Franconia; 5 miles south-south-east of Anspach.

WEIDENBERG, a large market town of Germany. Bavarian Franconia; 7 miles east-south-east of Bayreuth.

WEIGELIA [so named by Thunberg in honour of Christ. Ehrenfr. Weigel, author of Flora Pomerano-rugica], in Botany, a genus of the class pentandria, order monogynia.—Generic Character. Calyx: perianth five-leaved; segments awl-shaped, erect, equal. Corolla one-petalled, funnel-formed; tube villose internally, length of the calyx; border bell-shaped, half-five-cleft; segments ovate, obtuse, erect, spreading. Stamina: filaments five, inserted into the tube, filiform, erect, almost the length of the corolla. Anthers erect, linear, bifid at the base, obtuse at the tip. Pistil: germ four-cornered, truncate, smooth, superior. Style from the base of the germ, filiform, a little longer than the corolla. Stigma peltate, flat. Pericarp. Seed naked.—Essential Character. Calyx five-leaved. Corolla funnel-form. Style from the base of the germ. Stigma peltate. Seed one.

1. Weigelia japonica.—Stem shrubby; branches opposite, smooth, round, ash-coloured. Leaves sessile, ovate-lanceolate, an inch long, without any petioles. Flowers on the branches and at the axils; pedicels three, one-flowered, bracted. Corolla purple.—Native of Japan.

2. Weigelia coreensis. Branches decussated, smooth, ash-coloured, form erect patulous. Leaves serrate, acuminate, a hand in length. Petioles embracing, about an inch long.—Native of Japan.

WEIGELSDORF, a village of Prussian Silesia; 6 miles south of Reichenbach.

WEIGELHAUSEN, a small town of Germany, in Bavarian Franconia; 5 miles south-south-west of Schweinfurt.

To WEIGH, v. a. [pægan, Saxon; weyhen, Dutch.] To examine by the balance.

The Eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.

To be equivalent to in weight.

They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakspeare.

To pay, allot, or take by weight.—They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Zech.—To raise; to take up the anchor.

Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd
His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.

To examine; to balance in the mind; to consider.

I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer.
And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shakspeare.

To compare by the scales.

Here in nice balance truth with gold she weighs,
And solid pudding against empty praise. Pope.

To regard; to consider as worthy of notice.

I weigh not you——
You do not weigh me; that is, you care not for me. Shakspeare.

To WEIGH down. To overbalance.—Fear weighs down faith with shame. Daniel.

To WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.

In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.

To WEIGH, v. n. To have weight.—Exactly weighing and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown—To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.

balance.—This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge.

Locke.—To raise the anchor.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries.

Dryden.

To bear heavily; to press hard.

Can'st thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart?

Shakspeare.

To sink by its own weight.—The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.

WEIGHED, adj. Experienced.—In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

WEIGHER, s. One who weighs.—Any thing which weighs, or is considered important.—The worse [choice,] most an end, was the weigher. Milton.

WEIGHT, s. [wæzəd, Saxon; the third person singular of the indicative of wæzan: the weight of any thing, being that which it weigheth. Mr. H. Tooke.]—Quantity measured by the balance.

Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe:
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king:
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me.

Dryden.

A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.—When the balance is entirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run entirely into one. Swift.—Ponderous mass.—A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them; otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth; as we see in horseraces, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon.

All their confidence

Under the weight of mountains bury'd deep.

Milton.

Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck.

Dryden.

Pressure; burthen; overwhelming power.—Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight. Shakspeare.—Importance; power; influence; efficacy; consequence; moment.

How to make ye suddenly an answer,

In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
In truth I know not.

Shakspeare.

WEIGHTILY, adv. Heavily; ponderously; solidly; importantly.—Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously? Broome.

WEIGHTINESS, s. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness; solidity; force; importance.

WEIGHTLESS, adj. Light; having no gravity.

It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above.

Dryden.

WEIGHTY, adj. Heavy; ponderous.

You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe;
But sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty, that it stops her wheel.

Dryden.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1659.

Important; momentous; efficacious.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.

Shakspeare.

Rigorous; severe. Not in use.

If, after two days' shine, Athens contains thee,
Attend our weightier judgement.

Shakspeare.

WEIGSDORF, a village of Prussia, in Upper Lusatia; 8 miles north-north-east of Krottaw.

WEIKARTSCHLAG, a petty town of Lower Austria, on the river Theya.

WEIKENDORF, a town of Lower Austria; 16 miles north-east of Vienna.

WEIKERSDORF, a town of Germany, in Lower Austria; 22 miles west-north-west of Vienna.

WEIKERSHEIM, a town of the west of Germany, on the Tauber.

WEIL, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg, on the river Wurm; 11 miles west-south-west of Stutgard.—2. A small town of Switzerland; 16 miles west-by-north of St. Gall, near the Thur.—3. A well built village of Germany; 2 miles north of Bale. Population 1000.

WEIL IM SCHONBUCH, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg; 13 miles west of Stutgard. Population nearly 2000.

WEILBURG, a town of Germany, the chief place of the duchy of Nassau; 35 miles north-by-east of Mentz. Population 1800.

WEILD, a parish of England, in Southamptonshire; 6 miles west of Alton.

WEILHEIM, a village of Germany, in Baden, with 800 inhabitants.—2. A town of Germany, in Wirtemberg, with 2800 inhabitants; 19 miles east-south-east of Stutgard.—3. A walled town of Upper Bavaria, on the Amber. It has a castle; 26 miles south-west of Munich. Population 2000.

WEILMUNSTER, a village of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, with silver and copper mines; 29 miles north-by-east of Mentz.

WEILNAU, NEW and OLD, two petty towns of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau; 18 miles north-east of Mentz.

WEILTINGEN, a small town of Germany, in Bavaria; 42 miles south-west of Nuremberg.

WEIMAR, SAXE, a small but independent state of the interior of Germany, with the title of a grand duchy. It consists of several districts, the surface of which, when added together, form an area equal to one of our larger counties, viz., 1450 square miles, with somewhat more than 200,000 inhabitants. The whole is divided into two parts or provinces: 1st, the province of Weimar comprehends the duchies of Weimar and Jena, with part of the principality of Altenburg, the chief part of the circle of Neustadt, and the petty districts of Ilmenau, Oldisleben, and Alstadt, which lie scattered in Thuringia. The extent of this province is 970 square miles; its population above 135,000. The other, called the province of Eisenach, comprises the duchy of that name, with some districts to the east of the Hesse-Cassel territory, acquired in 1815. The area is 480 square miles; the population above 66,000.

Of the province of Weimar, the most hilly part is the district of Ilmenau; other parts, without being rugged, have sufficient diversity of prospect to be beautiful and romantic, particularly the valley of Jena. It is in that valley only that vines succeed, the rest of the province being deficient in warmth. The soil being in general fertile, yields corn enough for consumption; and the pastures on the hills feed numerous flocks of sheep; but the larger cattle are less attended to; and the manufactures are insignificant. The province of Eisenach is more mountainous, and consequently less productive, than that of Weimar. Its chief wealth is in its forests, its pasturages, its mines, and quarries. Hemp and flax are reared; but the growth of corn is inadequate to the consumption. Manufactures of linen and hardware are carried on to some extent. The grand duke is a member of the Germanic confederation, and bears, as well as his eldest son, the title of royal highness. The revenue is about 150,000 a year. The military are reduced at present to 1000 men.

WEIMAR, the capital of the preceding grand duchy, is situated on the banks of the river Ilm; 50 miles west-south-west of Leipzig. In the early years of the present century, Weimar reckoned among its residents above 20 writers of note, at the head of whom were Schiller, Goethe, Herder, Wieland, and, for a time, Kotzebue. The public institutions of Weimar, if not numerous or extensive, are useful and well managed.

WEINGARTEN, a town of Germany, in Baden; 18 miles south-south-east of Spire, and 7 east-north-east of Carlsruhe. Population 2700.

WEINHEIM, a town of Germany, in Baden, and the Lower Palatinate, on the Weischnitz. It contains 4100 inhabitants; 10 miles north of Heidelberg.

WEINITZ, a market town of Austrian Illyria, in Lower Carniola, on the river Culpa; 10 miles east-north-east of Gotschee.

WEINMANNIA [so named in honour of Joh. Wilh. Weinmann, apothecary at Ratisbon, author of Phytanthozochmographia, 1735], in Botany, a genus of the class octandria, order digynia, natural order of saxifragæ (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx, perianth four-leaved; leaflets ovate, patulous. Corolla: petals four, equal, bigger than the calyx. Stamina: filaments eight, erect, short. Anthers roundish. Pistil: germ roundish. Styles two, length of the stamens. Stigmas acute. Pericarp: capsule ovate, two-celled, two-beaked. Seeds about eight, roundish.—Essential Character. Calyx four-leaved. Corolla four-petalled. Capsule two-celled, two-beaked.

1. Weinmannia glabra.—Leaves pinnate; leaflets obovate, crenate, even. This is a small tree with opposite branches, the last of which are subpubescent. Flowers numerous, white, the same size as Tiniarella. Pedicels one-flowered, several from each point of the peduncle.—Native of Jamaica.

2. Weinmannia hirta.—Leaves pinnate; leaflets ovate, serrate-crenate, beneath and on the racemes hirsute.—Native of Jamaica, on the top of the blue mountains in the southern parts of the island; also in Montserrat.

3. Weinmannia tomentosa.—Leaves pinnate; leaflets ovate, quite entire, tomentose underneath; stipules caducous. This is a very branching leafy tree with a brownish bark.—Found in New Granada.

4. Weinmannia trifoliata.—Leaves ternate; leaflets elliptic-lanceolate, serrate, very smooth; panicles compound.—Native of the Cape of Good Hope.

5. Weinmannia racemosa.—Leaves simple, obovate-elliptic, obtuse, toothed; racemes smooth.—Native of New Zealand.

6. Weinmannia parviflora.—Leaves simple, oblong, acuminate, toothed; racemes rough-haired, terminating, panicked.—Native of the island of Otaheite.

WEIR, one of the smaller Orkney islands, containing about 65 inhabitants. It had formerly a church, which is now in ruins; 2 miles south of Rousa.

WEIRD, adj. [from wynb, peapb, Sax. fate: the plural means the fates, who are called the weird sisters in Gawan Douglas's Virgil. G. Chalmers.] Skilled in witchcraft.

The weird sisters hand-in-hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about.

Shakspeare.

WEISENAU, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt. Population 900.

WEISENHEIM AM SAND, a town of the Bavarian province of the Rhine, near Frankenthal. Population 1200.

WEISSACH, a village of Germany in Wirtemberg. Population 1000.

WEISSBACH, UPPER, a village of Germany, in the principality of Schwartzburg-Rudolstadt. Population 1000.

WEISSE (Christian-Felix), a German poet, was born in 1726, at Annaberg, in Saxony, and educated, first at the Gymnasium of Altenburg, and afterwards at Leipsic. The objects to which his taste most powerfully inclined him were poetry and the drama; and he and his friend Lessing concurred in translating for the stage from French and English works, and afterwards in furnishing original compositions. He also contended with his friend in lyric poetry. After completing his course of education, he became private tutor in a family of distinction at Leipsic, pursuing his dramatic and poetical career, and gaining a great degree of popularity. He also edited the Bibliothèque of Belles Lettres, when Nicholai surrendered it. Although, in 1761, he obtained a place in the revenue at Leipsic, he prosecuted his employment as a writer for the stage; and when he became the father of a family, he directed his attention to education, and published several pieces in this department: particularly in 1772, a collection of short tales and moral maxims, which had a considerable circulation; and in 1775 he revived a weekly publication, which Adelung had discontinued, under the title of the "Children's Friend." This work became afterwards a quarterly publication, and between the years 1775 and 1782, passed through five editions. From this popular work Berquin derived the idea of his "Ami des Enfans," and he was indebted to it for many of his materials. As Weisse's children grew to maturity and settled in the world, he altered the plan of his work, and continued it under the form of Lettres; and Berquin also followed him in his "Ami des Adolescentes." In 1790 the beautiful estate of Stotteritz near Leipsic, which Weisse inherited, placed his family in affluent circumstances, and furnished him with a pleasant residence. Towards the latter part of his life he contributed short fables and poetical tales to journals and periodical publications, which were well received, and at length closed his life with reputation, in December, 1804. His dramatic works, which were continued to five volumes, are said to have formed an epoch in the history of the German stage, and both his translations and original compositions were well received. — Gen. Biog.

WEISSENAU, a large village of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, on the Rhine.

WEISSENBERG, a town of Germany, in Saxony and Upper Lusatia, near Bautzen.

WEISSENBOURG, a town of France, in Alsace, on the river Lauter; 14 miles south-by-west of Landau. It has 4100 inhabitants.

WEISSENBURG, a walled town of Germany, in Bavarian Franconia. It has some manufactures of jewellery, pins, and needles; 46 miles west of Ratisbon. Population 3300.

WEISSENBURG, UPPER, or FELSŐ FEJER VÁRMEGYE, a county of Transylvania, made up of several scattered tracts making in all an area of 640 square miles.

WEISSENBURG, a township of the United States, in Lehigh county, Pennsylvania. Population 1046.

WEISSENFELS, a town of Prussian Saxony, on the Saale; 20 miles west-south-west of Leipsic. Population nearly 4000.—2. A small town of Austrian Illyria, in Carniola; 4 miles west-south-west of Tarvis.

WEISSENHORN, a town of Germany, in Bavaria, on the river Roth; 8 miles south-east of Ulm. Population 1200.

WEISSENSEE, a town of Prussian Saxony; 11 miles north of Erfurt. Population 1700.

WEISSENSEE, a lake of Austrian Illyria, in Carinthia, near the Drave.

WEISSENSTADT, a town of Bavarian Franconia, on the Eger; 17 miles north-east of Bayreuth. Population 1000.

WEISSENTHURN, a small town of the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine, situated on the Rhine, opposite to Neuwied.

WEISSERITZ, a river of Germany, which rises in Bohemia, and joins the Elbe, near Dresden.

WEISSIA [from Frid. Guil. Weiss, author of Plantæ Cryptogamicæ Floræ Gottigenensis], in Botany, a genus of moss. See ORTHOTRICHUM, vol. xvii.

WEISSKIRCHEN, a town of Hungary, in what is called the military part of the Bannat of Temesvar; 58 miles south-by-east of Temesvar.

WEISSKIRCHEN,

WEISSKIRCHEN, or HRANICE, a town of Moravia; 20 miles east of Olmutz. It has 3300 inhabitants.

WEISSMAGN, a town of the Bavarian states, on the White Main; 14 miles north-north-east of Bamberg. Population 1000.

WEISSWASSER, a town of Austrian Silesia; 4 miles south-west of Patschkau. Population 1100.—2. A town of Bohemia; 6 miles north-west of Jung-Bunslau. Population 1100.

WEISWELL, a neat village of Germany; 17 miles north-west of Freyburg. Population 1200.

WEISSWELLER, a village of Prussian Westphalia, near Eschweiler. Population 800.

WEISTRITZ, a river of Prussian Silesia, which rises in the Riesengebirge, passes by Schweidnitz, and falls into the Polnitz.

WEITBRUCH, a village of France, in Alsace, with 800 inhabitants.

WEITRA, or WEITRACH, a town of Lower Austria; 75 miles west-north-west of Vienna. Population 1500.

WEITRAFELD, a town of Germany, in Lower Austria; 49 miles north-north-west of Vienna. Population 800.

WEITZ, a town of the Austrian states in Styria; 11 miles north-east of Gratz. Population 800.

To WEIVE, v. a. [now written wave, and sometimes waioc.] To decline; to withdraw; to forsake.

Baptisme they receive,
And all their false goddess weiven. Gower.

WELANG, a small island in the Eastern seas. Lat. 1. 25. S. long. 130. 30. E.

WE'LAWAY, interj. [from the Saxon exclamation palapa, woe on woe: from welaway is formed by corruption weladay.] Alas.

Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light! Spenser.

WELBECK, a hamlet of England, in the county of Nottingham, near Worksop.

WELBORNE, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 6½ miles north-north-west of Wymondham.

WELBOURNE, a parish of England in Lincolnshire; 9½ miles north-west of Sleaford.

WELBURN, a township of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west-by-west of New Malton.—2. Another township in the above Riding; 4½ miles east of Helmesley.

WELBURY, a township of England, in Yorkshire; 6½ miles north-north-east of Northallerton.

WELBY, a township of England, in the county of Leicester, 2½ miles north-west-by-west of Melton Mowbray.—2.

A parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 4½ miles east-by-north of Grantham.—3. A post village of the United States, in Prince George county, Maryland.

WELCH BIGNOR, a village of England, in Monmouthshire, near Monmouth.

WELCH HAMPTON, a parish of England, in Salop; 3 miles from Ellesmere.

WELCH MOUNTAIN, a mountain of the United States, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania.

WELCH NEWTON, a parish of England, in Herefordshire, near Monmouth.

WELCH WITTLE, a parish of England, in Lancashire; 6 miles from Wigan.

WELCOME, adj. [bien venu, French; picume, Saxon; welkom, Dutch.] Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.

I serve you, madam:
Your graces are right welcome. Shakespeare.

To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.—Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome. Bacon.

WELCOME, interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.

Welcome, he said,

O long expected to my dear embrace.

Dryden.

WE'LCOME, s. Salutation of a new comer.—Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing. Shakespeare.—Kind reception of a new comer.

I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome.

Shakespeare.

To WE'LCOME, v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.

I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard.

Shakespeare.

WE'LCOME to our house, s. [lactusa marina, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

WELCOME BAY, a bay on the west end of the island of Java. Lat. 6. 35. S. long. 105. 30. E.

WE'LCOMENESS, s. Gratefulness.—Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown elder, by having been enjoyed so many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period. Boyle.

WE'LCOMER, s. The saluter or receiver of a new comer.—Farewel, thou woeful welcomer of glory. Shakespeare.

WELD, a township of the United States, in Oxford county, Maine.

WELD, or WOULD, s. [luteola, Latin.] Yellow weed, or dyer's weed.—Many colouring materials,—as red-wood, weld, woad. Obs. on Dyeing.

To WELD, for To WIELD.—Those that weld the awful crown. Spenser.

To WELD, v. a. [wella, Swed. the same. Serenius.] To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.—Sparkling or welding heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doubling into one another. Moxon.

WE'LDER, s. [A term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from To wield, to turn or manage: whence wielder, welder.] Manager; actual occupier.—Such immediate tenants have others under them, and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives miserably. Swift.

WELDON, GREAT, a market town and parish of England, in the county of Northampton, near the river Willy. It has a handsome market-house, and a sessions-house over it. Market on Wednesday, and four annual fairs; 28 miles north-east of Northampton.

WELDON, LITTLE, a hamlet of England, in Northamptonshire, adjoining the village of Great Weldon. Population 442.

WELEDIA, a village of Upper Egypt, on the Nile; 5 miles north of Siut.

WE'LFARE, s. Happiness; success; prosperity.—If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Ad-dison.

WELFORD, a parish of England, in Berkshire; 5½ miles north-west of Speenhamland. Population 906.—2. A parish of England, in the county of Gloucester; 9 miles north of Chipping Campden. Population 477.—3. A hamlet of England, in the parish of Kempford, Gloucester.

WELFORD, or WELLESFORD, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; 15 miles north-north-west of Northampton. Population 1024.

WELHAM, or WELLANDHAM, a parish of England, in Leicestershire; 4 miles north-east-by-north of Market Harborough.

WELHAM, a hamlet of England, in Yorkshire; 1½ mile south of New Malton.

WELITSCHNA, a populous town of Hungary; 32 miles north of Neusohl.

To WELK, v. a. [Of this word in Spenser I know not well the meaning: pealcan, in Saxon, is to roll; wolken, in German, and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, or whilk, is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Whilk is used for a small shell-fish. Johnson.—The contemporary commentator on Spenser explains welked by shortened or impaired: and to this agrees our elder language: "The lond now welketh, and now it groweth." Gower, Conf. Am. Prol.—It seems in Spenser, both active and neuter.] Now sad Winter welked hath the day. Spenser.

To WELK, v. n. To dry; to wither. North.—Mown grass in drying for hay is said to welk. Grose.—Thus in our old lexicography "welkyng, marcior; welkyd, marcicidus." Pr. Faro.

WE'LKED, adj. Set with protuberances. Properly, I believe, whelked, from whelk.

Methought his eyes
Were two full moons: he had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea. Shakspeare.

WE'LKIN, s. [from pealcan, to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Sax.] The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood:
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves. Shakspeare.

Their hideous yells
Render the dark welkin. Philips.

WE'LKIN eye, is, I suppose, blue eye; sky-coloured eye. Johnson.—Not so, but a rolling eye, equally applicable to an eye of any colour. [pealcan; Saxon, to roll.] Tooke.

Yet were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain.
Shakspeare.

WELL, s. [pelle, pœll, Saxon.] A spring; a fountain; a source.

Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton.

A deep narrow pit of water.—Now up, now down, like buckets in a well. Dryden.—The cavity in which stairs are placed.—Hollow newelled stairs are made about a square hollow newel: suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of stairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Moxon.

To WELL, v. n. [ptallan, Sax.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.

From his two springs,
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Dambea rolls his infant stream. Thomson.

To WELL, v. a. To pour any thing forth.
To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation. Spenser.

WELL, adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.] Not sick; being in health.

Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach. Shakspeare.
Happy.

Mark, we use
To say the dead are well. Shakspeare.

Convenient; advantageous.—This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too, if it extended itself to common conversation. Locke.—Being in favour.—He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the fourth. Dryden.—Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.

I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well. Shakspeare.

WELL, adv. [wil, Gothic; pell, Saxon; wel, Dutch; wel, Icel.] Not ill; not unhappily.

Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play. Prior.

Not ill; not wickedly.—My bargains, and well-worn thrift he calls interest. Shakspeare.—Skilfully; properly; in a laudable manner.—Beware and govern well thy appetite. Milton.—Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.—'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well. Dryden.—Not insufficiently; not defectively.—The plain of Jordan was well watered everywhere. Genesis.—To a degree that gives pleasure.—I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters' work. Bacon.—With praise; favourably.—All the world speaks well of you. Pope.—Well is sometimes like the French bien, a term of concession.—The knot might well be cut, but untied it could not be. Sidney.—Conveniently; suitably.

Know,
In measure what the mind can well contain. Milton.

To a sufficient degree: a kind of slight sense.—A private caution I know not well how to sort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour. Wotton.—It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.—Well, let's away, and say how much is done. Shakspeare.—As well as. Together with; not less than.—Long and tedious, as well as grievous and uneasy courses of physic, how necessary soever to the cure, much enfeeble the patient, and reduce him to a low and languishing state. Blackmore.—Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.—Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue. Ecclus.—Well nigh. Nearly; almost.—I freed well nigh half the angelic name. Milton.—Well enough. In a moderate degree; tolerably. It is used much in composition to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.

Well-apparelled April on the heel
Of limping Winter treads. Shakspeare.

He rails
On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift,
Which he calls interest. Shakspeare.

WELL, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 1½ mile south-south-west of Alford.—2. A parish of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south of Bedale.

WE'LLADAY, interject. [This is a corruption of welaway. See WELAWAY.] Alas.—O welladay, mistress Ford, having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion. Shakspeare.

WELLAND, a parish of England, in Worcestershire, near Upton-upon-Severn.

WELLAND, a river of England; takes its rise in the county of Northampton, which it separates from those of Leicester, Rutland, and Lincoln. It passes by Market Harborough, Market Deeping, Spalding, &c., below which last place it enters the Wash. It is navigable by locks from Stamford downwards.

WELLAND RIVER, formerly called CHIPPEWA, a beautiful river of Upper Canada, which falls into the Niagara. It flows through a remarkably fertile country for about 40 miles, and is wholly free from falls.

WELLBE'ING, s. Happiness; prosperity.

For whose wellbeing
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton.

WELLBO'RN, adj. Not meanly descended.
Heav'n, that wellborn souls inspires,
Prompts me through lifted swords, and rising fires,
To rush undaunted to defend the walls. Dryden.

WELLBRE'D, adj. Elegant of manners; polite.—Both the poets were wellbred and well-natur'd. Dryden.

WELLCOMBE, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 17 miles south-west-by-west of Bideford.

WELLDONE,

WELLDONE, interject. A word of praise.—Well-done, thou good and faithful servant. St. Matth.

WELLED SEEDY, the name given to a numerous tribe of Arabs, inhabiting the southern frontier of Tunis.

WELLESBOROUGH, a hamlet of England, in Leicestershire; 2½ miles west-by-south of Market Bosworth.

WELLESBOURNE HASTINGS, a village and parish of England, in Warwickshire; 5½ miles north-west of Kington. Population 538.

WELLESLEY'S ISLANDS, a group of islands, so called by captain Flinders, at the head of the gulf of Carpentaria, on the north coast of New Holland. They consist of Mornington isle, Pisonia, Bentinck, Sweer's island, and several other small and rocky islets.

WELLFARE, s. Happiness; prosperity.—They will ask, what's the final cause of a king? And they will answer the people's welfare. Certainly a true answer; and as certainly an imperfect one. Holyday.

WELFAVOURED, adj. Beautiful; pleasing to the eye.—His wife seems to be wellfavoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer. Shakspeare.

WELFLEET, a post town and sea-port of the United States, in Barnstable county, Massachusetts, on a bay of the same name; 31 miles east-north-east of Barnstable, and 97 south-east of Boston. Population 1402.

WELLHAUGH, a township of England, in Northumberland, parish of Simonburn.

WELLHEAD, s. Source; fountain; spring.

From dame Nature's fruitful pap
Their wellheads spring.

Spenser.

WELLING, a hamlet of England, in Kent, situated at the bottom of Shooter's Hill.

WELLINGBOROUGH, a market town of England, in the county of Northampton, is disposed along the slope of a hill, nearly a mile to the north of the river Nen. It was made a market town by a charter from King John, and such of the monks of Croyland as formerly possessed the manor. The greater part of the houses having been erected subsequently to a dreadful fire, which happened in the year 1738, are neatly built, of a kind of sand-stone, from quarries in the neighbourhood; and from the situation of the ground, the streets are generally clean. The church is a large building, having at its west end a tower, surmounted by a handsome spire. The name of the town, which is Saxon, is supposed to have been derived from its ancient medicinal springs; and one called Redwell was in great repute in the 17th century. It issues out at the foot of the hill, in an open field about half a mile west of the town. Its chief trade is in corn. Market on Wednesday. Fairs, Easter-Wednesday, Whit-Wednesday, and 18th October; 11 miles north-east-by-east of Northampton, and 67½ north-north-west of London. Population 3999.

WELLINGHAM, a parish of England, in Norfolk, 6½ miles south-west-by-south of Fakenham.

WELLINGLEY, a hamlet of England, in Yorkshire; 4½ miles north-west-by-west of Bawtry.

WELLINGORE, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 9½ miles north-west-by-north of Sleaford.

WELLINGTON, a parish of England, in Herefordshire; 5½ miles north of Hereford.—2. A village of England, in Sussex; 2 miles from Lewes.—3. A large and populous market town of England, in the county of Somerset, near the eastern border of Devonshire. It consists of four streets, the principal of which is called the High-street, and is very wide and spacious, being about half a mile in length. It is a place of considerable trade; 20 miles west-south-west of Somerton, and 149½ west-south-west of London. Population 3874.—4. A market town of England, in Shropshire. The town of late years has been much improved, and contains many good houses. It has a good market on Thursday. Fairs 29th of March, 22d of June, 29th of September, and 17th November; 11 miles east-by-south of Shrewsbury, and 144 north-west of London. Population 8390.—5. A township of the United States, in Bristol county, Massachusetts, on the west side of Taunton river; 2 miles north of Dighton, 3 south of Taunton, and 35 south of Boston.

VOL. XXIV. No. 1659.

WELLMANNERED, adj. Polite; civil; complaisant.—By which well-mannered and charitable expressions, I was certain of his sect before I knew him. Dryden.

WELLMEANER, s. One who means well.—Well-meaners think no harm. Dryden.

WELLMEANING, adj. Having a good intention.—Only may I be allowed to be a plain and well-meaning monitor. Killingbeck.

WELLMET, interj. A term of salutation.

Once more to-day wellmet, distemper'd lords;
The king by me requests your presence straight.

Shakspeare.

WELLNATURED, adj. Goodnatured; kind.

On their life no grievous burthen lies,
Who are wellnatur'd, temperate and wise:
But an inhuman and ill-temper'd mind,
Not any easy part in life can find.

Denham.

WELLNIGH, adv. Almost.

The same so sore annoyed has the knight,
That wellnigh choaked with the deadly stink,
His forces fail.

Spenser.

WELLNO, a small town of Prussian Poland, in the government of Posen.

WELLOP, a river of England, in Northumberland, which runs into the Wear, near St. John's Chapel.

WELLOW, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 4 miles south-by-west of Bath. Population 728.—2. A parish of England, in Nottinghamshire; 1½ mile south-east-by-east of Ollerton.

WELLOW, EAST, a parish of England, in Southamp-tonshire, situated on the borders of Wiltshire; 3½ miles west of Romsey.

WELLOW, WEST, a hamlet in the foregoing parish, and adjoining thereto.

WELLS (William Charles), F.R.S., I. and E., licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians, London, and one of the physicians to St. Thomas's Hospital, was the son of parents who left Scotland and settled in Carolina, in 1753, born in Charlestown, South Carolina, in May, 1757. Few lives have been more diversified by incident and more sedulously devoted to literary and scientific pursuits, and therefore more entitled to notice in our biographical sketches than the subject of this article. Before he had attained the age of seven years, he was sent to a considerable grammar-school at Dumfries, where he remained nearly two years and a half; and in the autumn of the year 1770 he removed to Edinburgh, and attended several of the lower classes of the university. At this early age he had the good fortune to become acquainted with Mr. David Hume and Sir William Miller, since known by the title of Lord Glenlee, whose friendship he afterwards cultivated and valued, and whose kind offices he gratefully acknowledged. In 1771, he returned to Charlestown, and was apprenticed, in the medical profession, to Dr. Alexander Garden, whose name is well known among naturalists; and during three years of the time he was with this gentleman, he pursued his studies with such diligence, that he acquired perhaps more knowledge than in any three subsequent years of his life. Soon after the commencement of the American war, in 1775, he came to London. The occasion of his removal was his refusal, from conscientious motives, to sign a paper denominated "The Association," which was drawn up in order to unite the people in a resistance to the claims of the British government. At the commencement of the winter of that year he went to Edinburgh, and entered upon his medical studies, with the view of taking a degree. To his former two friends, with whom he had kept up a regular correspondence, he had now the happiness of adding a third, no less intimate and constant than the others, Dr. Robertson Barclay.

6 N

Having

Having pursued his studies for three winters, and passed his preparatory trials in the summer of 1778, he left Edinburgh without graduating, and returned to London, where he attended a course of Dr. William Hunter's lectures, and became a surgeon's pupil at Bartholomew's hospital. In 1779 he went to Holland as surgeon to a Scotch regiment, in the service of the United Provinces; but receiving offensive treatment from the commanding officer, he resigned his commission, and challenged the aggressor, under the unjust charge of military insubordination, for which an attempt was made to punish him; but without receiving the satisfaction which he demanded, he went to Leyden in the beginning of the year 1780, and there prepared an inaugural thesis on the subject of "Cold," which was published at Edinburgh in the close of that year, on occasion of his taking the degree of doctor in medicine.

In the beginning of the year 1782, Dr. Wells visited Carolina, then in the possession of the king's troops, for the purpose of arranging the affairs of his family; and whilst he was there, he sustained a variety of offices, seemingly very incompatible with each other, and which no person destitute of his versatile talents and peculiar activity could have satisfactorily performed. He was an officer in a corps of volunteers, a printer, a bookseller, and a merchant, a trustee for the management of the affairs of some of his father's friends in England, and on one occasion a judge-advocate. In December, 1782, when the king's troops were obliged to evacuate Charlestown, he removed to St. Augustine, in East Florida, and there edited the first weekly newspaper that had been published in that country, having brought with him a printing-press, which had been taken to pieces for the convenience of carriage, and which he contrived, with the assistance only of a negro-carpenter, to refit for use. During his residence in Florida, he became captain of a corps of volunteers, and manager of a company of officers, who had agreed to act plays for the relief of the poorest of the loyal refugees from Carolina and Georgia, and occasionally an actor himself. In 1784, he removed from St. Augustine to London, and becoming acquainted with Dr. Baillie, commenced an intimate, steady, and affectionate friendship, the benefits of which he experienced till his death. Having spent three months at Paris in the year 1785, he returned to London in the autumn of that year, and settled as a physician in this city. His father had resided in London from the commencement of the American war, and had amassed a fortune of 20,000*l.*; but by misfortunes in trade his circumstances were now embarrassed, so that Dr. Wells, at the outset of his profession, was obliged to raise money by loans, amounting to 600*l.* For the first few years after settling in London, he scarcely took a fee, and after having been engaged for ten years in the exercise of his profession, his receipts from every source did not amount to 250*l.* per annum. However, in the next five years he was able to pay part of his debt, and before his death he had the satisfaction of having paid the whole of it, both principal and interest; and it should be mentioned to his honour, that when his income was very limited, he allowed an annuity of 20*l.* to a poor relation.

In 1788 he was admitted a licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians in London; and he took part with those who asserted their eligibility and right of admission to the class of fellows. After the decision of this claim in the court of king's bench, he applied, in 1797, for examination, so that if he were found to be fit, he might be returned a fellow. But this application was unavailing; and yet about four years before his death, the president of the college sent him a message, expressing a wish to know if he had any desire to become a fellow; to which he replied in the negative. In 1790, he was appointed a physician to the Finsbury Dispensary, in which connection he remained till the year 1798. In 1793, he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society; and in 1800, he became physician of St. Thomas's hospital, having been assistant physician from the year 1798. In the year 1800 he was seized with a slight fit of apoplexy; but by adopting a very abstemious mode of living, he escaped any subsequent attack. From this time, however, his health declined.

In 1812, he commenced some experiments on dew, and after he had an opportunity of pursuing them, he wrote an "Essay" on the subject, which was published in August, 1814, the year in which he was admitted into the Royal Society of Edinburgh; and in 1816, the Royal Society of London adjudged to him the honour of the gold and silver medals of Count Rumford's donation for this essay. Although from the year 1814 to the commencement of his last illness his health was in some respects improved, he was afflicted with painful and threatening symptoms. These symptoms became gradually more alarming; and though in his last illness some hopes were entertained by his medical friends, Dr. Baillie and Dr. Lister, of his recovery, yet on the 8th of August he was suddenly seized, whilst he was sitting up, with the sensation of a tremulous motion in the chest, which he referred to the heart, from which time his illness intermitted. "After this," says his biographer, "no expectation was entertained of his recovery. His life was continued until the evening of the 18th of September, 1817; and until the near approach of its termination, his mind was clear and active, and his spirits calm and cheerful."

Our limits will merely allow our enumerating his principal publications. Of his political papers we shall only mention one, which was written in 1781, by the desire of the commandant of the garrison of Charlestown, general Nesbit Balfour. The object of this paper was to shew, by military usage, and the nature of the case, that persons in the American service who, after having been taken prisoners and sent to their homes under their military paroles, and who appeared again in arms against the British government, subjected themselves to the punishment of death. This paper was frequently published in the newspapers, and it is probable that it was owing to this publication that general Balfour and lord Moira thought themselves justified in putting to death a colonel Haynes, the propriety of which act was afterwards a subject of debate in the British parliament. The philosophical pieces of Doctor Wells were the following: viz. "An Essay upon single Vision with Two Eyes," 1792; "Two Letters, in reply to Dr. Darwin's Remarks in his Zoonomia upon what Dr. Wells had written in his Essay upon Vision, on the apparent Rotation of Bodies which takes place during the Giddiness occasioned by turning ourselves quickly and frequently round," 1794, contained in the Gentleman's Magazine for September and October; "A Paper upon the Influence which incites the Muscles to contract in Mr. Galvani's Experiments," 1795; "Experiments upon the Colour of the Blood," 1797; "Some Experiments and Observations on Vision," 1811; all published in the Philosophical Transactions. "An Essay upon Dew," 1811; "An Answer to Remarks in the Quarterly Review upon the Essay on Dew," and "An Answer to Mr. Prevost's Queries respecting the Explanation of Mr. B. Prevost's Experiments on Dew," 1815; "A Letter to Lord Kenyon relative to the Conduct of the Royal College of Physicians of London, posterior to the Decision of the Court of King's Bench, in the Case of Dr. Stanger;" "A short Letter on the Condensation of Water upon Glass," 1816; which three last appeared in Dr. Thomson's Annals of Philosophy. Some "Biographical Sketches by Dr. Wells," appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine. Almost all his writings upon medical subjects are contained in the second and third volumes of the Transactions of a Society for the Promotion of Medical and Chirurgical Knowledge.

WELLS, a city of England, in the county of Somerset, situated at the southern base of the Mendip hills, which shelter it on the north, while fertile and extensive meadows range to the south, the east, and west. The country is very diversified and picturesque. Several hills rise abruptly from the low grounds, and form insulated conical mounts. Some of these are covered with woods; others are inclosed and cultivated to the tops; and some are terminated by bare crags. Its noble cathedral, and St. Cutlibert's church, with their rising

rising towers, give to the city an air of dignity and grandeur, and deeply impress the religious visitant with feelings of piety and veneration. The cathedral, the greater part of which, as it now stands, was erected in the early part of the 13th century, by bishop Joceline de Wells, has always been considered one of the most splendid specimens of religious architecture in England. The plan of this edifice is in the form of a cross. Its internal length from east to west is 381 feet, and its breadth 131. In the centre of the transepts rises a large quadrangular tower, 178 feet high, the base of which rests upon four arches, with inverted arches, and large massy piers. The length of the nave is 190 feet, which is separated from the two side aisles by 18 clustered pillars, nine on each side, supporting pointed arches. The extent, from the choir to the altar, is 111 feet. Behind the latter is the truly elegant chapel of the Blessed Mary, which is 52 feet in length, and 35 in breadth, ornamented with large windows, of the most beautiful and delicate workmanship, and filled with splendid specimens of painted glass. The western front is flanked by two smaller towers, 125 feet in height. This front is esteemed one of the finest and most splendid pieces of ecclesiastical architecture in Europe. It is adorned with a great variety of figures, of exquisite workmanship, placed in ornamented niches, with canopies, supported by elegant slender pillars of Purbeck marble. At the top are the images of the twelve apostles, and below them are the hierarchs, popes, princes, and bishops. One whole line of this front is occupied in the display of a curious grotesque representation of the resurrection, in which are expressed the various attitudes of the resuscitated bodies, emerging from their earthly mansions. The larger statues, which adorn the lower part of this front, are also interspersed with other scriptural representations, portrayed in groups of high relief. Each side of the great buttresses is filled with figures, as large as life, of kings, queens, abbots, popes, and cardinals. Southward, a short way from the cathedral, stands the bishop's palace, a noble old building, of an august and venerable appearance, and more resembling the fortified mansion of a military baron, than the residence of a peaceful minister of religion. Its walls encompass a space of seven acres of ground, and are flanked by bastion towers at the angles. A deep fosse, or moat, supplied with water from St. Andrew's well, surrounds the whole; and on the north side is a bridge and stately gate-house serving as an entrance to the exterior court. On the east side of the court is the dwelling-house, containing several large and handsome apartments, with an elegant chapel. On the east side of the city is a spacious open market-place, where formerly stood a curious cross, built in 1342. Near the site of this cross stood a conduit, erected by bishop Beckington, about the year 1451, which has lately given place to a tasteless structure in the form of a triangle. The water of this conduit, which supplies the city, is conveyed by leaden pipes, from an aqueduct, also the gift of bishop Beckington, situated near the source of St. Andrew's spring, between the cathedral and the bishop's palace. The name of this city is said to be taken from a remarkable spring called St. Andrew's well, rising near the palace, and emitting a copious stream, which, after filling the moat, thence flows through the south-west part of the town. Wells was first incorporated in the reign of Richard I. and created into a free borough by a charter of king John, by the title of the master and commonalty of the borough of Wells; but in the reign of queen Elizabeth, the corporation was formed, as it now consists, of a mayor, recorder, 7 masters, and 16 common councilmen. It returns 2 members to parliament, elected by a mayor, masters, burgesses, and freemen; number of voters about 500; returning officer the mayor; about 2 miles north-west of Wells is a remarkable cavern in the rocks, under the Mendip hills, called Wookey Hole. It is entered by a small aperture, near the base of an almost perpendicular rock, which rises nearly 200 feet. The whole length of this cavern is at least 600 feet, and it is separated into several varied compartments. Market on Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs 14th May, 25th July, 25th October, and 30th November; 19 miles south-west from Bath, 20 from Bristol, and 121 west-by-south of London.—2. A small seaport town of England, in the county of Norfolk. It has a harbour at the mouth of a small river, but difficult of access, owing to the shifting sands; 34 miles north-west-by-north of Norwich, and 118½ north-north-east of London. Population 2683.—3. A town of West Florida, situated on the west side of St. Andrew's bay. Lat. 30. 25. N. long. 85. 50. W.—4. A post township of the United States, in York county, Maine, about 10 miles long, and 7 broad; 88 miles north-north-east of Boston. Population 4489.—5. A township of the United States, in Rutland county, Vermont; 50 miles north of Bennington.—6. A post village of the United States, in Beaufort district, South Carolina.—7. A township of Montgomery county, New York; 40 miles north of Johnston.—8. A river of the United States, in Vermont, which rises in Groton, and runs into the Connecticut, north of Newbury.

WELLS' CREEK, a river of the United States, in Kentucky, which runs into the Ohio. Lat. 38. 47. N. long. 84. 27. W.

WELLS' FALLS, a cataract of the United States, in the river Delaware; 13 miles north-west of Trenton.

WELLS' PASSAGE, an inlet on the west coast of North America, branching off from Broughton's archipelago.

WELLSBOROUGH, a post township of the United States, and capital of Tioga county, Pennsylvania: 45 miles north-by-west of Williamsport.

WELLSBURG, formerly CHARLESTOWN, a post town of the United States, in Brooke county, Virginia; 24 miles west-north-west of Washington.

WELLSPE'NT, adj. Passed with virtue.

The constant tenour of their wellspent days,
No less deserv'd a just return of praise.

Pope.

WELLSPOKEN, adj. Speaking well; speaking finely; speaking gracefully; speaking kindly.—A knight well-spoken, neat, and fine. Shakspeare.

WELLSRING, s. [wellgerpuz, Saxon.] Fountain; source.—Understanding is a wellspring of life. Prov.

WELLWILLER, s. One who means kindly.—Disarming all his own countrymen, that no man might shew himself a wellwiller of mine. Sidney.

WELLWISH, s. A wish of happiness.—Let it not enter into the heart of any one that hath a well-wish for his friends or posterity, to think of a peace with France, till the Spanish monarchy be entirely torn from it. Addison.

WELLWISHER, s. One who wishes the good of another.—No man is more your sincere wellwisher than myself, or more the sincere wellwisher of your family. Pope.

WELMICH, a small town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, on the Rhine.

WELNETHAM, GREAT and LITTLE, adjoining parishes of England, in the county of Suffolk, near Bury St. Edmund's.

WELNEY, a parish of England, in the Isle of Ely, Cambridgeshire, situated among the Fens, on the river Wen.—2. A hamlet in the county of Norfolk, near Downham.

WELS, a small town of Germany, in Upper Austria, on the Traun; 17 miles south-south-west of Lintz, and 108 west of Vienna. Population 3800.

WELSCH-BIRKEN, a town of Bohemia; 5 miles north-north-west of Prachatitz. Population 900.

WELSE, a small river of Prussia, in the Ucker Mark of Brandenburg. It falls into the Oder; 4 miles below New Angermunde.

WELSH, adj. Relating to the people or country of Wales.—Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy! Shakspeare.

WELSH; s. The people of Wales.—Datian said that he was provoked to it by the Welshman, who pretended that the Welsh were an ancients people than the Jews. Addison.

WELSHPOOL, a market town of North Wales, in Montgomeryshire.

gomeryshire. It is pleasantly situated on the eastern boundary of the county, in the picturesque and fertile vale of the Severn, through which that river runs at the distance of nearly a mile from the town, on the south-east, being here about 35 miles from its source on Plinlimmon. The town consists principally of one long, wide, and spacious street, has a gentle declivity; and has a clean and imposing appearance to those who visit it, after having passed through the principality. It is governed by two bailiffs elected annually, a high steward, recorder, &c. The present charter was granted by Charles II. The church has been erected since the time of the civil wars, and contains no monuments of any interest. It is only remarkable for not being built in conformity with the points of the compass, which may be accounted for from the situation of the ground on which it stands, which rises immediately above it on the north-west, and is so steep, that the upper part of the church-yard is on a level with the roof.

The scenery of the surrounding country is very fine, and abounds in delightful views, many of which are extensive, and are generally terminated by a back ground of mountains, some of which are highly picturesque. There are few finer situations than Powis castle, which stands on a partial eminence, about a mile to the south-west of the town, encompassed by noble timber, and commands the surrounding country. It is a very perfect specimen of the fortified castles erected along the Welsh marches, during the conflicts of the English and Welsh. It was built during the 12th century, by the princes of Powisland; and was frequently the scene of those hot and sanguinary battles which distinguish the border history of those times. It still retains its original dimensions, though the interior has undergone some modern improvements; but its massy towers and rude magnificence impress the beholder with a lively idea of feudal grandeur. Offa's dyke, the ancient boundary between England and Wales, runs along the opposite bank of the Severn, at a short distance. Several spots in this neighbourhood are distinguished as the sites of ancient battles. There are also some tumuli and other Celtic remains. The market day is on Monday. Fairs, 2d Monday in March, 3d Thursday in April, June 5th, 1st Monday after 10th July, 12th September, 1st Monday after September 20th, for butter and cheese, and 16th November; 18 miles west-south-west from Shrewsbury, and 169 from London. Population of the parish, 3460.

WELT, s. [wel, Sueth. pannus vel linteum convolutum. Serenius.] A border; a guard; an edging. Little low hedges made round like wells, with some pretty pyramids; I like well. Bacon.

To WELT, v. a. To sew any thing with a border.—The bodies and sleeves of green velvet, welted with white satin. Shelton.

To WELTER, v. n. [weltern, Teut. weltra, Sw. veaultret, Fr. volutare, Lat. pæltan, Sax. waltjan, M. Goth. It is observable that walter is the old Engl. word. "Walteringe and walowinge, volutatio." Pr. Parv. See also Barret's Alv. 1580. And the second definition of the word before us.] To roll in water or mire.

He must not float upon his wat'ry bicr
Unwept, nor welter to the parching winds. Milton.

The companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
He soon discerns; and welt'ring by his side
The next himself. Milton.

To roll voluntarily; to wallow.—Such hopes and such principles of earth, as these wherein she welters from a young one, are the immediate generation both of a slavish and tyrannous life to follow. Milton.

WELTON, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 6 miles north-by-east of Lincoln. Population 368.—2. Another parish in the same county; 4 miles from Louth.—3. A parish in Northamptonshire; 3 miles north-north-east of Daventry. Population 509.—4. A township in Staffordshire, near Leek. Population 593.—5. A parish in the East Riding of Yorkshire, near Howden.—6. A township in Northumberland; 9 miles east-north-east of Hexham.

WELTON IN THE-MARSH, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 5 miles east-north-east of Spilsby.

WELWYN, a parish of England, in Hertfordshire, situated on the small river Moran. Dr. Young was rector of this place; and here was the scene of his melancholy effusions, called "The Night Thoughts;" 8 miles west-north-west of Hertford. Population 1130.

WELZHEIM, a small town of Germany, in Wirtemberg; 23 miles east of Stutgard. Population 1300.

To WEM, v. a. [wemman, Sax.] To corrupt; to vitiate; to spot.—The verie crounes and sceptres of best monarks and princes had bene rustie, wembde, and warpde with oblivion. Drant.

WEM, s. [wem, Sax.] A spot; a scar. It hadde no wem, ne ryveling, or ony such thing. Wicliffe.

WEM, a market town of England, in the county of Salop. It is pleasantly situated near the source of the river Roden. It consists of one large open street, with a few smaller ones. The church is a handsome structure, with a lofty tower steeple, and a chancel. Market on Thursday, and three annual fairs; 9 miles north of Shrewsbury, and 164 north-west of London. Population 1395.

WEMBDON, a parish of England, in Somersetshire, near Bridgewater.

WEMBURY, a parish of England, in Devonshire, north-east of Plymouth, near the mouth of the river Yalm. Population 450.

WEMBWORTHY, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 3½ miles south-south-west of Chumleigh.

WEMDAL, a village of Sweden, in the government of Gefleborg; 120 miles west-north-west of Sundswal.

WEMDING, a town of Bavaria; 10 miles north of Donauworth. Population 2100.

WEMYSS, a parish of Scotland, in Fifeshire, on the coast of the frith of Forth. Its greatest length is about 6 miles, and its greatest breadth is 1½. Population 3761.

WEMYSS, EASTER, a village in the above parish; 1 mile east of Wester Wemyss, and 1 west of Buckhaven. Population 640.

WEMYSS, WESTER, a burgh of barony in the above parish; 1½ mile east of Dysart, and 1 west of East Wemyss. It is governed by two bailies, a treasurer, and council.

WEMYSS POINT, a cape of Scotland, on the coast of the county of Renfrew, in the Clyde. Lat. 55. 51. N. long. 5. W.

WEN, s. [wen, Sax.] A fleshy or callous excrescence, or protuberance.

A promontory wen with griesly grace,
Stood high upon the handle of his face. Dryden.

WENCH, s. [The Sax. wen, Goth. queus, a girl, a wench, a woman; whence our quean.] A young woman. Now—how dost thou look now? Oh ill-starr'd wench!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl,
Ev'n like thy chastity. Shakspeare.

A young woman in contempt; a strumpet.

Do not pray in wench-like words with that
Which is so serious. Shakspeare.

A strumpet.—It is not a digression to talk of bawds in a discourse upon wenches. Spectator.

To WENCH, v. n. To frequent loose women.—They asked the knight whether he was not ashamed to go wenching at his years. Addison.

WENCHER, s. A fornicator.—He must be no great eater, drinker, or sleeper; no gamester, wencher, or fop. Grew.

WENCHLIKE, adj. After the manner of wenches. Huloet.

To WEND, v. n. [wendan, Sax.] To go; to pass to or from. This word is now obsolete, but its preterite went is still in use.

Back to Athens shall the lovers wend

With league, whose date till death shall never end.

Shakspeare.

To turn round. It seems to be an old sea term.—A ship of 600 tons will carry as good ordnance as a ship of 1200 tons; and though the greater have double the number, the lesser will turn her broadsides twice, before the greater can wend once. Raleigh.

WENDEL, ST., a small town of Germany, in the part of the French department of the Sarre assigned to Saxe-Coburg. It stands on the Blies; 29 miles south-east of Treves. Population 1400.

WENDELL, formerly SAVILLE, a township of the United States, in Cheshire county, New Hampshire; 22 miles north-east of Charlestown, and 38 west-north-west of Concord. Population 447.—2. A township of the United States, in Franklin county, Massachusetts; 13 miles east of Greenfield, and 80 west of Boston.

WENDELSTEIN, a market town of Germany, in Bavarian Franconia, on the Schwarzach; 9 miles south of Nuremberg.—2. A mountain of Germany, in Bavaria, in the circle of the Iser, 1100 feet in perpendicular height.

WENDEN, a principality of Germany, in the grand duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, lying contiguous to Brandenburg and Pomerania.

WENDERTON, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Wingham, county of Kent.

WENDISHAYN, a large village of Saxony, in the circle of Leipsic, bailiwick of Leisnig.

WENDLEBURY, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire; 3 miles south-west of Bicester.

WENDLING, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 4 miles west of East Dereham.

WENDLINGEN, a small town of Germany, in Wirtemberg, at the confluence of the Lauter and Neckar, with 900 inhabitants; 12 miles east-south-east of Stutgard, and 33 west-north-west of Ulm.

WENDON, GREAT AND LITTLE, united parishes of England, in Essex; 2½ miles south-west-by-west of Saffron Walden.

WENDON, LOFTS, or LOWTH, a small village in the same county, about 2 miles from the foregoing.

WENDOVER, a market town and borough of England, in the county of Buckingham. It is but an inconsiderable place, consisting chiefly of mean brick houses, and possesses no trade or manufacture of any consequence, except lace-making, from which the inhabitants derive their chief support. Market on Tuesday and Thursday, and two annual fairs; 7 miles south-east of Aylesbury, and 35 west-by-north of London.

WENDRON, ST., a parish of England, in Cornwall; 3 miles north-east-by-north of Helstone. Population 3555.

WENDY, a parish of England, in Cambridge; 6½ miles west of Royston.

WENER, a large lake of Sweden, bounded along its different shores by the provinces of Warmeland, Dalecarlia, and West Gothland. It is between 70 and 80 miles long, and upwards of 25 broad. Its surface is about 150 feet above the level of the Categat. It is divided into two parts by a long neck of land. The only river that flows out of it is the Gotha-Elf. The coasts of the lake are lined with a multitude of islands, which are for the most part inhabited and cultivated. The scenery is pleasant, particularly on the side of West Gothland.

WENERSBORG, a town of Sweden, in the province of West Gothland, situated on a bay, near the efflux of the Gotha-Elf from the lake of Wener; 52 miles north of Gottenburg. Lat. 58. 26. N. long. 12. 9. E. Population 1500.

WENHAM, GREAT AND LITTLE, two adjoining parishes of England, in Suffolk; about 5 miles south-east-by south Hadleigh.

WENHAM, a post township of the United States, in Essex county, Massachusetts; 16 miles north of Salem, and 21 north-east of Boston. Population 554.

WENHASTON, a parish of England, in Suffolk, near Halesworth. Population 710.

WENINGS, a small town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel; 35 miles east-north-east of Frankfort on the Maine.

WENLOCK, MUCH OR GREAT, a market town and borough of England, in the county of Salop. The town is ill built and consists only of two streets. It is a very ancient corporation, and is said to have been the first town which sent members to parliament, by a writ from Edward IV. in 1478, when it sent one member, but now returns two, in conjunction with Broseley and Little Wenlock. The town is noted for its quarries of limestone; but in the reign of Richard II. it was as famous for its copper mines. Great Wenlock owes much of its celebrity to the remains of an ancient abbey, subsequently converted into a monastery for Cluniacs; the remains of which shew it to have been a structure of great magnificence. Fragments of this opulent monastery are scattered to a great distance. The whole precinct included 30 acres. Market on Monday, and four annual fairs; 12 miles south-east of Shrewsbury, and 147 north-west of London. Population 2079.

WENLOCK, LITTLE, a parish of England, adjoining to, and included within, the borough of Much Wenlock. Population 941.

WENLOCK, a township of the United States, in Essex county, Vermont; 65 miles north-east of Montpelier.

WENMAN, one of the Gallipago islands in the Pacific ocean.

WENNE, ST., a parish of England, in Cornwall; 4 miles from St. Columb Major.

WE'NNEL, s. An animal newly taken from the dam.

Pinch never thy wennels of water or meat,
If ever ye hope for to have them good neat.

Tusser.

WENNINGTON, a parish of England, in Essex; 2 miles from Purfleet.—2. A hamlet in Huntingdonshire; 5 miles north of Huntingdon.—3. A township in Lancashire; 5½ miles south-by-east of Kirkby Lonsdale.

WE'NNISH, or WE'NNY, adj. Having the nature of a wen.—The incision of a wennish tumour. Wotton.

WENSLEY, a parish of England, in the North Riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles from Leyburn.—2. A hamlet of England, in Derbyshire; 3½ miles west-north-west of Matlock.

WENSYSSEL, a peninsula of Denmark, in Jutland, bounded on the south by the canal of Aalborg, and on the north and west by the German ocean.—2. Also a small town of Denmark, in Jutland, on the above peninsula; 18 miles north-west of Aalborg.

WENT, pret. [See WEND and GO.]

WENT, s. Way; course; path.

By wondrous skill and many hidden wayes

To the three fatal sisters' house she went,

Farre under ground from tract of living went. Spenser.

WENT, a river of England, in Yorkshire, which runs into the Don.

WENTBRIDGE, a hamlet of England, in Yorkshire; 4½ miles south-east-by-east of Pontefract.

WENTERSWYK, or WINTERSWYK, an inland town of the Netherlands, near the Prussian frontier, on the Sling; 25 miles west-south-west of Zutphen. Population 5700.

WENTNOR, a parish of England, in Salop; 4½ miles north-east-by-east of Bishop's Castle. Population 592.

WENSSEM, or WANSUM, a river of England, in Norfolk, which falls into the Yare, near Norwich.

WENTWORTH (Thomas), Earl of Strafford. See ENGLAND.

WENTWORTH, a township of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire.—2. A parish of England, in the isle of Ely, Cambridgeshire; 4 miles south-west-by-west of Ely.—3. A post township of the United States, in Grafton county, New Hampshire; 15 miles north-west of Plymouth, and 53 north-north-west of Concord. Population 645.

WENTWORTH MOUNTAINS, a range of mountains of the United States, in New Hampshire, extending from Bethlehem on the Connecticut, to the White mountains. Height about 3000 feet.

WENOO, a parish of Wales, in Glamorganshire; 5 miles from Cardiff.

WENWICK, a parish of England, in Huntingdonshire; 7 miles from Oundle.

WEOBLEY, a market town and borough of England, in the county of Hereford. It is situated in a fruitful county. The town is not incorporated, but is governed by two constables, and returns two members to parliament, chosen by householders of 20*l.* rent and upwards, paying scot and lot. The constables are the returning officers. An inconsiderable market on Tuesday, and three annual fairs; 8 miles north-west of Hereford.

WEONARD'S, Str., a parish of England, in Herefordshire; 7½ miles west-by-north of Ross. Population 545.

WEFFER (John-James), an eminent physician, was born in 1620 at Schaffhausen, educated at Strasburg and Basil, and after visits to several universities in Italy, took the degree of doctor at Basil, and settled in his native place. His reputation was extensive in Switzerland and Germany, and he attained, by his dissections and experiments, a high rank among those who have contributed to improve medical science. In 1658 he published a celebrated work, entitled "Observationes Anatomicæ ex Cadaveribus eorum quos sustulit Apoplexia, cum Exercitatione de ejus loco affecto," 8vo., often reprinted, and in some editions with the title "Historia Apoplecticarum." In his "De dubiis Anatomicis Epistola," 1664, 8vo., he asserts the entire glandular structure of the liver, prior to Malpighi. Another valuable work is entitled "Cicutæ Aquaticæ Historia et Noxæ," 1679, 4to.

His papers were published by two of his grandsons, in a work entitled "Observationes Medico-Practicæ de affectibus Capitis internis et externis," 1727, 4to. To the Ephemerides Naturæ Curiosorum, of which society he was a member, he communicated several valuable papers. Haller.

WEPT, pret. and part of wcep.—She for joy tenderly wcpt. Milton.

WERAD, a town of Hindostan, province of Bejapore, belonging to the Mahrattas. Lat. 17. 39. N. long. 73 48. E.

WERBACH, a town of Germany; 8 miles south-east of Wertheim. Population 1000.

WERBEN, a town of Prussian Saxony, on the Elbe; 5 miles north-west of Havelburg. Population 1600.

WERBERG, a small town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel; 12 miles south-south-east of Fulda.

WERCHOWKA, a small town of European Russia, in the government of Podolia.

WERD, a small island in the Rhine, in the Swiss canton of Thu-gau, near Stein.

WERDAU, a town of Germany, in Saxony, on the Plisse; 6 miles west of Zwickau. Population 3000.

WERDEN, a town of Prussian Westphalia, on the Roer; 11 miles north-east of Dusseldorf. Population 2100.

WERDENBERG, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gall, on the Rhine, and chief place of a small district; 8 miles north of Sargans. Population 4000.

WERDENFELS, a district of the Bavarian states, in the circle of the Isar, among the Alps, bordering on Tyrol.

WERDER, a lake of Austrian Illyria, in Carinthia, near Clagenfurt, nine miles long. A canal extends from it to Clagenfurt.

WERDER, a town of Prussia, in the Middle Mark of Brandenburg, on an island in the Havel; 4 miles west of Potsdam. Population 1500.

WERDO, a market town of Austrian Illyria, in Istria; 6 miles south-east of Pedena.

WERE, of the verb. To be. The plural in all persons of indicative imperfect, and all the persons of the subjunctive imperfect, except the second, which is wert.

He had been well assur'd that art
And conduct were of war the better part.

Dryden.

WERE, s. A dam. See WEAR.—O river! let thy bed be turned from fine gravel to weeds and mud; let some unjust niggards make weres to spoil thy beauty. Sidney.

WEREHAM, a parish of England, in Norfolk, near Stoke Ferry. Population 424.

WERFFEN, a town of Upper Austria, on the river Salza, which, including its parish, has 1200 inhabitants; 26 miles south-south-west of Salzburg.

WERGELA, or WURGLAH, a populous town of the Bled el Jereede, to the south of Algiers, the remotest on this side of the desert; 300 miles south of Algiers.

WERL, a town of the Prussian states, in the duchy of Westphalia. It has several large salt-works; 19 miles west-south-west of Lippstadt. Population 2300.

WERMELSKIRCHEN, a well built village of Prussian Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg. Population, with its parish, 4100.

WERNE, a small river of Prussian Westphalia, in the principality of Paderborn. It falls into the Weser.

WERNE, a small town of Prussian Westphalia, on the Lippe; 19 miles south of Munster. Population 1300.

WERNECK, a village of Germany, in Bavarian Franconia; 18 miles north-north-east of Würzburg.

WERNER (Abraham Gottlob), a celebrated mineralogist, and professor of mineralogy at Freyburg, in Saxony, was born on the 25th of September, 1750. His father was inspector of an iron-work in Upper Lusatia, and at an early period intended to educate his son for the same employment. The first scanty rudiments of his education were received at a school at Bunsleür. He was afterwards sent to the Mineralogical Academy at Freyburg, and from thence to the university of Leipsic, where he applied himself to the study of natural history and jurisprudence; but the former he found more attractive, and it was here that he employed himself in defining the external characters of minerals, for which he was endowed by nature with a singular quickness of perception. At this place he published, in 1774, his work on the external characters of minerals, which was considered as the basis of his oryctognostic or mineralogical system. (See MINERALOGY.) It has been translated into various languages, but Werner could never be persuaded to publish a new and enlarged edition. "In this work," says professor Jameson, "he gave the first example of the true method of describing mineral species. In these descriptions, all the characters presented by the species suite are detailed with a certain degree of minuteness, and in a determinate order; so that we have a complete picture of it, and are furnished with characters that distinguish it from all known species, and from every mineral that may hereafter be discovered." It cannot be denied, that, previous to this time, the descriptive language of mineralogists had been much too indefinite to convey accurate information, or to enable mineralogists in distant countries to understand each other. Soon after this publication, Werner was invited to have the care of the cabinet of natural history at Freyburg, and to read lectures on mineralogy.

This situation, so well suited to the peculiar studies in which he was engaged, offered abundant materials for the exercise of his talent for observation and classification. In 1780 he published the first part of a translation of Cronstedt's Mineralogy. In his annotations on this work, he gave the first sketch of his mineralogical system, and published many descriptions in conformity with the methods proposed in his treatise on external characters. In this system we find earthy minerals divided into four genera, siliceous, argillaceous, talcaceous, and calcareous; and these subdivided into species, sub-species, and kinds.

In 1791 he published a catalogue of the great mineral collection of Pabst Von Ohaine, captain-general of the Saxon mines. In this work he gave a tabular view of the whole mineralogical system, in which the arrangement of genus, species, sub-species, and kinds, is continued; several additions are made to the external characters, and the arrangement of the species is in some instances changed, owing to more extended observations. Werner, besides his lectures on mineralogy, also delivered lectures on the art of mining, which he is said to have rendered extremely intelligible by his simplification of the machinery, and by drawings and figures. His system of geognosy, or geology, was delivered in his lectures, but never published by himself. He caused his lectures to be written out by his approved scholars, and by revising them himself made them his own in manuscript. Many parts of these lectures have been published in different countries by his pupils. Werner also published some mineralogical papers in the Miner's Journal; and in 1791 appeared his new theory of the formation of metallic veins. This work was translated into French by Daubuisson, and into English in 1809.

Werner was appointed counsellor of the mines in Saxony in 1792, and had a great share in the direction of the Mineralogical Academy, and in the administration for public works.

The cabinet of minerals collected by Werner was unrivalled for its completeness and arrangement, consisting of 100,000 specimens. This he sold for 40,000 crowns, reserving the interest of 33,000 as an annuity to himself and his sister, who had no children; and at her death to be paid annually to the Mineralogical Academy of Freyburg.

This illustrious mineralogist died, August, 1817, greatly regretted by all those who were personally acquainted with him, to whom he was endeared by the simplicity of his manners, the cheerfulness and benevolence of his disposition, his integrity and disinterested devotion to science. Werner was never married. His favourite pursuit next to mineralogy, appears to have been the study of antiquities, one branch of it, the numismatology of the ancients, had, during the last eight years of his life, engaged much of his attention; and he had formed a collection of 6,000 Greek and Roman coins, which enabled him to make researches into the different mixtures of the metals and the arts of adulteration; and to make the subject more clear, he arranged entire series of false coins.

Werner may justly be said to have contributed more to extend and improve the practical knowledge of mineralogy, than any one who had preceded him. His method of observing and describing the external appearances of minerals, has been introduced by his pupils, with some modifications, into various parts of the world, and has given a new and more definite form to the science. It has, indeed, been objected to the method of Werner, that consisting principally in the classification of minerals according to their external characters, and in the description and arrangement of these characters, it may be regarded rather as an empiric art, than a science. But in the mineral kingdom those definite characters are wanting, which serve to distinguish the genera and species in the other departments of natural history; and he who can but relieve this difficulty, and enable the student most easily to gain a knowledge of minerals under all these varying forms, is entitled to the highest praise. This palm may be pre-eminently given to Werner; and whoever has justly appreciated his labours will never stop to inquire, whether his method should rank among the sciences or the arts. Mr. Kirwan was the first who introduced a knowledge of the Wernerian mineralogy into this country; but for a more complete knowledge of it, we are indebted to professor Jameson, in his System of Mineralogy, first published in 1804, and in the second edition of 1817.

As a geologist, we cannot allow to Werner the same degree of unmixed praise. His system of geognosy was formed on observations made on a very limited portion of the earth's surface in his own vicinity; and he has laid down a succession of rock-formations as universally spread over the globe, because these rocks occurred in this order in a particular part of Saxony. Subsequent observations have, however, demonstrated, that even at a little distance from Freyburg, many of the supposed universal rock-formations are not to be found, and that other rocks supply their place. The reader may consult a description of the Saxon Erzgebirge, by M. Bonnard, in the Journal des Mines for 1815, to convince himself of this. It is, we consider, fortunate for Mr. Werner's fame as a geologist, that no work of his on the subject has appeared, except the "New Theory of Veins." This for some time enjoyed a certain degree of celebrity from the name of the author; but the new information which it contains is very scanty, and the theory, which it supports so inadequate to explain the phenomena, and so much at variance with facts, that it was in a great part abandoned by many of the warm admirers of Werner, even some years before his death. It will now scarcely meet with a supporter among those who have any practical knowledge of mineral veins. Mr. Werner contended for the aqueous formation of almost every kind of rock, even pumice-stone and obsidian he maintained were the products of water; and when he was repeatedly invited to visit the volcanic districts of Italy and the ancient volcanoes of France, he declined an examination which might have greatly endangered his own theory. The followers of Werner as a geologist rest his fame not on his local observations, but on his attempt to generalize his observations, in order to form a theory which should explain the structure of the earth and the mode of its formation. Indeed, such was their admiration, that they would not admit his system to be a theory, but considered it as an exposition of demonstrated facts. "This great geognost," says Mr. Jameson, "after many years of the most arduous investigations, conducted with an accuracy and acuteness of which we have few examples, discovered the manner in which the crust of the earth is constructed. Having made this great discovery, he, after deep reflection, and in conformity with the strict rules of induction, drew most interesting conclusions as to the manner in which the solid mass of the earth may have been formed. It is a splendid specimen of investigation, the most perfect in its kind ever presented to the world." (Jameson's Mineralogy, first edition, vol. i. p. 22.) We believe there are few persons who will not now admit that the admiration and praise here bestowed, were disproportioned to the object, whether we regard the merit of Mr. Werner's observations for accuracy as a geologist, or the conformity of his theory with existing appearances.

The method of investigation pursued by Werner in attempting to trace the rocks in a district in succession, from the lowest or fundamental rock to the uppermost stratum, and marking the limits of each rock where it terminates on the surface, was considered by his followers as entirely his own, and was called by them the method of the Wernerian geognosy. But this method had been known and practised in England long before we were acquainted with the name of Werner; indeed it is the only one which preceding geologists could practically adopt in surveying a country. On a smaller scale, it had been practised by all intelligent coal-viewers; and it had been exhibited on a larger scale by Mr. Whitehurst, in the descriptions and plates which he has given in his "Theory of the Earth." Saussure followed no system; yet wherever the order of succession was apparent, he has not failed to inform us. But the country which he investigated, (Switzerland,) presents enormous masses, frequently in much apparent confusion, the order of succession being hid by debris or by glaciers. In other instances, whole mountains composed of different rocks appear to have been formed contemporaneously. Saussure, who had no theory of any regular order of succession to support, has simply described facts as they exist. Our own countryman William Smith, had been long employed in tracing the limits and order of succession of the strata in the midland and eastern counties of England, before the Wernerian geognosy was known either in England or Scotland.

The originality of the Wernerian geognosy consisted more in the invention of a new language adapted to support a theory, than in the discovery of a new and practical method of investigation. The language is highly objectionable in many respects, as the terms are founded on the premature assumption of the relative ages and modes of formation of different rocks;—facts which are far from being yet clearly ascertained.

Whatever may be the defects of the Wernerian system, as given us by his scholars, and however premature many of the generalizations may have been, it was of use by directing the attention of observers in various parts to an examination of its accordance with facts. Though the different rocks which Mr. Werner has described as universal formations neither occur invariably in the order of succession which he has described, nor are universally spread over the earth's surface; yet there is a certain similarity between the geological arrangement of distant countries when viewed on a large scale, which indicates that similar processes of formation had taken place, and nearly in the same order in remote parts of the globe; but we are far from knowing whether these processes were universal and simultaneous, or local and successive.
which

WERNERSDORF, a village of Prussian Silesia, in the circle of Bolkenhayn, with 1000 inhabitants.

WERNETH, a township of England, in Cheshire, near Macclesfield. Population 1034.

WERNIGERODE, a district, with the title of county, in the Prussian states, in Upper Saxony, lying between the principality of Halberstadt and the states of Brunswick and Hanover. Its area is about 100 square miles; its population 13,000. It lies in the Hartz forest, and is consequently full of mountains and romantic spots.

WERNIGERODE, a town of Prussian Saxony, and the chief place of the above county. It stands on a small stream called the Zillicherbach, at the north extremity of the Hartz. It is divided into the Old and New towns, and the suburb of Nessenrode; contains 5100 inhabitants; 25 miles south-south-east of Wolfenbuttel, and 12 west-south-west of Halberstadt.

WERNITZ, a river of the Bavarian states, which rises near Rothenburg, and runs into the Danube, near Donauwert.

WERNSDORF, a small town of Germany, in Saxony; 23 miles east of Leipsic. Population 1000.

WERNSDORF, a village of Bohemia, with a castle. It has also a manufacture of fire-arms; 3 miles north-west of Kadan.

WERNSTADTL, a town of Bohemia; 38 miles north of Prague. It has extensive cotton manufactures. Population 1400.

WERRA, a considerable river of Germany, which has its source in the forest of Thuringia. At Allendorf it becomes navigable for small boats, and at Munden joins the Fulda, after which the united stream takes the name of the Weser.

WERRAY, a river of Wales, in Cardiganshire, which runs into the Irish channel, near Arth; about 7 miles south of Aberystwith.

WERRE, a small river of Germany, which rises in the county of Lippe, flows through Herforden, and falls into the Weser.

WERREAR, or WUDDYAR, a district of Hindostan, province of Gujerat. It is situated on the shores of the Runn, and abounds with rich pastures, which enable the farmers to breed a great number of cattle, horses, and sheep. Poultry are also in great abundance.

WERRINGTON, a parish of England, in Devonshire, near Launceston. Population 491.—2. A township in Northamptonshire, near Peterborough.

WERSE, a small river of Prussian Westphalia, in the principality of Munster, which falls into the Ems near Tellingt.

WERSTADT, a town of Germany in Hesse-Darmstadt, district of the Rhine. It is neatly built. Population 1200.

WERT, the second person singular of the subjunctive imperfect of To be.—All join'd, and thou of many wert but one. Dryden.

WERTACH, a river of Bavaria, which falls into the Lech below Augsburg.

WERTH, weorth wyrth. Whether initial or final in the names of places, signify a farm, court, or village, from the Saxon weorth, used by them in the same sense. Gibson.

WERTH, a small town of Bavaria, on the Danube; 12 miles east of Ratisbon.

WERTHEIM, a county of Germany, in Franconia, lying chiefly to the south of the Maine, and now subject to the grand duchy of Baden, but held in property by the prince and count of Lowenstein Wertheim. Its area is about 110 square miles. It is fertile in corn and wine, the latter being accounted the best in Franconia. Population 12,000.

WERTHEIM, a town of Germany, in Baden, the capital of the circle of the Maine and Tauber, and of the above county; 20 miles west of Wurzburg. Lat. 49. 44. 15. N. long. 13. 13. 15. E.

WERTHER, a town of Prussian Westphalia; 5 miles north-north-west of Bielefeld. Population 1200.

WERTINGEN, a town of Germany, in Bavaria; on the Zusam; 14 miles north-north-west of Ulm. Population 1400.

WERVIN, a small village of England, in Cheshire, near Dalamere Forest.

WE'SAND, s. [pajen, Saxon. This word is very variously written; but this orthography is nearest to the original word.] The windpipe; the passage through which the breath is drawn and emitted; the larynx.

The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck aslant; he spurns the ground,
And the soul issues through the weazon's wound. Dryden.

WESCHNITZ, a small river of Germany, which rises in the Odenwald, passes Weinheim, and falls into the Rhine, near Stein.

WESEL, or LOWER WESEL, a town of the Prussian states, in the duchy of Cleves, at the confluence of the Lippe and the Rhine. It is a place of old date, having formerly belonged to the Hanseatic confederacy; 25 miles east-south-east of Cleves.

WESEL BAY, a bay on the south coast of the island of Java. Lat. 8. 21. S. long. 113. 42. E.

WESELY, a town of Bohemia; 62 miles south-by-east of Prague. Population 1000.—2. A town of Moravia, on an island in the March, with 2400 inhabitants; 40 miles south of Olmutz.

WESEN, a small town of Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gall, at the western extremity of the lake of Wallenstadt; 7 miles south of Utnzach.

WESENBERG, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Mecklenburg Strelitz; 7 miles south-south-west of New Strelitz. Population 1000.

WESENHAM, ALL SAINTS, or SOUTH, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 7½ miles south west of Fakenham.

WESENHAM, ST. PETER, or NORTH, a parish in the above county, adjoining the foregoing.

WESENITZ, a small river of Saxony, which falls into the Elbe, near Pirna.

WESENSTEIN, a large village of Saxony, on the Elbe; 8 miles south-south-east of Dresden.

WESER, one of the principal rivers of Germany. It is formed by the junction of the Werra and the Fulda, at Munden; flows through the territories of Hanover, Brunswick, Prussia, Bremen, and Oldenburg; and runs into the German ocean, between the last mentioned principality and the province of Bremen. Ships go up the stream as far as Vegesack, and boats navigate its whole course.

WESHAM, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Kirkham, Lancashire.

WE'SIL, s. See WESAND.—The wesil, or windpipe, we call aspera arteria. Bacon.

WESLEY (John), one of the principal founders of Methodism, was the son of a clergyman, who, educated under a father who was ejected for non-conformity, became a zealous high-churchman, and composed the speech delivered by Sacheverel before the house of lords. John was born at Epworth, in Lincolnshire, of which his father was rector, in June, 1703. Educated under pious parents, he was religiously disposed from his youth. From the Charter-house, where he received his school education, he was removed to Christ-church College, Oxford; and, after taking his first degree, was elected, in 1724, fellow of Lincoln College, and, in 1726, proceeded to the degree of M. A. At this time he was reputed as a good classical scholar, and particularly conversant with dialectics. He was also a poet of no mean mean talents. Soon after his election to a fellowship, he became Greek lecturer and moderator of the classes, and undertook the instruction of pupils. In 1725, he was ordained by bishop Potter. During some years of his residence at Oxford, he was much esteemed on account of his own character and conduct, and for his attention to discipline and good morals. Upon the perusal of some devotional books, and more especially Law's "Serious Call," he became diffident as to his own religious state, and determined to pay stricter regard to what he conceived to be the essentials of a holy life. In 1729, he associated with a select number of collegians, who met and read together, first the classics on week-days, and on Sundays only divinity; but afterwards their meetings became exclusively religious. They visited the prisoners and sick poor, conversed together on the state of their minds, observed the ancient fasts of the church, and communicated every week. This society, which consisted of fifteen members, attracted notice on account of the strictness of their manners and deportment, and became the objects of ridicule to some young men in the university, who denominated them Sacramentarians, the Godly Club, and METHODISTS. (See the article.) Some of the seniors of the colleges were alarmed by an introduction of fanaticism; and others encouraged them to proceed, and they received the approbation of the bishop of Oxford. Wesley, after his ordination, settled as assistant to his father at Epworth, who being desirous of retaining this church preferment in his family, wished him to seek interest for obtaining it; but his attachment to Oxford, and to the society which had been there formed, prevailed over every other consideration. In process of time he formed a purpose of going to Georgia, as a missionary; and accordingly he embarked for this province in the year 1735. The prospect of success in this mission seemed at first to be favourable; but several circumstances occurred which changed his views, and induced him to leave Georgia, after a residence of one year and nine months. These circumstances, as some persons have related them, reflect no great honour on Wesley's disposition and character. It appears, however, upon the whole, more especially when we consider Whitfield's success in the same part of the world, that he was less qualified for a missionary than his fellow labourer. After his return to England, he felt dissatisfied about his own state, and entertained suspicions of the reality of his own conversion, though he had undertaken to convert others. Prepared for a sudden conversion, it actually happened at a place and time, and in a manner, which he has recorded. According to his own account, this memorable event is referred to the 24th day of May, in the year 1738, at a quarter before nine in the evening, when some person at a society in Aldersgate-street was reading Luther's preface to the epistle to the Romans. "He felt his heart strangely warmed. He felt that he trusted in Christ alone for salvation; and an assurance was given to him, that Christ had taken away his sins, and saved him from the law of sin and death." These feelings of assurance, however, were blended with occasional misgivings; and it seems that, in his case, enthusiasm could not instantaneously overpower his philosophical reasonings. His case is far from being singular in the history of persons of the same description. About this time he took a journey to Germany, in order to derive a further confirmation of his faith from intercourse with congenial spirits at the head-quarters of the Moravians, at Hernhuth. After his return to England, in September, 1738, he entered on his course of labours, and preached or exhorted, frequently three or four times a day, in prisons and other places of the metropolis, as well as in various parts of the country, where the fervour of his zeal bore proportion to the degree of obloquy which he incurred. His discourses produced wonderful effects, and occasioned in the hearers swoonings, exclamations, convulsions, &c., which have been often the accompaniments of violent emotions. At Bristol, where he had been preceded by Whitfield, he collected large crowds of attendants in the open air. But it was now desirable that a building should be erected for the accommodation of the followers of these popular preachers. In May, 1739, the first stone of such an edifice was laid at Bristol; and with this building commenced the absolute and unlimited power which Wesley exercised over his followers. "The direction of the work was first committed to eleven feoffees of his nomination; but as it became necessary for him to engage for the payment of the workmen, and to collect money for this purpose, he visited London, and upon consulting Whitfield and others, he was told, that they would do nothing in the matter, unless he would discharge the feoffees, and take the whole business into his own hands. They gave various reasons for this determination; but one," says Wesley, "was enough, viz. that such feoffees would always have it in their power to controul me; and if I preached not as they liked, turn me out of the room that I had built." He, therefore, assembled the feoffees, and with their consent cancelled the instruments made before, and took the whole management into his own hands; and this precedent he ever after followed, so that all the numerous meetings of his class of Methodists were either vested in him, or in trustees who were bound to give admission into the pulpit either to him or to such preachers as he shall appoint. Unable to associate clergymen in the prosecution of his plan, which seems to have been his first design, he determined to employ lay-preachers as itinerants to the different societies; and of their talents he formed some judgment by their performances at the meetings for prayer and mere private exhortation. Reserving to himself the nomination of his preachers, his authority was extended as his societies were multiplied. For the use of these societies, he and his brother Charles drew up a set of rules for the direction of their moral and religious conduct, which are said to have been formed upon the purest model of primitive Christianity. A circumstance occurred which threatened injury to the cause of Methodism; but it eventually contributed to its extension, and to the establishment of Wesley without a rival at the head of his own body. Whitfield had imbibed a predilection for the doctrines of the Puritan divines, which were in general Calvinistic. Wesley's opinions were Arminian; so that it was impossible for these two leaders of separate tenets to unite. "The differences between them turned upon the three points, unconditional election, irresistible grace, and final perseverance; concerning which topics their notions varied so much, that Whitfield plainly told his brother reformer, that they preached two different gospels, and that he would not only refuse to give him the right hand of fellowship, but was resolved publicly to preach against him and his brother wheresoever he preached at all." Although they afterwards spoke of each other with esteem, yet their separation was entire and lasting.

The system of discipline formed by Wesley was admirably contrived both for gaining proselytes, and for extending and making permanent his own influence. As he did not profess to establish a new or distinct sect, he did not interfere with the regular worship either of the establishment or of Dissenters, so that he and his preachers robbed no other ministers of their hearers; and they availed themselves of those seasons, which gave persons that were desirous of attending, leisure for this purpose. That he might not be charged with drawing people away from the established church, or other societies of Christians, he did not administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper in his own chapels, but recommended attendance for this purpose in the established church. The plan of itinerancy was a political measure in the system of Mr. Wesley, as variety serves to excite curiosity, and to increase the number of his followers. It seems also to relieve preachers and hearers, when the stock of the former is small; and it also prevents these missionaries, if they may be so called, from forming permanent connections in any place whither they are sent, and of acquiring an influence, which would be inconsistent with the supremacy of the chief. In order to maintain an union between the members of this body, and to exercise a degree of vigilant inspection with regard to their conduct, Wesley has divided each society into companies of ten or fifteen, called classes, to each of which belongs a leader, whose business it was every week to see every person of his class, and to inquire into his religious state. Many of these companies were divided into smaller parties, called bands, in which the married and single men, and the married and single women, were ranged apart, and they were directed to maintain a confidential intercourse with regard to their character and state with each other. From these bands again were formed select bands, consisting of those who had attained to perfection. Of his love-feasts, &c., we have given an account under METHODISTS. Stewards were appointed to receive contributions, which the lowest members were expected to pay, however small the sums, and to superintend the temporal concerns of the societies. In order to preserve a connection between the preachers, as well as to maintain their ultimate subordination to him, Wesley found it useful to summon annually a considerable body of them, in order to take counsel with him, and with one another, concerning the general affairs of the societies. These assemblies were called "Conferences;" and the great number of them at which Wesley had to preside was a principal means of consolidating the whole frame of the society, and maintaining his permanent authority over every part. Wesley and his first followers had many difficulties with which to contend, but their constancy and fortitude, and the apparently beneficial effects of their endeavours in reforming some of the most abandoned members of the community, enabled them ultimately to triumph over all opposition, and to pursue their labours without molestation. On account of his fanaticism and enthusiasm he has suffered ridicule and reproach; and some have even suspected his sincerity in the details which he has given of the extraordinary manifestations of light that have been communicated to him, and the no less extraordinary interpositions of providence in his favour; alleging that he possessed a degree of understanding which could not be deluded, and, therefore, charging him with a design of deluding others, in order to serve his own purposes. But these are harsh reflections, the justice of which we cannot be induced easily to allow. About the year 1759, Wesley, who had long been the eulogist of a single life, thought proper to marry a rich widow, whose fortune he settled wholly upon herself; but this connection proved an occasion of infelicity, and therefore they separated. She died in 1781. Wesley seems to have adopted his father's high-church principles, and he persevered in avowing his connection with the established church, and in preventing, as far as possible, a separation between his followers and the professors of the established religion. During the American war he was a zealous advocate for the measures of government, and he inculcated the duty of submission to the trans-Atlantic Methodists. With this view he published a pamphlet, entitled, "A Calm Address to the American Colonies," which was widely disseminated; and though some of his followers were displeased, others were supporters of the authority of Great Britain; whilst, on the other hand, the Methodists in the connection of Mr. Whitfield were generally on the side of American independence. When the contest terminated, it became a matter of some importance to determine what kind of connection should subsist between the American Methodists and their British brethren. Mr. Wesley was induced for this purpose to take a step, which appeared to be a renunciation of the principle of an episcopal church. By his own authority he ordained, with imposition of hands, several preachers who were embarking for America, and consecrated a bishop for the Methodist episcopal church in that country, who, on his arrival, consecrated another, and ordained several as presbyters. He also assumed the same authority with respect to Scotland; "Setting apart," as he says, "three preachers in 1785, to administer in that country the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper." In self-defence he alleged that he had been for several years convinced by lord King's account of the primitive church, that bishops and presbyters are the same order, and have the same right to ordain; but that he declined exercising this right in ordaining his travelling preachers, because he did not wish to violate the established order of the national church to which he belonged. By these measures he offended many in his own connection, and particularly his brother Charles; and it is said, that before his death he repented of his proceedings, and used all his endeavours to counteract the tendency which he then perceived to a final separation from the church.

In a very advanced age, Wesley retained his ability of bearing the fatigue which attended his numerous and extensive labours; and these were continued till within a week of his death, which happened on March 2d, 1791, in the 88th year of his age.

In Wesley's countenance mildness and cheerfulness were blended with gravity, and in old age it was singularly venerable. "In his manners," says one of his biographers, "he was social, polite, conversible, and pleasant, without any of the gloom and austerity common in the leader of a sect. In the pulpit he was usually short and clear, argumentative and sedate, often entertaining, but never attempting the eloquence of the passions. His style in writing was of a similar cast; he expressed himself with facility and precision, and even in controversy seldom elevated his tone beyond a temperate medium. He was placable towards his enemies, charitable, and in pecuniary matters extremely disinterested. His greatest failing was a love of power, which rendered him impatient of contradiction with regard to every thing that concerned his administration as head of his society; yet it is certain that he could not have brought his plans to effect, without a considerable share of absolute authority. It must also be admitted, that he had much of the politician in his character, and could employ artifice when useful for his purposes. That he was thoroughly persuaded of the truth of the system he taught, and had at heart the best interests of mankind, it would be uncanid and unwarrantable to question; and he will be a memorable person as long as the fabric which he so much contributed to raise shall endure."—Lives of J. Wesley, by Hampson, Coke, and Whitehead.

WESLEY, a township of the United States, in Washington county, Ohio.

WESSEL'S ISLANDS, a chain of islands which extend north-eastward from the north coast of New Holland, 13 leagues, at the entrance of the gulf of Carpentaria on the west side. The northern extremity is in Lat. 11. 18. S.

WESSEM, an inland town of the Netherlands, in the province of Limburg, on the Maese, with 1050 inhabitants; 22 miles north-by-east of Maestricht.

WESSINGTON, or WASHINGTON, a township of England, in Derbyshire; 3½ miles north-west-by-west of Alfreton. Population 373.

WESSINGTON, or WESTINGTON, a hamlet of England, in Gloucestershire.—2. A hamlet of England, in the parish of Heddon on the Walls, Northumberland.

WEST, s. [west, Saxon; west, Dutch.] The region where the sun goes below the horizon at the equinoxes.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day.

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,

To gain the timely inn.

Shakspeare.

WEST, adj. Being towards, or coming from, the region of the setting sun.—The Phenicians had great fleets; so had the Carthaginians, which is yet farther west. Bacon.

WEST, adv. To the west of any place; more westward.

West of this forest,

In goodly form comes on the enemy.

Shakspeare.

To WEST, v. n. To pass to the west; to set, as the sun.—And twice hath risen, where he now doth west. Spenser.

WEST (Benjamin), one of the most famous of the English painters, was born on the 10th of October, 1738. He was the son of John West, a quaker, residing at Springfield, a village in the interior of Pennsylvania. His father might be

be considered as illustrious in the annals of philanthropy, if, as Mr. Galt seems to intimate, his example and exhortation had the chief influence in producing the noble decree of the Pennsylvania legislature, for a general emancipation of the negro slaves.

It was scarcely possible that any human being could be less favourably situated for the culture of any of the arts which embellish human life, than young Benjamin. The sect to which he belonged, noted for so many estimable moral qualities, had adopted in excess the austere creed, which condemns as ungodly and perilous, every art which aims only at amusement and ornament. He was therefore bred up under the impossibility of seeing a single specimen of the imitative arts. Only the most irresistible strength of natural genius could have enabled him to break through such a host of discouraging circumstances.

It was at the age of six, that the disposition of the young painter first displayed itself. Being left to rock the cradle of an infant sister, he saw her smile in her sleep, and was so struck with the beauty of her countenance at that moment, that he snatched up a pen, and attempted to delineate it. His mother entering, shame led him to conceal what he had been doing; but she, perceiving his confusion, insisted to see it, and, viewing the drawing with evident pleasure, exclaimed, "I declare he has made a likeness of little Sally." Maternal sanction being thus given to the art, the boy was allowed full liberty to pursue it in the intervals of his school, and to delineate with the pen every object which struck his eye. A party of Indians who happened to visit Springfield, taught him to prepare the red and yellow, with which they painted their ornaments; and, his mother having presented him with a piece of indigo, he was thus in possession of the three primary colours. A painter, as Mr. Galt justly observes, who would embody the metaphor of an artist, instructed by nature, could scarcely imagine anything more picturesque than this real incident of the Indians instructing West to prepare the prismatic colours. About this time, he heard the description of camels' hair pencils, and instantly saw how superior these must be to the rude machinery of a pen. The world, however, with which he was acquainted, presented no such object. The only substitute he could contrive, was obtained by the following expedient. He cast his eye on a favourite black cat of his father's, and, having privily obtained the use of his mother's scissors, employed them in cutting off the bushy extremity of the tail. As this lasted only for a short time, he was reduced to the necessity of making large inroads on the back of Grimalkin. The worthy man inwardly mourned this naked and altered appearance of his favourite, and could only ascribe it to some serious malady; till the youth, on hearing these lamentations repeated, blushing confessed the wrong he had done. He obtained an easy forgiveness from the surprised and gratified parent.

West was eight years old, when Mr. Pennington, a merchant of Philadelphia, came to visit his father, and, struck with the drawings of birds and flowers which hung round the room, inquired about the boy, and promised to send him a paint-box. This he fulfilled, and accompanied it with six engravings. The sight of these objects formed a master-era in the existence of the young painter. Enraptured with the view, he could not cease touching them, unable to believe that they were real. They made him a culprit with regard to school; the whole of several days being spent in the garret with his box and canvas. The schoolmaster lodging a complaint of his non-attendance, his mother hastened up, and surprised her son, but was soon appeased by the view of his work, which consisted not in a bare copy, but a composition from two of the engravings. It was so well executed, that he afterwards declared there were some touches in it, which he had never been able to surpass.

A few days after, Mr. Pennington again visited Springfield, and, delighted with the result of his presents, took the boy with him to Philadelphia. Here, in passing along the street, West saw one Williams, a painter, carrying an object which he had never before seen—a picture. The emotions which he betrayed at this moment were so extraordinary, that Williams was delighted, took him home, showed him his pictures and drawings, and gave him the works of Fresnoy and Richardson. There was no longer any doubt as to his destiny. On returning home, he announced himself as a future painter, and seems to have formed the loftiest ideas of the profession. Fired by his enthusiasm, all the boys of the school began daubing pictures, but without being able to rival their model. He now began to obtain some employment in portraits; and, in the house of a Mr. Flower, where he resided for two or three weeks in that character, an intelligent lady, who acted as governess, initiated him into the first elements of history and general knowledge. Being advised by a friend to try historical painting, he produced the "Death of Socrates," which drew so much admiration, that Dr. Smith, Provost of the College at Philadelphia, undertook his tuition. This judicious scholar directed his attention particularly to those objects and incidents which tended to fire his imagination, and to furnish future subjects for his pencil.

Young West had now reached the age of sixteen, and the time was come when he must make choice of a profession. His father, however gratified by his son's display of genius, felt still some scruple at making him a painter. Many of his most respected neighbours pressed upon him the duty of giving the youth a sober and godly trade, and not allowing him to exercise an occupation which ministered only to the concerns of sin and vanity. The worthy man, troubled by these meditations and discourses, determined to call a general meeting of the Friends of Springfield, and to submit to them the future destination of Benjamin. A considerable difference of opinion prevailed; but at last a venerable Friend rose and argued, that the talent of the young man was a manifest gift of God, which must have been bestowed for wise ends, and that painting, though liable to abuse, might be employed for the noblest purposes. These reasons were pronounced satisfactory by the meeting; an inspired sister pronounced a blessing upon him; the men laid their hands upon his head, and the women kissed him; and the young artist was sent forth into the world to exercise his vocation.

At Philadelphia and New York Mr. West found considerable practice as a portrait painter; and he, at the same time, busied himself in copying every thing good that came under his eye. He produced, moreover, an original work on the subject of the "Trial of Susannah."

Having raised by his labours a small sum of money, Mr. West determined to embrace an opportunity which offered of visiting Italy. At Rome, the arrival of an American quaker to study the fine arts, caused an astonishing sensation. He was introduced to Cardinal Albani, and through him to the most distinguished persons then in Rome. Having painted the picture of Mr. Robinson, afterwards Lord Grantham, it was shown to a large circle as the production of Mengs, the most eminent painter then in Rome, and was pronounced superior to the usual performances of that artist. Mengs was so generous as not to be mortified, but contracted a friendship for West, and gave him his best advice. The artist was strongly impressed also by an interview with a famous improvisatore, to whom the Romans gave the flattering name of Homer, and who, delighted with the novelty of the subject presented to him, pronounced an extempore oration, which, if we may judge by the following specimen, must have possessed considerable beauty. "Methinks," said he, "I behold in this young man an instrument chosen by Heaven, to raise in America the taste for those arts which elevate the nature of man,—an assurance that his country will afford a refuge to science and knowledge, when, in the old age of Europe, they shall have forsaken her shores. But all things of heavenly origin, like the glorious sun, move westward; and truth and art have their periods of shining and of night. Rejoice then, oh venerable Rome, in thy divine destiny! for, though darkness overshadow thy seats, seats, and though thy mitred head must descend into the dust, as deep as the earth that now covers thy ancient helmet and imperial diadem, thy spirit, immortal and undecayed, already spreads towards a new world,—like the soul of man in paradise, it will be perfected in virtue and beauty more and more." Mr. West, like Reynolds, was at first imperfectly sensible to the beauties of Raphael and Michael Angelo, of the latter of whom he never became any peculiar admirer. Accustomed to the quietude of a Pennsylvanian life, the agitations of Rome threw him into a fever, from which the physicians declared that he could only recover by removal to a more tranquil scene. After his recovery, he visited all the great schools of Italy, and made a copy of the famous St. Jerome of Corregio.

Mr. West repaired, in 1763, to England, where he soon became acquainted with Sir Joshua Reynolds and Richard Wilson, and was introduced to other eminent men. But his chief obligations were to Dr. Drummond, archbishop of York, who engaged him to paint for him the story of "Agrippina landing with the ashes of Germanicus." The Archbishop was so gratified by the performance, that he immediately introduced both the picture and the artist to the notice of his late Majesty. That monarch, endued both with taste and discernment in the fine arts, was so delighted with it, that he thenceforth made Mr. West the object of his especial favour and patronage. He suggested to him the subject of "the Final Departure of Regulus from Rome;" and the applause which the picture received at the first exhibition, was equally gratifying to the artist and to the royal patron.

Mr. West was now frequently invited to spend the evening at Buckingham-house; and his Majesty held long conversations with him on the best means of promoting the arts. It was to these that the plan of the "Royal Academy" owed its origin; an institution equally creditable to the nation and beneficial to art. The name of Reynolds, however, was too high to admit the idea of any other person being appointed president; but, on the death of Sir Joshua, in 1791, Mr. West, with universal approbation, succeeded to that high place. He painted for the King "the Oath of Hannibal," the "Death of Epaminondas," and several other subjects. For Earl Grosvenor, he painted the "Death of Wolfe," so well known from the fine print of Woollet; but the novel introduction of coats, breeches, and cocked hats, into a heroic picture, was censured by the King, and by several of the best painters.

His Majesty, continuing to bestow his patronage on Mr. West, employed him in a truly magnificent work. It was to adorn a private chapel, or oratory, at Windsor, with a series of thirty-five paintings, illustrative of the history of revealed religion. On this work, with the exception of a very short suspension, seemingly occasioned by the influence of the Queen, Mr. West was employed, without intermission, till the Monarch's last illness. Then, being deprived of royal patronage, he made an appeal to the public, which was completely successful. His celebrated picture of "Christ healing the Sick," was purchased by the British Institution for three thousand guineas; while his subsequent works of "Christ Rejected," and "Death on the Pale Horse," have produced large sums by their mere exhibition. Mr. West had received from the King 34,187*l.* for various pictures; a bounty, we suspect, surpassing even the boasted generosity of Leo X.

Our artist was now far declined into the vale of years. His wife, an American lady, and the object of an early attachment, died on the 16th December, 1817, and thus closed an union of fifty years. This loss was deeply felt, and accelerated the decline of his health, which went on increasing till the 10th March, 1820, when he expired without a struggle. His remains were interred in St. Paul's Cathedral, and were honoured with a public funeral, which was attended, not only by all his brethren of the art, but by many of the most distinguished personages of the kingdom.

The following character of Mr. West, as a man and a painter, is given by his ingenious friend Mr. Galt.

"In his deportment Mr. West was mild and considerate: his eye was keen, and his mind apt; but he was slow and methodical in his reflections, and the sedateness of his remarks must often, in his younger years, have seemed to strangers singularly at variance with the vivacity of his look. That vivacity, however, was not the result of any peculiar animation of temperament, it was rather the illumination of his genius; for, when his features were studiously considered, they appeared to resemble those which we find associated with dignity of character, in the best productions of art. As an artist, he will stand in the first rank. His name will be classed with those of Michael Angelo and Raphael; but he possessed little in common with either. As the former has been compared to Homer, and the latter to Virgil, in Shakspeare we shall perhaps find the best likeness to the genius of Mr. West. He undoubtedly possessed, but in a slight degree, that peculiar energy and physical expression of character in which Michael Angelo excelled; and, in a still less, that serene sublimity which constitutes the charm of Raphael's great productions. But he was their equal in the fulness, the perspicuity, and the propriety of his compositions. In all his great works, the scene intended to be brought before the spectator is represented in such a manner, that the imagination has nothing to supply. The incident, the time, and the place, are there as we think they must have been; and it is this wonderful force of conception which renders the sketches of Mr. West so much more extraordinary than his finished pictures. In the finished pictures, we naturally institute comparisons in colouring, and in beauty of figure, and in a thousand details, which are never noticed in the sketches of this illustrious artist. But, although his powers of conception were so superior,—equal in their excellence to Michael Angelo's energy, or Raphael's grandeur, still, in the inferior departments of drawing and colouring, he was one of the greatest artists of his age; it was not, however, till late in life that he executed any of those works in which he thought the splendour of the Venetian school might be judiciously imitated. At one time he intended to collect his works together, and to form a general exhibition of them all. Had he accomplished this, the greatness and versatility of his talents would have been established beyond all controversy; for unquestionably he was one of those great men whose genius cannot be justly estimated by particular works, but only by a collective inspection of the variety, the extent, and the number of their productions."

WEST (Gilbert), the son of the Rev. Dr. West, prebendary of Winchester, and of a sister of sir Richard Temple, afterwards lord Cobham, was born in 1706, and educated for the church at Eton and Christchurch, in Oxford; but preferring a military life, he served in the army till he received an appointment in the office of lord Townshend, secretary of state, with whom he accompanied king George I. to Hanover. In early life he entertained doubts concerning the Christian religion, which were instilled into him and his cousin Lyttelton by lord Cobham. In 1729 he was appointed a clerk-extraordinary of the privy council; and soon after, being married, he settled at Wickham in Kent. His income was not large, but it was sufficient to entertain his friends Pitt and Lyttelton, who often visited him for literary recreation at Wickham. As a poet, he was known in 1742 by a piece on a dramatic plan, entitled "The Institution of the Order of the Garter," distinguished by pure and elevated morality, and containing passages of elegant fancy and splendid diction. West's "Observations on the Resurrection of Christ," published in 1747, engaged the particular attention of the public, and even induced the University of Oxford to confer upon the author the degree of doctor of laws. This work was so well executed, that we may well regret his not having lived to have completed his design by another work on the evidence of the truth of the New Testament. In 1752 the circumstances of our author were improved by succeeding, ing, when Mr. Pitt became paymaster-general, to one of the lucrative clerkships of the privy council, and his obtaining the place of treasurer to Chelsea hospital. In 1755 he lost an only son, and in the following year his life was terminated by a paralytic stroke, March 1756, at the age of fifty. "Mr. West was a gentleman in manners, agreeable in conversation, and lively though serious. He was regular in the performance of family devotion and in attendance on public worship, and was particularly attached to Dr. Clarke as a preacher."

The other works of Mr. West were "Translations of the Odes of Pindar, with a Dissertation on the Olympic Games;" "Translations of the Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius, and the Tragopodagra of Lucian;" "The Abuse of Travelling;" and "Education;" poems in the imitation of the stanza and manner of Spenser; "Iphigenia in Tauris," from "Euripides;" and Original Poems on Various Occasions." Several of these pieces were printed in the collections of Dodsley and Peareh, and also in three distinct volumes, 12mo. 1766; and entitle the author, says his biographer, to a respectable rank among the minor poets. Johnson's Lives. Nichols's Lit. Anecd. Gen. Biog.

WEST, a township of the United States, in Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania. Population 998.

WEST ACRE, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 5 miles north-west-by-north of Swaffham.

WEST BAY, a bay of the South Pacific ocean, in Cook's Straits, between the two islands of New Zealand.

WEST BAY, a bay of the English Channel, on the coast of the counties of Dorset and Devon, of vast extent. It begins west of Portland, and ends at Berry Point near Torbay, according to some; according to others, from Portland to Lyme or Exmouth. The tide is current here nine hours; high water at ten o'clock at new and full moon; an east-south-east moon makes full sea. The sea off the coast is reckoned the most dangerous part of the channel, especially on the west, where ships, not aware of the currents, are embayed and driven ashore on the beach.

WEST BAY, a bay at the western extremity of Lake Superior. Lat. 46. 45. N. long. 91. 45. W.

WEST BAY, a bay on the north-west coast of Virginia, in the West Indies. Lat. 18. 23. N. long. 62. 48. W.

WEST, CAPE, a cape on the western coast of Tavai-Poenamoo, the southernmost island of New Zealand. Lat. 45. 54. S. long. 193. 17. W.

WEST CASTLE, a post village of the United States, in Caswell county, North Carolina.

WEST CHESTER, a county of the United States, in the south-east corner of New York, bounded north by Putnam county, east by Connecticut, south-east and south by Long Island sound, and west by New York island and the Hudson. The soil of this county admits of no general character, except that its tillage is productive to the agriculturist. The chief towns are Bedford and White Plains. Population 30,272.—2. A post village of the United States, in Middlesex county, Connecticut; 6 miles from Middle Haddam.—3. A post township of the United States, in West Chester county, New York, on East river; 12 miles north-east of New York. Population 1969.—4. A borough of the United States, and capital of Chester county, Pennsylvania; 24 miles west of Philadelphia.

WEST CREEK, a river of the United States, in New Jersey, which runs into the Delaware bay. Lat. 39. 14. N. long. 74. 57. W.

WEST FARMS, a post village of the United States, in West Chester, New York.

WEST HAMPTON, a township of the United States, in Hampshire county, Massachusetts; 100 miles west of Boston. Population 793.

WEST HARBOUR, a bay on the south coast of Jamaica, formed by a peninsula called Portland Ridge. Lat. 17. 48. N. long. 77. W.

WEST HAVEN, a post village of the United States, in Rutland county, Vermont.

WEST ISLAND, one of the smaller Phillipine islands, Vol. XXIV. No. 1660.

near the south coast of Mindora. Lat. 12. 18. N. long. 121. 12. E.—2. A small island at the east entrance of the straits of Sunda. Lat. 5. 27. S. long. 106. 20. E.—3. A small island in the Eastern seas, near the south coast of Cumbava. Lat. 8. 49. S. long. 119. 2. E.—4. An island on the north coast of New Holland, near the head of the gulf of Carpentaria, about ten miles long and five broad, one of the three called, by Captain Flinders, Sir Edward Pellew's groupe.

WEST POINT, a town of the United States, in Virginia, on the York river; 35 miles east of Richmond. Lat. 37. 30. N. long. 76. 56. W.—2. A post village and military post of the United States, in Orange county, New York, on the west bank of the Hudson, at its passage through the Highlands; 7 miles south of Newburgh, 58 north of New York, and 102 south of Albany. Lat. 41. 23. N. long. 74. W.

WEST RIVER, a post village of the United States, in Ontario county, New York.

WEST RIVER, a post village of the United States, in Ann Arundel county, Maryland.

WEST TOWN, a post village of the United States, in Orange county, New York.

WEST RIVER, or WANTASTIQUET, a small river of the United States, which has its rise in the state of Vermont, on the eastern side of the Green Mountains, about three miles south-east from the head of Otter creek.—2. A river of the United States, in Virginia, which runs into Black Bay. Lat. 36. 30. N. long. 76. 17. W.—3. A river of the United States, in Maryland, which runs into the Chesapeake. Lat. 38. 54. N. long. 76. 42. W.—4. A river of the United States, in the province of Maine, which runs into Machias Bay. Lat. 44. 45. N. long. 67. 19. W.

WEST RIVER MOUNTAIN, a mountain of the United States, in New Hampshire, in Chesterfield and Hinsdale, near the Connecticut, opposite the mouth of West river.

WEST UNION, a post town of the United States, and capital of Adam's county, Ohio, situated on a branch of the East Fork of the Little Miami, on the road leading from Limestone in Kentucky, to Chillicothe; 52 miles south-west of Chillicothe.

WEST WAIN, the west shore of Hudson's bay.

WESTALL, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Cheltenham, Gloucestershire.

WESTBERE, a parish of England, in Kent; 4 miles north-east-by-east of Canterbury.

WESTBORNE, a parish of England, in Sussex; 6 miles from Chichester. Population 1702.

WESTBORNE GREEN, a hamlet of England, in Middlesex, near London.

WESTBOROUGH, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 7 miles north-west-by-north of Grantham.—2. A post township of the United States, in Worcester county, Massachusetts; 11 miles east of Worcester, and 34 west-south-west of Boston. Population 1048.

WESTBROMWICH, a populous village and parish of England, in the county of Stafford, near Wednesbury. Population 7485.

WESTBROOK, a hamlet of England, in Berkshire, north-west of Speenhamland.—2. A hamlet in the parish of Diss, county of Norfolk.—3. A township of the United States, in Cumberland county, Maine; 3 miles west of Portland.—4. A post village of the United States, in Bladen county, North Carolina.

WESTBURY, a borough and market town of England, in the county of Wilts, consists principally of one street, running nearly in a direction north and south. The principal public buildings are the town-hall and the church. Westbury is an ancient borough, and received its charter of incorporation from Edward I. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, and 12 capital burgesses. It returns two members to parliament, chosen by every tenant of burgage tenures, in fee for life, or 99 years, determinable upon lives, or by a copy of court roll, paying a burgage rent of 4d. or 2d. yearly, being resident in the borough, not receiving alms; number of voters about 50, and the returning officer is the mayor. The town has a considerable traffic in malting, and a manufacture in broad cloth. Market on Friday. Fairs, first Friday in Lent, and Easter Monday and Whit-Monday. It is supposed to have been the Verlucio of the Romans. The borough and hundred of Westbury form one parish; 24 miles north-west-by-west of Salisbury, and $97\frac{1}{2}$ west-by-south of London. Population 1790.—2. A parish of England, in Buckinghamshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Buckingham.—3. A hamlet in Southamptonshire; 6 miles west of Petersfield.—4. A parish in Salop; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-by-south of Shrewsbury. Population 2195.—5. A parish in Somersetshire; 4 miles north-west-by-west of Wells. Population 493.

WESTBURY, LEIGH, a village of England, in Wiltshire, near the market town of that name. In its neighbourhood many Roman coins, pieces of armour, &c., have been dug up. Population 1357.

WESTBURY-UPON-SEVERN, a parish of England, in Gloucestershire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Newnham. Population 1765.

WESTBURY-ON-TRIM, a parish of England, in the county of Gloucester, situated on the small river Trim.

WESTBY, a township of England, in Lancashire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Kirkham. Population 692.—2. A hamlet in Lincolnshire; 3 miles north-west of Corby.

WESTCLIFFE, a parish of England, in Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Dover.

WESTCOMBE, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Buckland St. Mary, Somersetshire.—2. A hamlet in the same county, in the parish of Batcombe.

WESTCOTE, a hamlet of England, in Berkshire; 4 miles west of Wantage.—2. A hamlet in the parish of Binstead, Southamptonshire.—3. A township in Surrey, near Dorking.

WESTCOTT, a hamlet of England, in Buckinghamshire; 7 miles west-north-west of Aylesbury.—2. A parish in Gloucestershire; 4 miles south-east-by-south of Stow-on-the-Wold.

WEST DERBY, a village of England, in the parish of Walton, Lancashire; 4 miles from Liverpool. Population 3698.

WESTEND, a township of England, in Cumberland, 4 miles from Carlisle.—2. A hamlet in Middlesex; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of St. Paul's, London.—3. A hamlet in the parish of Dauntsey, Wiltshire.

WESTENDORF, a village of Bavaria, in the circle of the Upper Danube, on the river Schmutter. Population 1600.

WESTER, a river of Scotland, in Caithness, arises from some springs and lochs in the parish of Bower, and after an easterly course of some miles, enters the loch of Wester, and thence becomes a deep stream for a short distance, and empties itself into Keiss bay, on the German ocean.

WESTERAS, an old town of Middle Sweden, the capital of Westmanland, situated at the influx of the river Swarto into the lake of Malar; 48 miles west-north-west of Stockholm. Population 3000.

WESTERAS, a province of Sweden, comprising the western part of Westmanland, and the north-west part of Upland. Its area, equal to two of our average sized counties, is about 2800 square miles; its population only 85,000.

WESTERBURG, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau; 40 miles north of Mentz. Population 1300.

WESTER-CAPEL, a promontory, with a sand-bank, of Denmark, in the island of Laland. It extends into the Baltic.

WESTERDALE, a township of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Guisbrough.

WESTERFIELD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-by-east of Ipswich.

WESTERHAM, a market town and parish of England, in the county of Kent. It is situated near the head of the river Darent, in a very pleasant and healthful part of the county, on the borders of Surrey. The church is a neat building; and over the south door is a monument to the celebrated general Wolfe, who was a native of this place, and whose remains were brought from the field of battle to be interred here. Dr. Benjamin Hoadley was also a native of Westerham. The noble house called the Squirries, stands on a small eminence near the town. Above the house are the sources of the Darent. Market on Friday, and one annual fair; 14 miles north-west of Tunbridge, and 32 south-south-east of London. Population 1437.

WESTERHAUSEN, a town of Prussian Saxony; 3 miles east of Regenstein. Population 1500.

WESTERING, adj. Passing to the west.

The star that rose at evening bright,
Toward heaven's descent had slop'd his westing weel.

Milton.

WESTER-KIRK, a parish of Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, in the district of Eskdale, extending about 9 miles in length, and varying in breadth from 2 to 3 miles. Population 698.

WESTERLEIGH, a parish of England, in Gloucestershire; 3 miles south-west-by-west of Chipping Sodbury.

WESTERLEY, a hamlet of England, in Leicestershire, near Market Harborough.

WESTERLO, a township of the United States, in Albany county, New York.

WESTERLOO, an inland town of the Netherlands, on the larger of the two rivers called Nethe, with 2000 inhabitants; 24 miles west-south-west of Antwerp.

WESTERLY, a post town of the United States, in Washington county, Rhode Island, on the Atlantic. It is separated from Stonington by Pawcatuck river; 34 miles west-south-west of Newport. Population 1911.

WESTERLY, adj. Tending or being towards the west.—These bills give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England. Grant.

WESTERN, adj. Being in the west, or toward the part where the sun sets. The western part is a continued rock. Addison.

WESTERN, a post township of the United States, in Worcester county, Massachusetts; 22 miles west-south-west of Worcester, and 62 west-south-west of Boston. Population 1014.

WESTERN ISLANDS, a name frequently given to the Azores; which see.

WESTERN PORT, a capacious bay on the south coast of New Holland, where black bears resort in great numbers; and kangaroos are seen on the shore. There is a considerable island at the entrance, which lies in lat. 38. 33. S.—2. A post village of the United States, in Allegany county, Maryland.

WESTERN REEF, rocks in the Spanish Main, near the Mosquito shore. Lat. 14. 42. N. long. 82. 25. W.

WESTERN STATES, a division of the United States, comprising the states of Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi, Indiana, and Illinois, and the Michigan, Missouri, and North Western territories. This portion of the United States is fast rising in importance; and its population is very rapidly increasing.

WESTERTON, a township of England, county of Durham; 8 miles east-by-north of Bishop Auckland.

WESTERTOWN, a village of Scotland, in the county of Clackmannan, and parish of Tillycultry. Population 200.

WESTERWALD, a large tract of hilly and woody land, in the west of Germany, which comprises the north part of Wetteravia, extends to the Rhine, and covers part of the duchy of Nassau, and of the Prussian governments of Coblenz and Cologne.

WESTERWYK, a sea-port of Sweden, in the province of Smaland, on a bay of the Baltic. It is regularly built, with broad and straight streets, and has 3000 inhabitants; 68 miles north of Calmar. Lat. 57. 44. 50. N. long. 16. 40. 15. E.

WESTFALL, a township of the United States, in Pickaway county, Ohio, on the Scioto, opposite Circleville; 26 miles south of Columbus.

WESTFIELD, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 3 miles south of East Dereham.—2. A parish in Sussex; 4 miles east-by-south of Battle.—3. A township of the United States, in in Orleans county, Vermont; 52 miles north of Montpelier. Population 149.—4. A river of the United States, in Massachusetts, which rises in Berkshire county, and runs through Middlefield, Westfield, and West Springfield, where it flows into the Connecticut.—5. A post township and village of the United States, in Hampden county, Massachusetts; 93 miles west-south-west of Boston. Population of the township, 2130.—6. A township of the United States, in Richmond county, New York, on Staten. Population 1444.—7. A post township of the United States, in Essex county, New Jersey. Population 2152.

WESTFORD, a post township of the United States, in Chittenden county, Vermont; 40 miles north-west of Montpelier. Population 1407.—2. A post township of Middlesex county, Massachusetts; 28 miles north-west of Boston. Here is an academy. Population 1330.—3. A township of Otsego county, New York; 8 miles south-east of Coopers-town. Population 1215.

WESTGATE, a small straggling village of England, in Durham; 6 miles west-by-north of Stanhope.—2. A township in Northumberland, adjoining to Newcastle. Population 745.

WESTHALL, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 4 miles north-east of Halesworth. Population 441.

WESTHAM, a township of England, in Lancashire; 1 mile north of Kirkham.—2. A town of the United States, in Henrico county, Virginia, on the north bank of the James; 5 miles west-north-west of Richmond.

WESTHAMPNETT, a parish of England, in Sussex, near Chichester. Population 444.

WESTHAMPTON, a post village of the United States, in the township of Southampton, New York.

WESTHARPTREE, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 6 miles from Wells. Population 463.

WESTHAVEN, a post township of the United States, in Rutland county, Vermont; 52 miles north of Bennington.

WESTHIDE, a township of England, in Herefordshire; 8 miles from Ledbury.

WESTHOFEN, a town of France, in Alsace; 14 miles west of Strasburg. Population 2100. It has manufactures of pottery ware.—2. A town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; 5 miles north-north-west of Worms. Population 1300.—3. A town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark, on the Roer; 33 miles east-by-north of Dusseldorf. Population 900.

WESTHORPE, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 7 miles north of Market Stow.—2. A hamlet in Lincolnshire, near Spalding.—3. A hamlet in the parish of Southwell, Nottinghamshire.—4. A hamlet in the parish of Merston St. Lawrence, Northamptonshire.

WESTKAPELLE, a village of the Netherlands, in Zealand, on the island of Walcheren. It is remarkable for its dyke, which protects the land from the inroads of the sea; 7 miles west of Middleburg.—2. A village of the Netherlands, on the main-land, in the province of West Flanders; 8 miles north of Bruges. Population 1000.

WESTLAND, a township of the United States, in Guernsey county, Ohio. Population 251.

WESTLEIGH, a township of England, in Lancashire; 5 miles from Newton.

WESTLETON, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 3 miles east of Yoxford. Population 713.

WESTLEY, or WESTLEY WATERLESS, a parish of England, in Cambridgeshire; 5 miles south-south-west of Newmarket.

WESTLEY, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 2 miles west-by-north of St. Edmund's Bury.—2. A township in Salop; 10½ miles west-south-west of Shrewsbury.

WEST-LINTON, or LEVINGTON, a township of England, in Cumberland; 4 miles south-south-east of Longtown. Population 562.

WESTMANCOTE, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Breden, Worcestershire.

WESTMANLAND, or WESTMANIA, an inland province of Middle Sweden, bounded by Gestrícia, Dalecarlia, Upland, Nercia, Sudermanland, and Warmeland. It is 110 miles long, and in some parts 80 broad; has a surface of nearly 5000 square miles, and 110,000 inhabitants. It is watered by several rivers, and contains a number of lakes.

WESTMEATH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, bounded on the north by Cavan; on the east by Eastmeath; on the south by the King's county; on the north-west by Longford; and on the west by the river Shannon, which separates it from Roscommon. Its greatest extent from east to west is about 33 Irish miles, and from north to south about 27 Irish miles. Its surface comprises 249,943 acres, Irish plantation measure, including bogs, mountain, and waste. It contains 12 baronies; Moygeesh, Corkerry, Moyashill, Magheredernon, Delvin, Farbill, Racoonrath, Kilkenny-West, Brawny, Clonlonan, Moycashel, Fartullagh, and Half Fowre, which are divided into 59 parishes. This county is agreeably interspersed with a considerable number of beautiful lakes, of which Lough Leign, Lough Derrivagh, Lough Iron, Lough Ennel, Lough Drin, (the trout of which lake have an emetic quality) and Lough Annagh, are the most extensive. The Shannon is the most considerable river that waters this county, and constitutes its western boundary, to divide it from Connaught. There are also the Inny and the Brosna. The soil is in general light, but in some parts rich and deep; and though there is a greater proportion of grass land, yet more corn is raised here than serves for the consumption of the inhabitants. Three members are returned to the imperial parliament; that is, two for the county, and one for the borough of Athlone.

WESTMEON, a parish of England, in Southamptonshire; 12 miles from Alresford. Population 668.

WESTMESTON, a parish of England, in Sussex; 5 miles north-west-by-west of Lewes.

WESTMILL, a parish of England, in Hertfordshire, situated on the river Rib, near Buntingford.

WESTMINSTER, a city of England, in the county of Middlesex, which may be generally regarded as a part of the British metropolis; but in its political and civil rights, privileges, and history it is separate and distinct. See LONDON.

The principal improvements that have been made in Westminster since the publication of our article London, are the renovation of Henry the Seventh's Chapel and Westminster Hall; the King's Palace built on the site of Buckingham house, the erection of a noble arch at Hyde Park Corner; and the demolition of Carlton House to make an opening for a new square, which is rapidly proceeding.

WESTMINSTER, a post township of the United States, in Windham county, Vermont, on the Connecticut, opposite Walpole with which it is connected by a bridge; 28 miles south of Montpelier.—2. A post township of Worcester county, Massachusetts; 54 miles west-north-west of Boston. 3. A post township of Frederick county, Maryland; 30 miles north-west of Baltimore.

WESTMOINE, a district of Sutherland, in Scotland, lying in the north-west corner of the county, terminated by the promontory of cape Wrath.

WESTMORE, a township of the United States, in Essex county, Vermont. Population 71.

WESTMORELAND, a county of England, bounded on the north by the counties of Durham and Cumberland, on the west by Cumberland and Lancashire, on the south by Lancashire and Yorkshire, and on the east by Yorkshire and Durham. The greatest breadth of this county, from its southern boundary, near Burton, to its northern one near Penrith, in Cumberland, is 32 miles; and its greatest length, from east to west, is 40 miles. It contains an area of 844 square miles, or 540,160 acres. It lies between 54. 11. 30. and 54. 42. 30. N. lat., and between 2. 20. and 3. 12. W. long. Westmoreland lies in the province of York, and dioceses of Chester and Carlisle; is included in the northern circuit; contains 32 parishes; and sends four members to parliament, being two for the borough of Appleby, and two for the county. The name of the county is descriptive of its nature, that is, the Westmoreland, a region of lofty mountains, naked hills, and black barren moors, here called Fells.

Fells. The vallies in which the rivers run are tolerably fertile; and in the north-eastern quarter there is a considerable tract of cultivated plain. The south-western side is fertile, with a warmer climate than the eastern. These two sides of the county, where the fertility lies, are divided by lofty fells and barren moors, intersected with pastoral vales. The air is pure and healthy, but, in the mountainous parts, cold and piercing. According to an estimate of the bishop of Llandaff, three-fourths of Westmoreland consists of uncultivated lands; but very extensive inclosures have taken place since this calculation. The farmers of Westmoreland were long of opinion that their lands were better suited to grass than to corn; and they were ploughed for three or four years, not with the expectation that the corn would be more profitable than grass; but in order to renovate them for grass, and to destroy the moss. These notions, however, are now in a great measure antiquated. The clover and turnip husbandry has made great progress, and considerable quantities of wheat are now annually grown, though oats is the grain principally cultivated. That Westmoreland has been a wooded county, is evident from trees found in mosses on the highest hills; and statutes of regulations made long after the conquest, since which time the climate has not been changed for the worse, are full of the mention of forests. The valuable woods of the earl of Lonsdale, in the neighbourhood of Lowther, shew how well the soil and climate of this county are adapted for the growth of trees; and detached groves of ash and sycamore round the dwelling-houses in the dales, situated near the heads of the mountains, are proofs of the advantages to be derived from planting grounds of high elevation. The strata of this county are of various sorts; but divide themselves into two very distinct kinds. Limestone, freestone, and a soft laminous schistus, horizontally stratified, and abounding with remains of organized bodies, prevail on the east side of a line drawn from Powley-bridge to the river Lowther, a little below Knipe, and up the Lowther, by the abbey of Shap, to the head of the first streamlet south of Shap thorn; then to Shapwells, down the Birbeck and Lune, through the parish of Orton; and from thence, by an irregular line, to the river Winster, opposite the north end of Lithefell. The west side of this line consists chiefly of the schistus and trap genera, classed in layers nearly perpendicular to the horizon, and destitute of every species and appearance of fossils. A very coarse species of granite also appears in many parts of this county, especially a little to the south of Patterdale-Chapel. Immense lines of basalt, or whin-stone, also appear through the whole of this district; and a series of hills running parallel to Dunfell, and the rest of the chain of the western mountains, is formed of this species of rock. This county has little or no advantage from navigable rivers. The tide, indeed, visits the mouths of the Winster, Kent, and Betha, in Moricambe bay; but the country having a considerable rise on all sides from the shores of the bay, the channels of these rivers soon become too rapid and stony to admit the use of boats upon them. This want is, however, in a degree counterbalanced by the facility with which the numerous brooks that irrigate the vales of Westmoreland, can be applied to the purposes of commerce and agriculture. Of these, the principal are the Eden, which has its source on the borders of Yorkshire, and flows past Appleby. Near the source of the Eden also rises the Lune, a beautiful river, flowing southward, and forming the boundary from Yorkshire. The river Ken flows by Kendal, and discharges itself into the sandy Wash of Lancashire; near its mouth is a cataract. The Egmont, which flows from lake Ullswater, joins the Eden, and forms the boundary of the county for a short space. Westmoreland is celebrated for its extensive lakes, which during the summer season attract numerous visitors. Such is the beauty and variety of the scenery, that it has become fashionable to make the tour of this interesting portion of country. Winandermere is the most extensive piece of water in England, being $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles in a straight line down its middle, and from 1 to 2 miles in breadth. Its depth is 13, 23, and 29 and 31 fathoms. It contains 13 islands, and about 4534 acres of water. Ullswater is about 9 miles in length, and varies in breadth from a quarter of a mile to 2 miles. There are various other smaller lakes. This county is divided into four wards, instead of hundreds, viz. East, West, Kendal, and Lonsdale wards, containing one borough, Appleby, and seven market towns.

WESTMORELAND, a post township of the United States, in Cheshire county, New Hampshire, on the Connecticut; 9 miles west of Keene, and 65 west-south-west of Concord.—2. A post township of Oneida county, New York; 10 miles west of Utica.—3. A county of the United States, in the south-west part of Pennsylvania, bounded on the north-east by Armstrong and Indiana counties; on the east-south-east by Cambria and Somerset counties; on the south by Fayette county; and on the west by Washington and Allegany counties. Chief town, Greensburg.—4. A county of the United States, in the north-east part of Virginia, bounded on the north and north-east by the Potomac; on the east by Northumberland county; on the south by Richmond county and the Rappahannock; and on the west by King George county. Chief town, Leeds.

WESTON, a township of England, in Cheshire, near Frodsham.—2. A hamlet in the parish of Branscombe, Devonshire.—3. A hamlet in the parish of Marshfield, Gloucestershire.—4. A township in Cheshire; 6 miles east-by-north of Nantwich.—5. A parish in Hertfordshire; 4 miles north-east-by-north of Stevenage.—6. A parish in Lincolnshire; 4 miles north-east of Spalding.—7. A parish in Norfolk; 5 miles south of Reepham.—8. A hamlet in Northamptonshire; 7 miles west-by-south of Towcester.—9. A township in the parish of Burford, Salop.—10. A parish in Somersetshire; 2 miles north-west-by-west of Bath.—11. A hamlet in the Isle of Wight, Southamptonshire.—12. A parish in Suffolk; 3 miles south of Beccles.—13. A township in the West Riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north-west-by-west of Otley.—14. A post township of the United States, in Windsor county, Vermont; 30 miles west-south-west of Windsor.—15. A post township of Middlesex county, Massachusetts; 15 miles west of Boston.—16. A post township of Fairfield county, Connecticut; 9 miles north of Fairfield.

WESTON ALCONBURY, a parish of England, in Huntingdonshire; 5 miles north-west of Huntingdon.

WESTON-UPON-AVON, a parish of England, in Gloucestershire; 9 miles north-by-east of Chipping Campden.

WESTON, BAGGARD, a parish of England, in Herefordshire; 5 miles east of Hereford.

WESTON, BAMPFYLD, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Castle Cary.

WESTON, BEST, a parish of England, in Gloucestershire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west-by-south of Tetbury.

WESTON IN THE CLAY, a parish of England, in Nottinghamshire; 3 miles south-east of Tuxford.

WESTON, COLD, a parish of England, in Salop; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east-by-north of Ludlow.

WESTON COLNEY, a village of England, in the county of Stafford, near Careswell.

WESTON, COLVILLE, a parish of England, in Cambridgeshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Linton.

WESTON, CONEY, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 13 miles north-east-by-north of St. Edmund's Bury.

WESTON, COYNEY, a township of England, in Staffordshire; 4 miles west of Cheadle.

WESTON UNDER EDGE, a parish of England, in Gloucestershire; 2 miles west-by-north of Chipping Campden.

WESTON FAVELL, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Northampton.

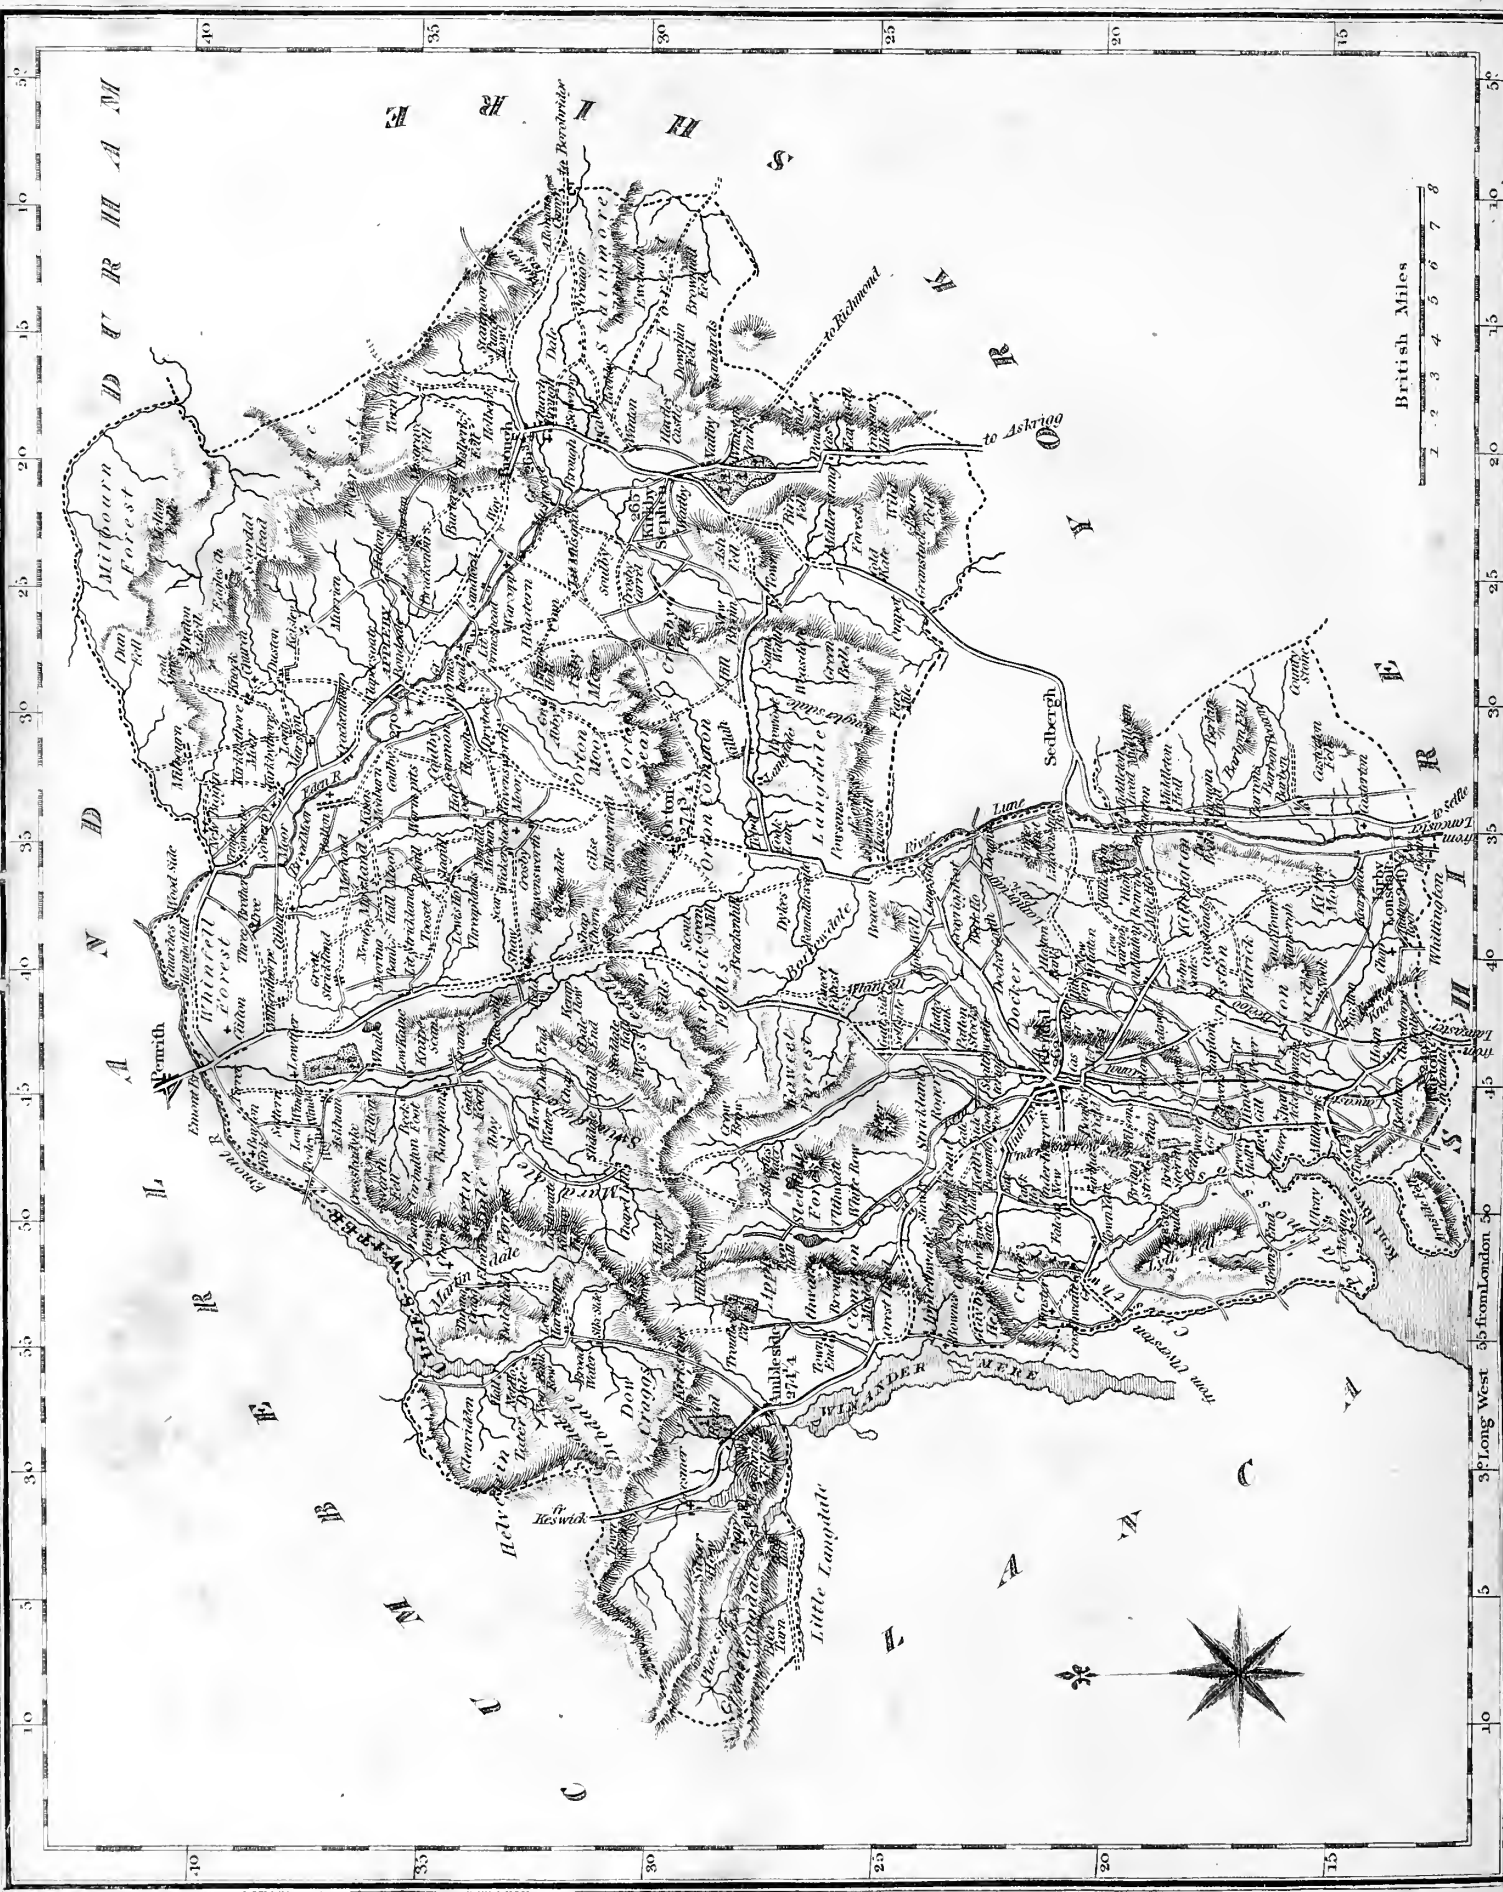

WESTON IN GORDANO, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 10 miles west-by-north of Bristol.

WESTON ON THE GREEN, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west-by-west of Bicester.

WESTON, JONES, a township of England, in Staffordshire; 5 miles from Newport.

WESTON,

WESTMORELAND.

Prepared for the Ordnance Survey by J. T. Smith, 1857.

3 Long West 55 from London 50

British Miles

0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

WESTON, KING'S, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Somerton.

WESTON, KING'S, a village of England, in the county of Gloucester, situated between the Avon and the Severn.

WESTON, LITTLE, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Weston Bampfylde, Somersetshire.

WESTON UNDER LIZARD, a parish of England, in Staffordshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Penkridge.

WESTON, MARKET, a parish of England, in Staffordshire; 13 miles north-east from St. Edmund's Bury.

WESTON SUPER MARE, a parish of England, in Somersetshire, on the Bristol Channel.

WESTON, NORTH, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Thame, Oxfordshire.

WESTON, OLD, a parish of England, in Huntingdonshire; 8 miles north of Kimbolton.

WESTON, PATRICK, a parish of England, in Southamptonshire; 4 miles south-west-by-west of Odiham.

WESTON UNDER PENYARD, a parish of England, in Herefordshire, near Ross.

WESTON UNDER RED-CASTLE, a hamlet of England, in Salop; 4 miles east of Wcm.

WESTON, SOUTH, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire, near Tetsworth.

WESTON UPON TRENT, a parish of England, in Derbyshire; 7 miles south-east of Derby.—2. A parish in Staffordshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Stafford.

WESTON TURVILLE, a parish of England, in Buckinghamshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-by-west of Wendover.

WESTON UNDERWOOD, a parish of England, in Buckinghamshire; 2 miles west-south-west of Olney.—2. A township in Derbyshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Derby.

WESTON UPON WELLAND, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire; 6 miles west of Rockingham.

WESTON UNDER WETHELE, a parish of England, in Warwickshire; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Warwick.

WESTON IN ZOYLAND, a parish of England, in Somersetshire; 4 miles east-south-east of Bridgewater. Population 724.

WESTONING, or WESTON INGE, a parish of England, in Bedfordshire; 4 miles south-by-west of Ampthill. Population 497.

WESTOW, a parish of England, in Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west of New Malton.

WESTPHALIA, CIRCLE OF, an extensive country in the north-west of Germany, varying in its boundaries and extent very materially, in different parts of its history. Originally the name of Westphalia was given to that part of the great duchy of Saxony which lay to the west of the Weser; the part to the east of that river being called Oost or East-phalia. Its area, nearly equal to that of Scotland or Ireland, was about 27,000 square miles; its population about 2,500,000. The climate of Westphalia is similar to that of Holland, or the north of Germany generally.

At the peace of Luneville, all the parts of Westphalia on the west of the Rhine were ceded to France; and in 1806, when the confederation of the Rhine was formed, the circle itself was suppressed. This name has not been revived; and the Westphalian territory now belongs chiefly to Prussia, Hanover, and Oldenburg.

WESTPHALIA, a duchy in the west of Germany, having on the east the circle of the Upper Rhine, and on the three other sides, that of Westphalia; but belonging politically to the circle of the Lower Rhine. Its extent, equal to that of one of our larger counties, is about 1700 square miles; but its thinly scattered population does not exceed 140,000, almost all Catholics. Its southern division is unfit for tillage, but has good pasturage, and is rich in forests and mines. The central part is more level and fertile; and the hogs being remarkable both for size and number, the hams which are known by the name of Westphalia hams, are exported principally from this quarter.

WESTPHALIA, KINGDOM OF, one of the temporary kingdoms of Bonaparte, created in 1807, and overturned in 1813. It was composed of conquests from Prussia, Hesse-

Cassel, Hanover, and the smaller states to the west of the Elbe.

WESTPHALIA, PROVINCE OF, a province of the Prussian states, constituted in 1816, and bounded on the west by the Netherlands, and on the east by Hanover and Hesse-Cassel. It lies between lat. 50. 43. and 52. 30. N., and has an extent of 8300 square miles, with nearly 1,000,000 inhabitants, being in its area somewhat larger than Wales, and considerably more populous. It is divided into the three districts of Munster, Minden, and Arensburg.

WESTPORT, a parish of England, in Wiltshire, adjacent to Malmesbury. Population 720.—2. A seaport town of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, situated at the mouth of a clear stream, which flows into the sea, and forms a fine bay within Clew bay; 115 miles west-north-west of Dublin, and 8 west of Castlebar. Lat. 53. 48. N. long. 9. 22. W.—3. A post town and seaport of the United States, in Bristol county, Massachusetts, on Buzzard's bay; 24 miles south of Taunton, and 60 south of Boston.—4. A post village of the United States, in Essex county, New York.—5. A post town of Henry county, Kentucky, on the Ohio; 17 miles above Louisville.

WESTPORTFORD, a parish of England, in Devonshire; 6 miles from Holdsworth.

WESTRAW HILL, a hill of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, in the parish of Pettinain, about 1000 feet above the level of the sea.

WESTRAY, one of the Orkney islands, about 20 miles north from Kirkwall. It is of an irregular figure, having many bays and jutting out points of land. It is about 9 or 10 miles in length from east to west, and its breadth varies from 1 to 2 miles; but, towards the west end, it is at least 6 miles broad. Lat. 59. 9. N. long. 2. 49. W.—2. A parish of Scotland, in the Orkneys, comprehending the isles of Westray and Papa Westray.

WESTRAYSVILLE, a post village of the United States, in Nash county, North Carolina.

WESTRIDGE, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Streathley, Berkshire.

WESTHILL, a parish of England, in Leicestershire, near Lutterworth.

WESTRINGIA [so named by J. E. Smith, M.D., in honour of John Peter Westring, author of a Dissertation on the Lichen tribe, and their uses in dyeing, printed in the Transactions of the Stockholm Academy for 1794], in Botany, a genus of the class didynamia, order gymnospermia, natural order of verticillatæ labiatæ, (Juss.)—Generic Character. Calyx one-leafed, permanent, tubular bell-shaped, with five sides, and five prominent angles, without furrows or streaks, divided about half way into five equal, erect, lanceolate, beardless segments. Corolla one-petalled, ringent, twice as long as the calyx, reversed; tube length of the calyx, with a hairy orifice; border four-lobed; upper lip a little longer, erect, cloven half way down; lower lip in three deep equal segments, divaricating, and of a linear oblong form. Stamina: filaments four, about half as long as the border, spreading; two lower shorter, and most frequently abortive. Anthers roundish, two-lobed, incumbent. Pistil: germ four-lobed. Style filiform, length of the stamens. Stigma cloven, small. Pericarp none. Seeds four, naked, obovate.—Essential Character. Calyx half five-cleft, five-sided. Corolla reversed, with four segments, the longest erect, cloven. Stamina distant; the two shorter or lowest abortive.

Westringia rosmariniformis.—This is a shrub very much branched; the branches either opposite or four together, square, silky, leafy. Leaves in fours, on very short silky footstalks, spreading, linear-lanceolate; of a bright shining green above, and almost naked; clothed with white silky down beneath. Stipules none. Flowers from the upper part of the branches, axillary, solitary, on short flower-stalks. At the base of the calyx a pair of linear, short, silky bractes. Calyx silky, its segments naked with revolute margins. Corolla white, with purple spots about the orifice.—Native of New South Wales, near Port Jackson.

WESTRUTHER, a parish of Scotland, in Berwickshire, about five miles long, and four broad.

WESTVILLE, a post village of the United States, in Berkshire, New York; 14 miles north of Oswego.

WESTWARD, adv. [wɛstwɛɑrd, Saxon.] Towards the west.

When westward like the sun you took your way,
And from benighted Britain bore the day. Dryden.

WESTWARD, a township of England, in Cumberland; 2½ miles south-east of Wigton.

WESTWARD MILLS, a post village of the United States, in Brunswick county, Virginia.

WESTWARDLY, adv. With tendency to the west.

If our loves faint, and westwardly decline;
To me thou falsely thinest,
And I to thee mine actions shall disguise. Donne.

WESTWELL, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire; 2½ miles south-west of Burford.—2. A parish in Kent, near Charing.

WESTWICK, a hamlet of England, in Cambridgeshire; 5 miles north-west of Cambridge.—2. A township in the county of Durham; 2 miles south-east of Barnard Castle.—3. A parish in Norfolk; 2½ miles south of North Walsham.

WESTWICKHAM, a parish of England, in Cambridgeshire; 5 miles from Linton.

WESTWOOD, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Dawlish, Devonshire.—2. A township in Herefordshire; 4½ miles north-west of Bromyard.—3. A township in Northumberland, situated on the Till, north-east of Wooller.—4. A parish in Wiltshire; 2 miles south-west of Bradford.—5. A hamlet in the parish of Langton Wallis, Worcestershire.

WEST-WOODSIDE, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Haxey, Lincolnshire.

WESTWRATLING, a parish of England, in Cambridgeshire; 6 miles from Linton. Population 586.

WESTZAANEN, a village of the Netherlands, in North Holland, with 2300 inhabitants; 8 miles north-west of Amsterdam.

WET, s. [wate, M. Goth., water; vaeta, Icel., rain; wæta, Sax., humidity; vetos, Gr., rain, from wō.] Water; humidity; moisture; rainy weather.

Now the sun, with more effectual beams,
Had cheer'd the face of earth, and dry'd the wet
From drooping plant. Milton.

WET, adj. [wæt, Sax. See the substantive.] Humid; having some moisture adhering: opposed to dry.—They are wet with the showers of the mountains. Job.—The soles of the feet have great affinity with the head, and the mouth of the stomach; as going wet-shod to those that use it not, affecteth both. Bacon.—Rainy; watery.—Wet weather seldom hurts the most unwise. Dryden.

To WET, v. n. To humectate; to moisten; to make to have moisture adherent.—A drop of water running swiftly over straw, wetteth not. Bacon.—Wet the thirsty earth with falling showers. Milton.—To moisten with drink.—Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton.

WETAPHATO, Indians of the United States, in Louisiana, at the head of the Platte.

WETARHOO, a river of the United States, in Louisiana, which runs into the Missouri; 1422 miles from the Mississippi.

WETATIC, a mountain of the United States, in Ashburnham, Massachusetts. The elevation of the summit is 1900 feet.

WETAWHOO, a small river of Louisiana, which falls into the Missouri. Its bed is 120 yards wide; but the water is frequently not 20 yards wide.

WETENHALL, a township of England, in Cheshire; 6½ miles north-west of Nantwich.

WETHAU, a village of Germany, in Prussian Saxony, near Weissenfels.

WETHER; s. [wēðer, Sax.; weder, Dutch.] A ram castrated.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death. Shakspeare.

He doth not apprehend how the tail of an African wether outweigheth the body of a good calf, that is, an hundred pound. Brown.

WETHERALL, a parish of England, in the county of Cumberland, near Carlisle.

WETHERBY, a market town and parish of England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire. It is situate on the banks of the river Wharfe, over which, at the entrance to the town, is a handsome stone bridge; and on the left hand is a famous wear or cascade across the river, for the purpose of drawing off the stream for supplying some mills. These mills are used not only for grinding corn, but for pressing great quantities of oil from rapeseed, and also for rasping logwood for the use of the clothiers and dyers. At some distance below the town, on the opposite side of the river, is a valuable mineral spring, called the Thorpe Arch Spa, or, more lately, Boslin Spa, where a neat village has arisen, for the accommodation of visitors, with two very good inns, besides several inferior ones. The water is adapted for rheumatic and scorbutic complaints. The quarter sessions of the peace for the West Riding are held here once a year, in rotation with Knaresborough, Skipton, and Wakefield. Market on Thursday, and two annual fairs; 14 miles west-south-by-west of York, and 180 north-by-west of London.

WETHERDEN, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 4 miles north-west of Market Stow.

WETHERINGSET, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 5 miles south-south-west of Eye.

WETHERLEY, a parish of England, in Leicestershire; 2 miles from Atherstone.

WETHERMELOCH, a township of England, in Cumberland; 5 miles from Penrith.

WETHERSFIELD, a parish of England, in Essex; 6 miles north-north-west of Braintree. Population 1368.

WETHERSFIELD, a post township of the United States, in Hartford county, Connecticut, on the west bank of the Connecticut.

WETHORPE, a hamlet of England, in Northamptonshire, adjoining to Stamford.

WETING, ALL SAINTS and St. MARY, a village of England, in the county of Norfolk, between Thetford and Methwold, near Brandon Ferry.

WETNESS, s. The state of being wet; moisture; humidity.—The wetness of these bottoms often spoils them for corn. Mortimer.

WETSCHWEIL, a large village of the Swiss canton of Zurich, on the lake of Zurich.

WETSHOD, adj. Wet over the shoes.

The valley all did swimme with streames of bloud,
So great that time a slaughter was there made:

It stainde the mightie mouthes of Nilus flood,
And on the shores you might bloud wetshod wade. Mir. for Mag.

WETTENHAUSEN, a village of Bavaria, on the Kam-lach; 17 miles east of Ulm.

WETTER, a large lake of Sweden, lying between East and West Gothland; about 66 miles long and 16 broad.

WETTER, a small river of Germany, in the Wetterau, which joins the Nidda.

WETTER, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel; 7 miles north-west of Marburg.

WETTER ISLE, an island in the Eastern seas, situated off the north coast of the island of Timor. It is about 65 miles in length, by 20 the average breadth. Lat. 7. 24. S. long. 126. 40. E.

WETTERAVIA, or the WETTERAU, in Germany, was originally the small district lying along the river Wetter; but was afterwards extended so as to comprise all the country lying between the Lahn, the Rhine, and the Maine.

WETTEREN, an inland town of the Netherlands, in the province province of East Flanders, on the Scheldt. It is seldom visited by travellers; 7 miles east-by-south of Ghent. Population 7400.

WETTERFELD, a village of Bavaria, on the Regen; 22 miles north-east of Ratisbon.

WETTERHORN (STORM PEAK), a mountain among the Alps, in the Swiss canton of Berne. Height 12,000 feet.

WETTIN, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the duchy of Magdeburg, on the Saale; 29 miles west-north-west of Leipzig. Lat. 51. 35. N. long. 11. 52. E. Population 2700.

WETWANG, a parish of England, in Yorkshire; 6½ miles west-by-north of Great Driffield.

WETZLAR, a town of Germany, situated on the river Lahn; 25 miles north of Frankfort on the Main. It is built on ground so unequal and hilly, as to be inaccessible to carriages.

WEVELGHEM, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of West Flanders, on the river Nederbeeke, with 3100 inhabitants.

WEVELINGHOVEN, a town of the Prussian States, in the government of Cologne. Population 1200.

WEVELSBURG, a large village of Prussian Westphalia, on the river Alm; 9 miles south of Paderborn.

WEVER, a river of England, in Devonshire, which runs into the Columb.

WEVERLING, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Magdeburg; 27 miles north of Halberstadt.

WAVERSHAM, a village and parish of England, in the county of Chester, situated on the river Wever or Weaver; 3 miles from Northwich.

WEVERY, a river of Wales, in Brecknockshire, which runs into the Wye.

To WEX, v. a. [corrupted from wax by Spenser, for a rhyme, and imitated by Dryden.] To grow; to increase.

She first taught men a woman to obey;
But when her son to man's estate did wex,
She it surrender'd.

Spenser.

She trod a wexing moon, that soon wou'd wane,
And drinking borrow'd light, be fill'd again.

Dryden.

WEXFORD, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, bounded on the east by St. George's Channel; on the south by Waterford bay; on the south-west by the county of Kilkenny; on the west by the county of Carlow; and on the north by the county of Wicklow. This county extends 38 Irish miles in length, and 24 Irish miles in breadth. It contains 315,396 Irish plantation acres, and is divided into 8 baronies, and 142 parishes, with 2 boroughs; namely, Wexford and New Ross, each of which return one member to the united parliament. It forms almost a peninsula, being separated from the counties of Waterford and Kilkenny by the deep and navigable streams of the Nore and Barrow, and from the counties of Carlow and Wicklow by formidable ranges of stupendous mountains, through which there are only two passes, one by the sea-side at Arklow, and another by Scullough Gap to the county of Carlow. The baronies of Forth and Bargie, divided from the west of the county by a chain of mountains, named the mountains of Forth, are considered the most fruitful, and abound with marl and other manures. The remainder of the county is interspersed with single mountains of considerable elevation.

WEXFORD, a sea-port town of Ireland, at the mouth of the Slaney, in a county of the same name, of which it is the chief town, with a large and beautiful harbour, in St. George's channel. The mouth of the harbour is choaked with a bar; and therefore no vessel drawing more than 12 feet water, can pass to the town. The English invaders wrested this town from the Danes, after a siege of four days, on the 4th of May, 1170. This town was likewise besieged by Cromwell, on the 1st of October, 1649, and having been betrayed by captain James Stafford, commandant of the castle, it was stormed, when sir Edward Butler, the governor, with 2,000 soldiers, were put to the sword. It is irregularly built, and the streets are narrow. There were four religious houses established here previous to the reformation. The trade of Wexford is inconsiderable, in consequence of local obstacles. Its chief traffic consists in exporting malt, barley, beer, beef, hides, butter, and tallow. The town and its suburbs contain seven parishes; those in the suburbs are St. John's, St. Michael's, and St. Peter's. It was evacuated by the king's forces on the 30th of May, 1798, in consequence of the defeat of some detachments sent to reinforce the feeble garrison in the defiles of the adjacent mountains, when it became the scene of many enormities. It returns one member to the imperial parliament. Much woollen cloth is manufactured in the town and neighbourhood; 25 miles west-north-west of Waterford, and 60 south of Dublin. Lat. 52. 22. N. long. 6. 29. W.

WEXHAM, a parish of England, in Buckinghamshire; 1½ mile north-east of Slough.

WEXIO, or KRONOBORG, a province of Sweden, consisting of the southern part of Smaland, and containing, on a surface of 3,480 square miles, 90,000 inhabitants.

WEXIO, a town of Sweden, in Smaland, situated on the river Gullsmesback. It has a cathedral, is the residence of a bishop and provincial governor, and has a public school, where Linnæus received the first elements of his education; 46 miles north-north-west of Carlsrona. Lat. 56. 52. N. long. 14. 44. E.

WEY, a river of England, in Dorsetshire, which runs into the sea at Weymouth.—2. A river of Surrey, which rises in Hampshire, waters Guildford, and enters the Thames at Weybridge. It has been made navigable to Guildford and Godalmin, and a canal has been cut from it to Basingstoke, in Hampshire.

WEYBREAD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 7 miles north-east-by-east of Eye.

WEYBRIDGE, a hamlet of England, in Norfolk; 10½ miles from Yarmouth.—2. A village and parish of England, in the county of Surrey, situated at the conflux of the rivers Wey and Thames; 9 miles south-west of Kingston, and 20 south-west of London.

WEYDEN, a village of the Prussian province of Cleves and Berg, near Aix-la Chapelle, with 900 inhabitants.

WEYER, a village of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, with 900 inhabitants.

WEYERSHEIM, ZUM THURN, a village of France, in Alsace, with 1,500 inhabitants; 9 miles north of Strasburg.

WEYHILL, a small village of England, in the county of Southampton. It is situated on the road from London to Amesbury, on an eminence from which it derives its name. The town itself is small and unimportant, and the church is in a very desolate state; but the place is greatly noted on account of its fair, which is held annually, from the 9th to the 15th of October, and is reckoned one of the largest in England for cattle, store-sheep, Sussex and Kentish hops, Wilts, Somerset, and Gloucester cheese. For sheep and hops probably it has not its equal in England; and the price of both is usually a criterion for all the west parts of the kingdom. In leather, cheese, and other articles of general consumption, also, it mostly regulates the markets and fairs for several months after. The booths are formed into regular streets, and exhibit all the features of a large town, every part of which presents a scene of bustle and activity; and the amount of money circulated here during the mart is incredible, and almost incalculable; 3 miles west of Andover.

WEYLAND, POINT, a rocky point on the south shore of New Holland. Lat. 33. 14. S. long. 134. 32. E.

WEYMOUTH, a sea-port, borough, and market town of England, in Dorsetshire, is celebrated as a fashionable bathing place. It is situated on the British channel, at the western side of a most beautiful bay, which forms nearly a semi-circle, making a sweep of more than two miles, and is well protected from the north winds by hills. It receives its name from the mouth of the little river Wey, near which it stands, and communicates with Melcombe Regis, to which it is united by a handsome new bridge. Weymouth, though a town of considerable antiquity, continued, till within these last

last thirty or forty years, an inconsiderable and indifferently built place. From a variety of causes, it had been fast going to decay since the time of queen Elizabeth. The removal of the wool-staple to Poole, the loss of the Newfoundland trade, the havoc made by the civil wars, damages by fire, neglect, want of public spirit, and other circumstances, had concurred, to produce this effect; and till it began to acquire celebrity as a watering place, it was little more than an inconsiderable fishing town. It was first brought into reputation as a bathing place in 1763, and having been visited by the duke of Gloucester, and afterwards by the late king, George III., and his family, with great benefit, in 1789, who made it their summer residence, it acquired general notice, and became immediately a place of fashionable resort. The town is now greatly enlarged by the addition of many new and elegant buildings. The church is a low structure, and consists of three aisles. East of the church are some buildings connected with a Dominican priory, which was founded here about the commencement of the fifteenth century. These are now parcelled out in tenements; and the chapel belonging to the priory is used as a malt-house. At the west end of the town is a small town-hall. The theatre is neatly fitted up, and is capable of containing 300 spectators in the boxes. Here is a battery, mounting twenty-one small guns. In the vicinity is a battery of heavy cannon, and some cavalry barracks.

It is probable, from several circumstances, that the site of this town was known to the Romans. It is certain that it was known to the Saxons. In the reign of Edward III. it had become of some importance, the inhabitants being ordered, together with those of Melcombe and Lyme, to send a certain quota of ships for the king's expedition to Gascony. In the twenty-first of the same king, Weymouth furnished 20 ships, and 264 mariners, towards the siege of Calais, according to the roll of his fleet, preserved in the Cottonian library. In the year 1471, Margaret of Anjou, with her son prince Edward, landed here from France, in order to restore her husband to the throne. Thirty-six years afterwards, king Philip of Castile, with his queen, were driven on this coast, and having run into the port, were detained by sir Thomas Trenchard, till an interview took place between the English and Spanish monarchs, from which the former derived some advantages. In the year 1588, Weymouth contributed 6 ships to oppose the Armada, one of which was of 120 tons burden.

The two boroughs of Weymouth and Melcombe Regis were incorporated by an act passed in the 13th of queen Elizabeth, the government being vested in a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs, an indefinite number of aldermen, and twenty-four capital burgesses; and they now possess, as one borough, the peculiar privilege, with the metropolis, of sending four members to parliament. The representatives are elected by freeholders of Weymouth and of Melcombe, whether inhabitants or otherwise. The number of voters is about 200. On a high cliff, about one mile from the town, are the ruins of Sandisfoot castle, a fortress erected by Henry VIII. about the year 1539. Market on Tuesday and Friday; 9 miles south of Dorchester, and 129 west-south-west of London.

WEYMOUTH, a post township of the United States, in Norfolk county, Massachusetts; 14 miles south-south-east of Boston.—2. A township of Gloucester county, New Jersey.

WEYMOUTH BAY, a bay on the north-east coast of New Holland, to the north-west of Cape Weymouth.

WEYMOUTH, CAPE, a cape on the north-east coast of New Holland. Lat. 12. 42. S. long. 217. 15. W.

WEYMOUTH FURNACE, a post village of the United States, in Gloucester county, New Jersey.

WEYPERT, a town of Bohemia; 15 miles north of Elnbogen.

WEYRE, a town of Hindostan, province of Agra, belonging to the rajah of Bhurtpore. It is situated on the high road from Agra to Jeypore, and is very well fortified. Lat. 27. 2. N. long. 77. 2. E.

WEZAND, s. [See WESAND.] The windpipe.—Air is ingustible, and by the rough artery, or wesand, conducted into the lungs. Brown.

To WHACK, v. a. To strike: a word used in some parts of the north, and apparently a corruption of thwack.

WHADDON, a hamlet of England, in Buckinghamshire; 4 miles south-by-east of Stony Stratford. Population 548.—2. A parish in Cambridgeshire; 4½ miles north-west of Royston.—3. A parish in Gloucestershire; 3 miles south-by-west of Gloucester.—4. A parish in Wiltshire; 2½ miles north-east of Trowbridge.

WHALE, s. [hpale, Sax.; balæna, Lat.] The largest of fish; the largest of the animals that inhabit this globe.

The greatest whale that swims the sea,
Does instantly my pow'r obey.

Swift.

WHALE, a hamlet of England, in Westmoreland; 12 miles west-by-north of Appleby.

WHALE BANK, a fishing bank on the coast of Newfoundland, 60 miles long and 21 wide; 90 miles south of Cape Mary. Lat. 45. N. long. 53. 50. W.

WHALE COVE, a bay of the Atlantic, on the north coast of the island of Manan, near the coast of Maine.

WHALE FISH ISLAND, an island on the coast of Guiana, at the mouth of the river Essequibo.

WHALE ISLAND, a small island near the north-west coast of Borneo. Lat. 4. 10. N. long. 112. 21. E.

WHALE POINT, the south-east cape of an island in the straits of Magellan; 6 miles south-south-west of Passage Point.

WHALE ROCK, an under-water rock, at the entrance of the bay of Islands, on which the Endeavour struck in 1769; 4 miles south-east of Point Pocock.

WHALE SOUND, a channel in the straits of Magellan, between an island and the coast of Terra del Fuego.

WHALEBONE, s. The fin of a whale; the fin of a whale cut and used in making stays. Ash.

WHALEY, a township of England, in Cheshire, situated on the river Goyt; 9 miles south-east of Stockport.—2. A hamlet in the parish of Hope, Derbyshire.

WHALLEY, a village and parish of England, in the county of Lancaster. The village is small, containing, in 1811, only 175 houses, and 1004 inhabitants; but the parish is very extensive and populous, including the borough of Clitheroe, and numerous townships. It contains no fewer than 16 chapels of ease, under the parish church, of which seven were founded before 1284, and the remainder at different periods since 1400. The parish church is very ancient. The cylindrical columns at the north aisle are the oldest part of the building, and the choir was built about 1235. In the village there is a small school, of the foundation of Edward VI., which, in conjunction with those of Middleton and Burnley, have 13 scholarships in Brazenose college, Oxford. Whalley abbey, at Whalley, on the banks of the Calder, the remains of a monastery belonging to monks of the Cistercian order, was built in 1296; 6 miles north-east of Blackburn, and 4 south of Clitheroe. Population of the parish, 10,864.

WHALLY, POINT, a cape on the north coast of the island of Revilla Gigedo, in the North Pacific ocean. Lat. 55. 55. N. long. 228. 52. E.

WHALSAY, an island in Shetland, on the east coast of the Mainland, about 6 miles long and three broad, belonging to the parochial charge of Nesting. The coast is rocky, and the surface unequal; but upon the whole tolerably fertile. It is observed by mariners, that, on approaching this island, the compass reels and becomes unsteady, plainly indicating a magnetic influence in some of the rocks of the island. It contains about 550 inhabitants.

WHALTON, a township of England, in Northumberland; 7 miles south-west of Morpeth.

WHA'LY, adj. [See WEAL.] Marked in streaks: properly wealy.

A bearded goat whose rugged hair,
And whaly eyes, the sign of jealousy,
Was like the person's self, whom he did bear.

Spenser.
WHAME,

WHAME, s. The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horses in summer, not by stinging, but by their bomybious noise, or tickling them in sticking their nits on the hair. Derham.

WHAMPOA, a seaport of China, situated on an island in the river of Canton, about two miles below Canton itself. Here large ships anchor, and carry on their communication with Canton by boats. All European vessels are allowed to wear a flag in their boats, which prevents their being stopped at the custom-houses; while those of Asiatic nations must have a chop or pass, to be renewed at every custom-house. The island on which Whampoa is situated, is called Bank-shall island, from being the place where storehouses are constructed of bamboos and mats, to contain the ships' stores, overhaul the rigging, repair casks, &c. Immediately on the arrival of any vessel, two custom-house boats are placed along-side, to prevent clandestine trade, and without whose permission no goods can be shipped or landed. Lat. 23. 6. N.

WHANG, s. [ðpanz, Sax.] A thong: a leather thong. A word used in several parts of the north.

To WHANG, v. a. To beat; perhaps with thongs. Grose.

WHAP, s. A blow. A low expression.

WHAPLODE, a township of England, in Lincolnshire; 2 miles west of Holbeach.

WHAPLODE DROVE, a hamlet in the above county; 6 miles east-north-east of Crowland.

WHAPPER, s. Any thing uncommonly large; a thumper. Common in the north of England.

WHARF, s. [warf, Swedish; wercf, Dutch. Mr. H. Tooke pronounces our word the past participle of the Sax. hwýrfan, þýrfan, ambire, projicere. Serenius derives it from the Icel. huerfa, in gyrum agitare, noticing hpeorfa, Sax., crepido litoris, à formâ circulari sic dict.] A perpendicular bank or mole, raised for the convenience of lading or emptying vessels; a quay, or key.

Duller should'st thou be, than the fat weed,
That roots itself in ease on Lethe's wharf,
Would'st thou not stir in this.

Shakspeare.

WHARF, a river of England, in Yorkshire, which rises at the foot of the Craven hills, and waters the beautiful district of Wharfedale. After passing by Otley, Weatherby, and Tadcaster, and crossing the West Riding, in a course of more than 50 miles, it discharges itself into the Ouse, at the village of Nun Appleton. It runs with a swift, impetuous current, and its course is mostly to the south-east.

WHARFAGE, s. Dues for landing at a wharf.

WHARFINGER, s. One who attends a wharf.—Boat-takers and wharfingers ought to be diligent to provide for the transport of the provisions where ordered. Maydman.

WHARKTON, a parish of England, in Northamptonshire, near Kettering.

WHARLES, a township of England, in Lancashire; 3 miles north-east of Kirkham.

WHARRAM, PERCY, a township of England, East Riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles south-east of New Malton.

WHARRAM IN THE STREET, another township in Yorkshire, 1 mile distant from the foregoing.

WHARTON (Henry), an English divine of the Established Church, was born in 1664, at Worstead, in Norfolk, where his father was vicar; and in his sixteenth year admitted a pensioner of Gonville and Caius college at Cambridge, where he assiduously pursued the study of various branches of literature, and particularly of mathematics, under Isaac Newton, Lucasian professor. After taking the degree of B.A. with great reputation, he assisted Dr. Cave in his "Historia Literaria," contributing almost the whole of the appendix of the three last centuries. In 1687 he took orders, and his degree of M.A. in the following year. He had various literary occupations, chiefly in writing or editing treatises against Popery; until he took priest's orders, when he was presented first to the vicarage of Minster in the isle of Thanet, and in 1689 to the rectory of Chartham. By the advice of Dr.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1661.

Lloyd, bishop of St. Asaph, he undertook the work which gave some celebrity to his name, entitled "Anglia Sacra, sive Collectio Historiarum, partim antiquitus, partim recentior Scripturarum, de Archiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ à prima Fidei Christianæ susceptione ad Annum 1540," 2 vols. fol. London, 1691. An additional part was published after his death in 1695, under the title of "Historia de Episcopis et Decanis Londinensibus; necnon de Episcopis et Decanis Assavensibus (St. Asaph); à prima Sedis utriusque Fundatione ad Annum 1540," 8vo. The author's "Anglia Sacra" was the result of great industry and labour, and evinces the author's zeal for the church to which he belonged; but it is chargeable with incorrectness. In 1692 he published "A Defence of Pluralities;" in the following year he edited some ancient theological pieces; and, under the name of Anthony Harmer, published "A Specimen of some Errors and Defects in the History of the Reformation of the Church of England, by Gilbert Burnet, D.D.," a work which excited the indignation of the author, and caused him to mention Wharton with asperity in the introduction to the third volume of that work. The last publication of Wharton was "The History of the Troubles and Trial of Archbishop Laud;" to which were added Laud's diary, and some other pieces. He also edited the Life of Cardinal Pole, by Bacatelli, together with some animadversions on Strype's Memorials of Archbishop Cranmer. Although his constitution was strong, he closed his life, in consequence of intense application, somewhat prematurely, in March, 1694-5, in the 31st year of his age, leaving several MSS., some of which were afterwards printed, as also two volumes of sermons. He was interred in Westminster-abbey.—Biog. Brit.

WHARTON (Philip, Duke of), the son of the marquis of Wharton, who was a firm supporter of the Revolution and Hanover succession, was born in 1699; and after having exhibited talents which commanded notice, when he was 13 or 14 years of age, in the course of his education under domestic tutors, contracted a premature marriage with the daughter of major-general Holmes, and thus disappointed his father's views, and hastened his death in 1715. In the beginning of 1716, Philip set out on his travels, proposing to finish his education at Geneva; but the young marquis, having contracted a taste for gaiety and expense, was disgusted with the manners of that place, and leaving his governor there, proceeded to Lyons, and wrote to the Pretender at Avignon, accompanying his letter with the present of a fine horse. The Pretender was highly gratified, and receiving the marquis at his court, decorated him with the title of the duke of Northumberland. At Paris he paid his respects to the dowager-queen of James II., and received notice and good advice from the English ambassador, lord Stair. About the end of 1716 he returned to England, and going over to Ireland, where he possessed a peerage, he was admitted to take his seat in the House of Lords of that kingdom. Here, deserting the principles and connection which he had lately formed, he defended the established government with all the powers of his reasoning and eloquence; in consequence of which he was advanced to a dukedom, by the style of duke of Wharton, in the county of Westmoreland. Upon coming to age, he took his seat in the English House of Lords, where he distinguished himself by an abandonment of his lately avowed principles, in the defence of bishop Atterbury; and he also published a virulent opposition paper, intitled "The True Briton." But such was his boundless extravagance, that his estate was vested, by a decree of chancery, in the hands of trustees, who allowed him an annuity of 1200*l.* Having only this pittance, he determined to live abroad, and to enter into the service of the Pretender. Having visited Vienna and Madrid, he formed an acquaintance at the latter place with a young lady of Irish extraction, who was maid of honour to the queen of Spain, and married her; his duchess having died in 1726, without leaving any issue. From Rome, where he appeared under the title of the duke of Northumberland, and decorated with a blue ribband and garter, he returned to Spain, and obtained obtained permission from the king to go as a volunteer to Gibraltar, which was then under siege by the Spaniards. When this siege broke up, he visited the Spanish court, and was nominated by the king "colonel-aggregate" of one of the Irish regiments. Discouraged in his wishes to be actively employed in the service of the Pretender, he went to Paris, and with singular effrontery paid a public visit to the English ambassador, Horace Walpole; informing him, upon taking leave, that he was going to dine with the bishop of Rochester, though it had been made criminal to hold any communication with that exiled person. At this time a bill of indictment for high treason was preferred against him in England, for having appeared in arms against his majesty's fortress at Gibraltar; but a wish to reclaim him induced sir Robert Walpole to send two friends to offer him his re-establishment and the possession of his estate, if he would only sue for pardon. This he refused to do, consenting only to accept a pardon if freely granted him. His allowance from home was discontinued, and he was overwhelmed with debts abroad. From Rouen, where he had for some time resided, he removed to Paris, living meanly, and providing for himself by various dishonourable expedients. Having obtained a small sum, when all his resources had failed, he took his duchess with him, and went by water to Bilboa. From thence he proceeded to join his regiment, subjecting his duchess to extreme distress, in which she was occasionally relieved by the bounty of the duke of Ormond, who was himself an exile. In 1730 his health declined, and he amused himself in composing a tragedy, on the story of Mary queen of Scots; but his end was approaching. In his way to a mineral spring, in the mountains of Catalonia, where he had once obtained relief, he was obliged to stop at a small village, when his condition was so pitifully destitute, that the fathers of a Bernardine convent took compassion upon him, and brought him to their house, where by attention and cordials his life was prolonged for about a week. At length without a friend or acquaintance to close his eyes, having performed the last duties of penitent devotion, he expired on May 31, 1731, in the 32d year of his age, and was interred the next day after the manner of a poor monk. Pope has recorded his character, in the first epistle of his Moral Essays, in the following beautiful lines:

" Thus with each gift of nature and of art,
And wanting nothing but an honest heart;
Grown all to all, from no one vice exempt,
And most contemptible to shun contempt;
His passion still, to covet general praise;
His life, to forfeit it a thousand ways;
A constant bounty which no friend has made;
An angel tongue which no man can persuade;
A fool, with more of wit than half mankind;
Too rash for thought, for action too refin'd;
A tyrant to the wife his heart approves;
A rebel to the very king he loves:
He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still! flagitious, yet not great."

Wharton was one of the warmest patrons of Young, who dedicated to him his most celebrated tragedy "The Revenge," and gave him the credit of having suggested the most beautiful incident in that composition.—Biog. Brit. Pope's Works. Johnson's Lives of the Poets.

WHARTON (Thomas), a physician and anatomist, was born in Yorkshire in 1610, and educated at Pembroke-hall, Cambridge. Before the civil wars he resided in Trinity college, Oxford, as private tutor to a natural son of lord Sunderland. Upon the commencement of the war he removed to London, and engaged in the practice of physic. After the surrender of Oxford to the parliament in 1646, he returned to Trinity college, and was created M.D. by the recommendation of general Fairfax. Returning again to London, he became a member and censor of the college of physicians, and acquired considerable practice and reputation. In 1652 he read lectures before the college on the subject of the glands; but labouring, as other anatomists of that day did, under a scarcity of human subjects, he was under a necessity of availing himself of animal dissection. In his work, intitled "Adenographia, sive Glandularum totius Corporis Descriptio," 1656, 8vo., his descriptions are almost wholly taken from brute animals, and therefore cannot stand the test of modern accuracy. Nevertheless he revived and improved the knowledge of the salivary ducts on the side of the tongue, to which he affixed his own name; and he furnishes useful observations on the diseases of the glands. He died in 1673. Haller. Gen. Biog.

WHARTON, or WARTON, a township of England, in Cheshire; 2½ miles west-north-west of Middlewich. Population 888.

WHARTON, a township of England, in Herefordshire; 2½ miles south-south-east of Loominster.—2. A township in Lincolnshire; 3½ miles north-east of Gainsborough.—3. A township in Westmoreland; 2 miles south of Kirkby Stephen.

WHARTON, a post village of the United States, in St. Tamminy's parish, Louisiana.—2. A township of Fayette county, Pennsylvania. Population 922.

WHASHTON, a township of England, in Yorkshire; 4 miles north-west of Richmond.

WHASSET, a hamlet of England, in Westmoreland; 9½ miles west-by-north of Kirby Lonsdale.

WHAT, pronoun. [ἤψατ, Saxon; wat, Dutch.] That which: pronoun indefinite.

What you can make her do,
I am content to look on; what to speak,
I am content to hear.

Shakspeare.

Let them say what they will, she will do what she list. Drayton.—Which part.—If we rightly estimate things, what in them is purely owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find ninety-nine parts of a hundred are wholly to be put on the account of labour. Locke.—Something that is in one's mind indefinitely.—I tell thee what, corporal, I could tear her. Shakspeare.—Which of several.—Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude, colour, placing in the heaven, or lasting, produceth what kind of effect. Bacon.—An interjection by way of surprise or question.

What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself. Shakspeare.

What if I advance an invention of my own to supply the defect of our new writers? Dryden.

WHAT Though. What imports it though? notwithstanding. An elliptical mode of speech. What though a child may be able to read; there is no doubt but the meanest among the people under the law had been as able as the priests themselves were to offer sacrifices, did this make sacrifice of no effect? Hooker.

What though none live my innocence to tell,
I know it; truth may own a generous pride,
I clear myself, and care for none beside. Dryden.

WHAT Time, What day. At the time when; on the day when.

What day the genial angel to our sire
Brought her, more lovely than Pandora. Milton.

[Pronoun interrogative.] Which of many? interrogatively.

What art thou,
That here in desert hast thy habitation? Spenser.

What is't to thee if he neglect thy urn,
Or without spices lets thy body burn? Dryden.

Whate'er I begg'd, thou like a dotard speak'st
More than is requisite; and what of this?
Why is it mention'd now? Dryden.

To how great a degree, used either interrogatively or indefinitely.

Am I so much deform'd?
What partial judges are our love and hate! Dryden.
It

It is sometimes used for whatever.—It is used adverbially for partly; in part.—The enemy having his country wasted, what by himself, and what by the soldiers, findeth succour in no place. Spenser.—When they come to cast up the profit and loss, what betwixt force, interest, or good manners, the adventurer escapes well, if he can but get off. L'Estrange.

WHAT Ho! An interjection of calling.

What ho! thou genius of the clime, what ho!
Ly'st thou asleep beneath these hills of snow?
Stretch out thy lazy limbs.

Dryden.

WHAT, s. Fare; things; matter. Obsolete.—Such homely what as serves the simple clown. Spenser.

WHATBOROUGH, a hamlet of England, in Berkshire; 10½ miles east of Leicester.

WHATCOTE, a parish of England, in Warwickshire, near Shipston-upon-Stour.

WHATCROFT, a hamlet of England, in Cheshire; 3 miles south-east of Northwich.

WHATELY, a post township of the United States, in Franklin county, Massachusetts; 10 miles north of Northampton, and 90 west of Boston. Population 891.

WHATE'VER, WHA'TSO, or WHATSOE'VER, pronouns. Whatso is not now in use.—Having one nature or another; being one or another either generically, specifically, or numerically.

To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements, Castles, and whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection.

Shakspeare.

Any thing, be it what it will.—Whatsoever our liturgy hath more than their's, they cut it off. Hooker.

Whatever thing

The sith of time mows down, devour.

Milton.

The same, be it this or that.—Be what'er Vitruvius was before. Pope.—All that; the whole that; all particulars that.

From whence he views with his black-lidded eye,

Whatso the heaven in his wide vault contains. Spenser.

What'er the ocean pales or sky inclips

Is thine.

Shakspeare.

At once came forth whatever creeps.

Milton.

WHATFIELD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 2½ miles south-east of Bildeston.

WHATLEY'S MILLS, a post village of the United States, in Morgan county, Georgia.

WHATLEY, a parish of England, in Somersetshire, situated on the small stream called Whatley water, which falls into the Frome; 2 miles north-west of Frome.—2. A hamlet in Warwickshire, near Tamworth.

WHATTON, LONG, a parish of England, in Leicestershire; 4 miles north-west of Longborough. Population 782.

WHATTON-UPON-SMITE, a parish of England, in Nottinghamshire, situated on the river Smite, north-east of Bingham.

WHEAL, s. [See WEAL.] A pustule; a small swelling filled with matter.—The humour cannot transpire, whereupon it corrupts and raises little wheals or blisters. Wiseman.

WHEAT. s. [hpeace, Saxon; weyde, Dutch; hwaiti, M. Goth.; hweite, Icel. from hwit, albus. Serenius.] The grain of which bread is chiefly made. See TRITICUM.—He mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of the earth. Shakspeare.

WHEAT PLAINS, a post village of the United States, in Pike county, Pennsylvania.

WHEATCROFT, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Crich, Derbyshire.

WHEA'TEAR, s. [ocuanthe, Lat.] A small bird, very delicate.—What cook would lose her time in picking larks, wheatears, and other small birds? Swift.

WHEA'TEN, adj. Made of wheat.—There is a project on foot for transporting our best wheaten straw to Dunstable, and obliging us by law to take off yearly so many tons of the straw hats. Swift.

WHEATENHURST, a parish of England, in Gloucestershire; 7 miles north-west of Stroud.

WHEATFIELD, a parish of England, in Oxfordshire; 2 miles south of Tetsworth.

WHEATFIELD, a township of the United States, in Indiana county, Pennsylvania. Population 1475.

WHEATHAMPSTEAD, a village and parish of England, in the county of Hertford, situated on the river Lea. It stands on high ground, and in a pleasant situation. Its church is an ancient building, in the form of a cathedral; 4 miles west-south-west of Welwyn. Population 1250.

WHEATHILL, a parish of England, in Salop; 9 miles north-east of Ludlow.—2. A parish in Somersetshire; 4 miles west-by-south of Castle Cary.

WHEATLEY, or WHATELEY, a hamlet of England, in Oxfordshire, divided from Tetsworth by the river Thames, over which it has a bridge; 5½ miles from Oxford. Population 764.

WHEATLEY, a township of England, in Lancashire 8½ miles west-by-south of Clitheroe.—2. A hamlet in the West Riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles west-north-west of Otley.—3. Another township in Yorkshire, near Doncaster.

WHEATLEY, CURR, a township of England, in Lancashire, west-south-west of Colne.

WHEATLEY, NORTH, a parish of England, in Nottinghamshire; 5 miles north-east of East Retford.

WHEATLEY, SOUTH, a parish, united with the foregoing, and half a mile distant.

WHEATLY (Francis), was born in London in 1747, and received his first instruction as an artist in Shipley's drawing-school. Whilst young he received several premiums from the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, &c. He does not appear to have had any particular instructor in painting, but by his own industry and ingenuity contrived to obtain some knowledge of it; and having formed an intimacy with Mr. Mortimer, whom he assisted in painting the ceiling at Brockett-hall, by that circumstance obtained considerable improvement. He had great employment in painting small whole-length portraits, to which he added landscape back-grounds with considerable taste. After practising some years in London, he went to Ireland, and was much employed in Dublin, where he painted a large picture of the Irish house of commons, with portraits of the most considerable political characters, by which he acquired great reputation. On his return to London he painted a picture of the soldiery attacking the rioters in 1780, which was well engraved by Heath.

About this time he appears to have changed his practice, and painted rural and domestic subjects in a manner which evidently exhibits them to have been the offspring of the natural bent of his mind. He was engaged in the Shakspeare Gallery, but failed to excite interest: neither his talent nor his style was suited to the character of the subjects given to him. In the slighter subjects of common life he was at home, and he touched them and composed them in a most agreeable manner, and with a very pleasing tone of colour: these he executed with rapidity, and, as he always sold them, he acquired sufficient money to indulge a natural propensity to the pleasures of the table. Hence he became a martyr to the gout, and died of that disease in 1801, at the age of 54. He was elected an academician in 1791.

WHEATON, ASTON, a township of England, in Staffordshire; 4½ miles west-by-south of Penkridge. Population 579.

WHEA'TPLUM, s. A sort of Plum. Ainsworth.

WHEATSBOROUGH, a post township of the United States, in Huron county, Ohio.

To WHEE'DLE, v. a. [It is apparently derived from the Saxon abpehan, seducere.] To entice by soft words; to flatter; to persuade by kind words.

His sire,

From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's schools

To learn the unlucky art of wheedling fools. Dryden.

WHEE'DLER, s. One who wheedles.

WHEEL, s. [hpeol, Sax. wiel, Dutch; hiocl, Icel.; from the M. Goth. wahwian, to roll. Serenius.] A circular body that turns round upon an axis.—Carnality within raises all the combustions without; this is the great wheel to which the clock owes its motion. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Fortune sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty, that it stops her wheel. Dryden.

A circular body.—Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it.
Shakspeare.—A carriage that runs upon wheels.

Through the proud street she moves the public gaze.
The turning wheel before the palace stays. Pope.

An instrument on which criminals are tortured.
Let them pull all about mine ears, present me
Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels. Shakspeare.

The instrument of spinning.
Verse sweetens care, however rude the sound,
All at her work the village maiden sings;
Nor as she turns the giddy wheel around,
Revolves the sad vicissitudes of things. Giffard.

Rotation; revolution.—Look not too long upon these turning wheels of vicissitude, lest we become giddy. Bacon.
—A compass about; a track approaching to circularity.—He throws his flight in many an airy wheel. Milton.

To WHEEL, v. n. To move on wheels.

Who sees a clock moving in every part,
A sailing pinnace, and a wheeling cart,
But thinks, that reason, ere it came to pass,
The first impulsive cause and mover was. Sir J. Davies.

To turn on an axis.—The moon carried about the earth always shews the same face to us, not once wheeling upon her own centre. Bentley.—To revolve; to have a rotatory motion.

The course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time. Shakspeare.

To turn; to have vicissitudes; to fetch a compass.

Spies

Heid me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about. Shakspeare.

To WHEEL, v. a. To put into a rotatory motion; to make to whirl round.

Heav'n rowl'd

Her motions, as the great first Mover's hand
First wheels their course. Milton.

WHEELBARROW, s. A carriage driven forward on one wheel.—Carry bottles in a wheelbarrow upon rough ground, but not filled full, but leave some air. Bacon.

WHEELDRAKE, a parish of England, East Riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles south-east of York. Population 581.

WHEEL'LER, s. A maker of wheels.—After local names, the most have been derived from occupations, as Potter,
Smith, Brasier, Wheeler, Wright. Camden.

WHEELER, a river of Wales, in Denbighshire, which runs into the Cluyd, about 3 miles north of Denbigh.

WHEELING, a post town of the United States, in Ohio county, Virginia, on the Ohio, at the mouth of the Wheeling. It is built on a high bank, principally on one street, and contains a court-house, a jail, a market-house, a bank, a church, about 200 houses, and has some trade and manufactures. The Cumberland road, which is now open, intersects the Ohio at this place. There are in this place two potteries for stone-ware, a nail factory, a market-house, a rope-walk, and boat-yard; 8 miles east of St. Clairsville, 28 west-by-south of Washington, Pennsylvania, 95 below Pittsburg, and 370 north-west of Richmond.

WHEELING, a river of the United States, in Virginia, which runs into the Ohio, at the town of Wheeling.

WHEELING, or INDIAN WHEELING, a river of the United States, in Ohio, which runs into the Ohio, nearly opposite the town of Wheeling.

WHEELING, a township of the United States, in Guernsey county, Ohio. Population 171.—2. A township of Belmont county, Ohio. Population 656.

WHEELLOCK, a river of England, in Cheshire, which, after a course of about 12 miles from Mowcap Hill, runs into the Dan, below Middlewich.

WHEELLOCK, a small hamlet of England, on the banks of the foregoing river; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-south-west of Sandbach.

WHEELLOCK, a post township of the United States, in Caledonia county, Vermont; 40 miles north-east of Montpelier. Population 963.

WHEELSLETT, a township of England, parish of Long Benton, Northumberland.

WHEELTON, a township of England, in Lancashire; 4 miles north-east of Chorley. Population 884.

WHEELWRIGHT, s. A maker of wheel carriages.—It is a tough wood, and all heart, being good for the wheelwrights. Mortimer.

WHEEL'LY, adj. Circular; suitable to rotation.

Hinds exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheelly form
To the expected grinder. Phillips.

To WHEEZE, v. n. [hpeoþon, Sax.] To breathe with noise.—It is easy to run into ridicule the best descriptions, when once a man is in the humour of laughing, till he wheezes at his own dull jest. Dryden.—Wheezing asthma loth to stir. Swift.

WHELK, s. [See To WELK.] An inequality; a protuberance.—His face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames of fire. Shakspeare.—A pustule. [See WEAL.]

WHELKED. See WELKED.

WHEL'KY, adj. Embossed; protuberant; rounded.
Ne aught the whelky pearls esteemeth he,
Which are from Indian seas brought far away. Spenser.

To WHELM, v. a. [hulian, M. Goth. hilma, or hwilma,] Icel. tegere. Serenius.] To cover with something not to be thrown off; to bury.

On those cursed engines triple row,
They saw them whelm'd, and all their confidence
Under the weight of mountains bury'd deep. Milton.

To throw upon something so as to cover or bury it.—The lady threw out the liquor, welmed it on the cloth, and turned it round three times. Invisible Spy.—Whelm some things over them, and keep them there. Mortimer.

WHELNETHAN, GREAT and LITTLE, adjoining parishes of England, in Suffolk; 4 miles south-east of Bury St.
Edmund's.

WHELP, s. [welp, Dutch; huolpar, Icel.; hwalp, Swed.]
The young of a dog; a puppy.

They call'd us, for our fierceness, English dogs,
Now, like their wHELPS, we crying run away. Shakspeare.

The young of any beast of prey.—The lion's wHELP shall be to himself unknown. Shakspeare.—A son. In contempt.

The young wHELP of Talbot's raging brood
Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood.
Shakspeare.

A young man. In contempt.

Slave, I will strike your soul out with my foot,
Let me but find you again with such a face:
You wHELP. B. Jouson.

To WHELP, v. n. To bring young. Applied to beasts, generally beasts of prey.

A lioness hath wHELPEd in the streets,
And graves have yawn'd. Shakspeare.

WHELPINGTON, KIRK, a township of England, in Northumberland; 15 miles west of Morpeth.

WHELPINGTON, WEST, another township in the above county, half a mile from the foregoing.

WHELPO

WHELPO INDIANS, of North America, on Clark's river, above the Lastaw. Number 2500.

WHEN, adv. [whan, Goth.; hþænne, Sax.; wanneer, Dutch.] At the time that.—One who died several ages ago, raises a secret fondness and benevolence for him in our minds, when we read his story. Addison.—At what time? interrogatively.

When was it she last walk'd? —
—Since his majesty went into the field. Shakspeare.

Which time.

I was adopted heir by his consent,
Since when, his oath is broke. Shakspeare.

After the time that.—When I have once handed a report to another, how know I how he may improve it? Gov. of the Tongue.—At what time.

Kings may

Take their advantage when and how they list: Daniel.

At what particular time.—His seed, when is not set, shall bruise my head. Milton.

WHEN as. At the time when; what time. Obsolete.

When as sacred light began to dawn
In Eden, on the humid flowers, that breath'd
Their morning incense, came the human pair. Milton.

WHENBY, a township of England, North Riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles east of Easingwold.

WHENCE, adv. [formed from where by the same analogy with hence from here. Johnson. Serenius adduces the M. Goth. hwana, and Su. Goth. hwaden, un de.] From what place?—Whence, and what art thou, execrable shape? Milton.—From what person?

Whence, feeble nature! shall we summon aid,
If by our pity and our pride betray'd? Prior.

From what cause?

Whence comes this unsought honour unto me?
Whence does this mighty condensation flow? Fenton.

From which premises.—Their practice was to look no farther before them than the next line; whence it will follow, that they can drive to no certain point. Dryden.—From what place or person: indefinitely.—Grateful to acknowledge whence his good descends. Milton.—For which cause.—Recent urine, distilled with a fixed alkali, is turned into an alkaline nature; whence alkaline salts, taken into a human body, have the power of turning its benign salts into fiery and volatile. Arbuthnot.—From what source: indefinitely.—I have shewn whence the understanding may get all the ideas it has. Locke.—From which cause.—Ulcers, which corrode, and make the wind-pipe dry and less flexible, whence that suffering proceeds. Blackmore.

From WHENCE. A vicious mode of speech.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles, in a place,
From whence himself does fly. Shakspeare.

Of WHENCE. Another barbarism.

He ask'd his guide,

What and of whence was he who press'd the hero's side?
Dryden.

WHENSOEVER, adv. From what place soever; from what cause soever.—Any idea, whencesoever we have it, contains in it all the properties it has. Locke.

WHENEVER, or WHENSOEVER, adv. At whatsoever time.

O welcome hour whenever! why delays
His hand to execute? Milton.

WHENNOOA-OORA. See SCILLY ISLANDS.

WHENNUIA, a small island among those called the Society Islands, near Otaha.

WHEPSTEAD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 4 miles south-west of St. Edmund's Bury. Population 635.

WHERE, adv. [hþær, Saxon; waer, Dutch; whar, M. and Su. Goth.] At which place or places.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1661.

In every land we have a larger space,
Where we with green adorn our fairy bowers. Dryden.

At what place?

Where were ye, nymphs, when the remorseless deep Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas? Milton.

At the place in which.

Where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty,
I now am full resolv'd to take a wife. Shakspeare.

Any WHERE. At any place.—Those subterraneous waters were universal, as a dissolution of the exterior earth could not be made any where but it would fall into waters. Burnet.

WHERE, like here and there, has in composition a kind of pronominal signification: as, whereof, of which.—It has the nature of a noun. Not now in use.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind,
Thou lovest here, a better where to find. Shakspeare.

WHEREABOUT, adv. Near what place? as, whereabout did you lose what you are seeking?—Near which place.

Thou firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk for fear,
Thy very stones prate of my whereabout. Shakspeare.

Concerning which.—The greatness of all actions is measured by the worthiness of the subject from which they proceed, and the object whereabout they are conversant: we must of necessity, in both respects, acknowledge that this present world affordeth not any thing comparable unto the duties of religion. Hooker.

WHEREA'S, adv. When on the contrary.—Are not those found to be the greatest zealots who are most notoriously ignorant; whereas true zeal should always begin with true knowledge. Sprat.—At which place. Obsolete.

They came to fiery flood of Phlegeton,
Whereas the damned ghosts in torments fry. Spenser.

The thing being so that.—Always referred to something different.—Whereas at first we had only three of these principles, their number is already swoln to five. Baker.—But on the contrary.—One imagines that the terrestrial matter which is showered down with rain, enlarges the bulk of the earth; another fancies that the earth will ere long all be washed away by rains, and the waters of the ocean turned forth to overwhelm the dry land: whereas by this distribution of matter, continual provision is every where made for the supply of bodies. Woodward.

WHEREAT, adv. At which.—When we have done any thing whereat they are displeas'd, if they have no reason for it, we should seek to rectify their mistakes about it, and inform them better. Kettlewell.—At what? as, whereat are you offend'd?

WHEREBY, adv. By which.—But even that, you must confess, you have received of her, and so are rather gratefully to thank her, than to press any further, till you bring something of your own, whereby to claim it. Sidney.—By what? as, whereby wilt thou accomplish thy design?

WHERE'EVER, adv. At whatsoever place.

Which to avenge on him they dearly vow'd,
Wherever that on ground they mought him find. Spenser.

WHEREFORE, adv. For which reason.

Shall I tell you why?

—Ay, sir; and wherefore; for, they say, every why hath a wherefore. Shakspeare.—For what reason?

Wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wond'rous monument? Shakspeare.

WHEREIN, adv. In which.

Whenever yet was your appeal denied?
Wherein have you been galled by the king? Shakspeare.

In what?—They say, wherein have we wearied him?
Malachi.

WHEREINTO, adv. Into which.

Where's the palace, whereinto foul things
Sometimes intrude not?

Shakspeare.

WHE'RENESS, s. Ubiquity; imperfect locality.—A point hath no dimensions, but only a whereness, and is next to nothing. Grew.

WHEREOF, adv. Of which.—'Tis not very probable that I should succeed in such a project, whereof I have not had the least hint from any of my predecessors, the poets. Dryden.—Of what? indefinitely.—How this world, when and whereof created. Milton.—Of what? interrogatively; as, whereof was the house built?

WHEREON, adv. On which.

So looks the strand, whereon th' imperious flood
Hath left a witness'd usurpation.

Shakspeare.

On what? as, whereon did he sit?

WHE'RESO, or WHERESOE'VER, adv. In what place soever. Whereso is obsolete.

That short revenge the man may overtake,
Whereso he be, and soon upon him light.

Spenser.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads defend you
From seasons such as these?

Shakspeare.

To what place soever. Not proper.

Can misery no place of safety know?
The noise pursues me wheresoe'er I go.

Dryden.

WERETHROU'GH, adv. Through which.—Where- through all the people went. Wisd.

WERETO', or WHERUNTO', adv. To which.—What Scripture doth plainly deliver, to that the first place both of credit and obedience is due; the next whereunto is whatsoever any man can necessarily conclude by force of reason:
after these, the voice of the church succeedeth. Hooker.

I hold an old accustom'd feast,
Whereto I have invited many a guest.

Shakspeare.

To what? to what end? as, whereto is this expense?

WHEREUPON, adv. Upon which.—The townsmen mutilated, and sent to Essex; whereupon he came thither.
Clarendon.

WEREWITH, or WHEREWITHA'L, adv. With which.
Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne. Shakspeare.

In regard of the troubles wherewith this king was distressed in England, this army was not of sufficient strength to make an entire conquest of Ireland. Davies.—With what? interrogatively.—If the salt hath lost its savour where- with shall it be salted? St. Matth.—I know not that wherewithal is ever used in question. Dr. Johnson.—It is.
—Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? Even by ruling himself after Thy word. Psalms.

WHERNSIDE, a mountain of England, in Ingleton Fells,
Yorkshire, 2384 feet above the sea.

WHERNSIDE, another mountain in Kettenwell dale, in the above county, 2263 feet in height.

To WHE'RRET, v. a. [Perhaps corrupted, ferret.— Serenius refers it to the Germ. wirren, to throw into confusion, to disturb.] To hurry; to trouble; to tease. A low colloquial word.—Don't keep wherretting me with your nonsense. Bickerstaff.—To give a box on the ear. Ains- worth.

WHE'RRET, s. A box on the ear.

How meekly

This other fellow here receives his wherret. Beaum. and Fl.

WHE'RRY, s. [Of uncertain derivation.—The name wherry is very ancient, and by the Romans was expressed horia. Bryant, Obs. on Rowley.] A light boat used on rivers.

Let the vessel split on shelves,
With the freight enrich themselves:
Safe within my little wherry,
All their madness makes me merry.

Swift.

WHERSTEAD, a parish of England, in Suffolk; 2½ miles south-by-west of Ipswich.

WHERWELL, a parish of England, in Southamptonshire, situated on the river Test; 3½ miles south-south-east of Andover. Population 543.

WHESSOE, a hamlet of England; county of Durham;
2½ miles north-by-west of Darlington.

To WHET, v. a. [hpeccan, Saxon; wetten, Dutch.]—
To sharpen by attrition.

This visitation

Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose. Shakspeare.

To edge; to make angry or acrimonious: it is used with on and forward, but improperly.

Peace, good queen;
O whet not on these too too furious peers;
For blessed are the peace-makers.

Shakspeare.

WHET, s. The act of sharpening. Any thing that makes hungry, as a dram.—He assisted at four hundred bowls of punch, not to mention sips, drams, and whets. Spec- tator.

WHETACRE, a village of England, in Norfolk, in which are the parishes of All Saints and St. Peter; 4 miles northeast of Beccles, in Suffolk.

WHE'THER, adv. [hpæðer, Saxon; hwathar, M.
Goth.] A particle expressing one part of a disjunctive question in opposition to the other: answered by or.—
Perkins's three counsellors registered themselves sanctuary-men; and whether upon pardon obtained, or continuance within the privilege, they were not proceeded with. Bacon.

WHE'THER, pronoun. Which of two.

Whither when they came, they fell at words

Whether of them should be the lord of lords. Spenser.

WHETMORE, a township of England, in Salop, in the parish of Burford.

WHE'TSTONE, s. Stone on which any thing is whetted, or rubbed to make it sharp.—A whetstone is not an instrument to carve with; but it sharpens those that do. Shak- speare.

WHETSTONE, a hamlet of England, in Derbyshire, near Tideswell.—2. A parish in Leicestershire; 5 miles south-south-west of Leicester. Population 732.

WHETSTONE, a river of Ohio, which runs south, and joins the Scioto, at Columbus.

WHE'TTER, s. One that whets or sharpens.—Love and enmity are notable whetters and quickeners of the spirit of life in all animals. More.

WHEY, s. [hpæç, Saxon; wey, Dutch.] The thin or serous part of milk, from which the oleose or grumous part is separated.—I'll make you feed on curds and whew. Shak- speare.—It is used of any thing white and thin.

Those linen cheeks of thine

Are counsellors to fear. What, soldiers whew face?

Shakspeare.

WHE'YHEY, or WHE'YISH, adj. Partaking of whew; resembling whew.—Those medicines, being opening and piercing, fortify the operation of the liver, in sending down the whewey part of the blood to the reins. Bacon.

He that quaffs

Such whewish liquors, oft with cholick pangs

He'll roar.

Philips.

WHICH, pron. [hpic, Saxon; welk, Dutch; hwileiks,
M. Goth. à hwa, quid, et leiks, similis. Serenius.] The pronoun relative; relating to things.—After the several earths, consider the parts of the surface of this globe which is barren, as sand and rocks. Locke.—It had formerly sometimes the before it.—Do they not blaspheme that worthy name, by the which ye are called? Ja.—It formerly was used for who, and related likewise to persons; as in the first words of the Lord's prayer.

Had I been there, which am a silly woman,
The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes,
Before I would have granted to that act.

Shakspeare.

The

The genitive of which, as well as of who, is whose; but whose, as derived from which, is scarcely used but in poetry.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste. Milton.

It is sometimes a demonstrative: as, take which you will.

What is the night?

—Almost at odds with morning, which is which.
Shakspeare.

It is sometimes an interrogative; as, which is the man?

Two fair twins,

The puzzled strangers which is which enquire. Tickle.

WHICHAM, a parish of England, in Cumberland; 10 miles south-south-east of Ravenglass.

WHICHBURY, or WHITSBURY, a parish of England, in Wiltshire; 8 miles south-by-west of Salisbury.

WHICHFORD, a township of England, in Warwickshire; 5½ miles south-east of Shipston-upon-Stour. Population 419.

WHICHSOEVER, pron. Whether one or the other.—Whichsoever of these he takes, and how often soever he doubles it, he finds that he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.

WHICKHAM, a parish of England, in the county of Durham; 3 miles west-south-west of Gateshead. Population about 4000.

WHIDAH, a considerable country of Western Africa, the most important of those comprehended under the general appellation of the Slave coast of Guinea. Till within the last half century, it formed an independent kingdom, and was the most fertile and improved of any on the African coast. Its sea shore indeed did not extend above nine or ten leagues, and its breadth inland was not quite so great; but being everywhere covered with towns and villages, and cultivated like a garden, it contained a very considerable population. The country is traversed by two considerable rivers, the Jakin and the Euphrates, which flow parallel and near to the sea, and to each other. By these, with the streams and canals connected with them, it is copiously watered. The alluvial soil gives birth to magnificent forests, not encumbered with the thick underwood which prevails throughout the rest of Africa. These woods became so many groves, by the cultivated fields with which they were everywhere intersected, and in which were raised two, or even three crops of rice, millet, maize, yams, and potatoes. The government was a hereditary monarchy, more absolute than in most other negro countries, though the grandes had still a considerable share in the administration. Superstition was carried to an extraordinary height in this country; and though they had some idea of a Supreme Deity, fetiches, or subordinate divinities, were multiplied to the number of many thousands. Snake worship, one of the most degrading of superstitions, formed the leading feature of Whidan observance. The temple of the great snake formed the ornament of the capital, and was propitiated by lavish gifts, sometimes even by human sacrifices. Every town of any consequence had a similar temple, on a smaller scale. The people, in their manners, exhibited nothing of the usual negro rudeness, but were mild, tame, and polished. Their respect for superiors was expressed by kneeling, and three times kissing the earth. Their mild and placable character, and their habits of industry, caused them to be much sought after as slaves. The English, Dutch, and Portuguese, established factories at Griwee, or Whidah, which formed the principal seaport, though the residence of the sovereign was at Xavier or Sabi.

This prosperous state of Whidah was entirely subverted in 1727, by the invasion of Guadjá Trudo, the fierce and warlike sovereign of Dahomey. The effeminate and unwarlike Whidans were unable to oppose any resistance whatever to this chief and his band of savage warriors. They fled in every direction; many of them were slaughtered; the body of the nation reduced to slavery. A considerable proportion of the Whidans, however, escaped into the neighbouring country of Popo, whither their enemies, from the want of any naval force, were unable to pursue them. In this retreat, they have ever since retained their name and existence as a nation; but all their attempts have been vain, to regain possession of their original territory, which has continued ever since a province of Dahomey. They are still even governed by the race of their original kings, who usually, by a high bribe, obtain permission to be crowned at Xavier. In that capital, the seat of the palace of the Whidah kings can still be traced, by the trench which encompassed it. The place is now overgrown with lofty trees, and is held sacred by the representatives of that unfortunate family.

The British maintained long a fort at the seaport at Griwee or Whidah; but since the prohibition of the trade in slaves, it had ceased to be of any importance. For some time, however, an apprehension of the resentment of the king of Dahomey, deterred the African company from withdrawing it; but they have recently effected this object, and no longer carry on almost any commercial intercourse with Whidah.

WHIDBEY, POINT, a rocky point on the south coast of New Holland. Lat. 34. 36. S. long. 135. 6. W.

WHIDBEY'S ISLES, seven small islands lying off the south coast of New Holland, about 7 or 8 miles from the point of that name.

WHIDDY, an island on the south coast of Ireland, of a triangular form, about seven miles in circumference, in the north part of Bantry bay; 2 miles west of Bantry. Lat. 51. 40. N. long. 9. 25. W.

WHIFF, s. [chwynth, Welsh.—Junius' renders the Welsh word "flatus subitus et vehemens." Our old lexicography has "weffc, vapor." Prompt. Parv.] A blast; a puff of wind.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword,
Th' unnerved father falls. Shakspeare.

To WHIFF, v. a. To consume in whiffs; to emit with whiffs, as in smoking.—The gourmand sacrifices whole hecatombs to his paunch, and whiffs himself in Nicotian incense to the idol of his vain intemperance. Bp. Hall.

To WHIFFLE, v. n. To move inconstantly, as if driven by a puff of wind.—Nothing is more familiar, than for a whiffing fop, that has not one grain of the sense of a man of honour, to play the hero. L'Estrange.

To WHIFFLE, v. a. To disperse as by a puff; to blow away; to scatter.—This is a plain and obvious sense—against such as would whiff away all these truths by resolving them into a mere moral allegory. More.

WHIFFLE, s. Anciently, a fife or small flute. See WHIFFLER. Douce.

WHIFFLER, s. [from whiffle, a fife; for whiffers were originally those who preceded armies or processions as fifers or pipers. Douce.]—A harbinger, probably one with a horn or trumpet. A fifer or piper.

The beach

Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
Whose shouts and claps outvoice the deep-mouth'd sea,
Which, like a mighty whiffler 'fore the king,
Seems to prepare his way. Shakspeare.

A new company of counterfeit vizards, whiffers, maskers, mummers. Burton.—Now he is at the pageants among the whiffers. Milton.—One of no consequence; one moved with a whiff or puff; a trifler. [pæpepe, blatero. Douce.]—Every whiffler in a laced coat, who frequents the chocolate-house, shall talk of the constitution. Swift.

WHIG, s. [hpæz, Sax.] A kind of sour or thin milk; whey. In some parts of the north of England, it means the watery part or whey of a baked custard.—Sweet growte, or whig, his bottle had. Warncr.

WHIGS, a party or faction in England, opposite to the Tories.

The origin of the names of these two mighty factions is very obscure. If some little trivial circumstance or adventure, which escapes the knowledge of mankind, gives name to a party, which afterwards becomes famous, posterity labours hours in vain to find the original of such a name: it searches the sources, forms conjectures, invents reasons, and sometimes, indeed, meets the truth, but always without knowing it assuredly.

Thus, in France, the Calvinists are called Huguenots; yet nobody was ever able certainly to assign the cause of that appellation.

Whig is a Scottish, and, some say too, an Irish word, literally signifying whey. Tory is another Irish word, signifying a robber or highwayman.

Under the reign of king Charles II., while his brother, then Duke of York, was obliged to retire into Scotland, there were two parties formed in that country. That of the duke was strongest, persecuted the other, and frequently reduced them to fly into the mountains and woods; where those unhappy fugitives had often no other subsistence for a long time but cows' milk. Hence they called these their adversaries tories, q. d. robbers; and the tories, upbraiding them with their unhappiness, from the milk on which they lived, called them whigs. From Scotland, the two names came over with the duke into England.

Others give a different origin and etymology of the two words, for which see TORIES.

Bishop Burnet gives another etymology of the term whigs. The south-west counties of Scotland, he says, are supplied with corn from Leith; and from a word whiggam, used by the carriers, in driving their horses, all that drove were called whiggamoors, and by contraction whigs.

He adds, that in the year 1648, after the news of the defeat of duke Hamilton, who was charged with being a confederate with the malignants, or royal party, in England, the ministers animated their people to rise, and march to Edinburgh: who came up, marching each at the head of his parish, with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them. This was called the whiggamoor's inroad; and ever after, all that opposed the court were contemptuously called whigs: and from Scotland the term was brought into England. Burnet's Hist. of his Own Times.

WHIGGARCHY, s. [whig, and αρχη, Greek.] Government by whigs.—Let them come roundly to the business, and in plain terms give us to understand, that they will not recognise any other government in Great Britain, but whiggarchy only. Swift.

WHIGGISH, adj. Relating to the whigs.

She'll prove herself a tory plain,
From principles the whigs maintain;
And, to defend the whiggish cause,
Her topics from the tories draws.

Swift.

WHIGGISM, s. The notions of a whig.—I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of whiggism and atheism. Swift.

WHILE, s. [weil, German; hpile, Saxon; hweila, Goth.] Time; space of time.—I have seen her rise from her bed, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. Shakspeare.

WHILE, or WHILES, or WHILST, adv. [hpile, Saxon. Whiles is now out of use.] During the time that.

Whiles I was protector,
Pity was all the fault that was in me. Shakspeare.

As long as.—Use your memory, you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to overload it. Watts.—At the same time that.

He sits attentive to his own applause,
While Wits and Templars ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise.

Pope.

To WHILE, v. n. To loiter.—Men guilty this way never have observed that the whiling time, the gathering together, and waiting a little before dinner, is the most awkwardly passed away of any. Spectator.

To WHILE, v. a. To draw out; to consume in a tedious way.—The word "while" has been the father of a verb, which gives me an opportunity of lamenting, that I should have caused you to while away so much time in perusing this disquisition. Pegge.

WHILERE, adv. A little while ago; ere while. Not in use.

WHILLIMOOR, a hamlet of England, in Cumberland, near Whitehaven.

WHILOM, adv. [hpilom, Saxon, that is, once on a time.] Formerly; once; of old. Not in use.

Yet art thou not inglorious in thy fate;

For so Apollo, with unweeting hand,

Whilom did slay his dearly loved mate.

Milton.

WHILTON, a hamlet of England, in Northamptonshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Daventry.

WHIM, s. [hwima, Icel. huc illuc circumspicere; hwima, Sueth. caput in gyrum agitare, unde hwimmerkant, cui caput est turbatum.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular motion of desire.

All the superfluous whims relate,

That fill a female gamester's pate.

Swift.

To WHIMPER, v. n. [wimmeren, German.] To cry without any loud noise.

In peals of thunder now she roars, and now

She gently whimpers like a lowing cow.

Swift.

WHIMPERING, s. The act of uttering a small cry; a squeak.—The noise of little birds, the whimpering of mice, every small stirrage, waketh them. Granger.

WHIMPLE, a parish of England, in Devonshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Ottery St. Mary. Population 461.

WHIMPLED, adj. This word seems to mean distorted with crying.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This signior Junio's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,

Regent of love-rhimes, lord of folded arms,

Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans. Shakspeare.

WHIMSEY, s. [Only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.

Th' extravagance of poetry

Is at a loss for figures to express

Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy.

Swift.

To WHIMSEY, v. a. To fill with whimsies.—To have a man's brains whimsied with his wealth. Beaum. and Fl.

WHIMSICAL, adj. Freakish; capricious; oddly fanciful.—In another circumstance I am particular, or, as my neighbours call me, whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests. Addison.

WHIMSICALLY, adv. So as to be oddly fanciful.—Your situation and mine are whimsically odd in relation to the present dispute about articles and subscriptions. Dean Tucker.

WHIMSICALNESS, s. State of being whimsical.—Every one values Mr. Pope, but every one for a different reason; one for his grave behaviour, another for his whimsicalness, &c. Pope.

WHIMWHAM, s. [A ludicrous reduplication of whim.] A plaything; a toy; an odd device; a strange fancy; a freak.

Your behaviours

Have made men stand amaz'd; —

Your scorns of those that came to visit ye;

Your studied whim-whams, and your fine set faces.

Beaum. and Fl.

WHIN, [schwyn, Welsh; genista spinosa, Lat.] Fur gorse.—Plants that have prickles in their leaf are ho juniper, whin-bush, and thistle. Bacon.

WHINBURGH, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 3 miles south-south-east of East Dereham.

To WHINE, v. n. [hwina, Su. Goth. to mourn; queina, Icel.; quainan, M. Goth.] To lament in low murmurs; to make a plaintive noise; to moan meanly and effeminately.

At his nurse's tears

He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakspeare.

WHINE, s. Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.

Thy hateful whine of woe
Breaks in upon my sorrows, and distracts
My jarring senses with thy beggar's cry. Rowe.

WHINEBAH. See WINNEBAH.

WHINER, s. One who whines.—One pitiful whiner, Melpomene. Gayton.

WHINFELL, a township of England, in Westmoreland;
6½ miles north-east-by-north of Kendal.—2. A township in Cumberland; 3 miles south of Cockermouth.

WHINHOW, a hamlet of England, in the parish of Thursby, Cumberland.

WHINNION, or WHINNYAN, a small but beautiful lake of Scotland, in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, which abounds with delicious yellow trout.

WHINNY, adj. Abounding with whins.—Gateskale being a whinny place. Nicholson and Burn.

To WHINNY, v. n. [hinnio, Lat. from the sound.]
To make a noise like a horse or colt.—The horse—while he is whinneying. More.

WHINYARD, s. [pinnan and ape, to gain honour, Saxon. Skinner. Perhaps in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword, in contempt.

He snatch'd his whinyard up, that fled
When he was falling off his steed. Hudibras.

To WHIP, v. a. [hpeopan, Saxon; wippen, Dutch.]
To strike with any thing tough and flexible.

He took

The harness'd steeds, that still with horror shook,
And plies them with the lash, and whips 'em on;
And, as he whips, upbraids 'em with his son. Addison.

To sew slightly.—In half whipt muslin needles useless lie.
Gay.—To drive with lashes.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakspeare.

To correct with lashes.

I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all. Shakspeare.

To lash with sarcasm.—They would whip me with their fine wits, till I was as crest-fallen as a dried pear. Shak- speare.—To inwrap.—Its string is firmly whipt about with small gut, that it may the easier move in the edge of the row-ler. Moxon.—To take any thing nimbly: always with a particle ascertaining the sense; as, out, on, up, away. A ludicrous use.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whipt his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And in this brainish apprehension kills
The unseen good old man. Shakspeare.

To WHIP, v. n. To move nimbly. A ludicrous word.
—The simple 'squire made a sudden start to follow; but the justice of the quorum whipped between. Tatler.

WHIP, s. [hpeop, Sax.] An instrument of correction tough and pliant.

High on her head she rears two twisted snakes;
Her chain she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden.

WHIP and spur. With the utmost haste.

Each staunch polemic
Came whip and spur, and dash'd thro' thin and thick. Pope.

WHI/PCORD, s. Cord of which lashes are made.—In Raphael's first works are many small foldings, often repeated, which look like so many whipcords. Dryden.

Vol. XXIV. No. 1661.

WHI/PGRAFTING, s. A kind of grafting.

WHI/PHAND, s. Advantage over.—The archangel, when discord was restive, and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, has the whiphand of her, and drags her out with many stripes. Dryden.

WHI/PLASH, s. The lash or small end of a whip.—
Have whiplash wel knotted and cartrope inough. Tusser.

WHI/PPER, s. One who punishes with whipping.—
Love is merely a madness, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished is, that the whippers are in love too. Shak-
speare.

WHIPPING, s. Correction with a whip or rod.—Let it be with us, as with some good-natured children, whom I have seen, even after their whippings, unquiet, till with their continued tears and importunities they have made their peace with their offended parent. Ep. Hall.

WHIPPINGHAM, a parish of England, in the Isle of Wight; 3 miles north-by-east of Newport. Population 1619.

WHIPPINGPOST, s. A pillar to which criminals are bound when they are lashed.

Could not the whippingpost prevail,
With all its rhet'rick, nor the jail,
To keep from flaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin? Hudibras.

WHI/PSAW, s. The whipsaw is used by joiners to saw such great pieces of stuff that the handsaw will not easily reach through. Moxon.

WHIPSNADE, a parish of England, in Bedfordshire; 3 miles south-by-west of Dunstable.

WHI/PSTAFF, s. A piece of wood fastened to the helm which the steersman holds in his hand to move the helm and turn the ship. Bailey.

WHI/PSTER, s. A nimble fellow.

I am not valiant neither;
But ev'ry puny whipster gets my sword. Shakspeare.

WHI/PSTOCK, s. The handle of a whip; the whip itself.

By his rusty outside he appears
To have practis'd more the whipstock than the lance. Shakspeare.

WHIPT, for whipped.

In Bridewel a number be stript,
Lesse worthie than theese to be whipt. Tusser.

To WHIR, or To WHI'RRY, v. n. [of the same origin as whirl; which see. Dr. Johnson notices whirring as an adjective, with the example from Pope; but mistakenly calls it a word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.]
Gathering dust with whirring fiercely round. Chapman.

To WHIR, v. a. To hurry. The following is the original reading. Malone.

This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirring me from my friends. Shakspeare.

To WHIRL, v. a. [whirla, Icel. turbine versari con-tinuo: consent. linguis Septentr. Sic hwairban, M. Goth. transire, ab antiquiss. Scyth. yrra, whirra, sursum et deor- sum ferri.] To turn round rapidly.

My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel:
I know not where I am, nor what I do. Shakspeare.

To WHIRL, v. n. To turn round rapidly.

Five moons were seen to-night,
Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about
The other four in wond'rous motion. Shakspeare.

To move hastily.

She what he swears regards no more
Than the deaf rocks when the loud billows roar;
But whirl'd away, to shun his hateful sight,
Hid in the forest. Dryden.

WHIRL, s. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion;
rapid circumvolution.

What flaws and whirls of weather,
Or rather storms, have been aloft these three days!

Beaum. and Fl.

Any thing moved with rapid rotation.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,

I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save.

Addison.

WHIRLBAT, s. Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by poets for the ancient cestus.

The whirlbat and the rapid race shall be Reserv'd for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me.

Dryden.

WHIRLBONE, s. The patella; the cap of the knee.
Ainsworth.

WHIRLIGIG, s. A toy which children spin round.—
That men should have such whirle-gigs in their brain!
Montagu.

WHIRLPIT, or WHIRLPOOL, s. [hʷyrrpōle, Sax.]
A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle towards its centre; a vortex.—
Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shakspeare.

WHIRLWIND, s. [werbelwind, German.] A stormy wind moving circularly.—In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shakspeare.

WHIRRING. See To WHIR.

WHISBY, a parish of England, in Lincolnshire; 5 miles south-west-by-west of Lincoln.

WISHFORD, GREAT and LITTLE, a parish and hamlet of England, in Wiltshire; 5 miles from Salisbury.

WHISK, s. [wischen, to wipe, German.] A small besom, or brush.—The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet, being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency. Boyle.—A part of a woman's dress.—An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a lawn whisk instead of a point de Venice. Child of Trade.—A quick violent motion; and hence perhaps a sudden gale. Malone.

This first sad whisk
Takes off thy dukedom.

Beaum. and Fl.

To WHISK, v. a. [wischen, to wipe, German.] To sweep with a small besom.

For I suppose that he is
Of Jeremy the whisking rod;
The flayle, the scourge,
Of Almighty God.

Skelton.

To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.

He whisk'd his party-coloured wings,
And down to earth he comes.

Raleigh.

To WHISK, v. n. To move with velocity.—A strange gentleman whisk'd by me. Addison.

WHISKER, s. The hair growing on the upper lip or cheek unshaven; a mustachio.—A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.

WHISKERED, adj. Formed into whiskers.

Preferring sense from chin that's bare,
To nonsense thron'd in whisker'd hair.

Green.

WHISKY, s. The word whisky signifies water, and is applied by way of eminence to strong water, or distilled liquor. The spirit drunk in the north is drawn from barley.

To WHISPER, v. n. [wisperen, Dutch.] To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker; to speak with suspicion or timorous caution.

The hollow whispering breeze, the pliant rills
Purl down amid the twisted roots.

Thomson.

To WHISPER, v. a. To address in a low voice.

When they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear.

Shakspeare.

To utter in a low voice.—You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shakspeare.—They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bentley.—To prompt secretly.

Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came

To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shakspeare.

WHISPER, s. A low soft voice; cautious and timorous speech.—Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.

WHISPERER, s. One that speaks low.—St. Gregory had no meaner whisperer, under the shape of a pigeon, sitting quietly upon his head. Brevint.—A private talker; a teller of secrets; a conveyer of intelligence.—King's trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magistrates. Bacon.

WHISPERING, s. Act of speaking in a low voice; cautious speech.—Birds will bear thy whisperings on their wings. Sandys.

WHISPERINGLY, adv. In a low voice.—The one is uttered vocally, the other whisperingly. Dalgarno.

WHISSENDINE, a parish of England, in the county of Rutland; 7 miles north west of Oakham. Population 555.

WHISSONSETT, a parish of England, in Norfolk; 3 miles from Fakenham. Population 434.

To WHIST, v. a. [It is probably from hush, whence hust in Chaucer, and hist in present use.] To silence; to still.

The winds with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,

Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.

To WHIST, v. n. To become silent.—They whisted all. Ld. Surrey and Phaer.

WHIST, interj. Be still; be silent.—Whist, wanton, still ye. Lodge.

WHIST, s. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence; vulgarly pronounced whisk. Dr. Johnson.—The earliest notice I have yet found of this game is in the following example. Malone.

Whist awhile

Walks his grave round beneath a cloud of smoke,
Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe.

Thomson.

WHISTANSTOW, a parish of England, in Salop; 8½ miles from Ludlow. Population 659.

To WHISTLE, v. n. [hʷɪstlan, Saxon; fistulo, Lat.] To form a kind of musical sound, by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shakspeare.

To make a sound with a small wind-instrument. To sound shrill.

His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish treble pipes,
He whistles in his sound.

Shakspeare.

To WHISTLE, v. a. To call by a whistle.

When simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands.

Pope.

WHISTLE, s. [hʷɪstle, Saxon.] Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My sire in caves constrains the winds;
Can with a breath their clamorous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas.

Dryden.

A sound made by a small wind-instrument. The mouth; the organ of whistling.—Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton.—A small wind-instrument.

Behold,

Behold,

Upon the hempen tackle ship boys climbing ;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give,
To sounds confus'd. Shakspeare.

The noise of winds.—A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord.
—I have been worth the whistle. Shakspeare.

The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.

WHISTLER, s. One who whistles.—The prize was a guinea, to be conferred upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing.
Addison.

WHISTLEY, a hamlet of England, in Berkshire; 5 miles east-by-north of Reading. Population 656.

WHISTLY, adv. Silently.
I, upon a little rising hill,
Stood wistly watching for the herd's approach.
Arden of Feversham.

WHISTON (William), M. A., an English divine and mathematician, was the son of the rector of Norton near Twy-cross, in Leicestershire, and born in the year 1667. He finished his education as a sizer at Clare-hall, Cambridge, applying with great diligence to the study of mathematics, and composing devout meditations corresponding to the early bent of his disposition. Having also received the degree of B. A. in 1690, and being elected fellow of his college, he took pupils; and in 1693 became M. A., and entered into holy orders. Soon afterwards he declined the office of tutor, and was appointed chaplain to Dr. More, bishop of Norwich. His acquaintance with Sir Isaac Newton commenced in 1694, and produced a change in his philosophical system, from that of Des Cartes to that of Newton. On the principles of this philosophy, he published, in 1696, his "Theory of the Earth," which was refuted by Keill. Having been presented by his patron, the bishop, to the living of Lowestoft in Suffolk, he resigned his chaplainship, and in order fully to discharge his religious duties procured the assistance of a curate. Being obliged to vacate his fellowship by marriage, Sir Isaac Newton nominated him his deputy as professor of mathematics, allowing him all the profits of the office; and in 1703 he surrendered to him the professorship itself. Upon this accession, he resigned his living, settled at Cambridge, and was appointed by Dr. More, bishop of Ely, catechetical lecturer of St. Clement's. Having already published "A Short View of the Chronology of the Old Testament, and the Harmony of the Four Evangelists," and "Tacquet's Euclid," he presented to the public in 1706 his "Essay on the Revelation of St. John;" and in the following year he preached the Boyle's lecture sermon on the subject of the "Accomplishment of Scripture Prophecies." In the year 1706 he began to entertain doubts concerning the divinity of Christ, and in the prosecution of his inquiries he was led to adopt Arian opinions, which were further confirmed by the perusal of the "Apostolical Constitutions," reckoned spurious by most writers, but pronounced by Whiston to be "the most sacred of the canonical books of the New Testament." In 1708 he offered an "Essay on the Apostolical Constitutions" to be printed at the University press, but it was rejected; however, in 1709, he published sermons and essays supporting these opinions. His invincible perseverance caused him to be deprived of the catechetical lecture, and at the same time he declined receiving the salary which the bishop wished to continue. His situation at the University became very precarious, and in October, 1710, he was expelled from it, in conformity to a statute against maintaining doctrines contrary to the established religion. In the following year he also lost his professorship; and having no further employment at Cambridge, he removed to London, and published an account of the proceedings against him, and also books in defence of his sentiments, which he retained without regarding any worldly considerations. All his future prospects seemed now to depend on his knowledge of mathematics, and accordingly in 1710, he published his "Prælectiones Physicæ-Mathematicæ; sive Philosophia Clarissimi Newtoni Mathematica illustrata." At this time Addison and Steele, and several other persons, exerted themselves in procuring a subscription to his astronomical lectures. But at the close of this year he published the "Historical Preface" to a proposed work on Primitive Christianity, which subjected him to the inquisitorial animadversion of the lower house of convocation. Escaping, however, the apprehended consequences of their interference, he persisted in his course, and in 1711 printed this work which he had announced, and which had occasioned an alarm, in 4 vols. 8vo. The convocation not sufficiently informed with regard to the extent of their power in cases of heresy, addressed the queen in order to obtain the opinion of the judges, who disagreed upon the subject, and no further measures were pursued by this body. However, in 1713, Whiston was prosecuted in the spiritual court; and as he did not appear to its citation, he was declared contumacious. Difficulties occurring on the part of the lay-judges, the business was deferred, and the prosecution was terminated by an act of grace in 1715. Whiston was at this time a professed member of the established church, and attended its worship, till at length he was refused admission to the sacrament; and therefore he opened an assembly for worship at his own house, and used a liturgy of his own composing. He also established a weekly meeting for the promotion of primitive Christianity, which subsisted for two years. Whilst he was thus occasionally engaged, he devoted himself to mathematical and philosophical pursuits; and in concert with Mr. Ditton, who was his colleague in his lectures, published a project for discovering the longitude at sea. But as their speculations were of no use, it will be sufficient to observe, that he published at last a method of ascertaining the longitude by observations of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, with tables of such eclipses for four years from the year 1738.

His zeal in religious discussions and projects remained unabated; and, among other publications in 1716 and the two following years, appeared several pieces founded on the supposed genuineness and authority of the apostolical constitutions. In 1719 he published a letter addressed to Finch, earl of Nottingham, on the "Eternity of the Son of God and his Holy Spirit," which received an answer from his lordship, that induced the clergy and universities to return him public thanks, and which caused Whiston's exclusion from the Royal Society, when he was proposed as a candidate in 1720. Sir Isaac Newton, it is said, who was of a very timid temper, took measures for defeating his election. In 1749 he published two volumes of memoirs of his own life, to which a third was added in 1750. Having attained to the 85th year of his age, he died at London in 1752.

WHISTON, a township of England, in Lancashire, south of Prescott. Population 1015.—2. A parish in Northamptonshire; 5½ miles east-by-south of Northampton.—3. A township in Staffordshire; 2 miles west of Penkridge.—4. Another township in Staffordshire; 3 miles north-east of Cheadle.—5. A parish in the West Riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles south-east of Rotherham. Population 762.

WHIT, s. [p̄h̄t, a thing; ap̄h̄t, any thing, Sax.] A point; a jot.—We love, and are no whit regarded. Sidney.

Her sacred book, with blood ywrit,
That none could read, except she did him teach;
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents thereout did preach. Spenser.

WHITAKER (John, B.D.), a divine of the established church, was born at Manchester about the year 1735, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of Corpus-Christi college, taking the degree of M. A. in 1759, and of B. D. in 1767. His first work, viz. "The History of Manchester," appeared in 1771, 4to., in which he takes occasion to give a view of the state of the kingdom in general. This work, abounding in literary research and ingenious conjecture, gave reputation to the writer, and was followed in the same same year by "The Genuine History of the Britons asserted." However, it is said that Mr. Whitaker's imagination in the progress of his years misled his judgment, of which he gave evidence in the second volume of his "History of Manchester," printed in 1775, though he still maintained his character for deep and learned investigation. As a clergyman, he became morning-preacher of Berkeley chapel, London, in 1773, from which situation he was soon after removed; and he resented his removal with the natural warmth of his temper. Such was his orthodoxy, that he declined accepting a valuable living that was offered to him by an Unitarian patron. In 1778 he succeeded, as fellow of his college, to the rectory of Ruan-Lanyhorne in Cornwall, where his contest about tithes was the occasion of much uneasiness to him. When mutual conciliation took place between him and his parishioners, he published in 1783 a course of Sermons on Death, Judgment, Heaven and Hell, which were rendered peculiarly impressive by the fervid eloquence with which he treated the subject, naturally awful and interesting. In 1787 he published his "Mary Queen of Scots vindicated," 3 vols. 8vo., in which he surpassed former writers in the zeal with which he vindicated this unfortunate queen, and criminated her enemies, Elizabeth, Cecil, Morton, and Murray. He also presented to the public the fruit of his learned research in "The Course of Hannibal over the Alps ascertained," 2 vols. 8vo. 1794; and in 1795 he advanced the highest monarchical principles in his work, entitled "The real Origin of Government," and also his orthodoxy in his "Origin of Arianism," zealously defending his sentiments in both these respects by contributions to the English and Jacobin Reviews, and British Critic. At length a paralytic stroke warned him of his approaching end, and after a gradual decline he imperceptibly closed his life at his rectory, in October, 1808, at the age of 73, leaving a widow and two daughters.—Gen. Biog.

WHITACRE, NETHER and OVER, adjoining parishes of England, in Warwickshire, about 4 miles east-north-east of Coleshill.

WHITBECK, or WHITEBECK, a parish of England, in Cumberland; 9 miles south-by-east of Ravenglass.

WHITBOURNE, a parish of England, in Herefordshire; 4½ miles east-by-north of Bromyard. Population 787.

WHITBREAD (Samuel), a distinguished senator, was born in the year 1758. Destined to the inheritance of a large fortune, and possessing talents which by due cultivation would qualify him for a conspicuous station in public life, his father spared no expense in his education. At a proper age he was sent to Eton, where he also enjoyed the benefit of private tuition, and where he commenced an intimate acquaintance with Mr. W. H. Lambton, afterwards M.P. for the city of Durham, and Mr. now earl Grey, with whose family he became connected by a double alliance. From Eton he removed to Christchurch college, Oxford, and from thence to St. John's college, Cambridge, where he finished his education, and was graduated B.A. Mr. Whitbread senior, sagacious in discerning the early dawnings of his son's future celebrity, liberally offered him all the advantages which might be derived from foreign travel, and selected for his tutor and companion archdeacon Coxo, well known by a variety of valuable publications. Having travelled together through France, Germany, and Switzerland, they afterwards separated with mutual regard. Mr. Whitbread, soon after his return, formed, in 1788, a matrimonial connection with Miss Grey, the sister of his Eton associate, who afterwards, by the advancement of her father, general sir Charles Grey, to an earldom, became lady Elizabeth Whitbread: his sister also, in process of time, married sir George Grey, bart. then a captain in the navy. Having required every necessary qualification for occupying a seat in the great council of the nation, Mr. Whitbread offered himself, on the dissolution of parliament in 1790, as a candidate for Bedford, a borough which had been represented by his father, who at the same time offered himself for the borough of Steyning. Both elections were contested; but both father and son finally obtained their respective seats. Mr. Whitbread, junior, commenced his political career in parliament with an animated speech against the unconstitutional doctrine of "confidence," assumed on the part of ministers, who claimed an entire reliance on their wisdom and integrity. The occasion of this claim was a proposed war against Russia, for which the minister (Mr. Pitt) urged the house of commons to vote money, without previous and satisfactory information of the necessity, and much less of the justice or policy of this war, the object of which was the restoration of Oczakow to the Turks. The measure was unpopular; and though the minister obtained a majority, when the question was debated, he thought it most prudent to give up his object, and a pacification ensued, which prevented much calamity to the nation. About this time the abolition of the slave-trade occupied the public attention, and this was a measure to which the member for Bedford had always avowed himself a steady and zealous friend. In parliament he supported it not only by his vote, but by a display of eloquence which commanded universal applause. As an active magistrate, he directed his particular attention to the occurrences that took place in consequence of the scarcity in the year 1795; and in devising means of relief, he proposed that as the magistrates were empowered to fix a maximum of wages, so far as respects the husbandman, a minimum should be also preserved by law, in order thus to establish a more accurate proportion between the price of labour and that of the means of subsistence. With this view he introduced into the house a bill, which was approved by Mr. Fox and many other members; but as it was opposed by Mr. Pitt, his efforts were unavailing. The minister was no less unsuccessful in his plan for amending the poor laws, and meliorating the condition of the peasantry and working class. His plan indeed was much more extensive and complicated than that of Mr. Whitbread, which was simply calculated to enable the labourer to maintain himself by his wages, without the degrading as well as dispiriting necessity of seeking parochial relief.

The subject of this article was an undisguised and uniform opposer of the French war in 1793, because he thought it to be unnecessary and unjust; and yet he was a zealous advocate for measures of self-defence against the secret machinations and open attacks of a powerful and vindictive enemy. Accordingly he condemned the negligence of ministers, on occasion of the French attempt at invasion in 1797, by means of a squadron which appeared off Bantry bay, and moved the house for a committee of inquiry into their conduct. His motion was evaded by the previous question. In every stage of the contest with France, and under every varying form of its government, he was anxious for peace, and an advocate for treating with its rulers in order to terminate hostilities, and to put a stop to the waste of national treasure and the effusion of human blood. His opinion on the conduct of ministers in the prosecution of this war, and their reluctance to enter into treaty for terminating it, was explicitly avowed in an eloquent speech, which he delivered on occasion of a motion by Mr. Dundas (then secretary of state) for an address to the throne in 1800, for the purpose of approving the conduct of his majesty's government. Anxious, however, as he was for peace, because he disapproved the war from its commencement, and because he thought it essential to the true interest of the country, he was no less solicitous to maintain the honour of the nation in obtaining it. No man in this respect was a more noble-minded patriot than himself; and if he consented to make any sacrifice, it was because he thought it absolutely necessary to the permanent prosperity of his native country. Whilst he claimed and exercised the privilege of pronouncing his own opinion of public men and political measures, he was a zealous advocate for the liberty of others, and interposed with his most vigorous exertions for the rescue of those who suffered imprisonment at home or exile to Botany Bay, for too freely and imprudently divulging their opinions. During the short interval of the administration of Mr. Addington, (the present Lord Sidmouth,) who succeeded Mr. Pitt, in the year 1801, and made peace with Buonaparte, several popular measures were adopted, in which Mr. Whitbread

